And out of this false presumption of workes, sprange the wicked vowes of Religion which they vow to make satisfaction for sinne, and to be hygher in heauen, in stede of the lyfe of penaunce which Christ taught vs in the Gospell to tame the flesh & to crucifie the members with all, that we henceforth shuld walke in the wayes of Gods law, and sinne no more.

Nouices of Religion.

And to speake of worshyppyng of Saintes and praying vnto them and of that we make them our aduocates well nye aboue Christ or all together, though it require a long disputation, yet it is as bright as the day to all that know y truth, how that our fastyng of their euens & kepyng their holy dayes going bare foote, sticking vp of cādels in the bright day in the worshypping of them to obtaine their fauour, our giuyng them so costly iewels, offeryng into their boxes, clothyng their Images, shooyng them with siluer shoes with an ouche of Christall in the nyddes, to stroke the lippes and eyes of the ignorant as a man would stroke yoūg childrens heades to entice them and bryng them in, and rocke them a slepe in ignorance are with all like seruice playne idolatrie, that is in English Imageseruice. For the Saintes are spirites & can haue no delectatiō in bodely thynges. And because those bodely dedes can be no seruice vnto the spirituall Saintes, and we do them not to be a seruice to our selues or our neighbours: we serue the woorke and the false imagination of our fleshly witte, after the doctrine of man, and not of God, and are imageseruauntes. And this is it that Paule calleth Seruire elementis mundi, to be in captiuitie vnder dome ceremonies and vayne traditions of mens doctrine and to do the

The true worshypping of Saintes.

But and ye will know the true worshyppyng of Saintes, hearken vnto Paul Phil. ij. where he sayth, Ye shyne as lightes in the worlde holdyng fast the word of life vnto my glory or worshyp agaynst the day of Jesu Christe, that I haue not runne nor laboured in vayne. That is to were the worshyp which all true Saintes now seeke and the worshyp that all the true messengers of God seke this day or euer shall seke, is to draw all to Christ with preachyng the true word of God, and with the example of pure liuyng fashioned thereafter. will ye therefore worshyp saints truly? thē heare what they preached, and beleue their doctrine. And as they folowed that doctrine so conforme your liuyng like vnto theirs. And that shalbe vnto their hygh worshyp in the commyng agayne of Christ (when all mens deedes shall appeare and euery man shalbe iudged and receaue his reward accordyng vnto his deedes) how that they not onely while they here lyued, but also after their death with the exāple of their doctrine and liuyng left behynd in writyng and other memorials vnto the exāple of them that should folow, them vnto Christ that were borne. v. hūdreth, yea a thousād yeares after their death. This was their worshyp in the spirite at the begynnyng as they were spirites, & lightes were sticked before their memorials at the begynnyng to be a ceremonie to put vs in remembraunce that we so praysed the Saintes and boasted their liuyngs that we folowed their examples in our deedes, as Christ sayth Math. v. Let your light so shyne before mē that they see your good woorkes & glorifie your father that is in heauen. For preaching of the doctrine which is light hath but small effect to moue the hart if the exāple of liuyng do disagree.

Good lessons are to be learned of ỹ saints.

The true worshyppyng of saintes is to folow their life and doctrine.

And that we worshyp Saintes for feare lest they should be displeased and angry with vs and plague vs or hurt vs, as who is not afrayed of S. Laurence? who dare denye. S. Anthony a flese of woll for feare of his terrible fire or lest hee sende the pore among our shepe) is heathē imageseruice & cleane agaynst the first cōmaundement which is. Heare Israell, the Lord thy God is one God. Now God in the Hebrew is called El or Elohim in the plurall nūber, strength or might. So that the cōmaundement is, Heare Israell he that is thy power and might, thy swoorde & shield is but one, that is, there is none of might to helpe or hurt the saue one, whiche is all together thyne and at thy commaundemēt if thou wilt heare his voyce. And all other might in the world, is borowed of hym. And he will lend no might agaynst the contrary to his promises: keepe therfore his commaundementes and he shall kepe thee. And if thou haue broken them, and he haue lent of his power agaynst thee, repent and come agayne vnto thy profession and he will returne agayne vnto his mercy & fetch his power home agayne, which he lent to vere thee, because thou forlookest hym and brakest his commaundementes. And feare no other creature, for false feare is ỹ cause of all Idolatrie.

If we harken to the voyce of God, he is mighty and of power to helpe vs.

Moreouer all we that are Baptised in Christ haue professed to do good for euil and not to auenge our selues. And many of vs come vnto such perfection that we can be prouoked by no temptation to desire vengeaunce, but haue compassion and meekely pray for them that slay vs.

We must do good for euill.

How wicked a thyng then is it to thinke that the Saintes plague vs, because we do thē not such superstitious honour whiche is their dishonour and our shame? It is verely a Popish imagination, & cuē to describe the Saintes after the nature of our Prelates which be meeke and lowly till they be where they would be. But when they be once a loft they play the tormentours if we will not honour them and do whatsoeuer they commaunde, more earnestly then that whiche God hym selfe hath commaunded, and feare them aboue God hym selfe.

A popish imagination

And it can be but like abhomination also, that we choose of a fleshly mynde euery man his seueral Saint or rather seuerall God, to be our aduocates, attorneys, mediatours (when there is but one. i. Timo. ij.) and intercessours, and call them our aduourys, whē we might better call them our adulterers, and serue thē or rather a paynted post in their stede, with our imageseruice, therwith to bynde them for to helpe vs whēsoeuer and for whatsoeuer we call vnto them, and to saue our soules ther to with their prayers and merites, and will yet neither heare ỹ doctrine or folow the exāple of liuyng (which is their onely honour in the spirite of any saint whose doctrine & lyuyng is autentike, Aduourtes.

Idolatry.

For

God hath promised to geue vs whatsoeuer we aske in Christes name, & for Christes sake.

For first, God whiche alone hath power to helpe or hurt, hath made appointment betwixt hym & vs in Christes bloud and hath bound hymselfe to giue vs whatsoeuer we aske in hys name, testifiyng therto that there is no other name to be saued by; and that he wilbe a father vnto vs & saue vs both in this lyfe and in the lyfe to come, and take vs from vnder the damnation of the law, and set vs vnder grace & mercy, to bee scholers onely to learne the law, and that our vnperfect dedes shal be taken in worth, yea and though at a tyme we marre all through our infirmitie, yet if we turne agayne, that shal be forgeuen vs mercifully, so that we shalbe vnder no damnation: which testament is confirmed with signes and wonders wrought thorough the holy ghost. Now this indented obligation layde apart, we make an other of our owne imaginatiō betwene the Saints and vs, in their merites for our image seruice. which can be but a false fayth, seyng it hath not Gods woorde (vnto which alone we ought to cleaue) but is also cleane contrary therto.

Saints cā not help vs

And agayne the Saintes were not saued through their owne merites, but through Christes. Neither were their dedes which they dyd after they were receaued vnder grace sufficiēt in them selues to fulfill the law for the present time, saue as Christes merites did supply ẏ imperfectnes of thē, and ẏ which was lacking on their part thorough their infirmities. And therefore as the Saintes holy workes made no satisfaction for the sinne they dyd before they were receaued vnder mercy, euen so made they none for the deadly synnes which they did vnder mercy: seyng the dedes were vnperfect, and had sinne annexed vnto thē by reason of the flesh, and were insufficient to excuse theyr owne maisters. What merites haue they in store for vs then, seeing by all mens confession they now merite not: If the most obedient child in the world disobey his fathers cōmaundementes, his fore good deedes cannot make that disobedience no sinne, or to be a satisfaction, that the childe should presume in the confidence of his olde deedes, and think his father should do him wrong to punishe him. But hee must knowledge his fault, and that he hath deserued punishmente, and desire forgenenes, vnto the glory of his fathers mercifulnesse, and not of his olde dedes, though his olde obedience be a great presumption that he sinned of frailtye, and not of purpose. Euen so if I beeng as holy as euer was Paul in his most holinesse, sinne this day thorough the frailtie of my flesthe, mine olde deedes cā be no satisfaction: but I must knowledge my sinne vnto my Father, and graunt that I haue deserued daunnation, and meekly desire forgeuenes, and challenge it by the obligation, wherin God hath bound him selfe to me, vnto the glory of the mercy of God, & not to the glory of my holy deedes: for if my deedes saue me, it is my glory. But if he forgeue vs freely without respect of my deedes, then it is the glory of hys mercye, by Paules doctrine vnto the Romaines.

The saints were not saued by their owne merites, but by Christes merues.

We must humble our selues to the mercy of almighty God.

The Angels serue vs.

Moreouer if the saintes be in heauē, then can they be there in none other case then the Aungels; in which state Christ testifyeth they shall be in the resurrection. Now the Angels are ministers sent of God, to do seruice vnto the electe, which shall be saued. Heb. i. And God hath bound himself, that if I come in the right way, by the dore of Christes bloud and aske helpe, that he will send me if need be, an hundred legions of Angels or saintes. But when God hath bound himself to sende me angels or saintes, or an angell or saint, he hath not promised to send this Angell or that, or this or that sainte. And therfore when I appoynt God whom he shall send, and binde him, where he hath not bound himselfe, to sende me what sainte I will, I tempt God. And thus this choising of seuerall saintes is but tempting of God. And yet wee do worse then this: for we leaue ẏ way of Christs bloud, & go not to God throgh him: but run to the saintes in a testament of our owne making, and will that they eyther saue vs themselues for our imageseruice, or compell God for merites sake to saue vs. why goest thou not vnto thy Father thine owne selfe? I am a sinner, will they say, and dare not. If thou go in the right way, thou hast no sinne. Christ hath taken all thy sinnes from thee, and God hath no rod in his hand, nor looketh sowre, but merily, that it is a lust to beholde his chearfull countenance, and offreth thee his hande. But this way is stopped vp through vnbeleefe, and therefore we seek an other which is no way to life, but vnto euerlasting death. We will not looke on the law with open eyes, and therfore haue we no due repentaunce, and so no lust to harken vn

To chuse saintes to be our aduocates, is mere idolatry.

to the gospell of glad tydings in Christes bloud. And where the right way is set before vs, and we of malice will not walke therin, God can not but let the deuil play with vs, and iuggle our eyes to confirme vs in blindnesse.

Howe Christ prayeth for vs

But after what maner doth Christ pray for vs? Verily Christ in the dayes of his mortall flesh suffred and prayed for all that shal be saued, and obtayned and was heard, and had his petitions graunted. And he made satisfaction, & purged, and purchased forgeuenes, euē then for all the sinne that euer shall be forgeuen: And his praying for vs, and being a mediatour now, is that the remembraunce of all that he did for vs, is present in the sight of God the Father, as fresh as the houre he did them, yea the same houre is yet present, and not past in the sight of God. And Christ is now a King, and raigneth, and hath receaued power of all that he prayed for, to do it himselfe. And that whensoeuer the elect cal for ought in his name he sēdeth help euē of ẏ power which he hath receaued: yea ere they aske, he sendeth his spirit into their harts to moue them to aske. So that it is his gift that we desire ought in his name. And in all that we do or thinke well, he preuēteth vs with his grace: yea he careth for vs, ere we care for our selues, and when we were yet euill, he sendeth to call vs, & draweth vs with such power that our hartes cannot but consent and come. And the Angels stande by, and behold the testament of the elect, how we shall be receiued into their fellowshippe, and see all the grace that Christ shall poure out vpon vs. And they reioyce and prayse God for his infinite mercy, and are glad, and long for vs, & of very loue are ready against all houres whē we shall call for help in Christes name, to come & helpe. And Christ sendeth them whē we cal in his name, and ere we call, euen while we be yet euill, and happely persecute the truth of ignorauncе, as Paule did, the Angels wayte vpon vs to keepe that the deuils slay vs not, before the time of our calling be come.

Christ is a kyng and hath power him selfe to forgeue vs, and to receaue vs vnto hym selfe.

All the blessed company of heauē reioyse and are glad to haue vs to be with them, that we might liue together.

Now if an Angell shoulde appeare vnto thee, what wouldest thou say vnto him? If thou prayedst him to helpe, he would answere: I do. Christ hath sent me to helpe, and beleeue that the Angels be euer about thee to helpe. If thou desiredst him to pray for thee to obtayne this or that, he woulde say: Christ hath prayed, and his prayer is heard for whatsoeuer thou askest in his name, and woulde shewe thee all that God woulde do to thee, and what he would also haue thee to do: and if thou beleeuest, so were thou safe. If thou desiredst him to saue thee with his merites. He would answer that he had no merites: but that Christ onely is Lord of all merites: not saluation, but that Christ is Lord of saluation. Wilte thou therfore be saued by merites, wold the Aungell say: then pray to God in Christes name, and thou shalt be saued by the merites of him, and haue me or some other thy seruaunt immediatlye to help thee vnto the vttermost of our power, and to keep thee and bring thee vnto the rewarde of his merites. If thou wouldest promise him to worship him with imageseruice, that is, to sticke vp a candle before his image, or such an image as he appeared to thee in. He would answer that he were a spirite, and delighted in no candlelight but would bid thee geue a cādle to thy neighbour that lacked, if thou hādst to many. And so would he answer thee if thou wouldest put money in a boxe for him, or cloth his image in cloth of gold, or put golden shoes vpon his Images feete. If thou saydest that thou wouldest build a chappel in his name, he would answer that he dwelt in no house made with stones, but wold bid thee goe to the churches that are made already, and learne of the Preachers there how to beleeue, and how to liue, and honour God in the spirite, for the which cause churches were chiefly builded, and for quietnesse to pray. And if there be no church, then to geue of that thou maist spare to help that one were builded to be a preaching and a praying house, and of worshipping God in the spirite, and not of imageseruice.

Christ prayeth for vs and hys prayer is heard.

Imageseruice is abhorred of God.

God hateth superstition.

Churches were ordeined for preachyng and callyng on the name of God.

And if Paule appeared vnto thee, what other thing could he answer also, then that he were a spirite, & would refuse all thy imageseruice. And if thou speake to Paule of his merites, he can none otherwise answer thee, then he answered his Corinthians: That he dyed for no mans sinnes, and that no mā was baptized in his name to trust in his merites. He would say, I builded all men vppon Christes merites: preaching that all that repented and beleued in his name, should be saued, and taken from vnder the wrath, vengeaunce, and damnation of the law, & be put vnder mercy and grace. And by this fayth was I saued from damna-tion, and put vnder mercy and grace, and made one with Christ, to haue my part with him, and he with me, or rather to make a chaunge that he shoulde haue all my sinnes, and I his mercye and the giftes of his grace, and become glorious with the ornamentes of hys riches. And of my sauiour Christ I receaued this lawe, that I shoulde loue my brethren all Gods elect as tenderly as he loued them. And I consented vnto this law, for it seemed right, and became a scholler to learne it. And as I profited in the knowledge, faith, and loue of Christ, so I grew in the loue of my brethren, and suffred all things for their sakes, and at the last waxed so perfect, that I wished my selfe damned (if it might haue bene) to saue my brethrē. And al my brethrē that receaued Christ receaued the same commaundement, & grew therein. And they that were perfect loued me and all their other brethren, no lesse then I loued them. And looke with what loue I ministred the giftes of grace, which I receaued of Christ for the edifying of his congregation, vpon my brethren, with the same loue did they minister their giftes agayne on me, which they had and I lacked: and so loue made all common. And moreouer if they call my workes my merites, I bestowed all my workes vpon my brethren to teach them, and reaped the fruite thereof, euen my brethrens edifying and soules health, yea and reape daily, in that I left my doctrine & ensample of liuing behinde me, by which many are conuerted vnto Christ daily. If thou desire therfore to enioy part of my merite, goe & read in my Gospel, and thou shalt finde the fruite of my labour, the knowledge of Christ, the health of the soule, and euerlasting life.

Loue maketh all thynges common.

And as I loued my brethren whē I liued so I loue them still, & now more perfectly. Howbeit my loue then was paynful: for the more I loued the more I sorowed, feared and cared for them to bryng them into the knowledge of the truth, and to kepe them in vnitie of faith lest the false prophetes should deceaue them, or their owne infirmities should breake peace & vnitie, or cause them to fall into any sinne.

S. Paule was a louyng and carefull preacher.

But now my loue is without paine. For I see the will and prouidence of God, and how the end of all thynges shalbe vnto hys glory & profite of the elect. And though I see the elect shall sometime fall, yet I see how they shall arise agayne & how that their fall shalbe vnto the glory of God & their owne profect. And we that are in heaue, loue you al a like: neither we loue one more & an other lesse. And therfore if ye loue vs more one thē an other, that is fleshly as mine old Corinthiās once loued, and I rebuked them. Neither can we bee moued to come more to helpe one thē an other. But we wayte whē God will send any of vs vnto the elect that call for helpe in Christes name. wherfore if thou wilt be holpe of any of vs pray in Christes name. And God shall send one of vs, an Aungell or a Saint, to keepe the power of the deuils from you: but not whō thou wouldest chose temptyng God: but whom it pleaseth God to send.

I good saying of S. Paule.

And if your preachers loue you not after ỹ same maner, to edifie you with the true doctrine of Christ and example of liuing therafter, and to kepe you in vnitie of fayth and charitie, they be not of Christes Disciples, but Antichristes which vnder ỹ name of Christ, seeke to raigne ouer you as tempozall tyrauntes. And in like maner if this be not written in your hartes, that ye ought to loue one an other as Christ loued you, and as ye had example of vs his Apostles, ye go astray in vanities and are not in the right way.

And hereby are we sure that we knowe hym, if we keepe his commaundementes.

The state of grace.

This is cleane agaynst ỹ doctrine of them which say that we can not know whether we be in the state of grace or no. John sayth if we keepe his commaundementes, then we be sure that we knowe Christ is euerlastyng lyfe. John. xvij. Then cōtrary to the pope: Christen men haue doctrine to know whether they be in grace or no.

They that keepe the cōmaundementes are in the state of grace.

The kepyng of Gods commaundementes certifieth vs that we be in the state of grace. But our Doctours haue no doctrine to know when a man is in the state of grace, wherfore it is manifest that they kepe not Gods cōmaūdementes, nor be in state of grace, but of all vngratiousnes.

Our Doctours know not whether they be in state of grace. Our doctours kepe mens cōmaūdements, Ergo mēs commaundemētes certifie not that we be in state of grace. Though thou haue a deuotion to sticke vp a candle before a post, and so forth, yet thou canst neuer

When we do good to our neighbour, then we may be assured that we are in the state of grace.

ner be sure thereby that thou art in the fauour of God. But if thou haue deuotiō to helpe thy brother in all his misfortunes, because hee is the image of God and price of Christes bloud, then thy deuotiō certifieth the that thou art in the fauour of God or state of grace.

He that sayth I knowe hym and yet keepeth not hys commaundementes, is a lyer, and the truth is not in hym.

A sure argument to know false Prophetes by.

when our Pharisees say, do as we byd you and not as we do, they testifie that they keepe not Gods commaūdementes, vnto whiche testimonie our eyes also beare recorde: And they that keepe not Gods commaundementes, be lyers & haue no truth in them. And then when they preach, they cā not but preache lyes. And then though they preach Christ, they preach hym falsly, vnto their fleshly vauntage and not our soules health. And for as much as we may haue no felowshyp with thē that kepe not Gods commaundementes. i. Cor. v. and in as much as all such are false Prophetes voyde of all truth, it foloweth that we ought to geue our Doctours none audience, though their defenders stode by them with theyr swoordes drawen, but rather to laye downe our heades and stretch foorth our neckes, to be slayne.

He that keepeth his woorde: in hym verely is the loue of God perfect, and hereby knowe we that we are in hym.

To be in God is to beleue in the mercy of God.

That is, he that keepeth his commaundemētes, loueth vnfainedly, and is therby sure that he is in God. For to be in God is to beleue in ỹ mercy of God: And to beleue in mercy is cause of loue, & loue cause of worhyng. And therefore hee that worketh for Gods sake, is sure that he loueth and that hee trusteth in God: which is to be in God or in Christ. And as by wilfull kepyng of the commaundemēt we be sure that we loue God and beleue in God, euen so thorough wilfull breakyng of them we may bee sure that we neither loue nor beleue in him, and therfore that we be not in hym.

A rule to know whether we loue God or loue him not.

He that sayth he abydeth in him ought to walke as he walked.

All that be Baptised in Christ, are washed in hym, to put of pride, wrath, hate and enuie, with all their old conuersatiō by which they oppressed theyr neighbours, and haue promised to become euery man euen as Christ hym selfe vnto his brethren in loue & kyndnes both in word & deede. They therfore whiche resist Christes Testament and will not let it be knowen, & walke in the Testament of the Pope, with vnions pluralities, and torquots, some one of them robbyng. x. parishes of the tenth of all their yearely increase, and withdrawing from them Gods word, the foode of their soules, and from the poore their dayly sustenaunce, whiche ought to haue their part in the tythes and other rentes, when the preacher & other necessarie Ministers haue out their partes, a due and lawfull stipend: are not in Christ. For Christ neither so walked not so taught.

They that be enemies to the Testament of Christ, and are teachers of mans inuentions are not in Christ.

Brethren I write no newe commaundement vnto you, but an old commaundement which ye had at the begynnyng. For an olde commaundement is the word which ye heard from the begynnyng.

And old cōmaundement is the woorde which ye heard from the begynnyng.

I write no new precept, but onely put you in remembraunce of that old which was taught you when ye were first Baptised in Christ, to loue eche other as he did you. which is an old cōmaundement and was giuē at the begynnyng of the world, and hath euer since bene writtē in the hart of all that put their hope in God.

Agayne, a new commaundemēt I write vnto you, whiche is true in him and also in you: for the darkenesse is past and the true light now shyneth.

The deuill hath sowen his darknes in the field where this commaundemēt should grow and the weeds of mens traditiōs had ouergrowen the corne of this old cōmaundement: so that it was antiquate & cleane out of knowledge. But Christ ỹ light of all true doctrine now shyneth, & hath scatered the darknesse and plucked vp the weeds by the rootes & restored this old commaūdement agayne. And in hym it is a true commaundement, for he loued truly. And in you it is a true commaundement for ye for his sake, loue one an other truly also. And by the reason of this renewyng, it is called a new commaundement, as it is now called new learnyng, & may well so be: for it hath lyen long in darknes, and that in such darknes, that many be shyned for holy Saintes, whose dedes & lining, whē thou lookest vpon them in the light of this old doctrine that now shyneth agayne out of darknes, are more abhominable then the deedes and lyuyng of him, whiche of late for all his exaltyng his throne and swearyng by his highe honour, and for the worshyp of his hat and glory of his precious shoes when hee was payned with the colicke of an euill conscience hauyng no other shift, because his soule could finde no other issue, tooke him self a medicine, vt emitteret spiritum per posteriora.

Sic transit gloria mūdi.

This was Cardinall Wolsey.

He that sayth hee is in the light: and yet hateth hys brother: is in darknesse.

For whosoeuer feleth his owne dānation vnder the law, & beleueth in the mercy that is in Christ, the same cān not but loue Christ and his neighbour for his sake. And therefore hee that hateth his brother for any offence done to him the same seith not what Christe hath done for him, but is in darkenes still.

He that hateth hys brother, is in darknes and seeth not Christ.

He that loueth his brother: abydeth in the light: and there is none offendyng in hym.

Abydeth in the light, that is continueth in the knowledge of Christ. And there is none offending in him, that is. First he will willingly do nothyng either in word or in dede that shal offēde his brother. For loue will not let hym. And secondarily if ought bee done or sayd, that may be well done or sayd, he taketh it to the best and is not offēded. And thus ye see that the knowledge of Christ is cause of all goodnesse, and the ignorance of Christ cause of all euill. And so the doctrine of thē is not false, whiche say that fayth in Christ is roote of all godly vertue and the cause of kepyng the commaundementes: & where fayth is, there to be no sinne, nor damnation: and that say, vnbeleefe to be the mother of all vice, and cause of breakyng the commaundementes, and to keepe men in sinne and dānation onely, as fayth onely loseth vs thence.

To abyde in the light is to abyde in ỹ knowledge of Christ.

Faith in Christ is the roote of all goodnes.

And he that hateth hys brother is in darkenesse: and walketh in darkenesse and knoweth not whether he goeth. For darkenesse hath blynded his eyes.

He that hateth his brother, is in the ignorannce of Christ, and of his owne sinne, and without repentaunce & faith that his sinnes be forgeuen him in Christ, and therefore is mercilesse vnto hys brother, whom Christ commaunded him to pitie and loue. And in that ignorannce he walketh: that is, worketh euill, and loueth the thinges of the worlde, and seeketh in them the lustes of the flesh, which are the quenching of the spirite, and death of the soule, & for loue of them hateth his brother. And this ignorannce of Christ which is vnbeleef, is the cause of all the wickednes that we do vnto our brethren.

He that hateth hys brother is in ignorannce.

Ignorāce

I write vnto you little children, that your sinnes are forgeuen you for hys names sake. I write vnto you fathers, that ye know him that was from the beginning. I write vnto you yong men, how that ye haue ouercome the wicked.

I write vnto you that are yong in the fayth and yet weake, and therefore fall now and then, how that your sinnes are forgeuen you, as soone as ye repent and reconcile your selues vnto your brethren whom ye haue offended euen for his names sake onely, and not for our owne deedes whether afore or after, or for any other mans deedes or satisfaction, saue for his onely.

When we haue offended our brother, if we reconcile our selues vnto hym agayne, thē are our sinnes forgeuen.

I write vnto you that are fathers in the doctrine of God to teach other how that ye know him that was from the begynnyng & is no new thing, though he newly receaued our nature. And through knowledge of him which is the onely light, and the dore vnto the knowledge of God, ye are become fathers in the Scriptures. Or els ye had neuer vnderstand it, though ye had studied neuer so much, as it appeareth by the indurate Jewes, and also by ourr owne new Pharisies, which persecute the scripture, and the true sence therof, because they be drowned in the ignorannce of Christ, as their deedes and contrary lining well testifie.

I write vnto you yong mē that are strong in suffering persecutions, and fight for your profession, not with the sword, but with suffering, how that ye haue ouercome that wicked which poisoned the world at the beginning, and yet worketh in the children of darcknesse, and vnbeleefe: and that in beleeuing ning the woorde of truth, as it folowe-eth anone after.

I write vnto you yong children howe that ye knowe the Father. I write vnto you fathers, howe that ye know him that was from the beginning. I write vnto you young men, that ye be strong: and the woorde of God dwelleth in you, and that ye haue ouercomme the wicked.

We can not know the father, but by the sonne.

I write vnto you yong children,
how that ye know the Father, whome yee loue thorough knowledge of the Sonne, or els you had neuer knowne him as a father, but as a Iudge and a tyrant, and had hated him. I write vn to you fathers as before, howe ye are fathers of all trueth in knowing the Sonne. Or els ye had euer continued in darknesse remedilesse.

Fayth in Christ ouercometh the worlde.

I write vnto you yong men, how ye are strong, and that your strength is the word of God, which dwelleth in your brest through fayth, in which ye haue ouercome the wicked deuill, and all his pompe: as it foloweth chapt. v.
this is the victorye that ouercommeth the world, euen our fayth.

Loue not the worlde, nor the thinges that are in the worlde. If a man loue the worlde, the loue of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the worlde, as the lust of the flesshe, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of good, are not of the Father, but are of the world. And the worlde vanisheth away and the lust thereof. But he that doth the will of God abideth euer.

Auarice or couetousnes.

The loue of the world quencheth the loue of God. Balaam for the loue of the world, closed his eyes at the cleare light which he well saw. For loue of the world the olde Pharisies blaspheme med the holy Ghost, and persecuted the manifest truth, which they coulde not improue. For loue of the world many are this day fallen away, and many which stood on the truthes side, and de fended it a while, for loue of the worlde haue gotten them vnto the contrarye parte, and are become the Popes mamalukes, & are waxed the most wicked enemies vnto the truth and most cruel agaynst it. They know the truth but

The loue of ỹ worlde driueth many from Christ.

they loue the worlde. And when they espyed the truth could not stand wyth the honoures which they sought in the world, they hated it deadly, and both wittingly and willingly persecuted it, sinning against the holy Ghost. which sinne shall not escape here vnpunished as it shall not be without damnation in the world to come, but shall haue an ende here with confusion and shame, as had the glory of our right reuerend father in God Thomas Wolsse late cardinall and legate a latere. &c. whome after his shitten death (as the saying is) his owne seruauntes which before exalted his glory, haue sent to hel with grace and priuiledge.

Thomas Wolsey late Cardinall of England.

By the lust of the flesh is vnderstād lechery whiche maketh a man altogether a swine, and by the lust of the eyes is vnderstoode couetousnes, which is the roote of all euil, and maketh to erre from the fayth. 1. Tim. vlt. And then followeth pride: whiche three are the world, and captaines ouer all other vices, and occasions of all mischief.

Lechery.

Couetousnes.

Pride.

And if pride, couetousnes, and lechery be the world, as S. Iohn sayth, then turne your eyes vnto the spiritualtie:
vnto the pope, cardinals, bishops, ab-bates, and all other prelates, and see whether suche dignities bee not the world, and whether the way to them be not also the world. To get the olde abbats treasure I thinke it be the readiest way to be the newe. How sewe come by promotion, except they buy it, or serue long for it, or both? To be wel skilled in war and in polling, to maintaine war and lustes, and to be a good ambassadour, is the onely way to a bishoprycke, or to pay truely for it. See whether pluralities, vnions, totquots and chainging the lesse benefice & bys-shoprike for the greater (for the contrary chainge I trow was neuer sene) may be without couetousnes & pride.
And then if such thinges be the world, and the world not of God, how is our spiritualtie of God? If pride be seking of glory, and they that seeke glory can not beleue. Ioh. 5. How can our spiritualty beleue in Christ? If couetousnes turne men from the fayth, how are our spiritualty in the fayth? If Christ when the deuill proferred hym the kyngdomes of the world and the glorie thereof, refused them as thynges vnpossible to stande with hys kyngdome, whiche is not of the worlde:
of whom are our spiritualtie whiche haue receyued them? If couetousnes be a traytour, and taught Judas to sell his maister: how should he not in so long time teache oure spiritualtie the same craft? namely when they be of all kinges secretes and the ambassadours of their secretes, and haue thereto thoroughout al Christēdome a secret counsell of their own of the which neuer lay man was partaker, and with which they turne the end of all appointments vnto their owne honour and profite? Couetoulnes hath taught thē to bring in damnable sectes, according vnto the prophecy of Peter, and to corrupt the Scripture with false gloses, & to turne euery good ordinaunce that had a vertuous begynnyng vnto vicious ende.

Note.

The promotions of the spiritualitie corrupt their myndes.

The promocions of the spiritualtie corrupt their mindes while they be yet in the shel and vnhatched. For they come thether but for couetoulnes, and to auoyd the crosse of Christ in the worlde: except them that be compelled of their frendes, or be so simple that they mark not their falshode beforehande. Who knowing the truth & louing it, would put his head in the popes halter that so moseleth mens mouthes that they can not open them to defend any truthe at all: when the temporall kinges were in their hye authoritie, then the generall Counsell repressed the enormities of the spiritualtie. But since the Pope, cardinals and bishops were exalted, & the emperour and kings became their seruauntes: they would suffer nought to be determined in their counsels that should refourme the worlde of their deuilish pride, insatiable couetoulnes, & stincking lechery, which may stand w no godly vertue. But the worlde which is not of God, shall at the last haue an end with confusion, and they onely abide that do ỹ will of the Father, which will is, that we beleeue in the Sonne, and loue one an other. Let them therfore that haue ỹ worldes good (I might say the worldes God) vse it, but not loue it, that they may be ready to bestow it at the pleasure of God. And let them which haue it not, desire it not, for it blindeth the eyes of the seeing: Deut. 17. But let them put their trust in God, which shal not fayle them, nor leaue them destitute of rayment and foode, which Paule counselleth to be content with. The ritch (as James sayth) persecute the true beleuers. The ritch will neuer stand forth openly for the woorde of God. If of x. thousand there spring one Nichodemus, it is a great thing.

Popes and Bishops will suffer nothyng that shall restrayne their pride and couetousnes.

Riches and couetoulnes, blyndeth the eyes of the seyng.

Little children it is now the last houre, and as ye haue heard that Antichrist shoulde come: euen so now are many Antichristes come already: whereby we know that it is the last houre. They went out of vs, but were none of vs: for had they bene of vs, they had continued with vs. But that fortuned that it might appeare, how they were not all of vs.

Houre is here taken for tyme: the last houre is as much to say, as the last tyme. Though the Apostles might not know when the last day shalbe & how long the worlde should endure yet this was shewed them, and vs by thē, that Antichrist should first come, & not onely come but also preuayle and be receaued after a worldly maner and raigne ouer all, and set vp a long continuyng kyngdome with damnable sectes and wonderfull kyndes of hypocrisie that is to say, falshead cloked vnder a contrary pretence as testifieth Paule and also Peter. Whiche Antichrist began with the Apostles and sue his doctrine among the doctrine of the Apostles, preachyng many thynges as the Apostles dyd and addyng euer somwhat of his owne, that the weeds might euer grow vp together with the corne. Of which John gathered a signe, that the last day drew nye, though he could not be sure how long it were therto.

Houre.

Antichrist.

Antichrist is one of the first that seeth the light and commeth and preacheth Christ a while, and seeketh his glory in Christes Gospell. But when hee espyeth that there will no glory cleaue vnto that preachyng, thē he getteth him to the cōtrary partie and professeth hym selfe an open enemy, if hee can not disguise him selfe and hide the angle of his poysoned heresie vnder a bayte of true doctrine.

The worldlings loue the Gospell, so long as it bryngeth gayne.

The Apostles were cleare eyed and espied Antichrist at once, and put hym to flight and weeded out his doctrine quickly. But whē charitie waxed cold, and the preachers began to seke them selues and to admit glory and honour of riches, then Antichrist disguised him selfe after the fashion of a true Apostle and preached Christ wylyly, bryngyng in now this tradition and now that, to darke the doctrine of Christ, and set vp innumerable ceremonies and Sacramentes and imagerie: giuyng them significations at the first: but at the last

the significations layd a part, preached the worke as an holy deede, to iustifie and to put away sinne and to saue the soule, that men should put their trust in woorkes & in whatsoeuer was vnto his glory and profite, and vnder the name of Christ, ministred Christ out of all together and became head of the congregation him selfe.

The Pope hath put Christ frō his rule & gouernement.

The Pope made a law of hys owne to rule his church by, and put Christes out of the way. All the Byshops swere vnto the Pope, and all Curates vnto the Byshops, but all forswere Christ and his doctrine.

But seing Iohn tooke a signe of the last day that he saw Antichrist begyn, how nye ought we to thinke that it is, whiche after viij. hundreth yeares raigning in prosperitie, see it decay agayne, and his falshead to be disclosed and him to be slayne with the spirite of the mouth of Christ: that is, with that old doctrine that proceded out of Christes mouth: for Paule sayth whē Antichrist is vttered, thē commeth the end.

Antichrist hath bene long amōg vs.

But ye haue anoyntyng of that holy, and knowe all thyng. I write not vnto you as though ye knewe not the truth, but as vnto them that know it, and how that no lye is of truth.

Christ onely is called holy.

Annoynted.

Christ in the Scripture is called the holy, because he onely sanctifieth & haloweth vs. And he is called Christ: that is to say, annoynted, because he annoynteth our soules with ỳ holy ghost and with all the gifres of the same. Ye are not annoynted with oyle in your bodyes, but with the spirite of Christ in your soules: which spirite teacheth you all truth in Christ and maketh you to iudge what is a lye and what truth, and to know Christ from Antichrist. For except he taught your soules within, the powring in of woordes at your eares were in vayne. For they must be all taught of God. Iohn. vj. And the thyngs of God no man knoweth, saue the spirite of God: and the carnall man knoweth not the thinges of the spirite of God: when contrary the spirituall that is annointed with the spirite, iudgeth all thynges. i. Cor. ij. And therfore we are forbidden to call vs any Master vpon earth. Math. xxiij. seyng we haue all one Master now in heauen, which onely teacheth vs with his spirite though by the administration and office of a faithfull preacher. Whiche preacher yet can not make hys preachyng spryng in the hart, no more then a sower can make his corne grow, nor can say this man shall receaue and this not: but soweth the word onely & committeth the growyng to God whose spirite bretheth where hee listeth and maketh the grounde of whose hart he listeth fruteful, and chooseth whom he will at his own pleasure, and for no other cause knowen vnto any man.

The carnall man knoweth not the thynges of the spirite of God.

Who is a lyer but he that denyeth that Iesus is Christ? The same is Antichrist that denyeth the father and the sonne.

Antichrist who it is.

For asmuch as Antichrist and Christ are two contraries, & the study of Antichrist is to quēch the name of Christ, how can the Pope & his sectes be Antichrist, when they all preach Christ? How was say I agayne to thee, Pelagius whose doctrine the Pope defendeth in the highest degree, Antichrist, and all other heretickes? Verely Syr the Pope seketh hym selfe as all heretickes dyd and abuseth the name of Christ, to gather offeringes, tithes and rētes in his name, to bestow them vnto his owne honour and not Christes, and to bryng the conscience of the people into captiuitie vnder hym through superstitious feare, as though he had such authoritie giuen hym of Christ. And euery sillable that hath a sōde as though it made for his purpose, that he expounded fayrly and fleshly, and therwith muggleth & bewitcheth the eares of the people & maketh them his owne possession, to beleue what hym listeth, as though it made no matter to them whether hee preached true or false, so they beleue and do as he biddeth them. But all the textes that shew his dutie to do, he putteth out of the way, and all the textes therto that set the consciences at libertie in Christ & proue our saluation to be in Christ onely. And with Pelagius hee preacheth the iustifying of woorkes, whiche is the denying of Christ. He preacheth a false bynding and losing with eare confession whiche is not in the trust and confidence of Christes bloud shedyng. He preacheth the false penaūce of dedes, not to tame the flesh that we sinne no more, but to make satisfaction & to redeme the sinne that is past. Which what other cā it be saue the denying of Christ, whiche is the onely redemption of sinne. He maketh of the woorkes of the ceremonyes, which were wont to be signes and remembraunces of thinges to be beleued or done, unaglesruice vnto God & hys Saintes whiche are spirites, to purchase with the merites of them, whatsoeuer the blynd soule imagineth whiche all are the denying of Christ. For if thou wilt receaue any annoyntyng of grace or mercy any whence, saue of hym, he is no longer Christ vnto thee.

Iesus. Christ is called Iesus, a Sauiour, he is Christus. called Christus, kyng annoynted ouer all men of whom they must hold, and whose benefite must all they haue. He Emanuel. is called Emanuel, God is with vs. For he onely maketh God our God, our strength, power, sword and shield, & shortly our father. He is called San-Sanctus. ctus, that is, holy that haloweth, sanctifieth, and blesseth all natiõs. And these be his names for euer, & be no names of hypocrisie, as we some time call him
Thomas Curteis, a churle. Thomas Curteis, which is but a churle: and as wo call them Curates whiche care for their Parishes as the wolfe for the flocke, and them Bysshops that are ouerseers, which will so ouer see, that they will suffer nought to be prosperous saue their owne cõmõ wealth:
Dead men & as some call them selues dead which Pooze me. liue in all voluptuousnes, and as some call them selues poore without hauing any thing proper, and yet lyue in all aboundance: and as they shaue and disguise them selues with garmentes and ornamentes, to signifie euer a contrary thyng then that they be.

Christ is no disguised person. Nay Christ is no hypocrite, or disguised that playeth a part in a play and representeth a person or state which he is not: But is alway that his name signifieth, he is euer a Sauiour, & euer annyonteth with grace, & euer maketh God with vs, and euer sãctifieth. Neither is there any other to saue and sanctifie frõ sinne or annoynte with grace, or to set God at one with men. And these thynges which his name signifie doth he euer vnto all that haue trust & confidence in his bloud, assone as they repẽt of the sinne whiche they desire to be saued and sanctified from.

The Pope and his shauelynges are right Antichrists Now though the Pope & his sectes giue Christe these names, yet in that they robbe hym of the effect, and take the significations of his names vnto them selues, and make of hym but an hypocrite, as they them selues be, they be right Antichristes and deny both the father and sonne. For they deny the witnesse that the father bare vnto his sonne, and depriue the sonne of all the power and glory that hys father gaue hym.

Whosoeuer denyeth the sonne, the same hath not the father.

For no man knoweth the father but the sonne & to whom the sonne sheweth hym. Math. xi. Moreouer if thou knowe not the mercy that God hath shewed thee in Christ, thou canst not know hym as a father. Thou mayst wel besides Christ know hym as a tyraunt. And thou mayst know hym by his woorkes as the old Philosophers did, that there is a God, but thou canst neither beleue in his mercy, nor loue his lawes, which is his onely worshyp in the spirite, saue by Christ. To know God.

Let therefore abide in you that which ye heard at the beginning. If that which ye heard at the beginning shall remayne in you, then shall ye continne in the Sonne, and in the Father. And this is the promise that he hath promised vs, euerlasting life.

If we abide in thold doctrine which the Apostles taught, and harken to no new: then abide we in the Sonne (for vpon the Sonne build they vs) and in the Father thorough confidence in the Sonne, & are heirs of euerlasting life. The Apostles doctrine ought we to abide by.

These thinges haue I written vn to you because of them that deceiue you. And the anointing that ye receiued of him dwelleth in you and ye need not that any man teache you, but as that annoynting teacheth you of all thinges, and is true, and is no lye: Euen as it hath taught you, so abide therein.

When a true preacher preacheth, the spirite entreth the hartes of the elect, and maketh them feele the righteousnes of the law of God, and by the law the poyson of their corrupt nature, and thence leadeth them thorough repentaunce vnto the mercy that is in Christes bloud, and as an oyntment healeth the body: euẽ so the spirite thorough confidence and trust in Christes bloud healeth the soule, and maketh her loue the law of God, and therfore is called annoynting or an oyntment, and may well be signified by the oyle of our sacrament. But outward oyle can neyther Annoyntyng.

ther heale the soule, nor make her feele saue as a signe, or as a bush at a tauern doze quencheth a mans thirst, neither is it a thing to put trust in. Let vs therfore folow the teaching of the spirite, which we haue receiued (as Paule sayeth) an earnest, to certifie our hartes, and to make vs feele the thinges of God, and not cleaue to the traditions of men, in which is no feeling, but that one sayth so, and an other thus, confirming their assertions with glorious persuasions of wisedome, but not after the wisedome of God, whiche reasons an other denyeth with cõtrary sophismes: & so riseth brauling about vayne wordes without all certaintie.

Outward oyle anoynteth not thyng.

And now litle children abide in hym, that when hee shall appeare we may haue confidence, and not bee made ashamed of hym at hys commyng.

We must cleaue to the doctrine of the Apostles.

Here are .iij. thinges to be marked: one, if we cleaue vnto Christ after the doctrine of the Apostles, and as they built vs vpon him, we shall be bolde & sure of our selues at his comming. As a seruaunt which in his maisters absence doth onely his maisters commaũdements, cannot be confounded at his comming home againe. But and if we folow mens doctrine, how can we be bold: yea how should we not be ashamed with our teachers, vnto whome thẽ he shall say (whẽ they boast thẽ selues how ẏ they haue bene his vicars,) I know you not, depart from me ye that haue wrought wickednes, and vnder my name haue brought in damnable sectes, and haue taught your disciples to beleue in other thinges then in me. Now the summe of all that the Apostles taught, and how they built vs vpon Christ is the new testament. But the popes doctrine is not there found, but improued. Confounded therefore shall he be, which witting and willing shutteth his eyes at the true light, and openeth them to beleue his lyes.

Flore saying to all hypocrites and teachers of false doctrine.

An other thing is this, all the scripture maketh mentiõ of the resurrectiõ & comming againe of Christ: & that all men, both they that go before, and they that come after, shall then receiue their rewardes together, & we are cõmaunded to looke euery houre for that day. And what is done with the soules frõ their departing their bodies vnto that day, doth the Scripture make no mentiõ, saue onely that they rest in ẏ Lord, & in their faith, wherfore he that determineth ought of the state of them that be departed, doth but teach the presumptuous imaginations of his owne braine: neither can his doctrine be any article of our fayth. What God doth with them is a secreat layd vp in the treasury of God. And we ought to be patient, being certefied of the scripture that they which dye in the fayth, are at rest, & ought no more to search that secret, thẽ to search ẏ houre of the resurrection whiche God hath put onely in his owne power. But this remember that the whole nature of mã is poysoned, & infected with sinne. And ẏ whole life of sinne must be mortefied. And the roote of al sinne and first vice we were infect with, is that we would be wise where God hath not taught vs, as ye see how Eue would haue ben as God in the knowledge of good & bad. And therefore hath God hid many thinges in his power, and commaunded that we shall search none of his secrets further, then he hath opened them in his scripture, to mortefy this poyson of all poysons, the desire to appeare wise, & that we be ashamed to be ignorannt in any thing at all. wherfore they that violently make articles of the fayth without Gods word, are yet aliue in the roote of all sinne and vice, and grow out of the deuill, and not out of Christ. And their articles are of the blindnes of the deuill, and not of the light of Christ, for Christes light hath testimonie of the scripture euery where.

We must beleue the resurrectiõ & not be curious to vnderstand the state of the soules departed, where they are, nor what they do.

If ye know that he is righteous, know that all that woorke righteousnes are borne of him.

Our nature is to worke wickednes and so blinde therto that it can see no righteousnes. And then it foloweth that we must be borne a new in Christ ere we can either do or yet know what is righteous. And in him we must first be made righteous our selues ere we can worke righteous woorkes, which conclusion is contrary vnto the Pope, for he sayth that the woorkes do make the man righteous. And Christes doctrine sayth that the man maketh the workes righteous. A righteous man springeth out of righteous woorkes, sayth the Popes doctrine. Righteous works spring out of a righteous man, and a righteous man springeth out of Christ, sayth Christes doctrine. The workes make ẏ man righteous which before was wicked, sayth the Pope. The woorkes declare that the man is righteous, sayth Christes doctrine: but the man was first made righteous in Christ, and the spirite of Christ taught him what righteousnes was, and healed his hart, & made him consent therto, & to haue his lust in righteousnes, and to woorke righteouslie.

The thyrd Chapter.

Eholde what loue the Father hath shewed vs, that we shold be called the sonnes of god. For this cause the worlde knoweth you not, because it knoweth not him. Dearely beloued now wee are the sonnes of God, though yet it appeareth not what we shall be. But we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is.

The loue of God to vs ward is exceeding great, in that he hath made vs his sonnes without al deseruing of vs and hath geuen vs his spirite through Christ, to certifie our hartes thereof, in that we feele that our trust is in God, & that our soules haue receaued health, and power to loue the law of God, which is a sure testimonie, that we are sonnes, & vnder no damnation. Neyther ought it to discourage vs, or to make vs thinke we were lesse beloued because the world hateth vs, and persecuteth vs, for the world knoweth vs not. Neyther any maruell, for ỳ world could not know Christ him selfe for all his glorious commyng with miracles and benefits in healing the sicke, and raysing the dead. But for al the oppression of the world, we are yet sure that we are Gods sonnes. And in like maner, though the glory that we shall be in appeare not: yet we are sure that we shall be like him, when he appeareth. As darknes vanisheth away at the cõming of the sunne, and the worlde receaueth a new fashion, and is turned in to light, and suddenly made glorious: Euen so when he appeareth, and we shall see him as he is, we shal with the sight of him, be chaunged into the glory of his image, and made like him. And then shall the world both know him, and vs, vnto their shame and confusion.

The world could not knowe Christ.

The world shall know Christ.

And all that haue thys hope in him, purge thẽselues as he is pure.

The sayth and hope of a Christen man, are no dead, idle, or barren thinges, but lively woorkes and fruitfull. For when the law through conscience of sinne, hath slayne the soule, thẽ hope and trust in Christes blood thorough certefying of the conscience, that the damnation of the law is taken away, quickeneth hir agayne, & maketh hir to loue the law, which is the purifying of the soule, and hir life, and seruing the law in the inner man. And then the sayde giftes of hope and sayth stretch them selues forth vnto the members, dead with naturall lust, consent, and custome to sinne, and quickeneth them and purgeth them, with the holesome penaunce of Christes doctrine, & make them serue the law outward, and beare holesome frute of loue vnto the profect of their neighbours, according to Christes loue vnto vs. For if the spirite of Christ with whiche God annoynteth vs and maketh vs kynges, and sealeth vs and maketh vs his sure and seuerall kyngdome, & whiche he giueth vs in earnest. 2. Cor. 1. And with whiche hee chaungeth vs into the Image of Christ. 2. Cor. 4. dwell in our soules through sayth, the same spirite can not but quicken the members also, & make them fruteful. Rom. viij. wherfore the sayth and hope of the Pope whiche by their owne confession, may stand with all wickednes and consent vnto all euill & be without repentaunce toward Gods lawe (as it appeareth by their three capitall sinnes touched of John a litle aboue: pride, couetousnes and lecherie) are no true sayth and hope: but vayne woordes and visures onely, according to his other disguisyng and names of hypocrisie.

A Christen mans sayth and hope are not idle.

The sayth of a Christen man.

The popes sayth.

All that committe sinne, committe vnrighteousnes, for sinne is vnrighteousnes.

That the English calleth here vnrighteousnes the Greeke calleth Anomia, vnlawfulnes or breakyng ỳ law. So that all sinne is breaking of Gods law, & onely the trãsgression of Gods law is sinne. Now all Gods lawes are contained in these two poyntes, beleue in Christ, and loue thy neighbour. And these two poyntes are the interpre-pretyng and expoundyng of all lawes, so that whatsoeuer edifieth in faith and loue, is to be kept, as lōg as it so doth. And whatsoeuer hurteth faith or loue, is to bee broken immediatly: though kyng, Emperour, Pope or an Aūgell commaunde it. And all indifferent thynges that neither helpe nor hurt fayth and loue, are whole in the hands of Father, Mother, Master, Lord and Prince. So that if they will sinne agaynst God and ouerlade our backes, we may well runne away, if we can escape, but not aduenge ouer selues. But and if they will breake into thy conscience, as the Pope doth with his doune traditions, and sayth, to do this saueth thy soule, and to leaue it vndone loseth thy soule, thē defie them as the workes of Antichrist, for they make thee synne agaynst the fayth that is in Christes bloud, by which onely thy soule is saued, and for lacke of that onely dāned. And howe loue breaketh the law take an example. It is a good law that mē come to the Church on the Sondayes to heare Gods worde and to receaue the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ, in remembraūce of his benefites and so to strengthen thy soule, for to walke in his loue and in the loue of our neighbour for his sake &c. yet if my father, mother, or any other that requireth my helpe bee sicke, I breake that good commaundement, to do my dutie to myne elders or my neighbour. And thus all lawes are vnder loue & giue roome to loue. And loue interpreteth them: yea and breaketh them at a time, though God hymselfe cōmaunde them. For loue is Lord ouer al lawes.

Loue breaketh the law.

And ye know that he appeared to take away our sinnes, and there is no sinne in him.

Christ dyed not alone to purchasse pardon for our foresinnes, but also to slay all sinne and the life of sinne in our members. For all we that are Baptised in the name of Christ sayth Paule. Rom. 6. are Baptised to dye with hym concernyng sinne, and that as he after his resurrection dyeth no more, so we after our Baptisme should walke in a new life and sinne no more. Our mēbers are crucified with him, in all that pertayneth vnto the lyfe of sinne. And if in Christ be no sinne, then how can there be wilfull sinne in the fayth that is in hym, or in the quicke members that through fayth grow out of hym? Euery man therefore that hath the true fayth of Christ, purgeth hym selfe, as he is pure.

We are baptised to dye with Christ concernyng sinne.

All that abyde in him sinne not. And al that sinne haue neither sene him nor knowen him.

As there is no sinne in Christ the stocke, so can there be none in ỹ quicke members that lyue and grow in hym by fayth. And they that giue them selues to sinne haue neither sene, knowē, or felt by fayth ỹ mercy that is in hym. Our holy father then which forbiddeth Matrimonie and giueth his Disciples licences with his holy blessing to kepe whores: and pluralities, vnions, and totquots, to robbe the Parishes, hath neither sene nor knowen Christ, no more haue his Disciples that consent vnto his iniquitie. And if they know him not, they cā not truly describe him vnto vs. It foloweth then, that their preachyng is but hypocrisie.

The filthynes of the Popes doctrine.

Litle children let no man beguile you. He that worketh righteousnes is righteous, as he is righteous.

Iudge men by their deedes. For whosoeuer hath the light of God in his soule, he will let his light shyne, that men shall see his good woorkes. And therfore where ye see not the righteousnes of woorkes in the members outward, there, be sure, is no righteousnes of fayth in the hart in ward. Let no man mocke you with vayne wordes. Whosoeuer preacheth Christ in worde & deede, him take for Christes Vicare. And them that would proue them selues his Vicares with Sophistrie, and when it is come to the poynte make a sword onely their mighty arguments, and liue cōtrary to all his doctrine, and in all their preachinges blaspheme and raile on his blessed bloud, take for the Vicares of Antichrist.

Where true fayth is there procedeth good woorkes.

He that preacheth Christ in worde and deede, hym take for Christes vicare.

He that sinneth is of the deuill, for the deuill sinneth from the begynneth. But for this cause appeared the sonne of God: Euen to destroy the woorkes of the deuill. All that are borne of God do no sinne, for his seede abideth in them and they can not sinne, because they be borne of God: And hereby are the sonnes of God knowen, and also the sonnes of the deuill.

God and the deuill are two contrary ry fathers two contrary fountaines, and two contrary causes: the one of all goodnes, the other of all euil. And they that do euill are borne of the deuill and first euil by that byrth, yer they do euil. For yer a man do any euill outward of purpose, he conceaued that euill first in his mynde and cõsented vnto it, and so was euil in his hart yer he wrought euill, and yer he conceiued euill in hys hart he was borne of the deuil and had receaued of his seede and nature: By the reason of which nature, seede and byrth, he worketh euill naturally, and cã do no other. As Christ saith John 8. ye are of your father the deuill & therefore will do the lustes of your father.

The man is first euil.

And on the other side, they that do good are first borne of God and receaue of his nature & seede, and by the reason of that nature and seede, are first good yer they do good by ỹ same rule. And Christ which is cõtrary to the deuill came to destroy the workes of the deuill in vs & to giue vs a new byrth, a new nature, and to sow new seede in vs, that we should, by the reasõ of that byrth, sinne no more. For the seede of that byrth, that is to wete the spirite of God and the liuely seede of his word, sowen in our hartes, kepeth our harts that we can not consent to sinne, as the seede of the deuill holdeth the hartes of his, that they can not consent to good.

The mã is first good.

The Popes doctrine.

This is cõtrary vnto the Pope in two poyntes, in one that he sayth, that our good deedes make vs first good, and teacheth vs not to beleue in Christes bloud, there to be washed & made first good. And in an other, that he sayth, God choseth vs first for our good qualites & properties and for the enforcement and good endeuour of our frewill. what good endeuour is there where the deuill possesseth the whole hart, that it can consent to no good.

The saythfull and vnfaithfull sinne diuersly.

And finally there is great difference betwene the sinne of them that beleue in Christ vnfaynedly, and the sinne of them that beleue not. For they that beleue, sinne not of purpose and of cõsent to wickednesse that it is good, castyng and compassyng afore hand without grudge of cõscience to bryng their purpose about. As ye see our hypocrites haue vexed all Christendome this .xx. yeares to bryng a little lust to effect. Their fathers conceiued mischief. vij. hundreth yeares ago. And the sonnes consent vnto the same & haue no power to depart therefrom. And therfore their sinne is deuilishe and vnder the damnation of the law. But if he that beleueth, sinne: he doth it not of purpose, or that he consenteth vnto the life of sinne: But of infirmitie, chaũce, and some great temptation that hath ouercome him. And therefore his sinne is veniall and vnder mercy and grace, though it be murther, theft, or adultere: and not vnder the dãnation of the law. So that his father shall scourge hym, but not cast hym away or damne hym. Marke in the sinne of Saule & of Dauid. Saule euer excused his sinne, and could not but persecute the will of God. And Dauid confessed his sinne, with great repentaũce at the first warnyng, whensoeuer he forgot him selfe.

All that worke not righteousnes are not of God. Nor hee that loueth not his brother. For this is the tydinges which ye heard at the begynnyg, that we should loue one an other, and not be as Cain which was of the deuill and slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? for his deedes were euill and hys brothers righteous. Maruell not my brethren thoughe the worlde hate you.

The law of righteousnes is, that we loue one an other as Christ loued vs, and he that hath not this law liuyng in his hart, and when the tyme is, bringeth not forth the frutes therof, the same is not of God, but of the deuill whose byrth and properties of the same ye see described in Cain, how he resisted God and persecured the childrẽ of God for their belefe & workes therof. And as ye see in Cain and his brother Abell, so shall it euer continue betwene the children of God and of the deuill vnto the worldes ende. wonder not therefore thoughe the worlde hate you.

We know that we are translated from death to life, because we loue the brethren. He that loueth not his brother, abydeth in death. All that hate theyr brethren are murtherers, and ye know that no murtherer hath eternall lyfe abydyng in hym.

If thou loue thy brother in Christ, and art ready to do & to suffer for him as Christ dyd for thee, then thou art sure thereby that thou art the sonne of God and heyre of life and delinered frō death and damnation. So haue Christen men signes to know whether they be in the state of grace or no. And on the other side he that hath no power to loue his brethren, may be sure that he is in the state of death and damnation. An other is this, let euery man looke vpō his hart, and be sure that he which hateth his brother hath slayne hym before God & is a murtherer. And murtherers shal not obteine the kingdome of God. Gala. 5. But are Caines brethren and the deuils children, and are heyres of death and euer vnder damnation. Compare the regiment of the spiritualtie, which haue had the temporall sword in their handes now aboue viij. hundreth yeares vnto this doctrine of John, & Iudge whether they haue led vs truely after the steppes of Christes doctrine.

God

Hereby we are assured of loue, because hee left his lyfe for vs, and therfore ought we to leaue our lyues for our brethren. He then that hath the substaunce of the worlde, and seith his brother haue neede and shutteth vp his compassion frō him, how dwelleth the loue of God in hym?

If we felt the loue of Christes death, it would sure set our hart on fire to loue hym agayne and our brethren for his sake, and should neuer cease to slay our resisting members vntill we could not onely be wel content, that our brethren were in a more prosperous state then we, but also vntill we could blesse them when they curse vs, and pray for them when they persecute vs, and to suffer death for the, to testifie the worde of their soules healthy vnto them, and with loue to ouercome them, and to wynne them vnto Christ. If now euery Christen man ought to haue this rule of his profession before his eyes to learne it, that hee should loue his brother as Christ dyd hym, to depart with his lyfe for his brothers example, how farre are they of frō good scholers, that can not finde in their hartes to depart with a litle of the aboundaunce & superfluitie of their temporall goodes, to helpe their neighbours neede?

We must recompence euill with goodnes.

My litle children let vs not loue in worde nor with the toung, but with the dede and of a truth. For thereby we know that we be of the truth, and so shall we certifie our hartes in his sight.

If we haue power to worke, then doth the worke certefie our hartes that our fayth in Christ, and loue to God, and our neighbour for his sake are vnfayned, and that we are true children, and no hypocrites. And then are we bold in our cōscience before God. And this is it that Peter meaneth. 2. Pet. 1. where he biddeth vs minister in our fayth vertue, godly liuing, and all maner of good workes, and therewith to make our vocation and election, or our calling add choising sure. For the sight of the worke doth certify vs, that God hath called vs, and chosen vs vnto grace and mercy.

Good workes declare where good fayth is.

But and if when the time of worcking is come, I fly and haue no power to worke, then will our conscience accuse vs of sinne and transgressiō within the hart before God, and so for feare of the rodde we dare not be bolde, but draw backe and stand aloofe.

Let a childe haue neuer so mercifull a father, yet if he breake his fathers cōmaundementes, though he be not vnder damnatiō, yet is he euer child and rebuked, and now & then lasshed with the rod: by the reason wherof he is neuer bold in his fathers presence. But ỹ childe that keepeth his fathers commandements, is sure of himselfe, and bolde in his fathers presence, to speake & aske what he will. They that minister well get them good degree and great confidēce in the fayth that is in Christ Iesu, sayth Paule. 1. Tim. 3. He that worketh, is bold before God and man. For hys conscience accuseth hym not within, neither haue wee ought to wyte hym withall or to cast in his teeth. And as without the sight of the woorkes Iacob the Apostle can not see thy fayth Iaco. 2. no more shalt thou euer be sure or bold before God or man.

But if our hartes condemne vs, God is greater then our hart, and knoweth all thyng.

If our conscience accuse vs of sinne, God is so great and so mightie that it can not be hid.

Dearely beloued if our hartes condemne vs not, then we trust to Godward. And whatsoeuer wee aske, that shall we receaue of him, because we keepe his commaundementes and do the thynges whiche are pleasaunt in his sight.

Keepyng of the commaundementes maketh a man see his fayth and to bee bold therein. And fayth when it is without conscience of sinne, goeth into God boldly, and is strong and mighty in prayer to coniure God by all hys mercyes, & therewith obtayneth what socuer hee asketh, of all his promises. And the text sayth, because we kepe his commaundementes. Yea verely hys commaundemētes make vs bold. But the keepyng of mens traditions and domme ceremonies make vs, not bold before God, nor certifie our conscience that our faith is vnfayned. Thou shalt not know by sprynkling thy selfe with holy water, nor kyssing the pax, nor with takyng asshes, or though thou were annoynted with all the oyle in Thames strete that thy fayth is sure. But and if thou couldest finde in thyne hart to bestowe both lyfe and goodes vpon thy neighbour in a iust cause, and hast proued it: then art thou sure, that thou louest Christ, and feelest that thou hast thy trust in his bloud.

And this is his commaundemēt that wee beleue in his sonne Iesus Christ, and loue one another, as he gaue commaundement.

Fayth is the roote of all commaundementes.

Fayth is the first and also the roote of all commaundementes. And out of fayth spryngeth loue: and out of loue workes. And when I breake any commaundemēt I sinne agaynst loue. For had I loued I had not done it. And when I sinne agaynst loue I sinne agaynst fayth. For had I earnestly and with a full trust remembred the mercy that Christ hath shewed me, I must haue loued. wherefore when we haue broken any commaundement, there is no other way to bee restored agayne, thē to go through repētaunce vnto our fayth agayne, and aske mercy for Christes sake. And assoone as we haue receaued faith that our sinne is forgiuen, wee shall immediatly loue the commaundemēt agayne, and through loue receaue power, to worke.

And he that keepeth his commaundemētes abideth in him, and he in hym. And hereby we knowe that there dwelleth in vs of hys spirite which he gaue vs.

Through the workes we are sure that we continue in Christ, and Christ in vs, and that his spirite dwelleth in vs. For his spirite it is that keepeth vs in fayth, and through fayth in loue and through loue in workes.

The fourth Chapter.

DEarely beloued beleue not euery spirit, but proue the spirits whether they bee of God. For many false Prophetes are gone out into the world.

Spirites. Spirites are taken here for preachers, because of the preachyng or doctrine, which if it be good, is of the spirite of God: and if it be euill, of the spirite of the deuill. Now ought we not to beleue euery mans doctrine vnadui sedly, or condemne any mans preachyng yer it be heard and sene what it is. But a Christen mās part is to examine, iudge & trie it, whether it be true or no. Quench not the spirit saith Paul 1. Thess. the last. Neither despise prophesiynges, but proue all thyng, and kepe that whiche is good. Destroy not the giftes of the spirite of God, but trie whether they be of God, and good for the edifiyng of his congregation: and keepe that whiche is good and refuse that whiche is euill. And suffer euery person that hath any gift of God, to serue God therin, in his degree and estate, after a Christen maner and a due order. why shall we try the doctrines? Verely for there bee many false Prophetes abroad already. we told you before that Antichrist should come, as our master Christ told vs that he should come. But now I certify you that Antichristes kyngdome is begon already. And his Disciples are gone out to preache. Trie therefore all doctrine. wherewith shall we trie it? with the doctrine of the Apostles, and with the Scripture which is the touchstone: ye and because ye loue compendiousnes, ye shall haue a short rule, to trie them with all.

We may not beleue euery doctrine that is taught and preached, but we must first examine it with the touch stone of Gods word, and so either receaue it or reiect it.

The triall of all doctrine.

Hereby knowe ye the spirite of God. Euery spirite that confesseth that Iesus Christ is come in the flesshe is of God. And euery spirite that cōfesseth not that Iesus Christ is

is come in the flesh, is not of God. And the same is that spirite of Antichrist, of whō ye haue heard that he should come: And euen now he is in the world already.

Antichrist will not cōfesse that Christ is come in the flesh.

Whatsoeuer opinion any member of Antichrist holdeth, the ground of all his doctrine is to destroy this article of our fayth, that Christ is come in the flesh. For though the most part of all heretickes confesse that Christ is come in the flesh after their maner, yet they deny that he is come, as the Scripture testifieth & the Apostles preached hym to be come. The whole study of the deuill and all his members is to destroy the hope and trust that we should haue in Christes flesh, and in those thynges which he suffered for vs in his flesh, & in the Testament and promises of mercy which are made vs in his flesh. For the scripture testifieth that Christ hath taken away the sinne of the worlde in his flesh, and that the same houre that he yelded vp his spirite into the hands of his father, hee had full purged and made full satisfaction for all the sinnes of the worlde. So that all the sinne of the worlde, both before his passion and after, must be put away through repentaunce toward the law and fayth and trust in his bloud, without respect of any other satisfactiō, sacrifice or worke. For if I once sinne, the law rebuketh my conscience, and setteth variaunce betwene God and me. And I shal neuer be at peace with God agayne vntill I haue heard the voyce of hys mouth, how that my sinne is forgiuen me for Christes bloud sake. And assoone as I that beleue, I am at peace with God. Rom.v. and loue his law agayne, and of loue worke.

And that Christ hath done this seruice in his flesh, deny all the members of Antichrist. And hereby thou shalt know them. All doctrine that buildeth thee vpon Christ, to put thy trust and confidence in his bloud, is of God and true doctrine. And all doctrine that withdraweth thyne hope and trust frō Christ, is of the deuill and the doctrine of Antichrist. Examine ẏ Pope by this rule, and thou shalt finde that all hee doth, is to the destructiō of this article. He wresteth all the Scriptures & setteth them cleane agaynst the woll, to destroy this article. He ministreth the very Sacramentes of Christ vnto the destruction of this article: and so doth he all other ceremonies, and his absolution, penaunce, purgatorie, dispensations, pardōs, vowes, with all disguisings. The Pope preacheth that Christ is come to do away sinnes, yet not in the flesh but in water, salt, oyle, cādles, bowes, asshes, friers coates, and monkes cowles, and in the vowes of thē that forswere matrimonie to keepe whores, and swere beggerie, to possesse all the treasure, riches, wealth & pleasures of the world: and haue vowed obedience, to disobey with authoritie, all the lawes both of God and man. For in these hypocrisi and false sacrifices, teacheth he vs to trust for the forgiuenes of sinnes, & not in Christes flesh.

The Popes doctrine of Christ.

Ye are of God litle childrē, and haue ouercome them. For greater is he that is in you, then he that is in the world.

He that dwelleth in you, and worketh in you through fayth, is greater then he whiche dwelleth and worketh in them through vnbelefe. And in hys strength, ye abyde by your profession, and cōfesse your Lord Iesus, how that he is come in the flesh and hath purged the sinne of all that beleue in his flesh. And through that fayth ye ouercome them in the very tormentes of death. So that neither their ingglinges, neither their pleasures, neither their threatnynges, or their tormentes, or the very death wherewith they slay your bodies, can preuayle agaynst you.

God is the worker in vs by fayth that we haue in him.

They be of the world, and therfore they speake of the world, and the world attēdeth vnto them. We bee of God: and hee that knoweth God heareth vs. And he that is not of God heareth vs not. And hereby we know the spirit of truth and the spirite of errour.

There be and euer shalbe two generations in the world: one of the deuill, which naturally hearken vnto the false Apostles of the deuill, because they speake so agreable vnto their naturall complection. And an other of God, which hearken vnto the true Apostles of God, & consent vnto their doctrine. And this is a sure rule to iudge spirites with all, that we iudge them to haue the spirite of truth, which hearkē vnto ẏ true doctrine of Christes Apostles: & them to haue the spirite of errour which hearken vnto worldly and deuilish doctrine, abhorryng the preachyng

Two generations in the world.

Doctrine that is of God.

Doctrine that is of the deuill.

ching of the Apostles. And looke bether the Popes doctrine bee worldly or no, if pride and couetousnes be worldly, yea and lecherie to. For what other is all his doctrine then of benefices, promotions, dignities, bysshoprikes, cardinallshyps, vicarages, parsonages, prebendes, chaunge of bisshoprikes, and resignyng of benefices, of vnions, pluralities, totquots, and that which cōmeth once into their handes, may not out agayn: yea and of whores and concubines, and of captiuyng of consciences for couetousnes, & all that hearken to that doctrine abhorre the doctrine of the Apostles and persecute it, and them that preach it.

The Popes doctrine is worldly.

Dearely beloued let vs loue one an other, for loue is of God. And all that loue are borne of God, and knowe God. And he that loueth not, knoweth not God: for God is loue.

John singeth his old song agayne, and teacheth an infallible and sure token which we may see and feele at our fingers endes, and therby be out of all doubt, that our fayth is vnfayned and that we knowe God and be borne of God, and that we hearkē vnto the doctrine of the Apostles purely and godly & not of any curiositie, to seke glorie and honour therein vnto our selues, & to make a cloke therof to couer our couetousnes, and filthy lustes. whiche token is, if we loue one an other. For the loue of a mans neighbour vnfaynedly springeth out of the vnfayned knowledge of God in Christes bloud.

He that loueth God is borne of God.

By which knowledge we be borne of God & loue God and our neighbours for his sake. And so he that loueth hys neighbour vnfaynedly, is sure of him selfe, that he knoweth God, and is of God vnfaynedly. And contrarywise, he that loueth not, knoweth not God. For God in Christes bloud is such a loue that if a man saw it, it were impossible that he should not breake out into the loue of God agayne & of his neighbour for his sake.

The fountaine of loue.

Herein appeared the loue of God vnto vs warde, because God set his onely sonne into the world, that we should liue through hym. Herein is loue: not that we loued God, but that he loued vs, and sent hys sonne, a satisfaction for our synnes.

If a man had once felt within in his conscience the fierce wrath of God towarde sinners and the terrible & most cruell damnation that the law threatneth: and then beheld with the eyes of a strong fayth, the mercy, fauour and grace the takyng away of the damnation of the law and restorying agayne of life, frely offred vs in Christs bloud, he should perceaue loue, and so much the more, that it was shewed vs, when we were sinners and enemies to God. Roma. 5. and that without all deseruyngs, without our endeuouryng, enforcyng and preparyng our selues, and without all good motions, qualities & properties of our frewill. But when our hartes were as dead vnto all good worckyng, as the mēbers of him whose soule is departed, whiche thyng to proue, and to stoppe the blasphemous mouthes of all our aduersaries, I will of innumerable textes rehearse one in the beginnyng of the second chapter to the Ephes. where Paule sayth thus. Ye were dead in trespasse & sinne in which ye walked accordyng to the course of the world and after the gouernour that ruleth in the ayre, the spirite that worcketh in the children of vnbelefe, amōg which we also had our conuersation in tyme past, in the lustes of our flesh: and fulfilled the lustes of the flesh and of the mynde (so that the flesh and the mynde were agreed both to sinne, and the mynde consented as well as the flesh) and were by nature the children of wrath, as well as other. But God beyng rich in mercy, through the great loue wherwith he loued vs, euen whē we were dead in sinne, hath quickened vs with Christ: for by grace are ye saued: and with hym hath rayled vs vp and with him hath made vs sit in heauenly thynges through Jesus Christ, for to shew in tyme to come the exceding riches of his grace, in kyndnes to vs ward in Jesus Christ. For by grace are ye saued through fayth, & that not of your selues: for it is the gift of God, and commeth not of workes, lest any man should bost him selfe. But we are his worckemanshyp created in Christ Jesu vnto good workes, vnto whiche God ordeined vs before that we shuld walke in them. The text is playne, we were stone dead and without lyfe or power to do or consent to good. The whole nature of vs was captiue vnder the deuill and led at his will. And we were as wicked as the deuill now is. (Except that hee now sinneth agayne

God first loued vs before we could loue hym.

Ephes. 2.

Herein appeareth the great and louing mercy of almighty God toward vs, when we were yet sinners.

the holy ghost) and we consented vnto sinne, with soule and body and hated the law of God. But God of his grace onely quickened vs in Christ, and rayſed vs out of that death and made vs sit with Christ in heauenly thynges. That is, he set our hartes at rest and made vs sit fast in the lyfe of Christes doctrine, and vnmoueable frō the loue of Christ. And finally we are in this our second byrth Gods worckemāshyp and creation in Christ: so that as her which is yet vnmade, hath no life nor power to worke, no more had we till we were made agayne in Christ. The preachyng of mercy in Christ quickened our hartes through faith, wrought by the spirit of Christ which God powred into our hartes, yer we wist.

Dearely beloued, if God so loued vs, then ought we loue one an other.

If we felt the loue of God in Christes bloud, we could not but loue agayne, not onely God and Christ, but also all that are bought with Christes bloud. If we loue God for the pleasures that we receaue, then loue we our selues. But if we loue hym to do hym pleasure agayne: that can we no otherwise do, then in louing our neighbours for his sake, them that are good, to continue them in their goodnes, & them that are euill, to draw them to good. Loue is the instrument wherewith sayth maketh vs Gods sonnes & fashioneth vs lyke the image of God, and certifieth vs that we so are. And therfore commaundeth Christ. Math. v. Loue your enemyes, Blesse thē that curse you, pray for them that persecute you, that ye may be the sonnes of your heauenly father, whiche maketh his sunne rise ouer good and bad, and sendeth his rayne vpon iust and vniust: ye whiche made the sunne of his mercy shyne vpō vs and sent the rayne of the bloud of his deare and onely child vpon our soules, to quicken vs and to make vs see loue to loue agayne.

Loue maketh vs the sonnes of God.

No man hath at any tyme sene God. If we loue one an other God dwelleth in vs, and his loue is perfect in vs.

No man hath sene God.

Though we can not see God, yet if we loue one an other, we be sure that he abydeth in vs, and that his loue is perfect in vs: that is, that we loue hym vnfaynedly. For, to loue God truly & to giue hym thankes, is onely to loue our neighbour for his sake. For vppon his person thou canst bestow no benefite. And for as much as we neuer saw God, let vs make no image of him nor doe hym any imageseruice after our own imagination, but let vs go to the scripture that hath sene hym, and there wete what fashion he is of and what seruice he wilbe serued with. Blind reason sayth God is a kerued post and wil be serued with a candle. But Scripture sayth God is loue & wilbe serued with loue. If thou loue thy neighbour thē art thou the image of God thy self, and he dwelleth in the liuing temple of thine hart. And thy louing of thy neighbour for hys sake, is hys seruice and worshyp in the spirite, and a cādle that burneth before hym in thyne hart and casteth out the light of good workes before the world, & draweth all to God, and maketh his enemyes leane their euill, and come and worshyp him also.

The scripture hath sene God.

Hereby we know that we abyde in him, and he in vs. For he hath giuen vs of his spirite.

He that hath not Christes spirit, the same is none of his. Roma. 8. If we haue the spirite of God, then are we sure. But how shall we know whether we haue the spirite? Aske Iohn and he will say, if we loue one an other.

By this badge of loue, we are knowē to haue the spirite of God.

And we haue sene and do testifie that the father hath sent hys sonne, the sauiour of the worlde. Whosoeuer confesseth that Iesus is the sonne of God, in hym dwelleth God, and he in God. And we haue knowne and beleued the loue that God hath to vs.

First the Apostles taught no fables, but that they saw and receaued of God by the witnesse of his spirite. Secondaryly Iohn alcēdeth vp stepe higher, from loue to sayth, and sayth he that beleueth that Iesus is Gods sonne, hath God in hym. And I doubt not but the Pope and his defēders will answere Iohn and say, then the deuil hath God in hym, and is also in God. For other sayth then such as the deuill hath, felt they neuer any. But Iohn preuenteth them, we haue knowē and beleued the loue that God hath to vs. That is, we beleue not onely with stony sayth, as men beleue old Chronicles, but we beleue the loue and mercy that GOD shewed vs, and put our trust and confidence therein (And so taketh Scripture beleue) we beleue that Jesus is the sonne of God, made man and slayne for our sinnes, which is a toke̅ of great loue. And that loue beleue we & trust therto. where Paule sayth. i. Cor. xij. No man can cal Jesus Lord except the holy ghost had taught hym. But thorough the holy ghost he meaneth not with the mouth onely, but in the hart with vnfayned fayth, putting his hope & trust in the Lordshyp which he hath ouer sinne, damnation, hell, and death. For so could no man call Jesus Lord, except the holy ghost had taught hym, as Christ saith Math. xvi. flesh & blood shewed thee not that.

But yet how shall I see my fayth: I must come downe to loue agayne, & thence to the workes of loue, yer I can see my faith. Not alway but sometime thou shalt feele thy fayth without the outward deede, as in great aduersitie and persecution when the deuil assaulteth thee with desperation, and layeth thy sinnes before thee, & would beare the in hād that God had cast the away and left the succourles, for thy synnes sake. Then commeth fayth forth with her shielde, and turneth backe agayne the dartes of the deuill, and aunswereth: May for Jesus is ỳ sonne of God: yea and my very God and my very Lord, and hath take̅ away my sinnes & all dānation. And this trouble & aduersitie which is come vpō me, by settyng of thee and on of thy lymmes, is onely to make me feele the mercy of my father and his power and helpe within in my soule, and to slay the rest of the poyson which remaineth in the flesh.

Fayth taketh hold of Christes death and deserueng.

God is loue and he that abydeth in loue, abydeth in God, and God in hym.

This haue we heard aboue and it is easie to be vnderstand.

Herefore is loue perfect with vs, that we should haue confidence in the day of Iudgement.

Howsoeuer this text sounde, this me thinketh should be the meanyng: that we should prouoke ech other to loue, and euer haue those examples of edifieng before our eyes that should most moue vs to loue. For perfite loue serueth to make a man bold, because it is the kepyng of the cōmaundements. And therfore he that is perfect in loue, when hee seith hym selfe yet in this world to be vnto his neyghbour as God is vnto hym, and to be lyke hys heauenly father in all example of kyndnesse, is bold in the presence of God: yea though he come to iudge synners, when on the other side, they that continue euer in their wickednes & grow not in loue, fall often. And therefore their cōscience euer accuseth them and putteth them in feare, by the reason of the fresh memory of the offence, that they can not at once be bold, though they haue neuer so great promises of mercy.

Loue maketh the faythfull & Christian men to be bold.

There is no feare in loue. But perfect loue casteth out feare. For feare hath paynefulnes. He therefore that feareth, is not perfect in loue.

Loue is not paynefull but maketh all thyng easie and pleasaunt: feare of punishmēt for ỳ trespasse newly committed is paynefull: Therfore where loue is perfect there is no such feare. Loue is the fulfillyng of all commaundementes. And therfore where loue is perfect, there is no sinne. And where conscience doth not accuse of sinne, there is faith bold to go into God & to stand before hym, and looke hym in the face, and to coniure him by all his mercies, and to aske the petitions of his desire. Lacke of loue is the breakyng of the commaundements and cause of sinne. And where the conscience accuseth of sinne, their fayth is abashed, dismayed, ashamed & affrayed to go in, for feare of rebuke. Loue therefore serueth to make a man bold in the day of iudgement and in all temptations.

Loue.

John speaketh not generally of all maner feare, but of that onely whiche the conscience of sinne putteth a man in. For diuers feares there be that accompany loue and grow as she doth. The more a woman loueth her child, the more she careth for it and feareth lest ought should chaunce it a misse. Euen so the more we loue our brethren, the more we care for them, and feare lest any temptation should trouble them. As Paule sayth. ij. Cor. xi. who is sicke and I am not sicke: who is offended or hurt and mine hart burneth not: How cared he for Timothe, for Titus, and for all that were weake, & for the Corinthians, Galathiās, and for all congregations: and how diligently wrote he to them in his absence: and the more fayth is the mother of loue.

If we loue our brethrē the̅ are we carefull for them.

The more we loue God, the more diligent and circumspect are we, that we offende hym not. And tell me I pray thee, whosoeuer hast had experience, what a payne and grief, yea and what a treatyng corsey is it vnto the hart of a true louer of God, to here the poyson generation of vipers, the pestilent sect of hypocritish Phariseis, wittingly and willingly to blaspheme and raple on the open and manifest truth of the holy ghost:

The more we loue God, the more diligent we are to do his will.

If ye will see how bold loue is: go to Moyses. Exod. 32. and Numeri. 14. And there behold how hee conioureth God and amõg all sayth: Forgiue this people or put me out of the booke that thou hast written. As who should say, they be thy people and thou commaundest me to loue them. And for thy sake I loue them and teach them and care for them, as a mother that had borne them and loue them no lesse then my selfe. Wherfore if thou loue me as thou promisest me, then saue them with me: or if not, thẽ cast me away with them, and let me haue such part as they take. And Paule sayd almuch. Roma. ix. Looke vpõ worldly loue, and see what pagcantes she playeth now and then and how dronken a thyng it is: and be sure, where the loue of God is perfect, she will not onely go betwene bodely death and her louer, but also betwene hym and hell. If a man would take of this, that a man might be so perfect in this lyfe, that he might not be perfecter, it would not folow. For though the spirite at a tyme get the vpper hand of the flesh, & wynneth her selfe to God, that she can not tell whether she be in the body or no: yet the flesh will pull her downe agayn and not let her continue, and now and thẽ plucke of some of her feathers, for mountyng so hygh againe. For Moses fell through vnbelefe well inough after that feruentnes.

Where perfect loue is there is no fear.

We loue hym, because he loued vs first.

We deserue not ỹ loue of God first, but he deserueth our loue, and loueth vs first, to wynne vs and to make vs his frendes of his enemyes. And as soone as we beleue his loue, we loue agayne. And so fayth is mother of all loue. And as great as my fayth is so great is loue, though fayth can not be perfectly sene, but through the workes of loue and in the fire of temptation.

fayth is the mother of our.

If a man say, I loue God, and hateth his brother: he is a lyer. For how cã he that loueth not his brother whom he seeth, loue God whõ he seeth not? And this commaũdemẽt haue we of him: that he which loueth God, louc his brother also.

A sure rule

To loue a mans neighbour in God is a sure rule to know that we loue God: and not to loue him, is a sure token that we loue not God: and to hate our neighbour is to hate God. For to loue God is to do hys commaundements as Christ sayth Iohn. xv. ye are my louers if ye do those thinges which I haue commaũded you: and the commaũdemẽt is to loue our neighbours: then he that loueth not his neighbour, loueth not God. And likewise to hate the commaundement, is to hate God that commaunded it: and the cõmaundement is to loue our neighbours: then that hateth his brother whõ God biddeth hym loue, hateth God.

If we loue God, we must do his commaundements, & his commaunde ment is to loue our neyghbours,

The fift Chapter.

ALl that beleue that Iesus is Christe are borne of God. And al that loue him whiche begat, loue hym that is begotten of him. In this wee knowe that wee loue the sonnes of God, when we loue God and kepe his commaundementes. For this is the loue of God that we kepe his commaundementes.

Fayth maketh vs Gods sonnes.

This is a sure cõclusion that we be borne of God through fayth. And that fayth maketh vs Gods sonnes, in that we beleue that Iesus is Christ: as the first chapter of Iohn also testifieth, hee gaue them power to be the sonnes of God, in that they beleued in his name.

What it is to beleue that Iesus is Christe.

What it is to beleue that Iesus is Christe, may bee vnderstand by that which is above rehearsed. It is a farre other thyng then as the deuill beleued it agaynst his will and to hys greate payne, or as they beleue it which to fulfil their sinne, enuie the glory of Christ and persecute his Gospell, forbydding to preach it or to read in it. To beleue that Iesus is Christe, is to beleue in Christ: that is, to beleue earnestly, and to put all thy trust therein, and to lay the price of thy soule therupon: that the sonne of Marie whom the aungell cõmaunded to be called Iesus because he shuld saue his people frō their sinnes, is that Christ, that Messias, and that annoynted whiche God promised the fathers should come and blesse all nations and annoynt them with the oyle of his spirite, & with mercy and grace, and to deliuer them frō death of their soules, whiche is the consentyng to sinne, and to make them a lyue with consentyng vnto the law of God, and in certifiyng thē that they be the sonnes of God: And to put the whole trust in all that he suffred in his flesshe for thy sake and in all promises of mercy that are in hym and that thou be full persuaded that there is no other name vnder heauen giuen vnto men to be saued frō sinne by, or to purchase forgiuenesse of the lest synne that euer was cōmitted.

Jesus the true Messias and the Sauiour of the world from their sins.

All that loue God loue all that beleue in hym.

An other conclusion is this: whosoeuer loueth God, loueth all that beleue in God. For all that loue hym that begetteth, loue them that are begotten of him: and all that beleue in God are begotten of God through that belefe, and made his sonnes: thē al that loue God, loue all that beleue in God.

He that loueth God, loueth also the sonnes of God.

An other conclusion is this. when we loue God and his law, thē we loue the sonnes of God. which is this wise proued: The loue of God is to keepe the law of God, by the text before and after the law of G O D is to loue our neighbours & therfore if we loue God in kepyng his lawes we must needes loue the sonnes of God.

But John should seme to be a very negligēt disputer to many men in that he here certifieth vs of the loue of our neighbours by the loue of God, when aboue hee certifieth vs that we loue God because we loue our neighbours. Hee semeth to doe as I heard once a great Clerke in Oxford stand halfe an houre in a pulpit, to proue that Christ was a true Prophet by the testimonie of John Baptist and an other halfe houre to proue John ỹ Baptist a true Prophet by the authoritie of Christ, as we say claw me, claw thee: and as euery thefe might lightly proue him selfe a true man, in bearyng recorde to another as false as he and takyng recorde of the same agayne. which kynde of disputyng schole men call Petitio principij, the prouyng of two certaine thynges, eche by the other, and is no prouyng at all, as our holy father proueth the authoritie of Scripture by hys decrees (for the Scripture is not autentike but as his decrees admit it) & to make his decrees shyne and appeare glorious, and to obtaine authoritie, he alleageth the Scripture after his iugglyng maner, to make fooles starke mad.

But it is not so here, for both the demonstrations are certaine, both the proffe of the loue of God and his law by the loue of my neighbour, and the proofe of the loue of my neighbour by the loue of God and his law. For whē ij. thynges are so ioyned together that they can not be separated, then the presence of the one vttereth the presence of the other, whether soeuer thou first seest. As if I see fire I am sure that some thyng doth burne. And if I smell burnyng, I am certified of fire. Euen so the loue of God is the cause why I loue my neighbour: and my loue toward my neighbour is the effect of the loue of God. And these two loues are euer inseperable, so that whether soeuer I feele first, the same certifieth me of the other.

The loue of God and the loue of my neighbour are inseperable.

John calleth the loue of a mās neighbour the deedes of loue, after the Hebrue speach, as to helpe at neede. For the deede declareth what the man is within. Neither can my loue to God & fayth be sene to the world, saue thorough the workes. And by the workes doth Christ commaunde vs to iudge. So that if a mā haue euill workes and continueth therin, he loueth not God nor knoweth God, no though he call hym selfe master doctour, or Gods vicare. Neither vnderstandeth he Gods word for all his high diuinitie: but is in all hys preachyng an hypocrite, a false Prophet, and a lyer though hys preachyng please the world neuer so well. Neuertheles a man is certified that he loueth God yer he come at the worke, by the testimonie of the spirite which is giuē him in earnest. The spirite sayth Paule. Roma. viij. testifieth vnto our spirite, that we be the sonnes of God: and then it testifieth that we beleue in God: for thorough fayth are we sonnes. And then it certifieth me that I loue God. For fayth and loue are inseparable. The spirite thorough fayth certifieth my conscience that my sinnes are forgiuē, and I receaued vnder grace and made the very sonne of God, and beloued of God. And thē naturally myne hart breaketh out into the loue of God agayne, & I seke how to vtter my loue, and to do God some pleasure. And because I can neither do seruice or pleasure vnto his owne person, my neighbour is set before me, to do God seruice and pleasure in him &

to

To doe good to my neighbour is to do God good seruice.

to be to him as Christ is to me, because he is my brother, bought with Christs bloud as I am. And I consent vnto that law, and loue it yet I come at the dede, and long after the dede. And then whē I loue my neighbour in the deede accordyng to this law, I am sure that I loue hym truly. Or els if I examined not my loue by this law, I might be deceaued. For some loue their neighbours for pleasure, profite, glorie and for their doyng seruice onely, as our spiritualtie loue vs, and of that blessed loue, do their busie cure to keepe vs in darkenes: which loue is a signe that a man hateth God and hys neighbour therto, and loueth him selfe onely. But Gods law is that I should abstaine from myne owne pleasure and profite, and become my neighbours seruaunt, and bestow lyfe and goodes vpō hym, after the example of Christ. wherfore if I loue my neighbour out of the loue of Christ and after the example of hys law, I am sure that I loue him truly.

And his commaundementes are not greuous. For all that is borne of God ouercommeth the worlde: and this is the victory that ouercommeth the world, euē our faith.

A goodly similitude.

To loue is not paynefull: the commaundementes are but loue: therfore they be not greuous, because loue maketh the commaundements easie. The seruice that a mother doth vnto her child is not greuous, because she loueth it. But if she should do the tenth part vnto one that she loued not, her hart would brast for impacience. Vnto a mā that feeleth not the loue of Christ it is as impossible to keepe the commaundementes, as for a Camell to enter through the eye of a nedle. But impossible is possible and easie to, where the loue of Christ is beleued. For it followeth, all that are borne of God, ouercome the worlde: that is to wete, the deuill which is the ruler of the worlde: and his disciples which haue their lust in hys gouernaunce & cōsent to sinne, both in body and soule, and giue them selues to folow their lustes without resistence: and their owne flesh which also cōsenteth to sinne, do they ouercome with al that moueth to sinne. By what victory? Verely through fayth. For if our soules be truly vnderset with sure hope and trust, and continuall meditations of Christes loue, shewed alreadi, and of succour, helpe and assistence that is promised in his name, and with the continuall memorie of their examples which in tymes past haue fought through fayth and ouercome: thē were it impossible for the worlde with all his chiualrie, to ouerthrow vs with any assault or with any ordinaunce that hee could shoote agaynst vs. For if ỳ fayth & meditation were euer present in vs, then loue thorough that fayth, should easly ouercome what soeuer peril thou couldest imagine. Read in the Bible and see what conquestes fayth hath made, both in doyng & also sufferyng. The xi. chapter vnto the Hebrues ministreth the examples aboundauntly. How mighty was Dauid when hee came to fight, and how ouercame hee thorough fayth? And how mightyer was he when he came to sufferyng, as in the persecution of the kyng Saul? In so much that when he had his most mortall enemy kyng Saul, that twelfe yeares persecuted him against al right, in his handes to haue done what hee would with him, through faith he touched hym not, nor suffred any man els to do, though he was yet all his lyfe a man of warre and accustomed to murther and shedyng of bloud. For he beleued that God should auenge hym on his vnrighteous kyng, vpō whom it was not lawfull to auēge himselfe.

The conquestes of fayth.

Who is it that ouercommeth the world, but he that beleueth that Iesus is the sonne of God?

If to beleue that Iesus is Gods sonne be to ouercome the worlde, then our Prelates vnderstand not what belief is, which affirme that the best beliefe and the worst mā in the worlde may stand together.

This is he that came by water and bloud Iesus Christ: not by water onely but by water and bloud. And it is the spirite that testifieth, because the spirite is truth. For there are three that beare witnesse in heauen. The father, the worde, and the holy ghost And these three are one. And there are three which beare recorde in earth the spirite water and bloud, and these three are one.

Christ had three witnesses.

Christ came with three witnesses, water, bloud and spirite. He ordeined the Sacrament of Baptisme to be hys witnesse vnto vs. And he ordeined the Sacramēt of his bloud, to be his witnes vnto vs. And he powreth his spirite into the harts of his, to testifie and to make them feele that the testimonie of those two Sacramēts are true. And the testimonie of these three is, as it afterfoloweth, that we haue euerlastyng life in the sonne of God. And these iij. are one full witnes sufficiēt at the most that the law requireth, whiche sayth ij. or. iij. at the most is one full sufficient witnes. But alas we are not taught to take the Sacramēts for witnesses, but for imageseruice, & to fore the worke of them to God, with such a minde as the old heathen offred sacrifices of beastes vnto their Gods. So that what soeuer testifieth vnto vs, that we haue euerlastyng lyfe in Christ, that mouth haue they stopped with a leuended maunchet of their Pharisaicall glosses.

The true doctrine of the Sacramentes is away from vs.

If we receaue the witnesse of mē, the witnesse of God is greater. For this is the witnesse that God hath borne of his sonne.

If the witnesse of men, so they be iij. is to be receaued, much more is the witnesse of God to be receaued. Now the witnesse that these iij. water bloud, & spirite beare, is the witnesse of God & therfore the more to be beleued.

He that beleueth in the sonne of God hath witnes in him selfe. And he that beleueth not God, maketh him a lyer, because he doth not beleue the witnesse that God hath testified of his sonne. And this is the witnesse, that God hath giuen vs eternall lyfe: and this lyfe is in hys sonne. He that hath the sonne, hath lyfe. And he that hath not the sonne of God, hath not life.

The sayth full haue the true witnes of God in their harts

The true beleuers haue the testimonie of God in their hartes, & they glorifie God witnessing that hee is true. They haue the kingdome of God within them and the temple of God within them, and God in that temple, & haue the sonne of God & lyfe through hym. And in that temple they seke God, and offer for their sinnes ỹ sacrifice of Christes bloud, and the fatte of his mercies in the fire of their prayers, and in the confidence of that sacrifice go in boldly to God their father.

But the vnbeleuers blaspheme God and make him false, describyng him after the complection of their lyeng nature. And because they be so full stuffed with lyes that they cā receaue nothing els, they looke for the kyngdome of God in outward thynges and seeke God in a temple of stone where they offer their imageseruice and the fate of their holy dedes: in confidence wher of they go into God and trust to haue euerlastyng lyfe. And though the text testifieth that this lyfe is onely in the sonne, yet they will come at no sonne shynyng but as vncleane bydes hate the light.

The vnsayth full, worshyp God in imageseruice and outward Popery.

These thynges haue I written vnto you that beleue in the name of the sonne of God, that ye may know that ye haue euerlasting life, & that ye may beleue in the sonne of God.

They that haue the sayth of Christes Apostles, know that they haue eternal lyfe. For the spirite testifieth vnto their spirites that they are ỹ sonnes of God. Roma. viij. and receaued vnder grace. Our Doctours say they can not know whether they be in the state of grace: therefore they haue not the sayth of the Apostles. And that they know it not, is the cause whey they rayle on it.

The Papistes haue not the sayth of the Apostles neither do they know and therefore they rayle on it.

This is the confidence that we haue in hym, that if we aske ought accordyng to his will, he heareth vs. And if we know that he heareth vs, whatsoeuer we aske, we knowe that we haue the petitions that we aske of hym.

Christ sayth Math. vij. aske & it shal be geuen you. And John in the. xvj. chap. whatsoeuer ye aske in my name, he shall giue it you. To aske in ỹ name of Jesu Christ & accordyng to his will be both one, and are nothyng elles but to aske the thynges contayned in the promises and Testamēt of God to vs warde, that God wilbe our father and care for vs both in body and in soule: and if we sinne of frailtie & repent forgiue vs, and minister vs all thynges necessarie vnto this life, & kepe vs that we be not ouercome of euill &c. Now if they which beleue in Christ are bold with God that he heareth them & sure that he graunteth their petitions, it foloweth that they whiche are not bold that he heareth them nor sure that hee graunteth their petitions, do not beleue in Christ. They that go to dead Saints with which they neuer speake

not wotte where they be, be not bold that God wil heare them, nor sure that he will graunt their petitions therfore they beleue not in Christ. That they be neither bold nor sure, appeareth first by their deedes, and secondarely by their owne confession: for they say what should God heare them or graūt them ought seing they be vnworthy, yea and they confirme it with a similitude of worldly wisedome, that they should be put backe for their malapertnes, and fare the worse, as if a rude felow should breake vp into the kyngs priuie chamber, and presse vnto his owne person without knockyng or speakyng to any other officer: so that they beleue it an augmentyng of sinne, to go to God thē selues in the cōfidēce of Christes blond as he bad them.

If a man see his brother sinne a sinne not vnto death, let him aske: and he shall giue hym life for them that sinne not vnto death. There is a sinne vnto death, and for it say I not that thou shouldest pray. All vnrighteousnes is sinne. And there is a sinne not to death.

The sinne to ỹ death.

whatsoeuer sinne we see in ỹ world, let vs pray and not dispayre. For God is the God of mercy. But for the sinne to death whiche is resistyng grace and fightyng against mercy and open blasphemyng of the holy ghost, affirmyng that Christs miracles are done in Beelsabub, and his doctrine to be of the deuill, I thinke that no Christen man if he perceaue it, can otherwise pray, then as Paule prayed for Alexander the Coppersmith the .ij. Timo. the last: that God would reward hym accordyng vnto his workes. They that go backe agayne after they know the truth, and giue them selues willingly to sinne, for to folow it and persecute the doctrine of truth by profession to maynteine falshead for their glorie and vantage, are remedyless: as ye may see. Hebr. vj. and .x. Balaam so sinned: the false Prophetes in the old Testament so sinned the Pharisees so sinned: Alexander so sinned: & now many so sinne: folowyng their pride & couetousnes.

We know that all that are borne of God sinne not: But he that is borne of God kepeth him self, and the wicked touche hym not.

As thou readest in the third chapter, they that are borne of God can not sinne, for the sede of God kepeth them. They cannot cast of the yocke of Christ and consent to cōtinue in sinne nor defie his doctrine, nor persecute it, for to quench it or to maynteine any thyng contrary vnto it. But in whatsoeuer captiuitie they be in ỹ flesh, their harts yeld not: but imagine to breake lowse and to escape, and flye away, vnto the partie & standart of their Lord Christ. And as men of warre they euer keepe watche and prepare them selues vnto warre, and put on the armure of God, the which is Gods word, the shield of fayth, the helmet of hope, and harnesse thē selues with the meditation of those thynges which Christ suffred for vs, & with the examples of all the Saintes that folowed him, and thinke earnestly that it is their part to lyue as purely as the best & come after as fast as they can. And yet in all their workes they knowledge them selues sinners vnfaynedly, as long as one iote of the perfectnes that was in ỹ deedes of Christ, is lackyng in theirs. So that the deuill can not touch the hartes of them, neither with pride or vayne glorie of pure lyuing, neither to make them consentyng vnto the flesh in grosse sinnes, if at a tyme they be taken tardy & ketche a fall. whatsoeuer chaunce them, the deuill can ketch no hold of them, to keepe them still in captiuitie: but they will breake lose agayne, and repent and do penaunce, to chast theyr flesh that they come no more vnder ỹ deuils clawes.

All that are borne of God cā not sinne.

The armour of a Christen man.

We know that we be of God, and that the whole world is set on mischief.

They that beleue: that is to say, put their trust in Christ, see both their owne glorious state in God, and also the wretched estate of ỹ world in their wickednes. But the worlde as they knowe not God, nor the glory of the sonnes of God: Euen so they see not their owne miserable estate in wickednes and damnation vnder the law of God, but the worse they are, the bolder they be and the surer of themselues, the further from repentaūce and the more standyng in their owne conceites, for the darkenes that is in them. And ther fore say our Doctours, a man can not knowe whether hee be in the state of grace or no nor needeth to care therfore. And they be therefore the blynd leaders of the blynd.

The worlde seeth not the thynges that are of God.

We

We know that the sonne of God is come, and hath giuen vs vnderstandyng to know him that is true: and we be in the truth thorough Jesus Christ. He is very God and eternall lyfe.

Christ only is the fountaine and fulnes of all good giftes.

Christ is all and the fountaine of all and of his fulnesse receaue we all. And as hee powreth the giftes of his grace vpon them that beleue in hym so he giueth them vnderstanding to know the very God, and that they be in the very God and that they haue obtained that through his purchasing: and leaueth not his sheepe in darkenes. And the same Jesu Christ is very God and eternall life: God and eternall lyfe was he from the begynnyng, and became man for the great loue he had to vs, for to bryng vs vnto his eternall life. And he that hath any other way thether, whether his own workes or other mēs, or workes of ceremonies, or sacraments, or merites of Saintes, or of ought saue Jesu Christ onely, shall neuer come thether. The world seith the Pope, and seith that they which be in the Pope, be Lordes in this world: and therfore they care to be in the Pope: but whether they be in God or not they say, it is not necessarie to know.

He that seketh any other way to eternall saluation, then by Christ, shal neuer come there.

Litle children beware of Images.

Serue none Jmage in your harts.

Idolatrie. Idolater.

Idolatrie is Greeke, and the English is imageseruice: And an Idolater is also Greke, and the English an imageseruaunt. Be not Idolaters nor committe Idolatrie, that is be none imageseruauntes, nor do any imageseruice, but beware of scruyng all maner images. And thinke it not inough to haue put all the Jmages of false Gods out of the way, if ye now set vp the Jmage of very God and of his true Saints in their rowmes, to doe the same seruice vnto thē, which ye dyd vnto the other. For ye may do as strong imageseruice vnto the Jmage of GOD and of hys Saintes, as vnto the Jmages of false Gods: yea thou maist commit as great Jdolatrie to God, and yet before none outward Jmage, but before the image which thou hast famed of God in thine hart, as thou mayst before an outward Jmage of the deuil. The Jewes in the tēple of God where was none Jmage of God, dyd as great imageseruice to God, as the heathen vnto their false Gods: yea the Jewes in doing to God the thynges which God commaunded them, dyd committe worse Jdolatrie & sinned more grieuously agaynst God, thē ỳ heathē did in offering vnto their false Goddes, which thyng to be true, the Prophetes testifie. For when the Jewes dyd their ceremonies and sacrifices: the meanyng & signification lost, and the cause forgotten which God ordeined them for: to flatter and please God with the gloriousnes of the deede in it selfe, and to purchase ought of him for the costlynes or propernes of the present, what other made they of God in their imaginatiō, then a child whom if he crye or be displeased, men stil with a popet, or if we will haue hym to doe ought, make him an horse of a sticke.

As great Idolatry may be cōmitted to the Jmage of a Saint as was by the Gentiles committed vnto Idols.

Jf thou bryng a bolle of bloud and set it before God, to flatter hym, to stroke hym, and to cozy and claw hym, as he were an horse, and imaginest that he hath pleasure and delectation therin, what better makest thou of God, then a butchers dogge? Jf thou bryng the fat of thy beastes to God, for the same imaginatiō, what makest thou of God, but one that had neede of grease to greale shoes or sneere bootes? Jf thou burnest bloud and fatte together to please God, what other thyng doest thou make of God, then one that had lust to smell to burnt flotesse?

Grosse worshyppyng of God.

God commaunded a curtesie of all first ripe frutes to be offered: not to be an imageseruice, but a witnesse and testimony that he had made them grow, that the people shuld not forget God, but thinke on his benefites and loue him and of loue kepe his commaundementes. And likewise if any had sinned agaynst Gods law God commaunded that they should repēt, and then bryng a beast and slye it and offer the bloud and ỳ fat of the inwardes: not to make satisfaction, but to testifie onely that God was pleased, and had of his mercy at the repentaunce of the hart forgiuen the sinne. The sacrifices of bloud were ordeined partly to be a secret prophesyeng of Christes bloudshedyng, & partly to be a testimonie and certifyeng of our hartes, that the sinne was forgiuen and peace made betwene vs and God, and not to be a satisfaction. For that were imageseruice, and to make an image of God.

Ceremonies.

Sacrifices

We read in the hystories that when a loue day or a truce was made betwene man and man the couenauntes were rehearsed: and vppon that, they slue beastes in a memoriall and remembraūce of the appointemēt onely. And so

so were the sacrifices signes and memorials onely, that God was at one with vs. For the Iew could beleue no wordes though an aungell had spokē, without a tokē, as we hold vp our fingers and clappe handes. And likewise whatsoeuer they were bidde to do, they must haue had a tokē of remēbraunce, though it had ben but a ring of a rush, as it is to see in the Bible.

The Iewes could beleue nothyng without tokēs.

Euen so our images, reliques, ceremonies and Sacramentes were our memorials & signes of remembraunce onely. And he that giueth in his hart more to them then that, is an image seruaunt. But when God is a spirite and worshypped in the spirite, we for lacke of fayth, beyng spiriteles, and hauyng no power to desire of God any spiritual thing, serue God in the body, with imagined seruice, for such worldly thinges as our profession is to defie. who kisseth a relique or beholdeth an image for loue of the Saintes liuyng, to folow the example? Nay we will fast the Saintes Euens & go barefoote vnto their Images and take payne, to obtaine greater pleasure in the world, and to purchase worldly thyngs as to maintеine the body in lustes that the soule can not once wishe for power to liue as the Saintes lined or to long for the life to come. If we went in pilgrimage to kepe the remembraunce of the Saintes liuing in minde for our exāple, and fasted and went barefoote to tame ỳ flesh that it should not lust after such worldly thinges whiche we now desire of the Saintes, then did our fastyng and pilgrimage goyng serue vs, yea & the Saint were yet our seruaunt to edifie vs in Christ with the remembraunce of his life left behind, to preach and to prouoke vs to folow the exāmple. For our bodely seruice can be no seruice vnto the Saint which is a spirite, except we imagine him to be an Image.

Sacraments and ceremonies were ordeined onely for remembraunces.

Idolatry.

Saint white must haue a chese once in a yeare, and that of the greatest sorte which yet eateth no cheese. It shalbe giuen vnto the poore in her name say they. First that to be false we see with our eyes. Secōdarely Christ cōmaundeth to care for the poore, and giue thē all that we may spare in his name: saying that what is giuen them is geuen him, and what is denyed them is denyed him. If the law of Christ be written in thine hart, why distributest thou not vnto thy brethren with thine own hādes, in the name of thy Sauiour Iesu Christ which dyed both for them & thee, as thou hast vowed and promised to him in thy Baptisme.

We ought to be frāke and to distribute to our poore brethren, euen as God hath sent vs.

It is giuen vnto Saint whites chapleyne. Saint whites chapleyne hath a stipend already sufficient for a Christen man, and ought to receaue no more, but therwith to be content and to be an example of despising couetousnes. Moreouer that Priest that would folow the lyuyng of Iesu Christ as Saint white did, and teach his Parishens to do so, were a right chaplayne of Christ, And they haue a promise to be fead & clothed as well as euer was their master in the name of Christ. And so be they and euer were, so that they nede not to begge in the name of saint white.

Superstitions Popery are Idolatry.

What shall Saint white do for thee againe for that great cheese? (for I wot well it is not giuen for nought) Giue aboundaunce of milke to make butter and chese? All we that beleue in Christ, are the sonnes of God, and God hath promised to care for vs, as much as we care for the keepyng of his cōmaundements, and hath promised that we shal receaue what soeuer we aske to his honour and our nede, of his hād. If then we be the natural sonnes of God, why runne we from our father, a beggyng to Saint white? Saint white sendeth no rayne vppon the earth nor maketh the sunne shyne thereon nor maketh the grasse grow. Neither is there any Gods worde that he will now do so much for vs at her request. But God hath promised if we will keepe hys lawes to doe so much for vs at our own request, for the bloud of his sonne Iesu. what other thing then is thy setting of Saint white, thē lacke of faith & trust to Godward in Christs name, and a false fayth of thine owne fayning to Saint whiteward for thine image seruice or seruyng her with cheese, as though she were a bodely thyng? And like disputatiō is it of all other saintes.

In all our needes wee must call vpon God in the name of Iesu Christ & he will heare vs.

And as we worship the Saintes with imageseruice to obtaine temporal thinges: euen so worship we God. And as the Iewes turned their sacrifices vnto imageseruice whiche were giuen thē of God to be signes to moue them to serue God in the spirite: Euen so haue we our Sacramentes. And for an exāple let vs take the Masse, which after the Popes abuse of it, is the most damnable imageseruice that euer was sence it began. Christ according to the testimonie of the Scripture, made in the dayes of his flesh, satisfaction for al the sinne of them that had or should beleue in his name, & obtained that they should be the sonnes of God, and taken from vnder the damnation of the law and put vnder grace and mercy, & that God should henceforth deale with them as a mercyfal father dealeth with his children that runne not away from him, no though ought be at a tyme chaunced amisse: but tary euer still by their father and by his doctrine, & confesse their trespasse, and promise henceforth to inforce them selues vnto the vttermost of their power that they doe no more so negligently. And this purchase made he with the thinges whiche he suffered in his flesh, & with the strōg prayers which he prayed. And to kepe his Testamēt, euer fresh in minde, that it were not forgot, he left with vs the Sacrament or signe of his body and bloud, to strength our faith and to certifie our cōscience, that our sinnes were forgeuen alloone as we repented and had recōciled our selues vnto our brethren: and to arme our soules, through the continuall remembraunce of Christes death, vnto the despising of the world, mortifying of the flesh, & quenching of the lustes and thyrst of worldly thinges. As they which haue dayly conuersation with the sicke and miserable and are present at the deathes of men, are moued to defie the world, and the lustes therof.

We must euer cleaue vnto God and submit our selues to his mercy.

The masse at the first was a declaration of Christes passion.

And as Christ had institute the Sacrament of his body and bloud, so the Bysshoppes in processe of time, set signes of all the rest of Christes passion, in the ornamentes and gestures of the Masse: so that the whole passion was dayly described before our eyes, as though we had presently looked vppon it.

And that thou mayst see for what cause they came vnto the Sacrament, they reconciled them selues ech one to other, if any man had offēded his brother, ere they were admitted into the congregation or body of Christ to be members of ech other knit together in one fayth and loue to eate the Lordes Supper (as Paule calleth it) for the cōgregatiō thus gathered is called Christes body and Christ their head. And likewise if a man had ben taken in opē sinne, agaynst the professiō of his Baptisme, he was rebuked openly. And he confessed his sinne openly, and asked forgiuenes of God and of the congregation whom he had offended with the example of his euill deede: and tooke penaunce as they call it, of the congregation, that is, certaine discreet iniunctiōs how he should liue and order him selfe in tyme to come & tame his flesh, for the anoyding of the sayd vice: because his confession and repentaunce which he semed to haue, shuld be none hypocrisie, but an earnest thing. For if an open sinner be founde among vs, we must immediatly amende him or cast him out of the congregation with defiaunce and detestation of his sinne, as thou seist how quickly Paule cast out the Corinthian, that kept his fathers wife, and when he was warned would not amend. Or els if we suffer such to be among vs vnrebuked, we can not but at once fall from the constancie of our professiō, and laughe and haue delectation and cōsent vnto their sinne, as it is come to passe throughout all Christendome. Which is ten thousand tymes more abhominable then if we sinned our selues. For the best man in the world that hateth sinne, might at a tyme throughe frayltie of the flesh be drawne to sinne. But it is altogether deuilish and a sure token that the spirit of Christ is not in vs, nor the profession of our Baptisme written in the hart, if we laughe at an other mans sinnes, though we our selues absteine for shame or feare of hell or for what so euer imagination it be, or that we be so blind that we see no other sinne in vs, then our outward deedes. And the penaunce enioyned frayle persons that could not rule them selues was vnder the authority of the Curate, and the sad and discrete mē of the Parish, to release part or all at a tyme if necessitie required, or when they sawe the person so growne in perfectnes that he neded it not. But see wherto it is now come, & after what maner our holy father that is at Rome dispenseth withall together? And see what our Bishops officers do, and where the authoritie of the Curate and of the Parish is become. If in ten Parishes round there be not one learned and discret to helpe the other, thē the deuil hath a great swynge among vs: that the Bysshops officers that dwell so farre of, must abuse vs as they do. And if within a Diocese or an whole land, we can finde no shift, but that the Pope that dwelleth at the deuill in hell, must thus mocke vs, what a stroke thinke ye hath Sathan among vs: And all is because we be hipocrites and loue not the way of truth, for all

The description of the partes of the masse

And to begyn withall, they sayd Cõfiteor, and knowledged them selues to be sinners. And then the Priest prayed in generall for all estates and degrees and for encrease of grace, and in especially, if neede required: vnto whiche prayers the people harkened and sayd Amen. And then the Gospell and glad tydinges of forgiuenes of sinnes was preached, to stirre our fayth. And then the Sacrament was ministred for the confirmation of the fayth of the Gospell, and of the Testament made betwene God and vs of forgiuenes of sinnes in Christes bloud, for our repẽtaunce and faith: as ye see how after all bargaynes there is a signe therof made, either clapping of hãdes, or bowyng a peny or a groate, or a peece of gold, or giuing some earnest, and as I shewed you, how after a truse made they slewe beastes, for a confirmation. And then men departed, euery man to his busines, full certified that their sinnes were forgiuen, and armed with the remembraunce of Christes passion and death for the mortifieng of the flesh all the day after. And in all these was neither the Sacrament, neither other ceremonies of the Masse, imageseruice to God, and holy dedes to make satisfaction for our sinnes, or to purchase such worldly thinges as the Gospell teacheth vs to dispise. And now compare this vse of the Masse to ours, and see whether the Masse be not become the most damnable Idolatrie & image seruice that euer was in the world.

The abhominable vse of the masse

We neuer reconcile our selues vnto our brethren which we haue offended: we receaue vnto our Masse open sinners, the couetous, the extorcioners, the adulter, the backbiter, the common whore, and the whore keper, whiche haue no part in Christ by ỹ Scripture, ye such are suffred to say the Masse, as the vse is now to speake, ye such are we cõpelled with the sword to take for our pastors and Curates of our soules and not so hardy to rebuke them. Neither do they repent and confesse their sinnes, and promise amendement, or submit them selues to holesome iniunctiõs for the auoyding of such sinnes, and tamyng of their flesh. We say Confiteor and knowledge our selues to be sinners in Latin, but neuer repent in English. The Priest prayeth in Latin and saith euermore a still Masse, as we say. For though he sing and streine his throate to cry loude vnto them that be by him, yet as long as no man woteth what he prayeth, or whether he blesse or curse, he is dome and speches. And so in that part we abide fruteles and vntaught how to pray vnto God. And the Gospell is soug or sayd in Latine onely and no preachyng of repentaũce toward the law & fayth toward Christ had. And therfore abide we euer faythles and without studieng to amẽd our liuinges. And of the ceremonies of the Masse we haue no other imagination, then that they be an holy seruice vnto God which he receaueth of our hands and hath great delectation in them and that we purchase great fauour of God with them, as we do of great men here in the world with giftes and presẽtes. In so much that if ỹ Priest sayd Masse without those vestimentes or left the other ceremonies vndone, we should all quake for feare, & thinke that there were a sinne cõmitted inough to sinke vs all and that the priest for his labour were worthy to be put in the Popes purgatory & there to be brent to ashes.

And of the very Sacrament it selfe we know no other thyng then that we come thether to see an vnseable miracle, which they affirme, the aungels in heauen haue no power to do: Sed solis Presbyteris, quibus sic congruit, vt sumãt nec dent cæteris: how that bread is turned into the body, and wine into the bloud of Christ, to mocke our seyng, smellyng, feelyng and tasting, which is a very strong fayth, and more a great deale (I thinke) then the text compelleth a man to. Neuertheles it were somewhat yet, if they had bene as louyng, kinde, carefull and diligent to teach the people to repent, and to beleue in the bloud of Christ for the forgeuenes of their sinnes vnto the glory of the mercy of God & of his exceedyng loue to vs, and vnto the profite of our soules, & vpon that preachyng to haue ministred the Sacrament as a memoriall, remembraunce, signe, token, earnest, the seale of an obligatiõ and clappyng of handes together for the assuraunce of the promise of God, to quiet, stablish and certifie our consciẽces, and to put vs out of all wauerynge & doubt that our sinnes were forgeuen vs and God become our father & at one with vs, for which cause onely Christ ordeined it: as they were zelous and feruent to maintein the opinion of so turning bread and wine into the body & bloud of Christ, that it ceaseth to be bread and wine in nature, vnto their owne glory and profite, without helpe of Scripture, but with subtle Argumentes of sophistrie and with crafty wiles. First with taking away halfe the sacramēt, lest if the people should haue dronke the blond of Christ, they should haue smelled the sauour and felte the tast of wine, and so haue bene to weake to beleue that there had bene no wine. And secondarily when they durst not robbe the people of all the Sacrament, they yet tooke away common bread, and imagined maunchetes which may not be handled, and in sight haue no similitude of bread, and in eatyng very litle tast, if there be any at all. And thyrdly whom they could not catch with those craftes, against him they disputed with the sword. For when they had taken away the signification and very intent of the Sacrament, to stablish the eare confession, their merites, deseruynges, iustifieng of workes and like inuētion vnto their own glory and profit: what had the Sacramēt bene, if they had not made of that opinion an article of the fayth? But now when they haue destroyed for the nonce that fayth which profited, and haue set vp with wiles, subtiltie, falsehead, guile and with violēce, that fayth which profiteth not, we haue good cause to iudge and examine the doctrine of the spirites, whether it be grounded vpon Gods word or no.

Halfe of the Sacrament kept from the lay people.

But I aske, wherfore we beleue that Christes body and his blond is there presēt? verely as many heades as many wittes, euery man hath his meaning. we take paynes to come thether to see straunge holy gestures, wherof, say they to their shame, who knoweth the meanyng ye or of the other disguising: and to heare straūge holy voyces, wherof, say I also that no man knoweth the vnderstanding: and to looke vpon the Sacrament: and all to obteine worldly thinges, for that seruice. why may not a man desire worldly thinges of God? Yes, we ought to aske of God onely sufficiency of all worldly things, as we do spirituall thinges, yet not for bodily seruice, when God is a spirite: but for the goodnesse and mercy of our father and for the truth of his promise and deseruinges of his sonne. And so when we do men bodily seruice, we ought to looke for our wages of God: lest if hee moue not the hartes of our maisters, we be lyrewdly payed: & like wise when we lende or bargen, we ought to desire God for payment, lest through our negligence he forget vs, & the appointementes be not truly kept. Some there be yet, that aske heauen: but for bodyly seruice, whiche is lyke abhomination.

But who commeth thether with repentaunce and faith, for to obtaine forgeuenesse of his sinnes, and with purpose to walke in the life of penaūce for the taming of the flesh that he sinne no more: and to stablish his hart in that purpose, and to arme his soule agaynst all that moue to the contrary, and whē he goeth home is certified in hys cōscience, through that signe and token, that his sinnes are forgeuen him: as Noe was certified by the signe of the rayne bow that the world should no more be ouerrunne with water: and as Abraham was certified by the signe of Circumcisiō that God would fulfill to him and his offspring all the mercies that he had promised: and as Abraham Genesis. xv. when he asked a signe to be sure that he should possesse that land of Canaan, was certified through the signe that God gaue him therof, and of the foure hundred yeares that his posteritie should be in thraldome in Egypt & of their deliueraunce: and as Gedeon was certified by the signe of his Flese, of the victory that God had promised him: and as many other that beleued in God, were certified by the signes that God gaue them, of the promises which God made them? Verely no mā. For our Prelates which lay for them selues, compelle intrare, compell not vs to enter into any such feast nor will suffer any such meate to be set before vs: for feare of ouerthrowyng the foundation of their false buildyng whereof springeth so great glory and profit vnto them, which foundation to builde their lyes vpon, they could neuer haue layd, except they had first thrust this doctrine of our soules health cleane out of knowledge. And as soone as they had blinded ẏ light, they became leaders in darkenesse: and made of the Masse imageseruice: so that the straūge holy gestures, and the straunge holy voyces, and straunge holy vestures, with all other straunge holy ceremonies, must be meritorious workes to deserue lōg life, health, riches, honour, fauour, dignitie and aboundaūce of all that we haue, forsakyng our baptisme, & to arme vs from bearing of the crosse with Christ. And they haue made of it a pill of two contrary operations: so that the same medicine that preserueth our soules from purgatory, doth purge the body of house, lãdes, rentes, goods and money, that it is made as bare as Iob and as bauide as a Cout. And the light that rebuketh them, they call seditions, that it maketh the subiectes to rise against their Princes. which thing the hypocrites layed sometyme vnto the Prophetes, as ye may see in the old Testamẽt. And at last they layed it vnto Christes charge, as ye may see in the Gospell, and to the charge of the Apostles, as ye may see in the Actes. But at all such tymes, the hypocrites them selues stirred vp such a sword to maintenie their falsehead, that euermore a great part of the world perished through their owne mischeuous incensing and prouokyng Princes to battayle.

These hypocrites layd to Wickleffes charge (and do yet) that his doctrine caused insurrection: but they, to quench the truth of hys preachyng, slew the right kyng, and set vp iij. false kynges a row: by which mischeuous sedition, they caused halfe England to be slayne vp, and brought the Realme into such ruine and desolatiõ that M. More could say in his Vtopia, that as Englishmen were wont to eate shepe, euen so their shepe now eate vp them by whole Parishes at once, besides other inconueniencies that he then saw. And so the hipocrites say now likewise: that gods word causeth insurrection: but ye shall see shortly that these hypocrites them selues after their old wont and examples in quẽchyng ỹ truth that vttereth their iugglyng, shall cause all realmes Christen to rise one agaynst an other, and some agaynst them selues. Ye shall see thẽ runne out before the yeare come about, that whiche they haue bene in brewyng (as I haue marked) aboue this dosen yeares. &c.

The Testament of master William Tracie Esquier, expounded by William Tyndall. Wherein thou shalt perceiue with what charitie the Chaunceler of Worceter burned, when he tooke vp the dead carkasse and made ashes of it after it was buried. 1535.

¶ To the Reader.

THou shalt vnderstãd most deare Reader that after William Tyndall was so Iudasly betrayed by an Englisheman, a Scholer of Louayne, whose name is Philippes, there were certaine thinges of his doyng found: which he had entended to haue put forth to the furtheraunce of Gods word amõg which was this Testament of M. Tracie expounded by him self, whereunto was annexed, the expositiõ of the same of Iohn Frithes doyng and owne hand writyng, whiche I haue caused to bee put in Printe, to the intent that all the world should see how earnestly the Cannonistes and spirituall lawyers (whiche be the chief rulers vnder Bishops in euery Dioces, in so much that in euery Cathedrall Churche the Deane Chaũcelor and Archdeacon are cõmonly doctours or Bachelers of law) do endenour them selues iustly to iudge and spiritually to geue sentẽce according to charitie vpon all the actes and dedes done of their Diocessanes, after the exãple of the Chaunceler of Worceter, which after M. Tracie was buried (of pure zeale & loue hardly) tooke vp the dead carkasse and burnt it, wherefore he did it, it shall euidently appeare to the Reader in this little treatise, read it therfore, I besech thee & iudge the spirites of our spiritualitie, and pray that the spirite of him that raised vp Christ, may once inhabite them, and mollifie their hartes, and so illumine thẽ, that they may both see and shew true light, & no lõger to resist God nor his truth. Amẽ.

The Testament it selfe.

In the name of God. Amẽ.

I William Tracie of Todyngton in the Countie of Glocester Esquier, make my Testamẽt and laste will, as hereafter followeth.

¶ First, and before all other thyng, I cõmit me vnto God, & to his mercy, trustyng without any doubt or mistrust, that by his grace and the merites of Jesus Christ, and by the vertue of his passiõ, and of his resurrection, I haue & shall haue remission of my sinnes, and resurrectiõ of body and soule, accordyng as it is written Job. xix. I beleue that my redemer lyueth, and that in the last day I shal rise out of the earth, and in my flesh shall see my Sauiour, this my hope is layd vp in my bosome.

And as touching the wealth of my soule, the fayth ẏ I haue taken & rehearsed, is sufficient (as I suppose) wout any other mans woorke, or workes. My grounde and my beleke is, that there is but one God and one medaitour betwene God and man, whiche is Jesus Christ. So that I doe except none in heauen nor in earth to be my mediatour betwen me & God, but onely Jesus Christ, all other be but petitioners in receiuyng of grace, but none able to geue influence of grace. And therfore will I bestow no part of my goodes for that intent that any man should say, or do, to helpe my soule: for therein I trust onely to the promise of God, he that beleueth & is baptised shalbe saued, and he that beleueth not shalbe damned, Marke, the last Chapter.

And touchyng the buryng of my body, it auayleth me not what be done therto, wherein S. Augustine De cura agenda pro mortuis sayth, that they are rather the solace of them that liue thẽ the wealth or cõfort of thẽ that are departed, and therfore I remit it onely to the discretion of myne executours.

And touchyng the distribution of my temporall goodes, my purpose is by the grace of God, to bestow them to be accepted as fruites of fayth, So that I do not suppose that my merite be, by good bestowyng of them, but my merite is the fayth of Jesus Christ onely, by whiche fayth such workes are good accordyng to the wordes of our Lord, Mat. xxv. I was hongry, and thou gauest me to eate, and it foloweth, that ye haue done to the least of my brethrẽ ye haue done to me, &c. and euer we should cõsider the true sentẽce, that a good worke maketh not a good man, but a good man maketh a good woorke, for fayth maketh the man both good and rightcous, for a righteous man lyueth by fayth. Rom. i. and what soeuer springeth not out of fayth, is sinne. Rom. xiiij.

And all my tẽporall goodes that I haue not geuen, or deliuered, or not geuen by writing of mine own hand bearing the date of this present writyng I do leaue and geue to Margarete my wife, and to Richard my sonne which I make mine executours, witnes this myne owne hand, the x. day of October, in the xvij. yeare of the raigne of kyng Henry the eight.

Description of God.

NOw let vs examine the partes of this Testament sentence by sentēce. First to commit our selues to God aboue all, is the first of all preceptes, & the first stone in the foundatiō of our faith, that we beleue & put our trust in one God, one all true, one almighty, all good, & all mercifull, cleauing fast to his truth, might, mercy, and goodnes, surely certified & fully persuaded, that he is our God, yea ours, & to vs all true, without all falshead & guile & can not fayle in his promises. And to vs almighty, that his will can not be let to fulfill all ỳ truth that he hath promised vs. And to vs all good, and all mercyfull, what soeuer we haue done, and how soeuer grieuously we haue trespassed, so that we come to hym the way that he hath appointed, which way is Jesus Christ onely, as we shal see folowingly. This first clause then, is the first commaūdement, or at the least, the first sentēce in the first commaundement, and the first Article of our Crede.

Jesus Christ the onely way to his father.

And that this trust and confidēce in the mercy of God is thorough Jesus Christ, is the secōd article of our Crede confirmed and testified throughout all scripture. That Christ bringeth vs into this grace, Paule proueth. Rom. v. saying. Justified by fayth we are at peace with God, through Jesus Christ our Lord: by whom we haue an entryng in vnto this grace in which we stand. And Ephes. iij. By whom sayth Paule we haue a bold entring in, thorough the fayth that is in him: and in the second of the sayd Epistle, By him we haue an entring in vnto the father, and a litle before in the same Chapter, he is our peace. And John in the first Chapter. Behold the Lambe of God whiche taketh away the sinne of the world, which sinne was the bush that stopped the entryng in, and kept vs out, & the sword wherewith was kept the entryng vnto the tree of lyfe from Adam and all his offspryng.

And in the second of the first of Peter, which bare our sinnes in his body, and by whose stripes we are made whole. By whom we haue redemptiō through his bloud euen the forgeuenes of our sinnes, Collos. i. & Ephes. i. And Rom. iij. He was deliuered for our sinnes and rose agayne for our iustifyeng.

And concernyng the resurrection, it is an article of our fayth, and proued there sufficiently, and that it shalbe by the power of Christ, is also the open Scripture.

The beleefe of the resurrection is an article of our faith

John vj. This is the will of my father which sent me, that I lose nothing of all that he hath geuen me, but that I rayse it vp agayne in the last day, and agayn, I am the resurrectiō. John. xi.

That this liuely faith is sufficient to iustification without addyng to of any more helpe, is this wise proued: The promiser is God of whom Paul sayth, Rom. viij. If God be on our side what matter maketh it who be agaynst vs, he is thereto all good, all mercyfull, all true, and all mighty, wherfore sufficiēt to be beleued by his othe, moreouer Christ in whom the promise is made hath receaued all power in heauen and in earth. Math. the last.

Fayth is sufficient to iustifie vs.

He hath also a perpetuall Priesthode, and therfore able perpetually to saue. Heb. vij.

And that there is but one mediatour Christ, as Paul. i. Tim. ij. And by that word vnderstand an attonemaker, a peace maker and brynger into grace and fauour, hauyng full power so to do. And that Christ is so, is proued at the full. It is written John. iij. The father loueth the sonne, and hath geuē all into his hand.

Christ the onely mediatour betweene God and man.

And he that beleueth the sonne hath euerlastyng lyfe and he that beleueth not the sonne shall not see lyfe, but the wrath of God bydeth vpon hym. All things are geuē me of my father. Luke x. And all who soeuer call on the name of the Lord shalbe saued. Actes. ij. Of his fulnes haue we al receaued, Joh. i. There is no other name geuen to mā in which we must be saued. Actes. iiij. And agayne, vnto his name beare all the Prophets record, that by his name shall all that beleue in him receaue remission. Actes. x. In hym dwelleth all the fulnes of God bodely. Collos. ij. All what soeuer my father hath are myne. John. xvj. what soeuer ye aske in my name that will I do for you John. xiiij. One Lord, one fayth, one Baptisme, one God and father of all, which is aboue all, through all and in you all. Ephes. iij. There is but one whose seruaunt I am, to do his will. But one that shall pay me my wages, there is but one to whom I am bounde, Ergo, but one that hath power ouer me to dāne or saue me, I will adde to this Paules Argument Galat. iij. GOD sware vnto Abraham. cccc. yeare before the law was geuen, that we should be saued by Chryst. Ergo, the law geuen cccc. yeares after can not disanull that couenaunt, So dispute I: Chryst whẽ he had suffered his passiõ, and was risen agayne and entred into his glory, was sufficient for his Apostles, without any other meane or helpe, Ergo, the holynes of no Saint since hath diminished ought of that his power, but that he is as full sufficient now: for the promise is as deepely made to vs as to them. Moreouer the treasure of his mercy was layde vp in Chryst for all that should belene, yer the world was made, Ergo, nothyng that hath happened sence hath chaunged the purpose of the inmuariable God.

Argumẽts prouyng our saluation in Chryst.

The false fayth of the downe falling sinner.

Moreuer to exclude the blynd imagination falsely called fayth, of them that geue them selues to vice without resistence, affirmyng, that they haue no power to do otherwise, but that God hath so made them, and therfore must saue them, they not entendyng or purposing to mende their lyuyng, but sinning with whole consent and full lust, he declareth what fayth he meaneth by maner of wayes. First by that he saith, who soeuer beleueth and is Baptised, shalbe saued. By which wordes he declareth euidently, that he meaneth that faith, that is in the promise made vpon the appointmẽt betwene God and vs, that we should kepe his law to the vttermost of our power, that is, he that beleueth in Chryst for the remission of sinne, and is Baptised to do the will of Chryst, and to kepe his law, of loue, & to mortify the flesh, that man shalbe saued: and so is the imagination of these swyne that will not leaue wallowyng thẽ selues in euery myre and puddell, cleane excluded: for God neuer made promise but vpon an appointment or couenaunt vnder whiche who soeuer wil not come can be no partaker of the promise. True fayth in Chryst, geueth power to loue the law of God: for it is written Iohn the first, He gaue them power to be the sonnes of God in that they beleue in his name. Now to be the sonne of God, is to loue righteousnes, and hate vnrighteousnes and so to be like thy father. Hast thou then no power to loue the law? so hast thou no fayth in Chrystes bloud. And Rom. iij. we set vp or maintaine the law thorough fayth, why so? for the preachyng of fayth ministreth the spirit. Gala. iij. And ij. Cor. iij. And the spirite loseth the bandes of Sathan, & geueth power to loue the law, and also to do it.

Fayth in the promise betwene God and vs saueth our soules.

Gods promises haue couenauntes annexed vnto them, the breakers wherof are excluded from the promise.

For sayth Paul Rom. viij. if the spirite of him that rayse vp Iesus dwell in you, then will he that rayse vp Iesus quickẽ your mortall bodyes by the meanes of his spirite dwelling in you.

An obiection of our aduersaries against iustificatiõ by fayth.

A well (wilt thou say) if I must professe the law and worke, Ergo, fayth alone saueth me not. Be not deceaued with sophistrie: but withdraw thyne eares from wordes and consider the thyng in thyne hart. Fayth iustifieth thee: that is bringeth remission of all sinnes, and setteth thee in the state of grace before all workes, and getteth thee power to worke yer thou couldest worke, but if thou wilt not go backe agayne, but continue in grace, and come to that saluation and glorious resurrection of Chryst, thou must worke and ioyne workes to thy fayth in will, and dede to, if thou haue tyme and leasure, and as oft as thou fallest set thee on thy fayth agayn without helpe of workes. And although when thou art reconciled & restored to grace, workes be required: yet is not that reconcilyng and grace the benefite of the workes that folow: but cleane contrary, that forgeuenes of thy sinnes and restoryng to fauour deserue the workes that folow. Though whẽ the kyng (after that sentence of death is geuen vpõ a murtherer) hath pardoned hym, at the request of some of his frendes, workes be required of him that he hencefoorth kepe the kynges lawes, if he will continue in his graces fauour, in which he now standeth, yet the benefite of his lyfe procedeth not of the deseruyng of the workes that folow, but of the kynges goodnes, and fauour of his frẽdes, yea and that benefite and gift of his life deserue the workes that folow. Though the father chastile the child, yet is the child no lesse bounde to obey, and to do the will of the father. If when the father pardoneth it, the workes that folow deserue that fauour, then must the woorkes that followed the correction haue deserued fauour also: and then was the father vnrighteous to chastise it. All what soeuer thou art able to do, to please God with all, is thy duty to do, though thou haddest neuer sinned, if it be thy dutie how can it then be the deseruyng of the mercy and grace that wẽt before? Now that mercy, was the benefite of God thy father through the deseruing of ỹ Lord Chryst, which hath bought thee with ỹ price of his bloud.

A compendious declaration of our iustification by fayth.

A similitude of a carnall kyng pardonyng a condemned person.

And

And agayne when he sayth that he purposeth to bestow his good, to be accepted as fruites of faith, it is evident that hee meaneth that lyuyng fayth which professeth the law of God, and is the mother of all good workes, yea and nurse ther to.

An other cauillation whiche they might make in the second part, where he admitteth no other mediatour but Christe onely, nor will geue of hys goodes, to bynde any man to any fayned obseruaunce for the helpe of hys soule, whē he were whole in the kingdome of Christ cleane delyuered both body and soule from the dominion of Sathan (as the Scripture testifieth all that dye in Christ to be) is this, they will say, that he held that none should pray for him saue Christ, and that we be not bound to pray one for an other, nor ought to desire the prayers of an other man: that he excludeth, in that he sayth all other be but petitioners. By which wordes he plainly cōfesseth that other may and ought for to pray, and that we may and ought to desire other to pray for vs: but meaneth that we may not put our trust and confidence in their prayer, as though they gaue of them selues that which they desire for vs in their petitions, and so geue them the thankes, & ascribe to their merites that which is geuen vs in the name of our master Christ, at the deseruynges of his bloud. Christ is my Lord, & hath deserued and also obteined power, to geue me all that can be desired for me. And al that other desire for me: this is desired in Christes name & geuē at the merites of his bloud. All the honour then, trust, confidēce, and thankes, perteyne to him also. Some will haply say, how shoulo I desire an other to pray for me, and not trust to his prayer. Verely euen as I desire my neighbour to helpe me at my neede, and yet trust not to him. Christ hath commaūded vs to loue eche other. Now when I go or desire helpe, I put my trust in God, and complaine to God first, and say, Loe father, I go to my brother, to aske helpe in thy name, prepare the hart of him agaynst I come: that hee may pitie me and helpe me for thy sake &c. Now if my brother remember his duty & helpe me, I receaued it of God, and geue God the thankes which moued the hart of my brother & gaue my brother a courage to helpe me & wherwith to do it, and so hath holpe me by my brother. And I loue my brother agayne and say: Loe father I went to my brother in thy name, and he hath holpe me for thy sake: wherfore O father be thou as merryful to him at his nede, as he hath ben to me for thy sake, at my nede. Loe now as my brother dyd his dutie when he holpe me, so do I my dutie when I praye for hym agayne: and as I might not haue put my trust and cōfidence in my brothers helpe, so may he not in my prayers. I am sure that God will helpe me by his promise, but am not sure that my brother wil helpe me, though it be his dutie, so am I sure that God will heare me what soeuer I aske in Christes name by his promise, but am not sure that my brother will pray for me, or that he hath a good hart to God.

The prayer of the faythfull in his brother taking effect, thankes therefore must wholly bee attributed to the geuer.

All our helpe is frō aboue, for man can not helpe but when God prepareth hys hart.

No. But the Saintes in heauen cā not but pray and be hard, no more can the Saintes in earth, but pray and be heard neither. Moses, Samuell, Dauid, Noye, Elias, Elizeus, Esayas, Daniell, and all the Prophetes prayed and were heard: yet was none of those wicked that would not put their trust in God, accordyng to their doctrine and preachyng partaker of their prayers in the end. And as damnable as it is for the poore to trust in the riches of the richest vpon earth, so damnable is it also to leaue the couenaunt made in Christes bloud, and to trust in the saint of heauē. They that be in heauē know the elect that trust in Christes bloud & professe the law of God and for them onely pray: and these wicked Idolaters whiche haue no trust in the couenaunt of God, nor serue God in the spirite nor in the Gospell of Christes bloud, but after their blind Imagination, chosing them euery man a sondry Saint to be their Mediatour, to trust to and to be saued by their merites, do the Saintes abhorre and defie. And their prayers and offerynges, are to the Saintes as acceptable and pleasaunt, as was the prayer and the offeryng of Symon Magus to Peter. Act. viij.

Saintes abhorre thē that pray vnto them.

Moreouer the Saintes in their most combraunce are most comforted & most able to comfort other, as Paule testifieth. i. Cor. i. In so much that S. Stephen and S. Iames prayed for them that slue them, S. Martine preached & comforted his desperate brethren euen vnto the last breath, & likewise (as stories make mention) dyd innumerable mo. Yea and I haue knowen of simple vnlearned persons & that of some that were great sinners which at the houre of death haue fallen flat on the bloud of Christ, and geuen no rowme to other mens either prayers or preachynges: but haue as stronglye trusted in Christes bloud, as euer dyd Peter or Paul, and haue therto preached it to other, & exhorted other so mightily that an aungell of heauen could not mende them. Who then should resiste God that he might not geue the same grace to M. Tracie, which was a learned man, and better sene in the workes of S. Austē. xx. yeare before hee dyed, then euer I knew Doctour in England, but that hee must then faint and shrincke, whē most neede is to be strong, & feare the Popes Purgatory & trust to the prayer of Priestes dearely payd for? I dare say that he prayed for the Priestes whē he dyed, that God would conuert a great many of them, and if hee had knowen of any good man amōg them that had neded, he would haue geuen, and if hee had knowen of any lacke of priestes, he would haue geuē to maintеine moe: But now sence there be mo then inough, & haue more then euery man a sufficient liuyng, how should he haue geuē them but to hyre their prayers of pure mistrust in Christs bloud? If robbyng of widowes houses vnder pretence of long prayers be damnable. Math. xxiij. Then is it damnable also for widowes to suffer them selues to be robbed by the long pattering of hypocrites, through mistrust in Christes bloud: yea and is it not damnable to maintеine such abhomination? Now when this dānation is spread ouer all, how can we geue thē that haue inough already, or how can they that haue inough already take more vnder the name of praying, & not harden the people more in this dānable damnation.

M. Tracie studious in S. Austen.

And concernyng the burieng of his body he allegeth S. Austen, neither is there any man (thinke I) so mad to affirme that the outward pompe of the body should helpe the soule. Moreouer what greater signe of infidelitie is there, then to care at the tyme of death, with what pompe the carkasse shalbe caried to the graue? He denieth not but that a Christen man should be honorablie buried namely for the honour and hope of the resurrection, and therefore committed that care to his deare executours his sonne and his wife, whych he wist would in that part do sufficiēt, & leaue nothyng of the vse of the countrey vndone, but the abuse.

Burials must be celebrated honorably for the hope of our resurrection.

And that bestowyng of a great part of his goodes (while he yet lyued) vpon the poore, to be thankefull for the mercy receiued, without byng and sellyng with God, that is, without bynding those poore vnto any other appointed prayers then God hath bound vs already, one to pray for an other, one to helpe an other, as he hath helped vs, but paciently abidyng for the blessynges that God hath appoynted vnto all maner good workes, trustyng faythfully to his promise, thanking (as ye may see by his wordes) the bloud of Christ for the reward promised to hys woorkes and not the goodnes of the workes as though he had done more then his dutie, or all that: And assigned by writyng vnto whom an other part should be distrubuted, and geuyng the rest to hys executours, that no strife should be, whiche executours were by right the heyres of all that was left to thē: These things I say are signes euident not onely of a good Christen mā, but also of a perfect Christen man, and of such a one as needed not to be agast and desperate for feare of the paynfull paynes of Purgatory, whiche who so feareth as they fayne it can not but vterly abhorre death: seyng that Christ is there no longer thy Lord, after he hath brought thee thether, but art excluded from his satisfaction, and must satisfie for thy selfe alone, and that with sufferyng payne onely, or els taryeng the satisfieng of them that shall neuer satisfie inough for them selues, or gapyng for the Popes pardons, whiche haue so great doubtes and daungers, what in the mynde and intent of the graunter, and what in the purchaser, yer they can be truly obteyned with all due circumstaūces, and much lesse certitude that they haue any authoritie at all. Paule thirsted to be dissolued & to be with Christ: Stephen desired Christ to take his spirite, the Prophetes also desired God to take their soules from them, and all the Saintes went with a lusty courage to death, neither fearyng or teachyng vs to feare any such crudelitie. Where hath the Churche then gotten authoritie to binde vs from beyng so perfite, from hauyng any such fayth in the goodnes of God our Father, and Lorde Christ, and to make such perfitnes and fayth of all heresies the greatest?

One must pray for an other, and one helpe an other.

A true Christian feareth not the Popes Purgatory.

Salomō saith in the xxx. of his Prouerbes, three things are insaciable and the fourth sayth neuer, It is inough. But there is a fitt called dame auarice, with as greedy a gutte, as meltyng a maw, as wyde a throate, as gapyng a mouth, and with as rauenyng teeth as the best, which the more she eateth the hongryer she is. An vnquiet euill neuer at rest, a blynd monster and a surmisyng beast, fearyng at the fall of euery leafe. Quid non mortalia pectora cogis, auri sacra fames! What doth not that holy hunger compell them that loue this world mordinately, to committe? might that deuils belye be once full, truth shuld haue audience, and wordes be construed a right, and take in the same sence as they be ment.

with

Though it seme not impossible haply that there might be a place, where the soules might be kept for a space, to be taught and instruct: yet that there should be such a Jayle as they Jangle, and such fashious as they fayne, is playne impossible and repugnaunt to the Scripture: for when a man is trãslated vtterly out of the kyngdome of Sathan, and so confirmed in grace that he can not sinne, so burnyng in loue that his lust can not be plucked from Gods will, and beyng partaker with vs of all the promises of God and vnder the commaundemẽtes: what could be denyed hym in that deepe innocencie of hys most kynde father, that hath left no mercy vnpromised, and askyng it thereto in the name of his sonne Jesus, the child of his hartes lust, whiche is our Lord & hath left no mercy vndeserued for vs? namely when GOD hath swore that he will put of righteousnes, and be to vs a father, and that of all mercy, and hath slayne his most deare sonne Jesus, to confirme hys othe.

God graunteth all thynges to the faythfull.

Finally seyng that Christes loue taketh all to the best, and nothing is here that may not be wel vnderstanded (the circumstances declaryng in what sence all was ment) they ought to haue interpreted it charitably, if ought had bene founde doubtefull or seemyng to sound amysse. Moreouer if any thyng had ben therin that could not haue ben taken well, yet their part had bene to haue interprete it as spoken of idlenes of the head, by the reason of sickenesse, for as much as the man was vertuous, wise, and well learned, and of good fame, and report, and sounde in the fayth whyle he was a lyue. But if they say he was suspect when he was a lyue, then is their doyng so much the worsse, and to bee thought that they feared hys doctrine when hee was a lyue, and mistrusted their owne part, their consciẽces testifyeng to them that he held no other doctrine thẽ that was true, seyng they then neither spake nor wrote agaynst him, nor brought hym to any examinatiõ. Besides that, some mery felowes will thinke, that they ought first to haue sent to him to wyt whether he would haue reuoked, yet they had so despitefully burnt the dead body, that could not aunswere for it selfe, nor interprete his wordes, how he ment them, namely the man beyng of so worshypfull and auncièt a blond. But here will I make at end desiryng ỹ reader to loke on this thing with indifferent eyes, and iudge whether I haue expoũded the wordes of this Testamẽt as they should seme to signifie, or not, iudge also whether the maker therof seme not by his worke both vertuous and godly: whiche if it so bee, thinke that he was the worsse bycause the dead body was burnt to ashes, but rather learne to know the great desyre that hypocrites haue to finde one craft or other to dase the truth with, & cause it to be counted for herelie of the simple and vnlearned people whiche are so ignorant they can not spye their sutteltie, it must nedes be herelie that toucheth any thyng their rotten byle they wil haue it so who soeuer say nay: onely the eternall God must be prayed to night & day to amende them in whose power it onely lyeth. who also graunt thẽ once earnestly to thirst his true doctrine contained in the sweete and pure fountaines of hys Scriptures and in his pathes to direct their wayes.

the right institution and vsage of the Sacramentes of Baptisme, and the Sacrament of the body and bloud of our Sauiour Iesu Christ.

Compiled by William Tyndall.

TO vnderstād the pith of ỹ Sacramētes, how they came vp, & the very meanyng of them, we must consider diligently the maners & fashions of the Hebrues, which were a people of great gravitie & sadnesse, and earnest in all their doynges, if any notable thyng chaunced among them, so that they not onely wrote, but also set vp pillers, and markes, & diuers signes to testifie the same vnto their posteritie, and named the places where the thynges were done, with such names as could not but keepe the dedes in memorie. As Iacob called the place where he saw God face to face, Pheniell, that is, Gods face. And the place where the Egyptians mourned for Iacob seuē dayes, the people of the countrey called Abell Miram, (that is) the lamentation of the Egyptians, to the intent that such names should kepe the gestes and stories in minde.

Writtinges and monuments preserue the memory of notable doynges.

Gene. 50.

And likewise in all their couenaunts they not onely promised one to another and sware theron, but also set vp signes and tokens therof, and gaue the places names to keepe the thyng in minde. And they vsed therto such circumstaunces, protestations, solemne fashions and ceremonies, to confirme the couenaūtes, and to testifie that they were made with great earnest aduise and deliberation, to the intent that it should be to much shame, and to much abhomination both before God and man, to breake them euer after.

A sure bande of all couenaūtes amōgst the Iewes.

As Abraham Genes. 21. when he made a couenaunt of peace with Abimeleck kyng of the Philistines, after they had eaten and dronke together, and sworne, hee put seuen Lambes by them selues, and Abimelecke receiued them of his hand, to testifie that he there had digged a certaine well, and that the right therof pertained to hym. And he called the well Beer Seba: the well of Swearyng, or the well of seuē, because of the oth, & of the seuē lambes, and by that title did Abraham his children chalenge it many hundred yeares after. And when Iacob & Laban made a couenaunt together Genes. 31. they cast vp an heape of stones in witnesse, and called it Giliad, the heape of witnesse, and they bound eche other for thē and their posteritie, that neither part should passe the heape to the others countreyward, to hurt or conquer their land: and Laban bold Iacob also, that he should take no other wiues besides his daughters, to vexe them. And of all that couenaunt, they made that heape a witnes, calling it the witnesseheape, that their children should enquire the cause of the name, & their father should declare vnto them the history. And such fashions, as they vse among themselues, did God also vse to theinward in all his notable dedes, whether of mercy in deliuering them, or of wrath in punishing their disobedience and trāsgression, in all his promises to them, and couenauntes made betweene them and hym.

Gene. 21.

The well of swearing or the well of seuen.

Gene. 31.

A heape of stones was a sufficient bande for all couenauntes.

As when after the generall floude God made a couenaunt with Noe and all mankind & also withall liuing creatures, that he would no more drowne the world he gaue them the rayne bow to be a signe of the promises, and for to make it the better beleued, and to kepe it in mynde for euer, he sayd, when I bryng cloudes vpon the earth, I will put my bow in the cloudes, and will looke on it, and remember the euerlasting couenaunt made betwene God and all liuing creatures.

Gene. 9.

The rayne bow a pledge of Gods promise.

And Abram, (whiche signifieth an excellent father) he named Abraham, the father of a great multitude of people, because he had promised to make hym euen so, and that his seede should be as the Starres, & as the sand of the Sea innumerable, and that name gaue he him as a seale of the promise to confirme it, and to strengthen the fayth of Abrahā and his posteritie, and to kepe the promise in minde, that they might haue wherewith to binde God and to coniure him, as Moyses and the holy Prophetes euer do, holdyng hym fast to his owne promise, and binding him with his owne wordes, and bringyng forth the obligation and seale therof, in all tymes of necessitie and temptation.

of his posteritie, and their shield & defender, and Abraham promised for him and his seede to be his people, and to beleue and trust in him, & to kepe hys commaundementes, which couenaunt God caused to be written in the flesh of Abraham, and in the males of all hys posteritie, commaundyng the males to be Circumcised the eight day, or to be slayne: whiche Circumcision was the seale and obligation of the sayd couenaũt, to kepe it in minde, and to testifie that it was an earnest thyng, wherby God chalenged them to be his people and required the kepyng of his lawes of them, and fayth to trust in him onely and in no other thyng for helpe and succour, and all that can be needeful and necessarie for man, And wherby he cõdemned the disobediẽt and rebellious, and punished them, and whereby also the godly chalenged hym to be theyr God and father, and to helpe and succour them at neede, and to minister all thyngs vnto them accordyng to all his promises.

And though the seale of this couenaunt were not written in the flesh of the females, yet it serued the womankynd, bound them to God, to trust in him, and to kepe his lawes, as well as it dyd the men children, & the womankynd not Circumcised in the flesh, yet through the helpe of the signe written in the males louyng Gods law, & trustyng wholly in hym, were truly Circumcised in the hart and soule before God. And as the mayde children beleuyng and louyng God, wherunto the outward Circumcision bounde them, were truly Circumcised before God: Euen so the males hauyng the flesshe Circumcised, yet not beleuyng, nor louyng God (whereunto the outward Circumcision bounde them) were vncircumcised before God, and God not bounde to them, but had good right therby to punish them: so that neither Circumcision, or to be vncircumcised, is ought worth (as S. Paule sayth Rom. 2.) saue for the keping of the law for if Circumcision helpe not to keepe the law, so serueth it for nought, but for to condemne. And as the womankind vncircumcised were in as good case, as the males that were Circumcised: euen so the infãtes of ỹ maydẽs, which dyed vncircumcised, were in as good case, as the infantes of males whiche dyed Circumcised. And in as good case by the same rule were the men children that dyed before the eight day: or els let them tell, why the couenaũt made betwene God and Abraham saued the manchilde as soone as it was borne, yea as soone as it had lyfe in the mothers wombe for the couenaunt, that God would be God of Abrahãs seede, went ouer the frute, as soone as it had life and thẽ there is no reason, but that the couenaunt must nedes pertayne to the males, as soone as to the females. Wherfore the couenaunt must needes saue the males vnto the eight day and then the couenaunt was, that the ruler shoulde slay the males onely, if their frẽdes did not Circumcise them, not that the Circumcision saued them, but to testify the couenaunt onely. And then it followeth, that the infantes that dye vnbaptised of vs Christen, that would baptise them at due tyme, and teach them to beleue in Christ, are in as good case as these that dye Baptised, for as the couenaunt made to the faith of Abraham, went ouer his seede, as sone as it had life, & before the signe was put on them: euen so must needes the couenaunt made to all that beleue in Christes bloud, go ouer that sede as soone as it hath lyfe in the mothers wombe, before the signe be put on it. For it is the couenaunt onely, and not the signe that saueth vs, though the signe be commaunded to be put on at due tyme, to stirre vp fayth of the couenaunt that saueth vs: and in stede of Circũcision came our Baptisme: wherby we be receaued into the Religiõ of Christ and made partaker of his passion, and members of his Churche, and whereby we are bounde to beleue in Christ, and in the father through hym, for the remission of sinnes, and to kepe the law of Christ, & to loue eche other, as he loued vs, & whereby (if we thus beleue and loue) we callyng God to be our father, and to do his will, shall receaue remission of our sinnes through the merites of Jesu Christ hys sonne, as he hath promised. So now by baptisme we be bounde to God, and God to vs, and the bond and seale of the couenaũt is writtẽ in our flesh, by which seale or writting God chalengeth faith and loue, vnder payne of iust damnation. And we (if we beleue and loue) chalenge (as it is aboue rehearsed) all mercy, and what soener we neede, or els God must be an vntrue God. And God hath bound vs Christen men to receaue this signe for our infirmities sake, to be a witnes betwene hym and vs, and also to put this signe vpon our childrē not bindyng vs to any appointed time, but as it shal seme to vs most conuenient, to bring them to the knowledge of God the father, and of Christ, and of their dutie to God and his law. And as the Circūcised in the flesh and not in the hart, hath no part in Gods good promises: euen so they that bee baptised in the flesh, and not in hart hath no part in Christes bloud. And as the Circumcised in the hart and not in the flesh, had part in Gods good promises: Euen so a Turke vnbaptised (because he either knoweth not, that he ought to haue it, or cannot for tyrānie, if he beleue in Christ, and loue as Christ did and taught, then hath he his part in Christes bloud.

And though the outward Circumcision, by the whiche God chalengeth them to do him seruice, yea whether they would or not, and by the whiche they were taught to beleue in God, & in the seede of Abraham, that should come, and bielle all the world, and to loue the law, and certified them also on the other side, of the good will of God, if they so did, thought (I say) it was the chief and most principall signe, (for so are such ceremonies called in the Hebrue, because they yet signifie other things, then appeareth to the outward sence,) yet God gaue thē diuers other signes, both to stirre vp fayth in the promise made thē, and also to kepe the benefite of the mercy of God in minde.

Exod.13. As in Exodus. 13. all the first borne both of mā and beast are sanctified and dedicated vnto the Lord for a remembraunce, that the Lord slue all the first borne of Egypt. This did God commaund to be obserued, that their childrē should aske why: and he cōmaunded their fathers to teach their childrē, whē they should aske what was ment thereby.

Exod.20. Also Exodus. 20. the Saboth is cōmaunded to be obserued, to be a signe, and to testifie that God had sanctified, and dedicated or chosen them, that they shuld be his people to kepe his lawes, & that he would be their God to kepe them, and to testifie also, that God hath created all thynges of nought in sixe dayes, and rested the seuenth.

Nume.10. Also Nume. x. where almighty God commaunded the childrē of Israell to blow a trompet, when they entered in to battell agaynst their enemies, and promised that they should be thought vppon before the Lord their God, and saued from their enemyes.

And likewise in their solēne feastes God commaūded them to blow trompettes ouer the sacrifice, to be a signe vnto them, that God would thinke on them accordyng to the couenaūt, made in the bloud of the sacrifice. Loe the trōpets were commaunded to be blowen, not that God delighted in the noyse of the trompettes, but in the faith of hys people.

Also Nume. 15. the Israelites are cōmaunded to make yelow gardes vpon their garmentes, to put them in remēbraunce to kepe his commaūdements, that they should do nothing after their own imagination, nor obserue any fashion, that pleased their owne eyes. wherby ye see that ceremonies are not a seruice to God, but a seruice to man, to put him in minde of the couenaunt, and to stirre vp fayth and loue, which are Gods spirituall sacrifices in mans hart &c. Nume.15.

And Iehosua 4. when the water of Iordane had geuen place, to go ouer by dry ground, God commaunded Iehosua, to take xij. stones out of the bottom of Iordan, and to pitch them on the land, to kepe the deede in memorie, & commaūded when the childrē should aske what the stones meant, that their father should teach them. Iosua.4.

In the 3. of kynges. 11. Ahiah the prophet tare the clocke of Ieroboam in xij. peeces, and bad him take x. in signe, that he should raigne ouer x. of the tribes. 3.Reg.11.

In 4. Reg. 13. Eliseus made Iohab kyng of Israell open a window Eastward toward the Syrians, and made him to shoote out an arrow, and sayd it is the arrow of victory thorough the Lord agaynst the Syrians: and that did he to stablishe the kynges fayth in God, that he should with Gods helpe ouercome the Syriās, and then he bad the kyng smite the ground with an arrow, and the kyng smote it thrise wher by hee prophecied and certified the kyng that hee should thrise ouercome the Syrians. 4.Reg.13.

And Esayas in his xx. chapter was commaunded to goe naked and barefoote, to be a signe that Egypt, in whō the childrē of Israell trusted, should be so caried away of Nabuchadnezzar. Esay.11.

And Ieremias 27. commeth among the people with bondes and chaynes put about his necke, and sheweth them vnto all the kyngs of those countreys, in token that they must be vnder the yoke of Nabuchadnezzar kyng of Babilon. Ierem.27.

bliō. God so vsed to giue them signes, that they would not beleue without signes, as ye may see not onely in the old Testament, but also in the new. How the Jewes asked Christ saying, what signe doest thou shew vs? &c.

And Paule. 1. Cor. 1. the Jewes asked signes.

Luke. 1. Also Zacharias John Baptistes father asked a signe, and the aungel gaue it him.

Luke. 1. Christes mother also asked a signe, and the aungell gaue her Elizabeth to a signe.

Luke. 2. And vnto the shepheardes gaue the aungell a signe, as ye read, Luke. 2.

Exod. 12. And Exod. xij. God gaue the children of Israel the signe of Pesah, which we call the Easter Lambe, for a signe that the time was come, that the children of Israell should be deliuered out of Egypt. And therfore God sent Moyses and Aaron to them, whiche wrought many miracles among them, to stirre vp their faith to the promise of that deliuerance, agaynst the manifold and sore temptations to the contrarie, thorough the most straight and greuous bondage & mercylesse oppressiō. And in that most specially, that Pharao was waxed ten tymes worse to them, after the comming of Moses and Aaron thē before, yet in the last night in which he had promised to smite the first borne of Exod. 12. Egypt, both of man and of beast, and to deliuer them, he commaunded them to take for euery house a Lambe, or a kidde, and to slay them, and to strike the doore postes with the bloud, to bee a signe to them, and a seale of the promise that God would deliuer thē that night, both out of the handes of Pharao, and also from the smittyng of the aūgell, that went about all Egypt and slue the first borne in euery house.

The institution of ỹ Paschall lambe. And this signe Pesah, beside that it was a seale of the promise to be deliuered the same night, to stablish ỹ fayth, and commaunded to be obserued euer after yearely, to keepe the benefite in memorie, it was also a verie prophecie of the passion of Christ, describyng the verie maner and fashion of his death, and the effect & vertue thereof also. In whose stede is the Sacrament of the body & bloud of Christ come, as Baptisme in the roome or stede of Circumcision.

To see how Christ was prophecied and described therin, cōsider & marke, how that the kidde or Lambe must be without spot or blemish, and so was Christ onely of all mākind, in the sight of God and of his law. It must be taken vp the tēth day of the first moneth, which is ỹ x. day of ỹ first new mone in March, for so coūt they their monethes frō the new Moone, & there begin in ỹ tyme of March with vs. And the same day came Christ to Jerusalem, there to be offered, and to suffer his passion.

It must be offered the xiiij. day of the same moneth at night, and the same houre begā Christ his passion, he was the same houre betrayed, and persecuted all night, and taken in the morning early. The feare of death was the same houre vppon him, neither slept he any more after, but went immediatly, as soone as he had comforted his Disciples, into the place where he was taken, to abide his persecuters, where also he swete water and bloud, of very agonie conceiued of his passiō so nighe at hand.

Christes death figured by the Paschall lambe. The bloud stricken on the postes saued thē, that they were not plagued with the Egyptians, & deliuered them out of the captiuitie of Pharao. And the bloud of Christ strickē on the postes of our consciences, deliuereth vs from the captiuitie of Pharao the deuill, and smitting of his aūgels &c. There might not a bone thereof be broken, no more were there of Christes, though the ij. that were hanged with him, had either of them his legges & his armes brokē.

Luke. 22. Moreouer that it was a very prophecie of ỹ death of Christ, & of the vertue of his passion, it is made the more manifest by the woordes of Christ him selfe. Luke. 22. for the night before hys passion, when he had eaten Pesah with his Disciples, he sayd, I will no more eate of it henceforth, till it be fulfilled in the kyngdome of G O D. As who should say. This memoriall, which we yearely haue hetherto obserued, was once fulfilled in the kyngdome of this world, when your fathers were deliuered out of bondage and seruitude of the Egyptians. But it hath yet an other signification hetherto vnknowen vnto you, which must be fulfilled spiritually in the kingdome of God, by my passion that is at hand, and bloud that now shall shortly be shed, by the which ye shalbe deliuered out of the power of Sathan, sinne, and hell, & made heyres of the kyngdome of heauen. Neither was it the lambes bloud, that deliuered you then. For what regarde hath God in the bloud of shepe and calues? but the bloud of Christ, (whom that lambe figured, and described his innocencie, puretnes, and obedience to hys father, and compassion to mankynde ward, whose feble nature he had put on with all the infirmities of the same, (saue sinne) did then deliuer you, to bryng you to the fayth of this deliuerance, and to make you through faith partakers therof.

The scriptures of God are full of hidden misteries.

Many things there be in the Scripture whiche haue a carnall fulfillyng, euen there where they be spoken, or done, and yet haue an other spirituall signification, to be fulfilled long after in Christ and his kyngdome, and yet neuer knowen till the thyng be done.

Nume. 21. Iohn. 3.

As the Serpent of Brasse, which Moses hãged vp in the wildernes, though it tooke effect carnally in the wildernes, yet it so describeth the liftyng vp of Christ vpon the crosse, & the vertue of his passion, that no tõg could better declare it to make the hart feele it.

If ye aske, why they may not be knowen, till they be done, and what prophecie may helpe: I aunswere. If men dyd vnderstand them before they were done, they would endeuour to let the fulfillyng of them, and when the significatiõ is fulfilled, then to see how playnly it was described in the Scripture, doth exceedyngly cõfirme the fayth thereof, and make it better to be vnderstand.

How the Paschall lambe was spiritually fulfilled in the kyngdome of heauẽ.

And when this Pesah was fulfilled spirituallie in the kyngdome of heauẽ, by the death and bloud shedyng of Christ, it ended there. And in ẏ roome therof (cõcernyng that spirituall significatiõ) came the signe of the Sacramẽt of the body and bloud of our Sauiour Christ, as Baptisme came in stede of Circumcision, thyngs more easie, & lesse paynefull and tedious to be obserued, and more gentle to prouoke and entise the Heathen. For as the lambe describeth the death of Christ to come, and the maner of his passion, by which we should be deliuered: euen so doth the ceremonie of the body and bloud of Christ testifie vnto vs, that he hath giuen him selfe to death for vs, and redemed vs already, if we beleue, and cleue fast to the profession of our Baptisme, to walke therin, or will (if any tempest had driuen vs out of the right course) returne to the right way agayne.

The institution of ẏ Sacramẽt of ẏ body & bloud of our Sauiour Christ.

The Paschall lambe & the death and sacrifice of Christes body & bloud compared together.

This to be so, the wordes of the Institutiõ declare, which are these. 1. Cor. 11. The Lord Jesus the night that he was betrayed, tooke bread and gaue thankes and brake it and sayd: Take, eate, this is my body that shalbe giuen for you: this doe in remembraunce of me. And likewise he tooke the cup whẽ Supper was done, saying. This cup is the new Testamẽt in my bloud, this do as often as ye shall drinke it, in the remembraunce of me. Here ye see by these woordes that it was ordeined to kepe the death of Christ in minde, and to testifie, that his body was giuẽ and his bloud shed for vs. And Luke. 22. This is my body that is giuẽ for you: do this in remembraunce of me. And this cup is the new Testament in my bloud, whiche shalbe shed for you. Loe here ye see agayne that it was instituted to kepe ẏ death of Christ in minde, and to testifie wherfore he dyed, euẽ to saue vs from sinne, death, and hell, that we should seeke none other meanes to be deliuered with: for there is none other name for vs to be saued by, but onely by the name of Jesus. Actes. 4. And as the children of Israell stong of the firie Serpents, could haue none other remedy to saue them from present death, then to go and behold the brasen Serpent hanged vp by Moses in the wildernes, whiche lookyng on onely healed them: Euen so if the styng of death whiche is sinne haue wounded their soule, with the worksyng of the law in the consciences, there is none other remedy, then to runne to Christ, which shed his bloud hangyng vpon the Crosse, and to his euerlastyng Testament, and mercyfull promise, that it was shed for vs, for the remissiõ of our sinnes. If thou be stong with conscièce of sinne, & the Cockatrice of thy poysoned nature, hath beheld her selfe in the glasse of the righteous law of GOD, there is none other salue for remedie, thẽ to runne to Christ immediatly, and to the father through him, And to say: father I haue sinned agaynst thee and thy godly, holy, and righteous law, & agaynst my brother, whom I ought of all right to loue for thy sake, as well as my selfe, forgeue me O father for thy sonne Jesus Christes sake, accordyng to thy most mercyfull promises & Testament, & I will aske my brother forgiuenes (if the peace I meane be not made already) and will make to my power such satisfaction to hym as shall seme right in his eyes, if he be reasonable or as the congregatiõ shall assigne, or faythfull men thereunto appointed by the congregation, or such as I and he will agree vpon, and will endeuour my self to do so no more with the helpe of thy grace. And will submit my selfe to the wholesome ordinaunce of the cōgregation, accordyng the doctrine of thy sonne Iesus and of his faithful Apostles. For there is none other name gyuen vnder heauen, wherby we shalbe saued, but onely the name of Iesus.

Dayly by the name of Iesus Christ commeth our saluation. Actes. 4.

Hereof ye see, that the Sacramēt is an absolutiō of our sinnes, as often as we receiue it, where it is truly taught and vnderstand, and receiued a right.

The nature of the Sacramēt of the Body of our Lord.

Hereof ye see also, that as the Hebrues wrote their stories, in couenaūts and signes, gīuyng their signes such names as could not but keepe them in mynde: so God the father dyd follow the example of the people (or they followyng hym) and commaunded hys promises, couenaunts, and prophecies to be written in gestures, signes, and ceremonies, geuyng them names, that could not but kepe his couenauntes in mynde. Euen so Christ wrote the couenaunt of his body & bloud, in bread and wine, geuyng thē that name, that ought to keepe couenaunt in remembraunce.

Sacraments and ceremonies were first ordeined by God to kepe hys couenantes and promises in remēbraunce.

Hereof ye see, that our Sacraments are bodyes of stories onely, and that there is none other vertue in thē, thē to testifie and exhibite to the senses and vnderstandyng the couenauntes & promises made in Christs bloud. And here ye see that where the Sacramēts or ceremonies, are not rightly vnderstād there they be cleane vnprofitable.

Sacramentes are as stories to kepe Christes couenaunts in memory.

And as the Circumcisiō in the flesh, their hartes still vncircumcised, hating the law of God and beleuyng in their owne imaginations, were Circumcised to their damnation.

Circumcisiō without faith auayled nothing

And as the Baptised in the flesh only, the hart still vncleane, neither beleuyng in Christ for the forgeuenes of their sinnes, neither louyng their neighbour for Christes sake, are Baptised also vnto their greater damnatiō. (For though God haue right to al mē, because he hath created and made mā: yet to all such persons by reason of the signe and badge, and of their owne cōsent, graunt, and promise, he hath more right to the callyng of them to the keepyng of his law, if they trust in hym onely, or to damne them, because when they know their duety, or might if they would, (the signe mouyng them and giuyng them an occasiō to aske the rather) and yet do it not.) Euē so all that come to the Sacrament for any other purpose, then it was ordeined and instituted for, (that is to say) to seke absolution of their sinnes, with a set purpose to sinne no more, as nigh as they cā, & to cal to memorie ỹ benefite of the passiō of Christ, with ỹ meditatiō to weaken the flesh, & to strēgth the spirite agaynst her, & to giue thankes agayne, (that is to say) to call to mynde, how much hee is bounde to loue his neighbour, to helpe his neede, and to beare his infirmitie and to forgeue him, if he haue offended, and desire forgeuenes, promising to amēde, whereunto Christ bindeth all that wilbe partakers of his bloud. All such as are not thus prepared, come to their greater damnation. I passe ouer with silence the wicked & damnable doctrine of these seruauntes of Mammon, whiche for lucre peruert the true vse of the Sacrament, and hide it from the people for theyr gayne, teachyng it to be a sacrifice, instituted of God to helpe the soules of the dead in Purgatorie, and that it wil make men rich, and bring them to such promotion, as Christ neuer promised his Disciples, but forbad it them.

Some will say: This Sacrament needed not, Baptisme is inough, Baptisme, is a receiuyng into Religiō, and there is the couenauntes made, what we shall do, and what we shall haue. And baptisme is a signe, wherby God hath right to vs, and we to God, and to Christ, and wherby euery man hath right to call other to do their dueties, and to rebuke them that will not. Neither our saluation so greatly standeth in that or any other Sacrament, that we could not be saued without them, by preachyng the word onely. Neuertheless God hath written his will, to haue his benefites kept in memorie, to his glorie and our benefite, and namely this benefite of all benefites, wherin onely the pith of our saluation resteth: therfore though the effect of it be signified by Baptisme, and though we be baptised to beleue in ỹ death of Christ, and to dye with him, by the mortifieng of the flesh: yet doth this Sacrament through ỹ rehearsling of the couenaūt, and breakyng of the bread, and powryng out of wine, much more lyuely expresse the whole storie, & kept it better in memorie, by dayly repeatyng therof, and hath more might and vehemencie to heale the conscience stong with fresh sinne. For the nature of mā is so weake, so feble, and so frayle, that he can not but sinne, as there is no mā that liueth and sinneth not.

Baptisme and the Sacrament of Christes body and bloud are both necessary.

The Sacrament of Baptisme what it worketh in vs.

The Sacrament of the body & bloud of Christ, what it worketh in vs.

Marke. 10.

And when he is so fallen then the law looketh vpon him with so terrible a countenaunce, & so thundereth in hys eares, that he dare not abide, but turneth his backe and to go, but the enemie still assayleth him on the other side, to persuade him that GOD hath cast him away, saying: they that be Gods haue power to kepe his law, thou hast not, but breakest them: Ergo, thou art a cast away & a damned creature, and hell gapeth, and setteth opē her mouth to deuoure him, & the flesh also wrestleth with the spirit to kepe him down, and to take prisoner, and to stoppe his mouth that he crie no more vpon her, that she might sinne at pleasure without all feare.

The law driueth a sinner to desperatiō.

The deuill enemy to man.

The flesh enemy to man.

The impenitent and wilfull sinner feeleth not the wyath of God in his law.

The careles swyne that consent vnto sinne, feele not these thinges neither the hypocrites that haue put a visard on their face of the law, and make her looke with such a countenaunce as pleaseth thē, but the poore folkes that haue the eyes open, and consent, and fayne would do the law, they feele that can not be expressed with toung. Neither is there liuyng any man, that feeleth the vertue and power of the bloud of Christ, whiche hath not first felt the strong paynes of hell.

The law, the flesh & the deuill are three great enemyes vnto man.

Why the Sacramentes were chiefly ordeined by God.

God hath cōmaunded his Sacramentes to be had in daily vse & the cause why.

Seyng then that this mā is so sicke, so prone and ready to fall, and so cruelly inuaded, whē he hath sinned, of the feende, the flesh, and the law, that he is oft put to flight, and feared and made to runne away from his father. Therfore hath the God of all mercy and of his infinite pitie and bottomlesse compassion set vp this Sacrament, as a signe on an high hill, whence it may be sene on euery side a farre and neare, to call againe them that be fled and runne away. And with this Sacramēt he (as it were) clocketh to them, as an henne doth for her chickens, together them vnder the wynges of his mercy. And hath commaunded his Sacrament to be had in continuall vse to put them in mynde of mercy, layd vp for them in Christes bloud, and to witnesse and testifie it vnto them, and to be the seale therof. For the Sacrament doth much more vehemētly print lyuely the fayth, and make it sinke down into the hart, then do bare wordes onely. As a man is more sure of that he heareth, seeth, feeleth, smelleth, and tasteth then that he heareth onely.

The Sacrament of Christes body, & bloud is a sure token of Christes promise of our saluation in his death.

Now when the wordes of the Testament and promises are spoken ouer the bread. This is my body that shalbe broken for you. This is my bloud that shalbe shed, for you, they confirme the faith, but much more when the Sacrament is sene with the eyes, & the bread broken, the wine poured out or looked on: and yet more when I taste it and smell it. As ye see when a man maketh promise to an other with light wordes betwene them selues, and as they departed, hee to whom the promise is made, beginneth to doubt, whether the other spake earnestly or mocked, and doubteth whether he will remember his promise to bide by it or not. But when any man speaketh with aduisement and deliberation, the wordes are thē more credible: but yet if he sweare, it confirmeth the thyng more, and yet the more, if he strake handes, if he geue earnest, if he call record, if he geue his hād writing, and seale it: so is the promise more, and more beleued, for the hart gathereth: Lo he spake with aduisement, deliberation, and good sadnes, he clapped hands, called recordes, and put to his hand and seale, the man cannot be so fayne without the feare of God, as to deny all this: Shame shall make him bide by his promise, though he were such a man, that I could not compell him, if he would deny it. If a young mā breake a ryng betwene him and a mayde, doth not the fact testifie, & make a presumption to all men, that his hart meant, as his wordes spake.

Manoha Sampsones father when he had sene an aungell, Iud. 13. he sayd to his wife, we shal surely dye, because we haue sene the Lord. But his wife gathered other comfort of the circumstaunces, and sayd, if the Lord would kill vs, he would not haue receaued such offerings of our hands, nor shewed vs such thynges as he hath, nor told vs of thynges to come. Euen so our harts gather of the circūstaunces, protestatiōs, and other miracles of God, good argumentes and reasons, to stablish our weake fayth with all, such as we could not gather at bare wordes onely. Iudi. 13.

A tricke and lection of the premisses.

And this we dispute, God sent his sonne in our nature, & made him feele all our infirmities, that moue vs to sinne, and named him Iesus (that is to say) Sauiour because he should saue his people from their sinnes. Math. 1. Math. 1, And after his death he sent his Apostles to preach the thynges or tydynges, and to thrust it in at the eares of vs, & set vp a Sacrament of it, to testifie it to be a seale of it, to thrust it in, not at the eares onely, by the rehearsing of the pro-promises and Testament ouer it, neither at our eyes onely in beholdynge it, but beate it in throughout our feelyng, tastyng and smellinge also, and to be repeated dayly, & to be ministred to vs. He would not (thinke we) make halfe so much a do with vs, if he loued vs not, or if he would not haue vs fayne come, and be as mercyfull to vs, as he was to his frēdes in the old tyme, that fell and rose agayne. God so then vsed the Iewes, (to whom all ceremonyes were first giuen, and from whom they came to vs) euen such fashions as they vsed among them selues in all his promises and couenauntes, not for his necessitie, but for ours, that such thynges should be a witnes and testimonie, betwene him and vs, to cōfirme the fayth of his promise, that we should not wauer nor doubt in them, when we looke on the seales of his obligations, wherwith he hath bound him selfe. And to keepe the promises and couenauntes better in mynde, and to make them the more deepe sinke in our hartes, and to be more earnestly regarded, and that we should aske what such thynges ment, and why God cōmaunded them to be obserued, that ignorannce should not excuse, if we know not what we ought to do & beleue, for naturall reason ought to teach vs, that ỹ outward, corporall & bodily thyng can not helpe the spirituall soule, and that GOD hath not delectation in such fantasie. Now if we were diligent to search for the good will of God, and would aske what such ceremonies meant, It were impossible, but then God, (which hath promised, Math. 7. If we seeke we shal finde,) would send vs true interpreters of his signes or Sacramentes.

Math. 7.

To ignorant and vnfaithfull person the Sacraments and ceremonies are sinne.

Idolatry what it is.

The spirituall and right seruyng of God what it is.

And he that beyng of a lawfull age obserueth a ceremonie, and knoweth not the entent, to him is the ceremonie not onely vnprofitable, but also hurtfull, and cause of sinne. In that he is not carefull, and diligent to search for it, and he there obserueth them with a false fayth of his owne imagination, thinking as all Idolaters do, and euer haue done, that the outward woorke is a sacrifice and seruice to God. The same therfore sinneth yet more deeper and more damnable: Neither is Idolatrie any other thyng then to beleue that a visible ceremonie is a seruice to the inuisible God whose seruice is spirituall as he is a spirite, and is none other thyng then to know that all is of hym and to trust in hym onely for all thynges and to loue him for his great goodnes and mercy aboue all, and our neighbours as our selues for his sake: vnto which spirituall seruyng of God, and to leade vs to the same, the old ceremonies were ordeined.

These be now sufficient concernyng the entent and vse of the ceremonies & how they came vp. Now let vs consider the wordes of this Testament and promises as they be rehearsed of the three Euangelistes Mathew, Marke, and Luke & of the Apostle Paule. For John whiche wrote last touched no thyng that was sufficiently declared of other Math in the 26. thus sayth, when they were eatyng Jesus tooke bread & gaue thankes and brake and gaue hys Disciples, and sayd, take, eate this is my body: And he tooke the cup and thanked and gaue it them, saying: Drinke ye all of this, for this is my bloud, whiche is of the new Testament, that is shed for many for the remission of sinnes. First ye see by these wordes that the body was giuen to death, and the bloud shed for the remissiō of sinnes and that for many. But who are these many? Verely they that turne to GOD to beleue in hym onely and to endeuour them selues to keepe his law from hence forth. which many, yet in respect of thē that loue not the law, are but very few, and euen that little flocke that gaue them selues wholy to follow Christ, wherfore if any man thinke hee beleue in Christ, and haue not the law written in his hart to consent, that his dutie is to loue hys brother for Christ sake as Christ loued him and to endeuour him selfe so to do, The fayth of that same man is vayne and built vppon sand of of his own imagination and not vpon the rocke of Gods word: for his worde vnto which he hath bound himselfe is, that they onely which turne to God to keepe his lawes shall haue mercy for Christes sake. Drinke of it all for it is my bloud of the new Testament, for it is (that is to say) the drinke that is in the cup, or if ye lift the cup is my bloud of the new Testament takyng the cup for drinke, by a maner of speaking vsed in all tounges as when we say. I haue dronke a cup of wine, we take there the cuppe for the wyne. My bloud of this new Testamēt, that is to say my bloud for whose shedding sake this new Testament and couenaūt is made to you, for the forgeuenes of sinne.

The old Testament made betwene God and your fathers in mount Synai in whiche, life was promised to thē onely that kept it, and to the breakers, death, wrath and vengeance, and to be accursed, and no mētion made of mercy whiche was confirmed with bloud, Exod.24. Exodus. 24. Moyses offered halfe the bloud to God and sprinkeled the people with the other halfe to cōfirme the couenaunt and to bynde both parties: neither was there any couenaūt made Hebr.9. that was not confirmed with bloud as it is rehearsed Hebrues the 9. And as we see in the bookes of Moses, whose custome of bloudshedding was not onely to confirme those old couenauntes, but also to be a prophecie of the bloud that should be shed to confirme this Testament. That old cruell & fearefull testamēt, which drew ỹ people away, so that they durst not abyde the voyce

The great & mercyfull differēce betweene the old Testament & the new. of thunder, nor the terrible sight of the fire, but went and stode a farre of, was cōfirmed with the bloud of calues. But this new and gentle Testament which calleth agayne and promiseth mercy to all that will amend: And as it is a better Testamēt, so is it confirmed with a better bloud to make men see loue, to loue agayne, and to be a greater confirmation of the loue promised. For if he
The great mercy of God to mā kynd. gaue vs his sonne what will he deny vs? If God so loued vs whē we were sinners and knew him not, that hee gaue his sonne for vs, how much more loueth he vs now whē we loue agayn and would fayne kepe his cōmaundementes? In the old couenauntes the people were sprinckled with bloud of calues without in their bodies to bynd thē to keepe the law, els we were boūd to iust damnatiō for the breakyng of it.

Here it is sayd, drinke of it euery one, that your soules within may bee sprinkled and washed thorough fayth with the bloud of the sonne of God for the forgeuenes of sinne and to be partakers of a more easie and kynde Testament, vnder which if you sinne thorough fragilitie you shalbe warned louingly & receiued to mercy if you will turne agayne and amend.

Marke. 14. Marke in the. 14. And as they dyd eate, Iesus tooke bread, and when hee had geuen thākes, he brake it, & gaue it to them & sayd, Take, eate, this is my body: and he tooke the cup and when he had geuē thākes, he tooke it to thē, & they al dranke of it: And he said to thē, this is my bloud of ỹ new Testament, whiche is shed for many. This is all one with Mathew as is aforesayd.

Luke.22. Luke in the 22. And he tooke bread & when he had geuen thankes, he brake it and gaue to them, saying. This is my body which is giuen for you, this do in remembraunce of me, Likewise also, when he had supped he tooke the cup, saying: This cuppe is the new Testament in my bloud which is shed for you.

Here is also to be noted that ỹ cause of the institution was to be a memoriall to testifie that Christes body was giuē and his bloud shed for vs. And agayne where Mathew & Marke sayd, this is my bloud in the new Testament. Luke sayth. This cup is the new testamēt in my bloud whiche shalbe shed for you. This is a straunge speakyng & far frō the vse of our tounge, to call the signe & confirmation by the name of the thing that is signified & confirmed. The Testament is that Christes bloud is shed for our sinnes. And Christ sayth. This cup is that testament, signifieng thereby that ỹ thing that is meant by this ceremony is that we beleue that his bloud shedding is the remissiō of our sinnes, which is the very Testament.

The cause of the institution of ỹ Sacrament of Christes body.

The signe of the body of Christ is called by the name of Christes body, whiche is there signified.

Paul. 1. Cor. 11. saith on this maner. That which I deliuered vnto you I receaued of the Lord. For the Lorde Iesus the same night in the whiche he was betrayed, tooke bread, and when he had geuen thankes he brake it and said. Take ye and eate, this is my body which is broken for you: this do in remembraūce of me: After the same maner also he tooke the cup when he had supped saying. This cup is the new Testament in my bloud: this do as ofté as ye drinke it in the remēbraūce of me. For as often as ye shall eate this bread and drinke this cup ye shall shewe the Lordes death vntill he come. 1.Cor.11.

As Mathew and Marke agree in these wordes. So do Lucas and Paul. And as it is aboue declared vppon the wordes of Luke, and so here by ofte repeatyng one thyng. This do in remembraunce of me. This cup is the new Testament in my bloud. This do as oft as ye drinke it in the remembraunce of me. Agayne, as oft as ye shall eate of this bread and drinke of this cup, so oft ye must declare the Lordes death. By this ofté repeatyng (I say) ye may euidently perceaue, the cause, entēt, and whole purpose of the institution of this Sacrament was to testifie and confirme the fayth of the Testament made in the death of Christ, how that for his sake our sinnes shalbe forgeuen.

So, do this in the remembraunce of me, that is to say, Take bread & wyne and rehearse the couenaunt, and testament ouer them, How that my body was broken and my bloud shed for many and thē geue them to the people to eate and drinke to be a signe and earnest, and the seale of the Testament, & crie vpon them without ceassing to beleue in me onely for the remission of sinnes and not to dispayre how weake soeuer they be, onely if they hang on me and desire power to keepe the law after my doctrine and example of my lyfe and do more and be sory bycause they cannot do that good thyng which they would.

1.Cor.11. For sayth Paul who soeuer shall eate of this bread or drinke of the cup of the Lord vnworthely shalbe giltie of the body and bloud of the Lord, that is to say, whoso receaueth the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ with an vncleane hart not forsaking the old lustes of the flesh. Nor purposing to folow Christ, and to loue his neighbour as onely Christ was to hym mercyfull. The same sinneth agaynst the body & bloud of Christ. In that hee maketh a mocke of the earnest death of Christ, & Hebr.10. as it is written Hebrues the. 10. treadeth Christ vnder foote and counteth the bloud of the Testament wherwith he was sāctified as an vnholy thyng, & doth dishonour to the spirite of grace.

What the Sacramēt meaneth & why the same was instituted. Of this ye may perceaue agayne what the Sacrament meaneth & what the entent of the ordinaunce was, and how such ceremonies came vp, and whence they had their begynnyng and what the frute thereof is, and what is therin to be sought: And though this were inough so that I might here wel cease, yet because the vnquiet scrupulous and superstitious nature of man wholy giuen to Idolatrie hath styred vp such traditions about this one Sacrament most specially: I cannot but speake therof somewhat more and declare what my conscience thinketh in this matter.

There are iij. opinōs about the Sacramēt of the body and bloud of Christ. Ye shall vnderstand therfore that there is great dissention and three opinions about the wordes of Christ where he sayth in pronouncyng the testament ouer the bread This is my body: And in pronouncyng it ouer the wyne This is my bloud. One part say, The first opinion. that these wordes This is my body: This is my bloud compell vs to beleue vnder payne of damnation that the bread and wyne are chaunged into the very body and bloud of Christ really. As the water at Cana Galilee was turned into very wyne.

The second part sayth, we be not bound to beleue that bread and wyne are chaunged but onely that his body and bloud are there presently. The second opinion.

The thyrd say, we be bound by these wordes onely to beleue that Christes body was broken and hys bloud shed for the remissiō of our sinnes and that there is no other satisfaction for sinne then the death and passion of Christ. The thyrd opinion.

The first say these wordes This is my body: This is my bloud compell vs to beleue, that thynges there shewed, are the very body and bloud of Christ really. But bread and wyne say they cannot be Christes naturall body: therfore the bread and wyne, are chaunged turned, altered and transubstantiated, into the very body & bloud of Christ, And they of this opinion haue busied them selues in seekyng subtilties and similitudes to proue how the very body and bloud might be there vnder the similitude of bread and wine onely, the very bread and wyne beyng thus trā-substantiated. And these men haue ben so occupyed in slaying, all that wil not captiue their wits to beleue them: that they neuer taught nor vnderstode that the Sacrament is an absolution to all that therby beleue in the body & bloud of Christ. A declaratiō made by them of the first opiniō aboue mentioned.

The second part graunt, with the first, that the wordes compel vs to beleue that the thinges shewed in the Sacrament are the very body and bloud of Christ. But where the first say bread and wine cannot be the very body and bloud of Christ: There they vary and dissent from them, affirming that bread and wine may and also is Christes body really and very bloud of Christ: and say that it is as true to say that bread is Christes body and that wyne is hys bloud as it is true to say Christ beyng a very mā is also very God. And they say, as the Godhead and manhode in Christ are in such maner coupled togegether that mā is very God and God very man: Euen so the very body and the bread are so coupled that it is as true to say that bread is the body of Christ and the bloud so annexed there with the wyne, that it is euen as true to say that the wyne is Christes bloud. A declaratiō of them of the secōd opinion aboue mentioned.

The first though they haue slayne so many, in and for the defence of their opinion, yet they are ready to receiue the second sort to fellowshyp, not greatly striuyng with them or abhorryng the presence of bread and wyne with the very body and bloud so that they yet by that meanes may keepe hym there still, and hope to sell hym as deare as before, and also some to bye hym and not to minish the price.

A declaration of the of the third opinion aboue mencioned.

The thyrd sort affirme, that the wordes meane no more but onely that we beleue by the thynges that are there shewed that Christes body was broke and his bloud shed for our sinnes, if we will forsake our sinnes & turne to God to kepe his law. And they say that these sayinges, This is my body: and This is my bloud, shewyng bread & wyne are true as Christ meant them, and as the people of that countrey (to whō Christ spake) were accustomed to vnderstand such wordes, and as the Scripture vseth in a thousand places to speake. As when one of vs sayth, I haue dronke a cup of good wyne, that saying is true as the mā meant: that he dranke wyne onely and not the cup: whiche wordes happely, in some other nations eares, would sound that he dranke the cuppe. And as when we say of a child. This is such a mans very face: the wordes are true as the maner of our land is to vnderstand them, that the face of the one is very like the other, And as whē we say he gaue me his fayth and hys truth in my hand, the wordes are true as we vnderstand them that he stroke handes with me, or gaue earnest in signe or token that he would byde by his promise, For the fayth of a mā doth alway rest in his soule, and cannot be giuen out though we giues signes and tokens of them. Euen so (say they) we haue a thousād examples in the Scripture, where signes are named with names of thynges signified by them. As Jacob called the place where hee saw the Lord face to face. Phenyell that is Gods face, when he saw the Lord face to face. Now it is true to say of that field that it is Gods face, though it be not his very face. The same field was so called to signifie that Jacob there saw God face to face.

Gene. 32.

The chief hold and principall anere that the two first haue, is these wordes, This is my body: This is my bloud. Vnto these the third answereth as is aboue sayd, other textes they alledge for them selues, whiche not onely do not strength their cause, but rather make it worse. As in ỹ 6. of John which they draw and wrest to the carnall and fleshly eating of Christes body in ỹ mouth, when it onely meaneth of this eating by fayth. For when Christ sayd except ye eate the flesh of the sonne of mā and drinke hys bloud ye haue no lyfe in you. This cannot be vnderstanded of the Sacrament. For Abraham had life and all the old holy fathers, Christes mother, Elizabeth, Zacharias, John Baptist, Symeon, Anna, and all the Apostles, had lyfe already by fayth in Christ: Of which not one had eatē hys flesh and dronke his bloud with theyr bodily mouthes, But truth it is, that the righteous liueth by his fayth: Ergo, to beleue and trust in Christes bloud is the eatyng that there was meant, as the texte well proueth, if they say we graunt that life commeth by faith: but we all that beleue must be Baptised to keepe the law and to keepe the couenaunt in mynde: Euen so all that lyueth by fayth must receiue the Sacrament. I answere. The Sacrament is a confirmation to weake consciences, and in no wise to be despised, howbeit many haue lyued by fayth in the wildernes, whiche in. 20. 30. or 40. yeares haue not receiued the Sacramēt. Notwithstanding this Oration is nothing to the purpole. For Christ spake to the blinde and vnbeleuyng Jewes, testifieng to them that they could haue no lyfe, excepte they should first eate his flesh and drinke his bloud: Ergo, this eatyng and drinkyng is meant onely of that thyng, that first bryngeth lyfe into the soule and that is faith by your owne confession. And therfore must it be vnderstand of fayth onely, and not of the Sacrament.

Fayth encreased by the worthy receiuyng of the Sacramentes.

And Mathew the last, I am with you alwayes euen vnto the end of the world, which may well be vnderstand, and so was it of old Doctours that by his spirituall beyng with vs by fayth, and in his spirite and so may that text of Mathew 18. be vnderstand where two or three are gathered together in my name there am I in the middest of them. There is many tymes 4. or three good men that mete together in Christes name where the Sacramēt is not. And Paule, Ephes. 3. boweth his knees for the Ephesians to God, that he would geue thē his riches to be strenghthened with his spirite that Christ may dwell in their hartes thorough fayth. where the hart then beleueth in Christ, there dwelleth Christ in the hart: though there be no bread in the hart, neither yet in the maw.

to affirme playnly that it is but bread and wyne onely concernyng the substaunce. And that it is a figure of the body and bloud of Christ onely & some tyme that it is his very body & bloud, therfore it were nedelesse to wade any further herein.

In aunswere to them of the second opinion.

And vnto them of the second opinio that the bread is his very body, I aunswere ye must remember that the old Doctours, as earnestly call it a sacrifice as they do Christes body. But that ye denye: And say with the Epistle to the Hebrues that he was but once sacrificed for altogether whē he offered & sacrificed him selfe to the father for our sinnes, and can now no more be sacrificed. Christ dieth no more now and therfore is no more sacrificed. Neither do we properly offer him to God. But he in his mortall flesh offered him selfe for vs to GOD the father and purchased therewith a generall pardon for euer.

Christ once sacrificed is a sacrifice for euer.

The doctrine of the Papistes.

And now doth God the father proffer him and giueth him to vs. And the Priestes in Gods stede proferre hym and giue hym vnto the people for a remission and absolution of their sinnes dayly, if they by the mouyng and stirryng of the Sacramēt beleue in the body and bloud of Christ.

Papistes be agreued with such as consent not to their grosse opinion.

Wherfore ye ought of no right to be angry with them of the thyrd opinion though they denie the Doctors, where they seme to say that the Sacrament is the very body of Christ. As they be not angrie with you, when ye deny them, where they as earnestly affirme that it is a sacrifice. Neuertheless they aunswere that Doctours call it a sacrifice onely because it is the memoriall, the earnest and seale of that euerlasting sacrifice offered once for all. And euen so say they that the Doctours called the Sacrament the body & bloud of Christ after the same maner onely, because it is the memoriall, the earnest and seale of body and bloud, as the vse of Scriptures is to call signes by the names of thynges signified therby.

Signes cōmonly called by the name of thynges signified therby.

And vnto them of the first opinion I aunswere with the same reason that it is impossible that the Sacrament should be a very sacrifice. For neither the sacrifices of the old law which prophecied the sacrifising of Christ, neither yet our redemption was fulfilled at night. For if the Scriptures and prophecies were then fulfilled and we thē redemed. Christ dyed on the morow in vayne and false are the Apostles and Euangelistes that preache hys body breakyng and bloud sheddyng vnder Pontius Pylate by the persecution of Cayphas and Annas, to bee our redemption.

Note this worthy & true argument followyng.

Moreouer for all the breakyng and deuidyng of the Sacrament of his body among his Apostles. His body abode still alyue and for all the pouryng out of the Sacrament of his bloud of the pot into the cup, and out of the cup into the mouthes and belyes of his Disciples: hee blede as freshly on the morow, as though he had blede then nothyng at all.

He was verely much more easely sacrificed that night in the breakyng & diuidyng of the bread and pouring out of wyne, then he was on the morow. The Sacrament was that night no doubt but a description of his passiō to come. And it is now a memorial of his passiō past. He instituted the maner of the Sacrament then, and taught hys Disciples also, that they after vnderstode when he was risen agayne, and not then, as they neuer had capacitie to vnderstand hym when he spake of his death. For they then imagined carnally of Christ (as the Jewes yet do, that Christ should neuer dye as he dyd, not concernyng his Godhead but should lyue euer bodily as he now doth concernyng his resurrection.

All the doctors with one accorde call the Sacrament a sacrifice.

Wherfore seyng that all the Doctors with one accorde cal the Sacrament so earnestly a sacrifice they cannot otherwise vnderstand them that they so say after the vse of the Scripture onely, but because it is the memoriall of the sacrifice of his death & bloudsheddyng. why should they then of right be offēded if we vnderstand the Doctours after the same maner whē they call it his body and bloud? And that they so call it after the vse of the Scripture because that it is onely a memoriall of his body and bloud.

Papistes should be indifferent in iudgementes as Protestants are.

As concernyng the transubstantiation: I thinke that such a speech was among the old Doctours though they that came after vnderstode thē amisse. Their hartes were grosse, through busyng thē selues to much with worldly busines, for the bread and wyne are but onely bread & wine till the wordes of the Testament bee rehearsed ouer them, & then they ceasse to be any more bread & wyne in the hartes of the true beleuers, for the hart after these words once spoken thinketh onely vppon the couenaunt made in the body and bloud of Christ and through fayth eateth hys body

body and drinketh his blond, though the eyes and other sences perceaue nothyng but bread and wyne. As when a man sometyme seeketh for a text in the Bible he seeth paper and inke and the figure of letters: yet his hart not once thinketh of any other thyng thē on the wordes and sence of his text. And therof no doubt came vp this transubstantiation through false vnderstandyng.

In effectual and good Argument.

Another thyng is this, none of those wicked heretickes which denied Christ to be very God, or any of them that denyed Christ to bee man or to haue a very body saue a phātasticall body dyd cast the true beleuers in the teth at any time, of the fayth of Christes body present in their Sacrament euery where, which thing is not like but they would haue done, if that opinion had thē bene a generall article of the fayth.

The Pope confir ming transubstantiatiō, did purchase hys own gayne to the ouerthrow of the right vse of Christes Sacrament.

Neither was there any heresie or diuersitie of opinion or disputyng about the matter till the Pope had gathered a Councell to confirme this transubstāciation: wherfore it is most likely that this opinion came vp by thē of latter dayes.

Furthermore all the law and Prophetes, all that Christ dyd, or can yet do, is to bring vs to beleue in him, and in God the father through him, for the remissiō of sinnes, & to bryng vs vnto that (whiche immediatly foloweth out of that belefe) to loue our neighbours for hys sake as he loued vs. wherfore if Christ did put his bodilie presence in the Sacrament and would we should beleue it: It is done onely to bring vs to this fayth. Now is this fayth no where lesse had, then where that opinion is most strong neither so cruelly persecuted of Jew or Turke, as of thē that most feruently defend that opiniō. True fayth maketh a man to loue hys brother, but that opinion maketh them to hate and slay their brethren that better beleue in Christ, then they of that opinion do, and that murther do they for feare of losyng that they haue gotten through that opinion.

The commō persuasion of Papistes.

Item, they of this opiniō in stede of teachyng vs to beleue in Christ, teach vs to serue Christe with bodily seruice, which thing is nought els but Idolatry. For they preach that all the ceremonies of the Masse are a seruice to God, by reason of the bodily workes to obtayne forgeuenes of sinnes therby, and to deserue & merite therewith. And yet Christ is now a spirituall substaunce with his father hauyng also a spirituall body and with the father to be worshypped, in spirite onely. And his seruice in the spirite is onely to beleue in hym for the remissiō of sinne, to call vpon hym, & giue hym thankes & to loue our neighbours for his sake.

Now all workes done to serue man and to bryng him to this poynt to put his trust in Christ, are good & acceptable to God: but done for any other purpose they be Idolatry and Imageseruice and make God an Idole or bodily Image.

Agayne seyng the fayth of the Testament in Christes blond is the lyfe of the righteous from the begynnyng of the world to the end: and for as much as the Sacramēt was instituted onely to bryng to this lyfe: Now when they which thinke not the body to be presēt in the Sacramēt haue by the preaching and confirmation of the Sacrament obtayned this lyfe or stedfast fayth in Christes blond, and by the dayly vse of the Sacrament are more & more hardned therein and in the loue that springeth thereof: what reasonable cause haue the contrary part (whiche beleue the body present and bread turned into the very body as flesh bones, here, sinewes, nayles & all other, as he was put on the crosse of length and quantitie, I cannot tell what) to rayle on vs as heretickes, hate persecute and slay vs most cruelly, as enemyes: Christ sayth Qui contra me non est, mecum est, He that is not agaynst me is with me. Marke 9.

Papistes are cruell persecuters

Now they that beleue in Christ for the remissiō of their sinnes and for his sake loue their foes are not Christes enemies Ergo, they be on Christes side. why then should they that boast them selues to be Christes frendes: slay thē? Fayth in Christes blond and in the father thorough him is Gods seruice in spirite. And so haue they whiche beleue not the bodily presence serued God a long time, and there to bene holpen by the Sacrament. The other part fallen there from through belenyng the body present, seruyng God, with bodily seruice (which is Idolatrie) and to make God an Idoll or Image, in that they trust in the goodnes of their woorkes (as they which serue tyrauntes) & not in the goodnes of God through trust in the blond of Christ: Ergo, they that beleue not the bodily presence, (not a litle therto compelled through the wicked Idolatrie of the contrary belefe) are not to be thought so euill as the other would haue them seme to be.

The faithfull are in good state though the wicked iudge the contrary.

Phil. 2. And Phil. 2. how swetely and how vehemently cōmaundeth he them to draw all one way to be of one accorde & one mynde or sentence, And to do nothyng of strife or of vayne glory, that is to say of hate or disdayne one of another, or of affectiō to him selfe for to seme glorious, but ech to preferre other through meekenes and to haue his opinion suspect, and to feare least he hath not obtayned the vnderstandyng, rather thē of presumption to his owne witte to despise & hate the cōtrary party & persecute as a tyraunt. And in the thyrd of the same Paul sayth, let as many as be perfect (that is to say be truly taught) and know the law truly and her office and the office and effect of fayth, and know whiche be good workes before God, and what the intent of them is, let (sayth he) so serue as we be come, procede in one rule, that we may be of one accorde.

Fayth onely iustifieth what it is to say. Now hetherto we be all come, and this generall rule haue we gotten that fayth onely iustifieth that is to say that the sinne is forgiuen onely for Christes sake: & againe that our duety is to loue our neighbours no lesse then Christ loued vs, wherfore let vs procede forth in this rule & exhort ech other to trust to Christ & to loue ech other as Christ dyd, and in this where in we all agree let vs bewise onely & feruēt and strive who shalbe greatest and go formost.

And in this which is not opened to all parties, let vs be meeke sober and cold and keepe our wisedome secret to our selues and abyde pacietly till God open it to other also.

The cause why the third part say that this worde (is) compelleth vs not to beleue the bodily presence of Christ to be there is this. The Iewes (say they) are wont euer to name the memoriall and signes of thinges with the very name of the thyng signified that the very name might the better keepe the thyng in mynde. As when Iacob Gene. 32. Gene. 32. turned home agayne out of Mesopotamia saw the aūgels of God come agaynst hym hee called the place where he saw thē Mahanaim: An host, because his posteritie in tyme to come, when they hard the field whiche was none host yet so called should aske why it was so named, ỳ their elders might thereby haue an occasion to teach that Iacob saw there an host of aungels.

And agayn in the same chapter whē the aungell that wrestled with hym had blessed hym & was departed, Iacob called the name of the place Pheniell Gods face, that the people in time to come should aske why it was called Gods face & their Elders should aunswere because Iacob saw there GOD face to face that the name should keepe the thyng in mynde.

And agayne in the 33. where he had Gene. 33. made boughtes, or houses of boughes for his beastes hee named the place Sucoth, that is Boothes.

Item Gene. 33. He bought a parcell of land and built there an alter and called it, the mighty God of Israell.

Item Gene. 35. the God of Bethell, Gene. 35. and Genesis the last chapter Ioseph held a lamentation for his father seuen dayes and the people of the countrey called the name of the place Abell Masrayn the lamentation of the Egyptiās. Now the place was not the lamentation, but so called to kepe the lamentation in memorie.

Item Exodus xij. the lambe is called Exod. 12. Pesah, a passing by, because the aungell did passe by the houses and hurted not where it was slayne, and the bloud striken on the postes: that the name should kepe the thyng in memorie.

Item Exod. 29. and Leuit. 8. almost euery where the beast offered for sinne is called sinne, whiche vse of speakyng Paule vseth Rom. 9. and 2. Cor. 5. and calleth Christ sinne, whē Christ is neither sinne nor sinnefull, but an acceptable offeryng for sinne, & yet he is called our sinne, because he bare our sinnes on his backe, and because our sinnes are cōsumed and made no sinne in him if we will forsake our sinnes and beleue in Christ for the remission therof. Christ is also called our righteousnes to certifie vs that when we haue no righteousnes of our owne, yet that his righteousnes is giuen vs to make satisfactiō for our vnrighteousnes, if we will beleue it.

Item Exodus the 30. The sinne or Exod. 30. sinne offeryng is called Atonemēt, and it was yet but a signe certifieng the cōscience, that the atonement was made and that God had forgiuen the sinne.

Item Iudicum 10. They called the Iudi. 10.

name of a certaine Horna, as it were an vtter destructiō. Because that they had vtterly destroyed man woman & child and all that bare life.

Iudi. 15. Item Iudicum 15. the place where Sampson killed mē with an Asse iawe was called Lehy that is Jaw bone, to kepe the acte in mynde.

Iudic. 19. Item Judic. 19. There went a companie out of the tribe of Dan and pitched besides Kyriath Iearym, in Juda, and the place was called euer after, the host of Dan, onely to keepe the thyng in mynde.

1. Reg. 6. Item 1. Reg. 6. A great stone where God slewe fifty thousand was called the great lamētation. In so much that the text sayth they put the Arke on the great lamentation.

1. Reg. 7. Item. 1. Reg. 7. Samuell pitched a stone on an end, and called it the helpe stone, because God had there holpen them and giuen them a great victorie of the Philistines.

3. Reg. 22. Item the last of the 3. of kinges Sedechias came to Achab with a couple of hornes on his head, saying, with these hornes shalt thou slay the Assyrians hee meant not that Achab should take those hornes and goe at the Assyriās: But would that he should beleue onely that as a beast scattereth a cocke of hay with his hornes so shuld Achab scatter the host of the Assyrians, with his host.

Nume. 6. Item Numeri the. 6. he that voweth abstinence must let his heare grow to keepe his abstinence in mynde, and when his abstinence is out, he is commaunded to shaue the head of his abstinence, and to offer such offerynges as are there appoynted after that he hath shauen of his abstinence. Loe here, the heare is called his abstinēce, and is yet but a memorie of his abstinence.

Ierem. 7. Item Jere. 7. The Prophet was cōmaūded to shere of his abstinence and to cast it away, which abstinence is but his heare.

Ezech. 12. Also Ezechiell 12. God commaunded the Prophet to remoue withall his goodes after such maner as conquerers carie away the people captiue frō countrey to coūtrey, and when he had done. The Lord sayd vnto him, this prophesie is the Captein or Prince of Jerusalem, when it was but an exāple to him how he should be serued.

A short and effectuall collection of the former argumentes.

Finally where Mathew and Marke say. This cup is my bloud of the new Testament. Paule and Luke say This cup is the new Testament in my bloud. Now must the sence of the woordes of the two first Matthew and Marke be all one with the sences of the woordes of the .ij. last Luke & Paule. The woordes of Luke and Paule are. This cup is the new Testament made in my bloud, or for my bloud sake.

Now the Testament is that hys bloud was shed for our sinnes, but it is impossible that the cup or his bloud should be that promise. wherfore the sence must be nedes that it is the memoriall and seale of the Testamēt onely. And therefore where Mathew and Marke say. This cuppe is my bloud of the new Testamēt, the sence must nedes be also. That it is the memoriall & seale therof, onely calling after the vse of the Hebrues the signe with ỳ name of that which is signified that is to say, calling the wine whiche onely signifieth the bloud with the name of the bloud. And then it followeth that the bread is called his body after the same maner because it is the signe of his body.

These & like exāples moue the third part to affirme that we be not bound to beleue that the bread is the very body of Christe. Though it be so called, nor that the bread is transubstantiated into the body. No more thē the things here rehearsed are that they be called or transubstantiated into the very things which they be called.

An obiection made by ỳ Papistes.

The other will aunswere, though this memoriall were not the thynges whose names they beare yet it wil not follow that it should bee so here in the Sacrament: for they that gaue such other names had no power to make the thynges so to be: But Christ is very God and hath power to make his body to be euery thyng and euery where.

In aunswere to ỳ former obiection.

I aunswere, that God cannot make euery of his creatures God, neither cā it bee proued lesse repugnaunce that a creature should bee euery where then that he should be God.

Moreouer, though God where he appeared to Jacob had pitched a stone on an end and called it Gods face, yet had he not bene any more bound to beleue that it had bene the very face of God then if Jacob had done it. The almightynes of GOD standeth not in that hee is able to do all that our foolish leude thoughtes may Jmagine. But because all power is his & of him and that hee doth all he will and hath made all of naught, and can bryng all to naught agayne. And can do all that includeth not cōtrarie to the truth and veri-

beritie that God hath put in his creatures: and because he can do thynges impossible for man or any other creature to do or to thinke how they shuld be done, therfore he is called the Lord almighty, but because to braule about such possibilitie, or impossibilitie is the lust of Sophisters, and also the desire of the deuill to quench the profession of our Baptisme and to wipe out the Image of Christ out of our hartes, and a thyng endelesse: Therfore I compte it wickednes to wade forth in it, and to giue them that seeke an occasion perpetually to scold. The negatiue may a man hold till they can proue the affirmatiue.

Moreouer, if bread be the very body of Christ, whether abidyng the very body still or transubstantiated, and enioy the glorye of the soule of Christ and also of the Godhead.

It semeth impossible to be auoyded but that Christ was made man & dyed: Also bread, whiche semeth to some a great inconuenience. Howbeit that great proclamation of bread and also that high power of Priestes aboue all aūgels I admit also to auoide all braulyng but one reasō I haue vnto which I cleaue somewhat and it is this.

In excellēt argument.

All that is betwene God and man in the Scripture is for mans necessitie and not for any nede that GOD hath therof: And other spirituall profite can none haue by that fayth in the Sacrament, then to be taught therby to beleue in Christ our Sauiour and to do good to his neighbour now is that beleefe & loue had as well & rather better as is aboue proued without such fayth with it, Ergo, where the Scripture compelleth to no such beleue it is wickednes to make it a necessary article of our fayth, & to slay them that cā not thinke that it ought to be beleued.

Notwithstandyng all these reasons and the damnable Idolatrie which the Papistes haue cōmitted with the Sacrament: yet whether they affirme the body and blond to bee present with the bread and wyne or the bread and wyne to be turned and transubstantiated into the body and blond, I am therewith content (for vnities sake) if they will there cease, and let him be there onely to testifie and confirme the Testament or couenaunt made in Christes blond and body, for which cause onely Christ instituted the Sacrament. But and if they will rage further with their blind reasons of their subtill sophistrie & deuilish Idolatrie, & say, where Christes blond is, there is his body and where his body is, there is his soule, & where his soule is, there is his godhead & the trinity, the father, the sonne, & the holy ghost and there men ought to pray and say. O father whiche art present with thy sonne Christ vnder bread & wyne, or in forme of bread & wyne. If (I say) they so rane, thē as the old Prophet for like Idolatrie denieth God to dwel in the temple or to haue pleasure in sacrifice of blond of goates, shepe & calues: Euē so deny I the body of Christ to be any more in the Sacrament then God was in the goldē calues, which Jeroboham set vp to be prayed to, the one in Bethell and the other in Dan for though God bee present euery where, yet if heauen of heauens can not compasse hym to make hym a dwellyng place (as the Scripture testifieth, and much lesse the temple that was at Jerusalem, how should he haue a dwellyng place in a litle wafer or crome of bread. God dwelleth not in the temple neither did our fathers, which were of the true faith in the old Testamēt pray to God as present in the temple, but the name of God onely was in the tēple 3. of the Kinges 8. and his law and couenauntes and wonderfull deedes were therin writtē in signes and were there preached and testified continually of the true Priestes and Prophetes vnto the people the fathers of the true fayth came thether. 3.Reg. 8.

Furthermore of the feruent loue which they had towardes the lawes & couenauntes of God. For the whiche Prophets. Salomō prayed so earnestly vnto the Lord God saying. Here thou O God in heauen thy dwellyng place and do all that the straunger calleth to thee for: that all nations of the earth may know the & feare thy name, as do this people Israell &c.

Read the third booke of kynges the 8. chapter when God delighted onely in the fayth of the offerer, whiche beleued in God onely for all mercy, taking the sacrifice for a sure token and earnest of the mercy of God, certified by that signe, that God loued them, and was at one with them for Christes sake to come. As we should be certified by the Sacrament of God with vs for Christes death that is past. And Christe taught vs in our prayers to looke vp to heauen and say, Our father which art in heauē, & he hym selfe in all his prayers did lift vp his eyes to heauē to his 3.Reg.8.

father, and so did her when he instituted the Sacrament and rehearsed the wordes of the couenaunt ouer bread & wyne as it is written Mathew .26. Marke.14. Luke.22. 1.Cor.11. in these wordes Iesus tooke bread. &c.

Math.26.
Marke.14.
Luke.22.
1.Cor.11.

Christ though he affirme him selfe to be the sonne of God & his father to be in him, yet he taught not his Disciples to direct the prayer to the father in him but vp to the father in heauen neither lift he vp his eyes or prayer to his father in the Sacrament but to his father in heauē. I know diuers, & diuers mē know me which loue me as I do thē, yet if I should pray them whē I mete thē in the strete openly they would abhorre me, but if I pray thē where they be appointed to mete me secretly they will here me & accept my request. Euē so though gods presēce be euery where yet will he be prayed so, vp to the place onely where he shall see him, & where he would haue vs for to lōg for to be.

Moreouer if I graunt you that the bloud of Christ is in the cup, it will follow that his body is there also, neither when I graunt that his body is in the bread, or vnder the forme of bread, will it follow that his soule is ther to. Christ made ẏ bread the Sacrament of his body onely wherefore as the bread is no similitude of his bloud. So am I not bound or ought to affirme ẏ his bloud is there presēt. And he did institute the wyne to be the Sacramēt of his bloud onely. And happely it was red wyne, ẏ more lively to represēt it. Now as the wine in no similitude doth represēt the body, so am I not bound or ought to affirme that his body is there present.

Ye say that Christ is so mighty, that though he stode mortall before his Disciples eyes, yet he was able to make ẏ same body ẏ same time to be in the Sacrament immortall, & to be vnder euery litle peece of bread or of the Sacramēt though it be no greater thē a mote in the sonne and that as lōg as great & thicke as he stode before them. If hee were so mighty, why is he not as mighty to make his bloud to bee alone and his body alone? hys bloud, body, and soule were eche alone at his death, and while the body lay in the sepulchre.

Finally Christ said this is my bloud that shalbe shed: Ergo, it is true now, this is my bloud that was shed. Now the bloud of Hayles and the bloud that is in many other places men say is the bloud that was shed, Ergo, that bloud is in the Sacrament if any be, but I am not bound to beleue or ought to affirme, that the bloud that is at Hayles is anymate with the soule of Christ, or that his body is there present.

Wherfore to auoid this endles brauling whiche the deuils no doubt hath stirred vp to turne ẏ eyes of our soules frō the euerlasting couenaūt made vs in Christes bloud & body & to nossell vs in Idolatry, which is trust & confidēce in false worshippyng of God & to quēch first the faith to Christward and thē the loue due to our neighbour therfore me thinketh that the party ẏ hath professed ẏ faith of Christ, & the loue of his neighbour ought of duety to beare eche other as lōg as the other opinio is not plaine wicked through false Idolatrie nor cōtrary to the saluation that is in Christ, nor agaynst the opē & manifest doctrine of Christ and his Apostles nor contrary to the generall articles of the fayth of the generall Churche of Christ, which are confirmed with open Scripture. In whiche articles neuer a true Church in any land dissenteth.

There be many textes of the Scripture & therefore diuersly expounded of holy doctours & takē in cōtrary sēces, whē no text hath cōtrary sēces in dede or more thē one single sence & yet that hurteth not, neither are ẏ holy doctors therfore heretikes, as the expositio destroyeth not the faith in Christes blud nor is cōtrary to the opē scripture or general articles. No more doth it hurt to say that the body & bloud are not in the Sacramēt. Neither doth it helpe to say they be there, but hurt excedingly, if ye inferre ẏ the soule is there to, and that God must be there prayed to when as our kyngdome is not on the earth, euē so we ought not to direct our prayers to any God in earth but vp where our kyngdome is. And whether our redemer & sauiour is gone & there sitteth on the right hand of his father to pray for vs, & to offer our prayers vnto his father & to make thē for his sake acceptable: neither ought he ẏ is bound vnder payne of dānatio to loue his brother as Christ loued him, to hate to persecute & to slay his brother for blind zeale to any opinio that neither letteth nor hindereth to saluatio that is in Christ: As they which pray to God in the Sacramēt not onely do: but also through that opinion, as they haue lost loue to their neighbours: euen so haue they lost the true fayth in ẏ couenaūt made in Christes bloud and body. which couenaunt onely is ẏ which saueth. And to testifie this was the sacramēt institute onely.

FINIS.

THe grace and peace of God our father and of Iesus Christ our Lord, be with you Amen. Dearely beloued brother Iohn. I haue heard say, how that hypocrites nowe that they haue ouercome that great business which letted thē at the least way, haue brought it at a stay, they returne to their old nature agayne. The will of God be fulfillled, and that which he hath ordeyned to be ere the world was made, that come, and his glory reigne ouer all.

A letter of Maister Tyndall to M. Fryth.

Dearely beloued, how euer the matter be, commit your selfe wholy and onely vnto your most louing father, & most kinde Lorde, and feare not men that threat, nor trust men that speake fayre: but trust him that is true of promise, and able to make his worde good. Your cause is Christes Gospell, a light that must be fedde with the bloud of fayth. The lampe must be dressed and snuffed dayly, and that oyle poured in euery euening and morning, that the light goe not out. Though we be sinners, yet is the cause right. If when we be buffeted for well doing, we suffer paciently and endure, that is acceptable to God: for to that ende we are called. For Christ also suffered for vs, leauing vs an example that we should follow his steps, who did no sinne. Hereby haue we perceaued loue, that he layed downe his lyfe for vs: Therefore we ought also to laye downe our liues for the brethern. Reioice and be glad, for great is your reward in heauen. For we suffer with him, that we may also be glorified with him: Who shall chaunge our vile body, that it may be fashioned like vnto his glorious body, according to the working wherby he is able euen to subiect all thinges vnto hym.

1.Pet.2. 1.Ioh.3. Math.5. Rom.8. Phil.3.

Dearely beloued, be of good courage, and comfort your soule with the hope of this high reward, and beare the Image of Christ in your mortall body, that it may at his comming be made like to his, immortall: and folow the example of all your other dear brethren, which chose to suffer in hope of a better resurrection. Kepe your conscience pure and vndefiled, and say against that nothing. Sticke at necessarie thinges, and remember the blasphemies of the enemies of Christ, saying: they finde none but that will abiure rather then suffer the extremitie. Moreouer, the death of thē that come againe after they haue once denyed, thouh it be accepted with God, and all that beleeue, yet is it not glorious, for the hipocrites say, he must nedes dye, denying helpeth not: But might it haue holpen, they would haue denyed fyue hundred tymes: but seing it would not helpe them, therefore of pure pride, and mere malice togither, they speake with their mouthes, that their conscience knoweth false. If you geue your selfe, cast your selfe, yelde your selfe, commit your selfe wholy and onely to your louyng father: then shall his power be in you and make you strong, and that so strong, that you shall feele no payne: which should be to an other present death: and his spirit shall speake in you, and teach you what to aunswere, according to his promise. He shall set out his trueth by you wonderfully, and worke for you aboue all that your hart can imagine: Yea, & you are not yet dead, though the hipocrites all, with all they can make, haue sworne your death. Vna salus victis nullam sperare salutem: To loke for no mans helpe, bringeth the helpe of God to them that seeme to be ouercome in the eyes of the hipocrites: Yea it shall make God to cary you through thicke and thinne for his truethes sake, in spite of all the enemies of his trueth. There falleth not an heare till his houre be come: and when his houre is come, necessitie carryeth vs hence though we be not willing. But if we be willing, then haue we a reward and thanke.

Boldnes of spirite. Wounde not conscience. Standing vpō thinges necessary. Death after denying, euill spoken of by the aduersaries. Obedience of God. To looke for no mās helpe, bringeth Gods helpe. Constancie in stāding. Pacience in suffering.

Feare not threatning therfore, neither be ouercome with sweete wordes: with which twayne, the hipocrites shall assayle you. Neither let the perswasions of worldly wisedome beare rule in your hart: No, though they be your frendes that counsayle you. Let Bilney be a warning to you. Let not their visure beguile your eyes. Let not your body

And pray to your father in that name, and he will eaſe your payne, or ſhorten it. The Lord of peace, of hope, and of fayth, be with you. Amen.

An other notable and worthy Letter of maister William Tyndall sent to the sayd Iohn Frith, vnder the name of Iacob.

The grace of our Sauiour Iesus, his pacience, mekenes, humblenes, circumspection, and wisedome be with your hart. Amen.

An other letter of M. Tyndall.

DEarely beloued brother Iacob, myne hartes desire in our Sauiour Iesus is, that you arme your selfe with pacience, and be cold, sober, wise and circumspect, & that you keepe you alow by the ground, auoydyng hygh questions that passe the common capacitie. But expounde the law truly, and open the vayle of Moses to condemne all flesh, and proue all mē sinners, and all deedes vnder the law, before mercy haue taken away the condēnation therof, to be sinne and damnable. And then as a faythfull Minister, set abroch the mercy of our Lord Iesus, and let the wounded cōsciences drinke of the water of him. And then shall your preachyng be with power, and not as the doctrine of the hypocrites: and the spirite of God shall worke with you, and all cōsciences shall beare recorde vnto you, & feele ẏ it is so. And all doctrine that casteth a miste on those two, to shadow and hyde them, I meane the law of God and mercy of Christ, that resist you withall your power. Sacraments without significatiō refuse. If they put significations to them, receiue them, if you see it may helpe though it bee not necessarie.

Hygh questions to be auoyded.

All deedes before they bee iustified by fayth are sinne.

Preachyng the law of God, and mercy of Christ.

Sacrameṁts with out significations to be refused.

Of the presence of Christes body in the Sacrament, medle as litle as you can, that there appeare no division amōg vs. Barnes will be whote agaynst you. The Saxons be sore on the affirmatiue, whether constant or obstinate, I omit it to God. Philippe Melancton is sayd to be with the French king. There be in Antwerpe that say, they saw him come into Paris with an c. and l. horses, and that they spake with hym. If the Frenchmen receiue the worde of God, hee will plant the affirmatiue in them. George Ioye would haue put foorth a treatise of the matter, but I haue stopt hym as yet, what he will doe if he get money, I wotte not. I beleue he wold make many realōs litle scruyng to the purpose. My mynde is, that nothyng be put forth till we heare how you shal haue spede. I would haue the right vse preached, and the presence to be an indifferēt thyng, till the matter might be reasoned in peace at laysure, of both parties. If you be required, shew the phrases of the Scripture, and let them talke what they will. For as to beleue ẏ God is euery where, hurteth no mā that worshyp him no where but within, in the hart, in spirite and verity: euē so to beleue that the body of Christ is euery where (though it can not be proued) hurteth no man that worshippeth hym no where saue in the fayth of hys Gospell. You perceiue my minde: howbeit if God shew you otherwise, it is free for you to do as he moueth you.

M. Tyndall here beareth with tyme.

By the affirmatiue he meaneth the opinion which M. Luther & the Saxōs do hold of the Sacrament.

M. Tyndall agayne beareth wᵗ tyme.

Vbiquetie can not be proued.

I gessed long ago that God would send a dasing into the head of the spiritualtie, to be catched thē selues in their owne subtiltie, and I trust it is come to passe. And now me thinketh I smel a counsayle to be takē, litle for their profites in time to come. But you must vnderstand, that it is not of a pure hart & for loue of the truth, but to auenge thē selues, and to eate the whores flesh, & to suck the marow of her bones. Wherfore cleaue fast to the rocke of the helpe of God, & commit the end of all things to hym: and if God shall call you, that you may then vse the wisedome of the worldly, as farre as you perceiue the glory of God may come therof, refuse it not: and euer among, thrust in, that the Scripture may bee in the mother toung, and learning set vp in the Vniuersities. But and if ought be required contrary to the glory of God and hys Christ, thē stand fast, and commit your selfe to God, and bee not ouercome of mens persuasions, which happely shal say: we see no other way to bryng in the truth.

Eating the whores flesh, is to spoyle the Popes Churche, onely for ẏ praye and spoyle ther of.

Worldly wisedome so farre as it may serue to Gods glorie, may be vsed.

Brother Iacob, beloued in my hart, there lyeth not in whom I haue so good hope and trust, and in whō myne hart reioyseth and my soule comforteth her selfe, as in you: not the thousand part so much for your learnyng, and what other giftes els you haue, as that you wil crepe alow by the ground, and walke in those thinges that the conscience may feele, and not in the imaginations of the brayne: in feare and not in boldnes: in open necessary things, and not to pronounce or define of hyd secretes, or thynges that neither helpe or hinder whether they be so or no: in vni tie and not in seditious opinions: in so much that if you be sure you know, yet in thinges that may abyde layſure, you wil deferre, or say (till other agree with you) me thinke the text requireth this ſense or vnderſtandyng: yea and that if you be sure that your part be good, and in other hold the contrary, yet if it be a thyng that maketh no matter, you will laugh and let it paſſe, and referre the thyng to other men, and sticke you ſtifly and ſtubburnely in earneſt and neceſſary thynges. Anno. 1533. the v. day of April.

When Christ sawe those glottons seekyng theyr bellyes flockyng, so fast vnto him, after his wōted maner (the occasion taken to teach & preach vnto them of the thing now moued) he sayd. Verely verely I say vnto you: ye seeke me not because ye haue sene my miracles, but because ye haue eaten of the loaues and were well filled. But as for me, I am not commen into this world onely to fill mens bellyes: but to fede and satisfie their soules. Ye take great paines to folow me for the meate of your bellyes: but oh sloughardes, worke, take paynes & labour rather to get that meate that shall neuer perish. For this meate that ye haue sought of me hetherto, perisheth with your bellyes: but the meate that I shall giue you, is spirituall, and may not perish, but abideth for euer, giuyng lyfe euerlastyng. For my father hath consigned and confirmed me with his assured testimonie, to bee that assured sauyng health and earnest peny of euerlastyng life. When the Iewes vnderstode not what Christ meant, biddyng them to worke and labour for that meate that should neuer perishe, they asked hym, what shal we do, that we might worke the workes of God? supposing that he had spoken of some outward worke required of them. wherfore Iesus answered, saying. Euē this is the worke of God, to beleue and trust in him whō the father hath sent. Lo, here may ye see that worke of God which he requireth of vs, euen to beleue in Christ. Also cōsider agayn what this meate is, which he bad them here prepare and seeke for, saying: worke, take paynes and seeke for that meate &c. and thou shalt see it none other meate then the belief in Christ: wherfore he cōcludeth, that this meate so oft mencioned, is fayth: of the whiche meate (sayth the Prophet) the iust liueth. Fayth in him is therfore the meate whiche Christ prepareth & dresseth so purely: poulderyng and spicyng it with spirituall Allegories in all this Chapter folowyng, to giue vs euerlastyng life through it.

Abacuk. 2.

Then sayd the Iewes vnto hym. what token doest thou whereby we might know that we should beleue in thee? Do some what that we might beleue in thee? what thyng worketh thou that we might know thee to be God? Thou knowest well inough that our fathers did eate bread or Mana in the deserte, as it is written, hee gaue them bread from aboue. Iesus answered. Verely verely I say vnto you: Moses gaue ye not that bread from heauē: for though it fell downe from the ayre: yet was it not heauenly foode for it dyd but fede the belly: but this bread of God that is descended from heauen (whom my father giueth) refresheth the soule so aboundauntly, that it geueth life vnto the world. when the Iewes vnderstode not this saying, whiche was nought elles then the declaryng of the Gospell (for by the eatyng of this bread hee meant that belefe of this his Gospell) they sayd. Syr, giue vs this bread euermore. Iesus sayd vnto thē. I am the bread of life, and who so commeth to me, shall not hunger: & who so beleueth in me shal neuer thyrst. when the Iewes hard Christ say, the bread that descended from heauē should giue lyfe to the world: they desired to haue this bread giuen them for euer. And Iesus perceiuing that they vnderstode not the sence of this Gospel: he expounded vnto them who was this so liuely bread that giueth life to all the world, saying. I am the bread of life, and who so commeth to me, that is to say, who so is grafted and ioyned to me by faith, shall neuer hunger, that is, who so beleueth in me is satisfied. It is fayth therefore that stancheth this hunger and thyrst of the soule. Fayth it is therfore in Christ that filleth our hungry hartes, so that we cā desire none other, if we once eate & drinke him by fayth, that is to say, if we beleue his flesh and body to haue bene broken & his blond shed for our sinnes. For then are our soules satisfied and we be iustified.

The Iewes desire a signe or token whereby they might beleue that he was Christ.

Psal. 7.

Christ required of the Iewes to haue fayth and trust in hym.

Christ explaneth & sheweth him selfe to the Iewes.

Fayth onely apprehēdeth Christ and all hys benefites.

Ouer this, it foloweth: But I haue told you this, because ye looke vppon me, and beleue me not, that is, ye be offended that I sayd, he that commeth to me shall neither hunger nor thyrst, seyng that your selues beyng present, be yet both hungry and thyrstie. But this commeth because ye haue sene me with your bodily eyes, and yet see me & beleue not in me: but I speake not of such sight nor commyng, but of the sight of fayth, which who so hath, he shall haue none other desire, he shall not seeke by night to loue an other before whom he would lay his grief. He shal not runne wandering here and there to seke dead stockes and stones: for he is certified by his fayth to whom hee shall cleaue, he is coupled by fayth vnto me his very spouse & liuely foode, the onely treasure of his soule, neuer more to thyrst for any other. This sight of fayth ye haue not, for ye beleue not nor trust in me: wherfore ye vnderstand not how I am the very bread and meate of your soules, that is to say, your faith & hope. And the cause of this your blyndnes is (I will not say ouer hardly to you) that the father hath not drawne you in to the knowledge of me, or els ye had receiued me. For all that the father giueth me, must come vnto me. And as for me, I cast out no mã that commeth to me: For I am not come downe frõ heauen to do my will, whiche ye attribute vnto me as vnto eche any other man, for I am verely a very man: & according to that nature I haue a speciall proper will: but much more obediẽt to my father, then one of you. For your will oft resisteth and repugneth Gods wil, but so doth mine neuer. I am therfore come downe to doe his will that hath sent me. And to do you to witte what his will is. This (I say) is my fathers will ẏ hath sent me. That of all that he hath giuẽ me, I leese none: but must rayse hym vp agayne in the last day: and to be playne. This is the will of him that sent me. That who so seeth (that is to know) the sonne and beleueth in him, he shall haue lyfe euerlastyng: and I shall styrre hym vp in ẏ last day. Here may ye see what meate he speaketh of. God sent his sonne into this world, that we might liue thorough him. who liueth by him? They that eate his flesh & drinke his bloud. who eate his flesh & drinke his bloud? They that beleue his body crucified & his bloud shed for their sinnes: these cleaue vnto his gracious fauour. But how could they cleaue thus vnto him except they knew him? And therfore he added saying. Euery man that seeth the sonne, that is to say, vnderstandeth wherfore the sonne was sent into this world and beleueth in him shall haue euerlastyng lyfe.

Here it appeared to the carnall Iewes that Christ had taken to much vpon him selfe, to say: I am the bread of lyfe, which am come downe frõ heauen to giue life to the world wherfore the flesh, that is to say the Iewes now murmured, and not marueiled (as M. More sheweth his owne dreame to an other text folowyng whiche I shall touch anone) they murmured at this saying of Christ. I am the bread which am come from heauen, saying, Is not this Iesus Iosephes sonne whose father & mother we know well inough? How then sayth he, I am come from heauen? Iesus answered saying, Murmour not among your selues: Heard ye not what I told you euen now? All that my father giueth me, come to me: your vnbeleefe (wherof foloweth this false vnderstanding of my wordes spiritually spoken) compelleth me to tell you one thyng more thẽ once or twise. This therfore it is: No mã may come to me the onely earnest peny & pledge of your saluatiõ, vnlesse my father that sent me draw him: and whõ he draweth vnto me, that is, ioyneth vnto me by fayth, him shall I styrre vp in the last day. I wonder that ye take my wordes so straungely, beleuyng them to be some hard riddels, or darke parables, when I say nothyng els, thẽ that is written in your owne Prophetes, both in Esay, and Ieremy, saying, that all shall be taught of the Lord. Sith eũ your Prophetes testifie this knowledge to be giuẽ you of my father: what can be spokẽ more playnly then to say: what my father giueth me, that commeth to me? or this, no man may come to me, except my father draw him. And yet haue it more manifestly. who so hath heard my father, and is learned of him, he commeth to me as vnto the very onely anker of his saluation. Not that any man hath sene the father, lest peraduenture ye mistake these wordes to heare, and to learne, as though they perteined to the outward seuses, and not rather to the mynde and inward illuminyng of the soule. For no man euer saw the father, although he worke secretly vpon his hart, so that what so euer hee willeth, we must heare and learne. No man (I say) seeth him, but he that is sent of God, as I sayd before

Had M. More vnderstand this point, he should neuer haue thus blasphemed Christ & his sufficiēt Scriptures, neither haue so belyed his Euāgelistes & holy Apostles, as to say, they wrote not all thinges necessary for our saluation, but left out things of necessitie to be beleued, makyng Gods holy testamēt insufficient & vnperfite. More is a mocker.

But turne we to Iohn agayne & let More mocke still & lye to. I am ẏ bread of life saith Christ. And no mā denyeth ẏ our fathers & elders did eate Manna in the desert, & yet are they dead. But he that eateth of this bread: that is to say, beleueth in me, he hath life euerlastyng. For it is I that am this liuely bread, which am come from heauen, of whom who so eate by faith, shal neuer dye. Here therfore it is to be noted diligently ẏ Christ meaneth, as euery mā may see, by ẏ eating of this bread none other thyng then the belefe in him selfe, offred vp for our sinnes: whiche faith onely iustifieth vs, whiche sentence to declare more playnly, & that he would haue it noted more diligently, he repeteth it yet agayn, saying: It is I ẏ am the liuely bread which am come down frō heauē: who so eateth of this bread, shall liue euerlastingly. And to put you cleare out of doubt, I shall shew you in few wordes, what this matter is, & by what wayes I must be the Sauiour & redemer of the world, to giue it this life so oft rehearsed: & therfore now take good heede. This bread which I speake of so much & shall giue it you: it is myne owne flesh: which I must lay forth & pay for the life of ẏ world. Here is is now manifest, that he should suffer death in his own flesh for our redēptiō to gene vs this life euerlastyng. Thus now may ye see how Christes flesshe, which he called bread, is the spirituall foode & meate of our soules. whē our soules by fayth see God the father not to haue spared his onely so deare beloued sonne, but to haue deliuered him to suffer that ignominious & so paynefull death, to restore vs to lyfe: thē haue we eaten his flesh, and dronken his bloud, assured firmely of the fauour of God; satisfied & certified of our saluation.

Christes flesh is the spirituall foode of our soules.

After this communication, that he sayd. The bread whiche I shall gene you is my flesh, whiche I shall pay for the lyfe of the world: yet were the carnall Iewes neuer the wiser. For their vnbelief and sturdy hatred, would not suffer the very spirituall sence & mynde of Christes wordes to enter into theyr hartes. They could not see that Christes flesh broken and crucified, and not bodely eaten, should be our saluation, and this spiritual meate: as our soules to bee fed and certified of the mercy of God, and forgiuenes of our sinnes tho rough his passion: and not for any eatyng of his flesshe with our teeth. The more ignorant therfore & fleshly they were, the more fierce were they full of indignatiō, struyng one agaynst an other, saying. How may this felow gene vs his flesh to eate it? They stoke fast yet in his flesshe before their eyes: those fleshly Iewes. wherfore no marueil though they abhorred the bodely eatyng thereof: although our fleshly Papistes (beyng of the Iewes carnall opinion) yet abhorre it not, neither ceasse they dayly to crucifie and offer him vp agayne, which was once for euer and all offred as Paule testifieth. And euen here, sith Christ came to teache, to take away all doubt, and to breake strife, he might (his wordes otherwise declared, then he hath & will here after expounde them) haue solued their question: saying, if he had ment as More meaneth, that he would haue bene conuayed and conuerted (as our iugglers sleighly can conuaye him with a few woordes) into a singyng loafe: or els (as the Thomisticall Papistes say) bene inuisible with all his dimensioned body vnder the fourme of bread transubstantiated into it. And after a like Thomisticall mystery, the wyne transubstantiated to, into hys bloud so that they should eate his flesh and drinke his bloud after their owne carnall vnderstanding, but yet in an other forme, to put away all grudge of stomacke. Or lith S. Iohn (if he had vnderstode his maisters minde, and tooke vpon hym to write his wordes) would leaue this Sermon vnto the world to be read: he might now haue deliuered vs and them frō this doubt. But Christ would not so satisfie theyr question: but answered. Verely verely I say vnto you: except ye eate the flesshe of the sonne of man and drinke his bloud, ye shall not haue that life in your selues. He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my bloud, hath lyfe euerlasting: and I shall ryse him vp in the last day: for my flesh is very meate and my bloud the very drinke. He saith not here that bread shalbe transubstanciated or conuerted into his body, nor yet the wyne into his bloud. But now cōferre this saying to his purpose at the begynnyng: where he bad them worke for that meate that should neuer perish telling them, that to beleue in hym whom God hath sent, was the worke of God. And who so beleueth in hym should neuer thyrst nor hunger, but haue lyfe euerlastyng. Conferre also this that foloweth and thou shalt see it playne, that his wordes be vnderstand spiritually of the belefe in his flesh crucified, and his bloud shed, for which belefe we bee promised euerlastyng lyfe: hym selfe, saying, Who so beleueth in me hath life euerlastyng. Here therfore their questiō (how may this man giue vs his flesh to eate it) is soluted: euen when he gaue his body to be broken, & his bloud to be shed. And we eate and drinke it in deede, whē we beleue stedfastly that hee dyed for the remission of our sinnes: Austen and Tertullian to witnesse.

Christ in saying ✝ hys flesh is very meate doth not say that bread shalbe transubstantiated into hys flesh.

Christes wordes are spirituall & not carnall.

But here maketh More his argument agaynst the young man. Because the Iewes maruelled at this saying: My flesh is very meate, and my bloud drinke. And not at this: I am the doore, and the very vyne: therefore this text (sayth he) My flesh is &c. must be vnderstand after the litterall sence, that is to witte: euē as the carnall Iewes vnderstode it, murmuring at it, beyng offended, goyng their wayes frō Christ, for their so carnall vnderstandyng therof. And the other textes. I am the doore. &c. must be vnderstand in an Allegory and spirituall sence, because his hearers maruelled nothyng at the maner of the speach. Loe Christen Reader, here hast thou not a tast: but a great tunne full of Mores mischief and pernicious peruertyng of Gods holy worde: and as thou seist him here falsely & pestilently destroy the pure sence of Gods worde, so doth hee in all other places of hys bookes. First where he sayth they marueiled at this Christes saying. My flesh is very meate. &c. that is not so, neither is there any such worde in the text, except More will expounde Murmurabant, id est, mirabantur, they murmured, that is to say, they marueiled, as he expoūdeth. Oportet, id est, expedit & conuenit. He must dye, or it behoueth him to dye, that is to say, it was expedient and of good cōgruence that he should dye. &c. Thus this Poete may make a man to signifie an Asse, & blacke white to blere the simple eyes. But yet for his Lordly pleasure, let vs graunt him that, they murmured, is as much to say, as they merueyled: because perchaunce the one may folow at the other. And then do I aske him: whether Christes Disciples and his Apostles heard him not, & vnderstode him not when he sayd. I am the doore and the vyne: and when hee sayd. My flesh. &c. If he say no, or nay: the Scripture is playne agaynst him. If he say yea, or yes: then yet doe I aske hym whether his Disciples and Apostles thus hearyng and vnderstandyng hys woordes in all these three Chapters wondered and merueyled (as More sayth) or murmured (as hath the text) at their maisters speech: what thinke ye, More must answere here: Here may ye see whether this old holy vpholder of the Popes Churche is brought: euen to be taken in his owne trappe. For the Disciples and his Apostles neither murmured, nor merueyled, nor yet were offended vp this their maister Christes wordes and maner of speech: for they were well acquainted with such phrases: and answered their maister Christ when he asked thē, will ye also go hence fro me: Lord sayd they to whom shall we goe? thou hast the wordes of euerlastyng lyfe: and we beleue that thou art Christ the sonne of the liuyng God. Lo M. More, they neither merueiled, nor murmured. And why? For because as ye say they vnderstode it in an Allegory sence, and perceiued well that hee meant not of hys materiall body to bee eaten with their teeth, but he meant it of him selfe to be beleued, to be very God and very man hauing flesh and bloud as they had, and yet was he the sonne of the liuyng God. This belefe gathered they of all hys spirituall sayinges as hym selfe

And this is the lyfe wherewith the righteous lyue, euen by fayth. Abacuk. 2.

The ſecond argument of More.

AFter this text thus wiſely proued to be vnderſtand in the litterall ſence, with carnall Iewes, and not in the Allegorike or ſpirituall ſenſe with Chriſt & his Apoſtles: the whole ſumme of Mores confutation of the young mā ſtandeth vpon this Argument. A poſſe ad eſſe. That is to witte, God may do it, Ergo, it is done Chriſt may make his body in many, or in all places at once, Ergo, it is in many or in all places at once. which maner of argumentation, how falſe and naught it is euery ſophiſter, and euery man that hath witte perceiueth. A like argument. God may ſhew More the truth and call him to repentaunce, as he did Paul for perſecutyng his Church: Ergo, More is conuerted to God. Or, God may let him run of an indurate hart with Pharao, and at laſt take an open and ſoden vengeaunce vppon him for perſecutyng hys worde, and burnyng his poore members: Ergo, it is done already. M. More muſt firſte proue it vs by expreſſe wordes of holy Scripture, and not by hys owne vnwritten dreames, that Chriſtes body is in many places, or in all places at once: and then though our reaſon can not reach it, yet our fayth meaſured and directed with the worde of fayth will both reach it, receiue it, and hold it faſt to: not becauſe it is poſſible to God, and impoſſible to reaſon: but becauſe the written woorde of our fayth ſayth it. But whē we read Gods wordes in mo then xx. places contrary, that his body ſhould be here. More muſt giue vs leue to beleue his vnwritten vanities (veritīes I ſhould ſay) at layſure. Here mayſt thou ſee Chriſten reader wherefore More would ſo fayne make thee beleue, that the Apoſtles left out certeine thynges vnwritten, of neceſſitie to be beleued, cuē to ſtabliſh the Popes kyngdome, which ſtandeth of Mores vnwritten vanities. As of the preſence of Chriſtes body and makyng therof in the bread. Of Purgatory, of inuocation of Saintes, worſhyppyng of ſtones and ſtockes, pilgrimages, hallowyng of bowes and belles, and crepyng to the croſſe &c. If ye will beleue what ſo euer More can fayne without the Scripture: then cā this Poete faine you an other Church thē Chriſtes, and that ye muſt beleue it what ſo euer it teacheth you, for he hath fained to that, it cā not erre, though ye ſee it erre and fight agaynſt it ſelfe a thouſand tymes. Yea if it tell you blacke is white, good is bad, and the deuill is God: yet muſt ye beleue it, or els be burned as heretikes. But let vs returne to our purpoſe.

The confutation of his 9. argument.

Chriſt in that he is God may doe all things that he will, but yet he will not falſefye hys holy Scripture.

More is a great ſetter forth of vnwritten veritīes.

To diſpute of Gods almighty abſolute power, what God may do with his body, it is great folie and no leſſe preſumption to More, ſith the Pope whiche is no whole God but halfe a God by their owne decrees hath decreed, no man to diſpute of his power. But Chriſten Reader be thou content to know that Gods will, his word, and his power be all one and repugne not. And neither willeth he, nor may not do any thing includyng repugnaunce, imperfection, or that ſhould derogate, miniſh or hurt his glory & his name. The glory of his Godhead is to bee preſent and to fill all places at once eſſencially preſently with his almightie power, which glory is denyed to any other creature, him ſelfe ſaying by his Prophet: I will not giue my glory to any other creature: now therfore ſyth his mānhead is a creature, it cā not haue this glory onely whiche is appropried to the Godhead. To attribute to his manhode that propertie whiche onely is appropried to hys Godhead is to confounde both the natures of Chriſt. What thing ſo euer, is euery where after the ſayd maner, that muſt nedes be infinite, without begynnyng and end, it muſt be one alone, and almightie: whiche properties onely are appropried vnto the glorious maieſtie of the Godhead. Wherefore Chriſtes body may not be in all or in many places at once. Chriſt him ſelfe ſaying as concerning his manhode. He is leſſe then the father, but as touchyng his Godhead, the father & I be both one thyng. And Paule rectyng the Pſalme affirmeth: Chriſt as concernyng his manhode to be leſſe then God: or leſſe then aungels as ſome text hath it? Here it is playne that all thinges that More imagineth & fayneth are not poſſible to God, for it is not possible for God to make a creature equall vnto him selfe, for it includeth repugnaūce & derogateth his glory. God promised & swore that all nations should be blessed in the death of that promised seede which was Christ. God had determined and decreed it before the worlde was made: Ergo, Christ must needes haue dyed, and not to expoūde this worde Oportet, as More mynseth it. For it was so necessary that the contrary was impossible, except More would make God a lyer, which is impossible. Paule concludeth that Christ must nedes haue dyed, vsyng this Latine terme Necesse. Saying: where so euer is a Testamēt, there must the death of the Testament maker go betwene: or els the Testament is not ratified & sure, but righteousnes and remission of sinnes in Christes bloud is his new Testament, whereof he is mediatour: Ergo, the Testament maker must nedes haue died. Wrest not therfore (M. More) this worde Oportet (though ye finde Potest for Oportet in some corrupt copy) vnto your vnlauery sence. But let Oportet signifie, he must or it behoueth hym to dye. For he tooke our very mortall nature for ỳ same decreed coūcel: himselfe saying. Oportet exaltari filium hominis. &c. It behoueth, that the sonne of mā must dye, that euery one that beleueth in him perish not &c. Here may ye see also ỳ it is impossible for God to breake his promise. It is impossible to God which is that veritie, to be found contrary in his deedes and wordes: as to saue them whom he hath damned, or to damne them whom hee hath saued, wherefore all thynges imagined of M. Mores brayne are not possible to God.

Hebr. 9.

Christes must nedes dye, for God had so promised before.

Iohn. 2. and 12.

God may not be found a lyer.

And when More sayth, that Christ had power to let his lyfe and to take it agayne, & therfore not to haue dyed of necessitie: I wōder me, that his scholemaister here fayled him, so cunnyng as he maketh him selfe therin: which graūteth and affirmeth (as true it is) that with the necessary decreed woorkes of Gods forsight and prouidence stādeth right wel his free libertie. But M. More sayth at last, if God would tell me that hee would make eth of both their bodyes two (meanyng the young mans body and his) to be in fiften places at once, I would beleue him, that he wer able to make his wordes true in the bodies of both twayne, and neuer would I so much as aske hym whether hee would glorifie them both first or not: but I am sure glorified or vnglorified, if he sayd it, he is able to do it. Lo here may ye see what a feruēt fayth this old man hath, and what an earnest mynde to beleue Christes woordes if hee had told him: but I pray you M. More, what and if Christ neuer told it you, nor said it, nor neuer would: would ye not be as hasty not to beleue it? If he told it you: I praye you tell vs where you spake with hym, and who was by to beare ye recorde: and if you bryng as false a shrew as your selfe to testify this thyng: yet by your own doctrine, must ye make vs a miracle to confirme your tale, ere we be bound to beleue you: or yet to admit this your argument, God may make his body in many places at once, Ergo, it is so. Syr ye be to busie with Gods almighty power, and haue taken to great a burden vppon your weake shoulders, ye haue ouerladen your selfe with your own harnesse and weapons: and young Dauid is likely to preuayle agaynst you with his sling and stone. God hath infatuated your high subtill wisedome. Your crafty conueyaunce is spyed. God hath sent your Church a mete couer for such a cup, and such a defender as ye take vppon your selfe to be, that shall let all theyr whole cause fall flatte in the myer vnto both your shames and vtter cōfusion. God therfore be praysed euer. Amen.

Wordes of More would haue beleued Christ if he had talked with hym, what soeuer hee had said to him.

Gods almightye power is not to be to busely dealt withall.

More doth but scoffe out the matter.

Then sayth M. More, though it semeth repugnaunt both to him & to me, one body to bee in two places at once: yet God seeth how to make them stand together well inough. This man with his old eyen & spectacles seeth farre in Gods sight, and is of his priuey Councel: that knoweth belike by some secret reuelation how God seeth one body to be in many places at once, includyng no repugnaunce. For worde hath hee none for him in all Scripture no more thē one body to be in al places at once. It implyeth first repugnaunce to my sight and reason, that all this worlde should be made of nothyng: and that a virgin should bryng forth a child. But yet, when I see it written with the wordes of my saith, which God spake: and brought it so to passe: thē implyeth it no repugnaunce to me at all. For my fayth reacheth it and receiueth it stedfastly. For I know ỳ voyce of my herdman: whiche if he sayd in any place of Scripture that his body should haue ben cōtained vnder the forme of bread & so many places at once here, in earth, and also abidyng yet still in heauen to. Verely I would haue beleued him, as soone and as firmely as M. More. And therfore euen yet, if he can shew vs but one sentence truly taken for his part, as we cā do many for the contrary, we must giue place. For, as for his vnwritē verities, & the authority of his Antichristes sinagoge, vnto which (ỹ scripture forsaken) yee is now at last with shame inough cōpelled to flee: they be proued starke lyes and very deuelry.

Then sayth hee, that ye wot well that many good folke haue vsed in this matter many good fruitfull examples of Gods other workes: not onely miracles, writtē in Scripture. Vnde versus? (where one I pray ye?) but also done by the commō course of nature here in earth. If they be done by the common course of nature, so be they no miracles. And some thynges made also by mans hand. As one face beholded in diuers glasses: and euery peece of one glasse broken into twenty. &c. Lorde how this pontificall Poete playeth his part. Bicause (as he saith) we see many faces in many glasses: therefore may one body be in many places, as though euery shadow and similitude representing the body, were a bodely substance. But I aske More, when hee seeth hys owne face in so many glasses, whether all those faces that appeare in the glasses be his owne very faces hauing bodely substaunce, skynne, flesh & bone, as hath that face, which hath his very mouth nose eyen &c. wherewith he faceth vs out the truth thus falsely with lyes? And if they be all his very faces, then in very deede there is one body in many places, and he him selfe beareth as many faces in one hode. But accordyng to his purpose, euē as they be no very faces, nor those so many voyces, sownes and similitudes, multiplied in the ayre, betwene the glasses or other obiect & the body (as the Philosopher proueth by naturall reason) be no very bodyes: no more is it Christes very body: as they would make thee beleue in the bread, in so many places at once. But the bread broken and eaten in the Supper monisheth and putteth vs in remembraunce of his death, and so exciteth vs to thankes giuyng to laude and prayse: for the benefite of our redemption, and thus wee there haue Christ present in the inward eye and sight of our fayth. We eate his body and drinke hys bloud, that is, we beleue surely that hys bodye was crucified for our sinnes and hys bloud shed for our saluation.

More tractieth in his Poetrie.

Mores similitude of faces in the glasse proueth no faces in substaunce.

By fayth we must eate and drinke Christes body and bloud spiritually.

At last note (Christen reader) that M. More in the third booke of his confutation of Tyndall the. CCxlix side, to proue S. Johns Gospell vnperfit and insufficient (for leaning out of so necessary a point of our faith, as he calleth the last Supper of Christ his Maūdy) sayth, that John speake nothyng at all of this Sacramēt. And now see againe in these his letters agaynst Frith, how him selfe bringeth in John the vj. chap. to impugne Frithes writyng, and to make all for the Sacrament, euē thus. My flesh is verely meate, & my bloud drinke. Belike the man had there ouer shotte hym selfe foule: the young man here causing him to put on his spectacles and poore better and more wisely with his old eyen vpō S. Johns Gospel to finde that thing there now written, which before he would haue made one of his vnwritten verities. As yet if he looke narowly hee shall espy that him self hath proued vs by Scripture, in the xxxvij. leafe of his Dialogue of quoth he and quoth I, our Ladies perpetuall virginitie expoundyng non cognosco, id est, non cognoscam, whiche now writen vnwritten veritie hee numbereth a litle before among his vnwrittē vanities. Thus may ye see how this old holy vpholder of the popes church, hys woordes fight agaynst him selfe into his own confusion, in findyng vs forth his vnwritten written vanities, verities I should say. But returne we vnto the exposition of S. John.

More writeth against hym selfe.

More an vpholder of vnwritten verities.

When the Jewes would not vnderstand the spirituall saying of the eating of Christes flesh and drinkyng of hys bloud, so oft and so playnely declared: he gaue them a strong stripe and made them more blynd, for they so deserued it (such are the secrete iudgementes of God) addyng vnto all hys sayinges thus, who so eateth my flesh and drinketh my bloud: abideth in me and I in him. These woordes were spoken vnto these vnbeleuers into their farther obstinatiō, but vnto the faithfull for theyr better instruction. Now gather of this the contrary, & say, who so eateth not my flesh and drinketh not my bloud: abydeth not in me, nor I in him, and ioyne this to the forsayd sentence. Except ye eate the flesh of the sonne of mā, & drinke hys bloud, ye haue no lyfe in you, let it neuer fal frō thy minde (Christen reader) that faith is the lyfe of the righteous, and that Christ is this lyuyng bread whom thou eatest, that is to say, in whō thou beleuest. For if our Papistes take eatyng & drinkyng here bodely, as to eate the naturall body of Christ vnder the forme of bread, and to drinke hys bloud vnder the forme of wyne: thē must all young children that neuer came to Gods borde departed, & all laye men that neuer drancke hys bloud be damned. By loue we abyde in God and hee in vs, loue foloweth faith in the order of our vnderstanding and not in order of succession of tyme, if thou lookest vpon the selfe giftes and not on their fruites. So that principally by faith, wherby we cleaue to Gods goodnes and mercy, we abide in God, and God in vs, as declare his wordes folowyng, saying, as the liuyng father sent me, so liue I by my father. And euen so he that eateth me shall lyue bycause of me, or for my sake. My father sent me whose will in all thinges I obey, for I am his sonne. And euen so verely must they that eate me, that is beleue in me, forme and fashion them after my exāple mortifying their flesh chaunging their liuing: or els they eate me in vayne and dissemble their belief. For I am not come to redeme ỳ world onely, but also to chaunge their lyfe. They therefore that beleue in me shall trāsforme their life after my example & doctrine, & not after any mans traditiōs. This is the bread ỳ came frō heanē, as the effect it selfe declareth, whō who so eateth shall lyue euer. But he ỳ eateth bodely bread lyueth not euer, as ye may see of your fathers ỳ eate Māna, & yet are they dead. It is not therfore any materiall bread nor bodely foode that may geue you life eternall.

By faith we eate & drinke Christ, and so he abydeth in vs and we in hym.

Christen religion is faith, and a lyfe correspondēt.

These wordes did not onely offende them that hated Christ, but also some of hys Disciples. They were offended (sayd the text) and not meruey̆led as More trifleth out the truth) which said. This is an hard saying: who may here this? These Disciples yet stoke no lesse in Christes visible flesh, and in the barke of his wordes, then did the other Iewes: and as doth now More, beleuing him to haue had spoken of his naturall body to be eaten with their teth. Which offence Christ seyng, sayd: doth this offend you, what then will ye say, if ye see the sonne of mā ascend thether where he was before: If it offend you to eate my flesh while I am here, it shal much more offend you to eate it when my body shalbe gone out of your sight, ascended into heauen there sittyng on the right hand of my father vntill I come again, as I wēt, that is to iudgement. Here might Christ haue instructed his disciples in the truth of the eatyng of his flesh in forme of bread, had this ben his meaning. For he left them neuer in any perplexitie or doubt: but sought all the wayes by similitudes & familiar exāples to teach them playnly. He neuer spake them so hard a parable, but where he perceiued their feble ignorannce, anone he helpte them and declared it them. Yea and sometymes he preuented their askyng with his owne declaration, & thinke ye that he did not so here? yes verely. For he came to teach vs, and not to leaue vs in any doubt and ignorannce, especially in the chief pointe of our saluation, which stādeth in the belefe in his death for our sinnes. wherefore, to put them out of all doubt as concerning this eatyng of his flesh, and drinkyng of hys bloud, that should giue euerlastyng lyfe: where they tooke it for his very body to be eaten with their teeth: hee sayd. It is the spirite that giueth this lyfe, my flesh profiteth nothyng at all, to be eaten as ye meane so carnally. It is spirituall meate that I heare speake of. It is my spirite that draweth the hartes of men to me by faith and so refresheth them ghostly. Ye be therefore carnall, to thinke that I speake of my flesh to be eaten bodely, for so it profiteth you nothing at all. How long will ye be without vnderstādyng? It is my spirite I tell you that giueth lyfe. My flesh profiteth you nothyng to eate it: but to beleue that it shalbe crucified & suffer for the redemption of the world it profiteth. And when ye thus beleue, then eate ye my flesh and drinke my bloud, that is, ye beleue in me to suffer for your sinnes. The veritie hath spoken these woordes. My flesh profiteth nothyng at all: it can not therefore be false. For both the Iewes and his Disciples murmured and disputed of hys flesh how it should be eaten, and not of the offeryng thereof for our sinnes as Christ ment. This therfore is the sure anker to hold vs by agaynst all the obiections of the Papistes for the eatyng of Christes body (as they say) in forme of bread. Christ sayd: My flesh profiteth nothyng: meaning to eate it bodely. This is the key that soloeth al their argumentes and openeth the way to shewe vs all their false and abhominable blasphemous lyes vppon Christes wordes, and vttereth their sleigh iuggling ourr the bread to mainteine Antichristes kyngdome therewith. And thus

Here Christ doth playnly shew that it is the spirituall eatyng, & not the fleshly eatyng of his body that profiteth.

The Iewes and also the disciples of Christe were offended at his wordes.

The eating of Christes flesh profited nothyng.

thus when Christ had declared it and taught them that it was not the bodely eatyng of his materiall body: but the eatyng with the spirite of fayth: he added saying. The wordes which I here speake vnto you are spirite and lyfe. That is to say, this matter that I here haue spoken of with so many wordes must be spiritually vnderstand, to giue you this life euerlastyng. wherfore the cause why ye vnderstād me not is, that ye beleue not. Here is to the conclusion of all this Sermon. Christ very God and man, had set his flesly before them to be receiued with fayth that it should be broken & suffer for their sinnes, but they could not eate it spiritually, bycause they beleued not in him. wherefore many of his Disciples fell frō him & walked no more with him. And then he sayd to the twelue. will ye go away to? And Symon Peter aunswered: Lord, to whom shal we go? Thou hast the wordes of euerlastyng life, and we beleue and are sure, that thou art Christ the sonne of the liuyng God. Here is it manifest what Peter and his felowes vnderstode by this eatyng and drinkyng of Christ. For they were perfitely taught that it stode all in the belefe in Christ as their aūswere here testifieth. If this matter had stand vpon so deepe a miracle, as our Papistes fayne without any word of God, not comprehended vnder any of their common senses, that they should eate hys body beyng vnder the forme of bread as long, depe, thicke, and as brode as it hanged vpon the crosse, they beyng yet but feble of fayth, not confirmed with the holy ghost, must here nedes haue woundered, stoned and staggerde, & haue bene more inquisitiue in and of so straunge a matter then they were. But they neither doubted nor marueiled nor murmured, nor were any thyng offended with this maner of speech, as were ẏ other that slipt away, but they aunswered firmely. Thou hast the woordes of euerlastyng lyfe: and we beleue. &c. Now to the exposition of the woordes of our Lordes Supper.

The wordes of Christe were spirit and life.

Christes disciples vnderstode Christ to speake spiritually and beleued.

Among the holy Euangelistes, writyng the story of Christes Supper: John bicause the other three had written it at large, did but make a mention thereof in his. xiij. Chapter Mathew, Marke and Luke declaryng it clerely, orderly & with iust number of wordes. with whom Paule agreeth, thus writyng vnto the Corinthians. Our Lord Iesus, ẏ same night he was betrayed: he tooke the bread, and after he had giuen thankes: he brake it, saying: Take ye it, eate it. This is my body, whiche is for you broke. Here is now to be noted the order of this action or act. First Christ tooke the bread in his hādes, secondaryly he gaue thankes, thirdly he brake it: fourthly he taught it them saying, take it, fiftly he bad them eate it. At last after all this hee sayd. This is my body which is for you broken, this thyng do ye into the remembraunce of me. Here ye see, ẏ this bread was first broken deliuered them, and they were cōmaūded to eate it to: ere Christ sayd. This is my body. And for bicause it is to suppose verely, ẏ they tooke it at his hād as he bad them, and dyd eate it to, when they had it in their handes their master (whose wordes they did euer obey) cōmmaūding thē. It must needes folow (if these be the wordes of the cōsecratiō) that they were houseled with vnconsecrated bread, or els now eaten, or at lest wise part of it, ere Christ consecrated it, yea it foloweth that it was out of Christes handes and in theyr mouthes when Christ consecrated it, & so to haue consecrated it whē it was now in his disciples handes or in their mouthes or rather in theyr bellyes.

The order of the acte.

Here it is manifest that Christ consecrated no bread, but deliuered it to his Disciples, and bad them eate it. In somuch that S. Thomas their owne Doctour, that made their transubstantiation cōfesseth that some there were, that sayd that Christ did first consecrate with other woordes, ere he now reachyng the bread to his Disciples sayd. This is my body. &c. And yet calleth he it no heresie so to say. Now sith in all this acte and Supper, there bee no woordes of consecration, but of the deliueryng of the bread broken after thankes giuyng with a commaundement to eate it: bryng vs your wordes of cōsecration, and shewe vs by what woordes God promised you and gaue you power to make his body. There is neither commaundement, nor yet any wordes left in all the Scripture to make or to consecrate Christes body, to bryng it into the bread. But there be the wordes of God left in the first chapter of Genesis, wherby he made all the world: with whiche wordes, all be it we yet haue them: yet is it denyed vs to make that thyng that he made with thē. Now, sith we hauyng his wordes of the creation, can not yet make any new creature of nothyng: how then Christ consecrated no bread, but deliuered it to his Apostles to eate.

There is left vnto vs no wordes of consecration, wherby we should alter and chaūge the nature of bread into his body.

shall we without any wordes of consecration and makyng, make the maker of all thynges?

The vse of the Supper.

Unto this action or supper or deliueraūce of the bread, he added a reason and signification of this signe or Sacrament, and what also is the vse therof: as though any should aske thē therafter: what Sacrament, Religion, or rite is this? They should aunswere euen in a like maner of spech as it was cōmaunded their fathers to make aunswere to their children at the eatyng of the old passeouer, wherof this new passeouer was the veritie, and that the figure, saying. when your children aske you what Religion is this? ye shal aūswere them. It is the sacrifice of the passyng by of the Lord. &c. Lo here the lambe that signified, and did put them in remembraunce of that passing by in Egypt (the Israelites spared, and the Egyptians smitten) was called in like phrase the selfe thyng that it represented, signified, and did put them in remembraunce of: none otherwise then if Christes Disciples, or any man els, seyng in that Supper, the bread taken, thankes giuen, the bread broken, distributed and eaten: should haue asked hym. what Sacrament or religion is this? He had to aunswere them that Christ sayd. This is my body whiche is for you broken. This thyng do ye in remembraunce of me, that is to say, so oft as ye celebrate this Supper, giue thankes to me for your redemptiō. In which aūswere he calleth the outward sensible signe or Sacramēt, that is the bread with all the other action, euen the same thyng that it signifieth, representeth, and putteth such eaters of the Lordes Supper in remembraunce of. For when he sayd, which is broken for you, euery one of them saw that then it was not his body, that was there broken: but the bread for as yet he had not suffered, but the bread broken was deuided in peeces euery one of the twelue takyng and eatyng a peece before hee sayd. This is my body. &c.

Now sith M. More will sticke so fast in his litteral sense vpon these wordes.

Wordes litterall sense is lost.

This is my body. &c. Then do I aske hym, what thyng hee sheweth vs by this first worde and pronoune demonstratiue Hoc, in Englishe (this.) If ye shew vs the bread: so is the bread Christes body, and Christes body the bread, which saying in the litterall sense is an hygh heresie after them. And for this saying they burned the Lord Cobham

Also I aske whether Christ speakyng these wordes. This is my body. &c. had then the bread in his hands wherwith he houseled his Disciples or no? also in this order. The cuppe taken in his handes, after he had giuen thākes, he gaue it them, & they all dranke therof. And he sayd to them. This is my bloud of the new Testament: which is shed for many. Here it is manifest that they had all dronken therof first ere he said the wordes of consecration (if they be the wordes of any cōsecration.) Besides this: if ye be so sworne to the litterall sense in this matter, that ye will not in these woordes of Christ. This is my body. &c. admitte in so playne a speche any trope (for allegory there is none, if ye knew the proper difference of them both, whiche euery Grammarian can teach you) thē do I lay before your old eyen and spectacles to, Christes wordes spoken of the cup both in Luke and Paul saying: this cup is the Luke. 22.

which is shed for you. Here Christ calleth the wyne in the cup the selfe cuppe whiche euery man knoweth is not the wyne. Also hee calleth the cuppe the new Testament, and yet was not the cup nor yet the wyne conteined therin the new Testament, and yet calleth it the new Testament established & confirmed with his bloud here ye see hee called not the cuppe his bloud but the Testament. where is now your litterall sense that ye would so fayne frame for your Papistes pleasure? If ye will so fore sticke to the letter: why do your faction leaue here the plaine letter: saying that the letter slayeth: goyng about the bush with this exposition and circumlocution, expounding. If ye be so addicte to the letter, why fray ye the commō people from the litteral sense with this bugge, tellyng thē the letter slayeth: but there is neither letter nor spirite that may bridle nor hold your stiffe necked heades.

Also ye shall vnderstand that Christ rebuked the Iewes for their litterall sense and carnall vnderstandyng of his spirituall woordes, saying: My flesh profiteth you nothyng at all to eate it. &c. And their litteral takyng of his spirituall woordes was the cause of their murmure. &c. For euen there (as also lyke in other places) to eate Christes flesh. &c. after the common phrase of the Scripture, is not els, thē to beleue that Christ suffered death, & shed his bloud for vs. Read ye Paul. Our fathers did all eate the same spirituall meate and drinke the same spirituall drinke that we now eate & drinke: Here I thinke M. More must leaue his litterall sence & materiall meate, or els deny Paul, and deny to that our fathers did eate Christ and drinke his bloud, whiche all here Paule sayth, for to eate and to drinke this spirituall meate and drinke, was as him selfe declareth to eate & drinke Christ. They dranke of the stone (sayth Paule) that went with them. whiche stone was Christe. And we eate and drinke the very same stone. whiche is nothyng els, then to beleue in Christ. They beleued in Christ to come, & we beleue in him comē, and to haue suffered, where is now thinke ye M. Mores litterall sense for the eatyng of Christes material body? Our fathers were one, and the same Church with vs, vnder the same Testament and promise, and euen of the same fayth in Christ. And euen as they eate him and dranke his bloud euen the same spirituall meate & drinke that we do eate and drinke: so do we now in the same faith. For what elles was signified by this maner of speech, our fathers did eate and drinke Christ, then that they beleued in Christ to bee incarnated and to suffer death? what els meant the poore woman of Canane by eating, then to beleue? whē she aunswered Christ, saying. Ye say soth my Lorde. But yet doe the little whelpes eate of the crummes that fall from their maisters table. This dyd she aunswere in an allegory according to Christes first aunswere vnto her, she meanyng by ỹ eatyng of the crummes, the belief of his woordes and Gospell to be scattered among the Gentils as Christ aunswerying, confirmed her meanyng, saying: O woman great is thy fayth. He sayd not, thou art a great eater and deuourer of bread. Here it is playne that to eate in the Scripture is taken to beleue: as Christ him selfe expounded it, so oft, and so plentuously. And I am here compelled to inculke & iterate it with so many woordes, to satisfie (if it were possible) this carnall fleshly vowerer and fleshly Iew.

In allegoricall speech vsed allowed and vsed of Christ.

Iohn. 6.

Now to examine and to discusse this matter more depely & playnly. I shall compare the old passeouer, with the new and supper of the Lord. And to shew you how the figures correspond their verities: I will begyn my comparison at Baptisme comparyng it with the Lordes Supper, which be the two Sacramentes left vs now vnder the grace of the Gospell. And afterward (to set foorth both these Sacramentes playnly) I wil compare Circumcision with Baptisme: & the passe lambe with Christes Supper.

The olde passeouer compared with the Supper of our Lord.

Baptisme compared with Circumcision.

We (by Baptisme) as we testified vnto the congregation our entryng into the body of Christ (take here Christes body, as doth Paule for his congregation) to dye, to be buried, and to ryse with him, to mortifie our flesh, and to be renued in spirite, to cast of the old man, and to do vpon vs the new: euen so, by the thankes giuyng (for so did the old Greke doctours cal this Supper) at Gods bourde, or at the Lordes Supper (for so doth Paule call it) we testifie the vnitie and communion of our hartes, glued vnto the whole body of Christ in loue: yea and that such loue as Christ at this his last Supper expressed: what tyme he sayd, his body should be broken, and his bloud shed for the remission of our sinnes. And to be short. As Baptisme is the badge of our fayth, so is the Lordes Supper the token of our loue to God & our neighbours: where vppon standeth the law and the Prophetes. For the end of the precept, is loue out of a pure hart, and good conscience and fayth vnfayned. So that by baptisme we be initiated & cōsigned vnto the worship of one God in one fayth: And by the same faith and loue at the Lordes Supper, we shew our selues to cōtinue in our possession, to bee incorporated and to be the very members of Christes body.

Both these Sacramentes were figured in Moyses law. Baptisme was figured by Circumcision: & the Lordes Supper, by the eatyng of the passe lambe. where lyke as by Circumciliō, the people of Israell were reckened to be Gods people, seuerall from the Gētiles, so be we now by Baptisme reckened to bee consigned vnto Christes Church seuerall frō Iewes, paynyms &c. And as their passeouer, that is to say, their solēne feast yearely in eatyng their passelambe, was an outward token of their perseueraunce in their religion, ligion, and in remembraunce of their passage out of Egypt into the lande of Chanaan: so is now the eatyng of the Lordes Supper (whiche Christ and Paule called our passeouer) a token of our perseueraunce in our Christen profession at Baptisme: and also thankes giuyng with that ioyfull remẽbraunce of our redemption frõ sinne, death, and hell by Christes death. Of the figure of this Supper: our new passeouer: thus it is written. After ye be entred into that land, whiche the Lord God shall giue you accordyng to his promise: ye shall kepe this ceremonie. And when your children aske you what Religion is this? ye shall answere them. It is the sacrifice of the passyng ouer of the Lord, when the Lord passed foorth by the houses of the children of Israell in Egypt, smityng the Egyptiãs and deliuering our houses. This eatyng therfore of the passe lambe was the figure of the Lordes Supper, whiche figure when the houre was come ẏ he would it to ceasse and giue place vnto the veritie, as the shadow to vanish away at the presence of the body: He sayd thus, with a feruent desire do I long to eate this passeouer with you ere I suffer.

Baptisme was figured by Circumcision, and the Lordes Supper by the paschall lambe.

Luke.22.

Agayne, let vs compare the figure with the truth, the old passeouer with the new, and diligẽtly consider the propertie of speakyng, in and of either of thẽ. Let vs expende the succession, imitation, and tyme, how the new succeeding the old mediatour Christ betwen both sitting at the Supper celebrating both with his presence: did put out the old and bryng in the new. For there is in either of them such like composition of wordes, such affinitie and proporciõ of speech, such similitude and propertie in them both, the new so correspõdyng in all thynges to the old, that the old declareth the new, what is it, wherfore it was instituted, and what is the very vse therof. And to begyn at Circumcision the figure of Baptisme, ye shall vnderstand, that in such rites and Sacramẽtes there are two thinges to be considered, that is to wit. The thyng, and the signe and of thyng. The thynge is it wherfore the signe is instituted to signifie it: as in Circumcision, the thyng is the couenaunt to be of the people of God, and the signe is, the cuttyng of the foreskinne of the preuy mẽber. In the passeouer, the thing was, the remẽbraunce with thankes giuyng for the deliueraunce out of the hard seruitude of Egypt: but the signe was, the lambe rosted with such ceremonies as were there prescribed them. So in baptisme: The thyng is, the promise to be of the Church of Christ: the signe is, the dippyng into the water with the holy wordes. In our Lordes Supper, the very thing is Christ promised and crucified, and of faith with thankes giuing vnto the father for his sonne giuen to suffer for vs. But the signe is, the dealyng and distributing or teaching forth of the bread and wyne, with the holy wordes of our Lord spoken at his supper, after he had thus dealt the bread & wyne, vnto his Disciples.

The Paschall lambe eaten and the Sacrament instituted.

Two thynges to be considered in the Sacramentes.

The matter and substaunce of of the Sacramẽt and the signes of the same

And here is it diligently to be noted: That in all such rites, ceremonies, or Sacramentes of God thus instituted: these two thinges (that is to witte the thyng signified, and the signe that signifieth) be concurraunt and inseparable. It is the common vse and propertie of speth in the Scripture, to call the signe, the thyng. As is Circumcision called the couenaunt. Euery manchild must be circumcised that my couenaunt might be in your flesh for a perpetuall bande. And yet was it onely but the outward signe & seale of the couenaũt, that the sede of Abraham should be his especial chosen people, & that he would be their God. The lambe, that was but the signe, was called the passeouer: and yet was not the lambe the passyng ouer, but the signe onely excityng and monishing them to remember that deliueraũce by the aungell passing by the Israelites in Egypt, smityng the Egyptians. And sith this trope or maner of speech thẽ Scripture did vse with so great grace in the old rites and ceremonies that figured our Sacramẽtes: why may it not with like grace, for that analogie and proper congruence of the figures with their verities, vse the same phrase and maner of speech in their verities? If the Scripture called the signe the thyng in Circumcision & the passeouer: why should we be offended with the same speech in our Baptisme & in the Lordes Supper? Sith such maner of speech haue no lesse grace and fulnes here then there to bryng the thyng signified into our hartes by such outward sensible signes. For when that signe of Circumcision was giuen the child: thẽ were they certified (as an outward token may certifie) that the child was of the people of Israell. And therfore did the signes thẽ, as they do now beare the names of thyngs which they signified as the lambe eaten in the passe

The signe is called the thyng.

Exod. 12.

The scripture calleth the signe by the name of the thing that it signifieth.

ouer was called the sacrifice & the selfe passeouer, none otherwise then in our new passeouer, that is the Lordes supper, the bread broke &c. is called the body of Christ, & the wyne poured forth and distributed to eche mā, the bloud of Christ because the bread so broken and dealt signifieth vnto the receiuers and putteth them in remembraunce of the sacrifice of his body on the aulter of the crosse, and of his bloud poured foorth for our redemption. So that this maner of speech in the administration and vse of the Supper of our Lord: to say. This is my body, & this is my bloud: is almuch to say as, this signifieth my body, this signifieth my blond. which Supper is here celebrated to put vs in remēbraunce of Christes death, and to excite vs to thankes giuyng.

The bread in the Sacramēt called the body of Christ & the wyne called the bloud of Christ.

Neither let it offend thee (O Christen reader) That est, is taken for significat: that is to say. This is that, is as much to say, as this signifieth that. For this is a commō maner of speech in many places of Scripture, and also in our mother toūg: as whē we see many pictures or images, which ye know well are but signes to represent the bodyes whom they be made lyke, yet we say of the Image of our Lady. This is our Lord, and of S. Katherine, this is S. Katherine, & yet do they but represent and signify vs, our Lady or S. Katherine. And as it is writtē. The iij. braūches are three dayes. The thre baskets are three dayes, which was not els but they signified three dayes. Also in the xxviij. chapter. Jacob sayd. This stone whiche I haue set vp an ende, shalbe Gods house, which stone yet was neuer Gods house nor neuer shalbe: but onely did signifie gods house to be buil ded in that same place. Agayne Pharao dreamed to haue sene vij. faire fat Oxē, & eftsoones vij. poore lene Oxē, which Joseph expoundyng sayd: The vij. fat Oxē are vij. plētnous yeares, in which phrase or maner of speech euery mā sith that the Oxē were no yeares: but they signified such yeares. Marueil not ther fore though est, likewise in this sentēce: Hoc est corpus meum, be taken for significat, as much to say, as this signifieth my body. And yet for because the Scriptures conferred together expounde them selfe as sayth S. Austen: And Peter. That we haue before a firme and sure prophetical speech vnto which if we attend as vnto a light set vp in a darke place, we do well: I shall shew you a like phrase in Ezechiell where the destruction of Jerusalem was thus figured. God commaundyng Ezechiell to take a sword as sharpe as a raser, and shaue of his head and beard, and then take a certain waight of the heares deuided into three partes: The one, he should burne in the middes of the Citie. An other he should cut roūd about, and cast the third vp into the wynde. &c. which done he layd: Thus sayth the Lord God. This is Jerusalem. which act and dede so done, was not Jerusalem. But it signified and preached vnto the beholders of it, Jerusalem to be destroyed: none otherwise thē the breakyng and distributing of the bread and wyne called Christes body and bloud signifieth and preacheth vs the death of Christ, the figure and signe bearyng the name of the thyng signified, as in the Prophetes speech, saying: This is Jerusalem: which dyd but signifie Jerusalem. when Christ dyd breath into his Disciples, saying: Take ye the holy ghost: the same breath was not the holy ghost, but signified and represented them the holy ghost, with a thousand lyke maner of speech in the Scripture.

Est, is take for significat.

In the old passeouer thankes were giuen for the slaughter of the first begotten, wherein the kynges posteritie of Egypt fell away. (The Hebrues spared, passeouer, and deliuered.) But in the new passeouer, thankes were giuen that the onely begotten sonne of the most highest was crucified, wherby all saythfull are spared, passed ouer, and not smittē with the sword of damnation, but deliuered and saued in the lambes bloud that hath take away the sinne of the world. In the old passeouer. The lambe or feast is called the Lordes passeouer, and yet was neither the lambe nor the feast his passyng ouer: but the signe and commemoration of his passyng by. And euē so is it now in the new Supper of our Lord. It is there called the body of our Lord, not that there is any thing, wherin his very naturall body is contayned so long and brode as it hāged on the crosse, for so is it ascended into heauē and sitteth on the right hād of the father: but that thyng that is there done in that Supper, as the breakyng and dealyng and eatyng of the bread, and the whole like action of the wine, signifieth, representeth, and putteth into our harts by the spirite of faith this cōmemoration, ioyfull remēbraunce, & so to gene thankes for that inestimable benefite of our redemption, wherin we see with the eye of our fayth presently his body broken & his bloud shed for our sinnes. This is no small Sacrament, nor yet irreuerētly to be entreated: but it is the most glorious and hyghest Sacramēt, with all reuerence and thankes geuyng to be ministred, vsed receiued, preached & solemnely in the face of the congregation to be celebrated: of whose holy administration and vse I shall peraduenture speake in the end of this Supper.

The Sacrament is to be receaued with thankesgeuyng.

But in the meane season (Christen reader) let these sensible signes signifie and represent hys death, and print it in thy hart geuyng thankes incessantly vnto God the father for so incomparable a benefite, that hath giuē thee his owne onely so dearely beloued sonne our Sauiour Iesus Christ to dye for thy sinnes yea and that when we were not his childrē but his enemyes. Christes disciples sayd to the man where is this gest chamber where I might eate the passing by with my disciples: & they prepared the passeouer. And yet Christ eate not the passeouer, but the lambe with his disciples, where it is plaine, ỹ signe to do on the name of the thyng.

Luke.22.

At last, consider vnto what ende all things tended in that last supper, how the figure teached the veritie, the shadow the body, and how the veritie abolished the figure, and the shadow gaue place to the body. Loke also with what congruence, proporcion, and similitude both in the action & the speche, al things were consummate and finished, and all to lead vs by such sensible signes from the figure vnto the veritie, frō the flesh vnto the spirite. And take thou here this infallible & assured saying of Christ neuer to fall fro thy mynde in this last supper, do ye this into the remēbrance of me. And also of Paul, saying. So oft as ye shal eate this bread (so this heretike calleth it bread euē after the wordes of the Popes cōsecratiō) and drinke of this cup, praise, declare & geue thankes for the death of the Lord vntill he shall come agayne to iudgement. Remēber thou also: what Christ sayd to the carnall Iewes takyng the eatyng of hys flesh and drinkyng of his bloud so carnally, aunsweryng them. My flesh profiteth not, meanyng to eate it bodely but the spirite maketh lyue. And to this set the Prophet Abacukes sentēce. The iust lyueth of his fayth.

Note here the whole circumstaunce of the maner and institution of the Sacramēt of Christes body.

Abacuk.2.

And now (Christen reader) to put thee cleane out of doubt, that Christes body is not here present vnder the forme of bread (as the papistes haue mocked vs many a day) but in heauen, euen as he rose and ascēded. Thou shalt know that he told hys Disciples almost twenty tymes betwene the xiij. and xviij. chap. of Iohn that he should, and would goe hence, and leaue this world. where to comfort them agayne for that they were so heauy for his bodely absence, he promised to send them hys holy Ghost to be their comforter, defender, and teacher: in whom and by whom, he would be present with them and all faithfull vnto the worldes end. Hee sayd vnto hys Disciples. I goe hence, I goe the father, I leaue the world, and now shall I no more be in the world, but ye shall abyde still in the world. Father I come to thee. Poore men haue ye euer with you: but me shall ye not alwayes haue with you. And whē he ascended vnto heauē, they did behold hym & saw the cloude take hys body out of theyr syght: and they sasteyng their eyes after him, the two men clothed in white, sayd vnto them. Ye men of Galile, wherefore stand ye thus lookyng vp into heauen? This is Iesus that is taken vp from you into heauen, whiche shall so come agayne, euen as ye haue sene him going hence.

Christ declared to his disciples that he would leaue this world & go to his father in heauen.

Scriptures are many that shewe Christ as touchyng his naturall body is gone and is not here. Actes.1.

Here I would not More to fitte frō hys litterall playne sense. All these so playne wordes be sufficient, I trow, to a Christen man to certifie hys conscience that Christ went his way bodely ascendyng into heauen. For whē he had told his disciples so oft of his bodely departyng from them: they were maruelous heauy and sad. Vnto whō Christ sayd. Because I told you that I go hence, your hartes are full of heauines. If they had not beleued hym to haue spokē of his very bodely absence: they would neuer haue so mourned for his goyng away. And for because they so vnderstode him, and he so meant as his wordes sowned: He added (as he should haue sayd) be ye neuer so heauy or how heauely so euer ye take my goyng hence, yet do I tell you truth. For it is expedient for you that I goe hence. For if I should not go hence, that comforter should not come vnto you. But and if I go hence, I shall send him vnto you. And agayne in the same chap. I am come from the father, and am come into the world, and shall leaue the world agayne and go to my father. what mistery, thinke ye, should be in these so manifest woordes? Did he speake them in any darke parables?

Christ ascended into heauen.

Iohn.14. and.16.

Christ re playne wordes declareth his bodely depar fare out this world

Dyd

Dyd he meane otherwise thē he spake? Dyd he vnderstand by goyng hence so oftē repeted, to tary here still? or dyd he meane by forsakyng and leauyng the worlde to be but inuisible beyng still in the worlde with his body? No surely. For he meant as faithfully & as playnly as his wordes sowned, and euen so dyd hys Disciples without any more maruelyng vnderstand him. For they answered him, saying: Lo, now speakest thou apertly: neither speakest thou any prouerbe. But what a darke prouerbe and subtile ridle had it bene: if he had meant by his goyng hence to haue tarryed here still? and by forsakyng the worlde, to abyde still in the worlde? and by his going hence to his father by his very bodely Ascention, to be but inuisible? who would interpret this plaine sentence thus? I go hence, that is to saye: I tary here still. I forsake the worlde and goe to the father, that is to say, I will be but inuisible and yet here abyde still in the worlde bodely? For as concernyng his Godhead, which was euer with the father, and in all places at once, he neuer spake such wordes of it. when Christ sayd (his death now was at hand) vnto his Disciples: now agayne I forsake the worlde and go to my father, but ye shall tary still in the worlde. If they will expound by his forsakyng the worlde, to tary here still bodely, and to be but inuisible: why do they not by lyke exposition interprete the tarying here still of the Disciples at that tyme, to be gone hence bodely and to be here visible? For Christ dyd set these contraryes one agaynst an other to declare eche other. As if to tary here still, dyd signifie to the Disciples that they should abyde in the worlde, as it doth in deede: then must needes his goyng hence and forsakyng the worlde signifie his bodely absence as both the wordes playnly sowne, Christ meant, and they vnderstoode them. But in so plaine a matter what neede these wordes? Be thou therefore sure (Christen reader) that Christes glorified body is not in this worlde, but in heauen, as he thether ascended in which body he shal come euen as he went gloriously with power and great maiestie to iudge all the worlde in the last day. Be thou therfore assured, that he neuer thus iuggled nor mocked hys so dearely beloued Disciples so full of heauynes now for his bodely departyng. For if he had so meant as our Papistes haue peruerted hys, saying, hys Disciples would haue wondered at so straunge maner of speech, and he would haue expressed his mynde playnly, sith at this tyme hee was so full set to leaue them in no doubt but to comforte them with hys playne and comfortable wordes. And if he would haue ben but inuisible and still bodely present: hee would neuer haue couered hym selfe with the cloude shewyng them and testifying also by those .ij. men his very bodely Ascētion out of their sightes. we may not make of hys very bodely Ascentiō, such an inuisible iuggling cast as our Papistes fayne. Fashionyng and fayning Christ a body now inuisible, now in many places at once, & thē so great, and yet in so litle a place, not decerned of any of our senses now glorified, now vnglorified, now passible, and then impassible, and I wote neare what they imagine and make of their maker, and all without any woorde, yea cleane agaynst all the wordes of holy Scripture. For surely, in this their imagination and so saying they bryng in a fresh, the heresie of that great heretike Marcian, which said that Christ tooke but a phantasticall body. And so was neither verely borne nor suffered, nor rose, nor ascended verely, neither was he very man. which heresie Tertulian confuteth: Christ toke verely our nature such a passible and mortall body as we beare about with vs, saue that he was without all maner of synne. In such a body he suffered verely, and rose agayne from death in such a glorified body now immortall &c. as euery one of vs shall ryse at the generall iudgement. It is appropried onely to hys Godhead to be euery where and not to bee circumscribed nor contemed in no one place. And as for our Papistes prophane voyde voyces, his body to be in many places at once, indifinitiue incircumscriptiue, non per modum quāti neq; localiter &c. which includeth in it selfe contradiction, of which Paule warned Timothe callyng them the oppositions of a false named science (for that they Scholasticall Diuinitie must make obiections agaynst euery truth, be it neuer so playne with pro & contra: whiche science many that professe it (sayth Paul) haue erred from the fayth, as for this contention and battayle about wordes profitable for nothyng els, but to subuert the hearers, I care not for them. For I haue the almighty testimony of the euerlastyng word of God ready to foyle all theyr madde and vnreasonable ble reasons, to wype them cleane away, and to turne them into their own confession.

Christ playnlye shewed vnto the disciples that he must depart from this worlde to his father in heauen.

1.Cor.11. And for bycause they hold them so fast by Paule. I shall loose theyr hold, expoundyng the Lordes Supper after Paule, which addeth immediatly vnto the cup, this ỳ Luke there left foorth: Doe ye this into my remembraunce. This doth Paule repete so ofte to put vs in minde, that these thankes giuing and Supper is the cõmemoration and the memoriall of Christes death. wher fore after all hee repeteth it yet agayne the thyrde tyme saying. So oft as ye shall eate this bread (hee calleth it still bread euen after the Popes consecration) and drinke the cuppe (he sayth not drinke this blonde) see that ye gyue thãkes, be ioyous and preach the death of the Lord, for so much signifieth, Annunciate, in this place, vntill hee come that is to say, frõ the tyme of his death and Ascention vntill hee come agayne to iudgement. Furthermore (sayeth Paule) who so eateth this bread (he calleth it still bread) or drinke of the cuppe of the Lord vnworthely: is giltie of the body and bloud of the Lord. The body and bloud of the Lorde Paule calleth here the congregation assembled together to eate the Lordes Supper. For they are his body and bloud which are redemed with his body and bloud, as he said in the x. chapter before. The cup of thankes giuyng whiche we receiue with thãkes: is it not the felowshyp of the bloud of Christ? The bread whiche we breake, is it not the felowshyp of the body of Christ? For we beyng many together are one bread, and one body. Loe here Paule expoundyng hym selfe vseth the same forme of speth that is vsed in these woordes. This is my body, takyng is, for signifieth. We are one bread & one body, that is to say, we are signified by one loafe of bread to be one body, he sheweth the cause, addyng because we be all partakers of one lofe or peece of bread. And in the xi. chapter folowing, he sayth plainly, ye be the body of Christ and his particular members, and in the first to the Ephesians. God dyd set Christ to be the head ouer all vnto hys congregation whiche is his body. &c.

The Supper of the Lord is the commemoration and memoriall of Christes death.

S. Paule calleth the Sacramẽt bread after the consecration.

By one loafe of bread, we are signified to bee one body in Christ.

And bicause the comparison in the x. chapter betwene the Lordes bordе and his cup, and the deuils bordе and his cup, do declare this matter. I shall recite Paules woordes, saying: ye may not drinke the cup of the Lord, and the cuppe of the deuill both together. Ye may not bee partakers of the Lordes bordе & the deuils bordе both at once. The deuils bordе and hys cuppe was not his body and bloud, but the eating and drinkyng before their images and Idols as dyd the heathen in the worshyppe and thankes of theyr Gods. Of the which thyng thou mayst gather what Paul meant by the Lordes bordе and his cuppe. Now let vs returne to Paule in the xi. chapter. They eate this bread, and drinke of this cup vnworthely, that come not vnto this bordе with such faith and loue as they professed at their Baptisme. They eate vnworthely that thrust them selues in among this congregation hauyng not the loue that this Sacramẽt and signe of vnity teacheth and signifieth. Which maner of people Paule in ỳ same chapter rebuketh, and bendeth all his Sermon agaynst them: for that they were contẽtious, and came together not for the better but for the woorse. So that their commyng together which should haue bene a token of fayth, and loue, was turned into the occasion and matter of dissention and strife: bycause euery man dyd eate (as Paule sayth) hys owne supper and not the Lordes supper: wherein the bread and drinke is common as well to the poore as to the riche. But here the rich disdayned the poore and would not tarye for them. So that some (as the rich) went theyr way dronken and full: and the poore departed hungry and dry, whiche was a token of no equall distribution of the bread and drinke: and that the rich contemned the poore, and so became slaũderous and giltie of the body & bloud of Christ: that is to witte, of the poore congregation redemed with Christes body and bloud. Thus they that came together appearyng to haue had that loue whiche the Supper signified and had it not, vttered them selues by this contẽtious and vnlouyng dealyng not to be members of Christes body, but rather giltie and hurtfull vnto them. As if a souldier of our aduersaries part shoulde come in among vs with our Lordes badge, hauyng not that hart fayth and loue to our captaine that we haue, we would (if we espyed it by any token) take him for a spye and betrayer rather then one of vs.

The cup of the Lord, & the cup of the deuill, how they differre.

Who they are that eate of the bread and drinke of the cup vnworthely.

Euery man did eate his own supper and not the Supper of the Lord.

We must first examine our selues, and so come to the table of the Lord.

Let a man therefore (sayth Paule) proue him selfe well before, whether he hath this fayth to Christ & loue to God and his neighbour which all he profes-

led at Baptisme, and this Supper signified: and so come in among the congregation to eate & drinke of this bread & drinke of this cup (he calleth it still bread and wyne: & neither his body nor bloud.) For he that eateth & drinketh vnworthely, eateth and drinketh hys owne damnation: bycause he discerneth not the Lordes body. He calleth still the Lordes body the congregation redemed with Christes body as he dyd before, and also in the chapter folowyng fetching his analogie and similitude at the naturall body. In which although there be diuers members one excelling an other, one inferiour, vyler and more cõtemptible then an other, yet may not the body want them: but must couer them reuerently, and hold them in honour. Agayn, in the body, though there be diuers members of diuers offices: yet is there no discorde among them: but euery member bee it neuer so low and vyle: yet doth it minister and serue an other, and all together hold vp and helpe the whole body. This consideratiõ with these cõparisons so eloquently, so plenteously, so liuely doth Paule set forth in that xij. chap. that no mã cã desire any more. And all to bryng vs into the consideration and discretion of the body of Christ which is his congregation: without whiche consideration and discretion, if we thrust our selues in with his signe and recognisance fayndly: we be but hypocrites and eate and drinke our owne iudgement. For this cause many are sicke among you, and many are a slepe, that is, are dead. Here it seemeth some plage to haue ben cast vppon the Corinthians for this abuse in the eatyng of the Lordes Supper. For both the law & the Prophetes threatened vs plagues, as pestilence, famine, and sword for our sinnes. For if we had iudged our soules, that is, if we had diligently examined our owne liuyng & repented: we should not haue ben iudged, that is to say, punished of ỳ Lord. But while we be punished, we be corrected of the Lord lest we should be condemned with the world. wherfore my brethren, when ye come together to eate, tary one for an other. Here is the cause of all this dissention wherfore Paule rebuketh them. But here might some of them obiect & tell Paul. Syr we come thether hungry and may not tary so long: wherunto Paul aunswereth as he dyd before: saying. Haue ye not houses to eate & drinke in? Do ye contemne the cõgregation of God, and shame them that haue none? Here he calleth the poore the church of God, whom afterward he called the body of the Lord: and now at last he sayth. If any mã be so hũgry, let him eate somewhat at home, and so delay his hunger that he may the better tary for the poore, lest ye come together vnto your condemnation. And as for other thynges I shall dispose and set in order when I come. These other thynges were concerning this Supper and such as were out of frame among them whiche if ye read the whole Epistle are easie to see: & that they were no necessary truthes for their saluation. For all such truthes Paule had preached them before and written them to. Neither were these other thinges, Lent, Fast, the Assumption of our Lady, halowyng of bowes, Belles, and Ashes, halowyng of Vestimentes, and creppyng to the Crosse, with such other vnwritten vanities, as M. More lysteth to iest and tryfle out the truth.

Now haue ye the very pure sense of these Christs wordes, this is my body, that is to say. This signifieth or representeth my body takyng Est, for significat. As M. More hym selfe vttered it in his Dialogue put forth in William Barlowes name, rectifyng the opinions of Oecolampadius and Zwinglius: saying, this is my body, is as much to say as this signifieth my body, where he saith that Oecolampadius alledgeth for hym Tertulian, Chrisostome and Austen, but falsely sometyme addyng more to their wordes, sometyme takyng away from theyr sentẽces. which saying is playne false and bee belyeth the man now departed, for first his incomparable learnyng and verye spirituall iudgement would not suffer hym to be ignorannt in the vnderstandyng of these old holy Doctours (whom I dare say he vnderstode as well as More. And his conscience and faythfulnes would not suffer hym falsely to peruert them as M. More belyeth and perverteth Christ & Paule and all holy Scripture. And if this mã had thus dealt with these Doctours sayinges: Luther agaynst whom he did cõtende in this matter would not haue left it vntold hym.

But (Christẽ reader) to put thee out of doubt haue here these doctours owne wordes both in Latine and Englishe. And first heare Tertulian, where thou must first vnderstãd that there was an hereticke called Marcion, saying that Christ toke not to hym the very body of man, but an imagined and a phantaſticall body, to put of, and on, when he lyſted: and ſo not to haue ben borne verely of the virgine Mary nor yet to haue ſuffered verely death &c. agaynſt whom, thus writeth Tertulian in hys fourth booke.

Tertulian. Profeſſus itaq; ſe concupiſcentia concupiſſe edere paſcha, vt ſuum acceptum panem & diſtributum Diſcipulis corpus ſuum illum fecit, hoc eſt corpus meum dicendo: id eſt figura corporis mei. Figura autem non fuiſſet, niſi veritatis eſſet corpus. Cæterũ, vacua res, quod eſt phantaſma, figuram capere non poſſet. Whiche wordes are thus in Engliſh ſpoken of Chriſt. whiche acknowledgyng hym ſelfe with how feruent deſire he longed to eate the paſſeouer, as his bread taken and diſtributyng to his Diſciples: made it his body, ſaying: This is my body: that is to ſay, the figure of my body. For figure had it bene none, except it were a very body. For a voyde thyng which is a phantaſie can receaue no figure. Here it is playne, that this is my body after the old holy Doctour, is as much to ſay, as this is the figure or ſigne that repreſenteth or ſignifieth my body.

The wordes of Tertulian.

Also, thus ſayeth Auſten. Lex dicit non eſſe manducandũ ſanguinem, quod anima ſit ſanguis: Quod lex dicit, ſanguis eſt anima: eſſe poſitum dicimus, ſicut alia multa & penè omnia Scripturarum illarum Sacramenta ſignis & figuris plena futurę predicationis, quæ iam per Dominum noſtrum Ieſum Chriſtum declarata eſt. &c. Poſſum etiam interpretari præceptum illud in ſigno eſſe poſitum. Non enim dubitauit Dominus dicere · Hoc eſt corpus meum, quum ſignum daret corporis ſui. Sic eſt enim ſanguis anima, quomodo petra erat Chriſtus. Nec tamen quum hæc diceret, ait: petra ſignificabat Chriſtum, ſed ait: petra erat Chriſtus. Quæ rurſus ne carnaliter acciperetur, ſpiritualem illam vocat, id eſt ſpiritualiter intelligi docet. Whiche wordes be thus in Engliſh. The law ſayeth that bloud ſhould not be eatẽ, becauſe the life is bloud. which precepte of the lawe and becauſe that bloud is lyfe: we affirme it to be ſet like as many other almoſt innumerable ſacramentes of thoſe Scriptures, full of ſignes and figures of the preachyng to come: whiche now is declared by our Lord Ieſu Chriſt &c. And I may interprete that precept to bee layed in a ſigne. For the Lord doubted not to ſay. This is my body: when hee gaue the ſigne of his body. And euen ſo is the bloud lyke, and the ſtone was Chriſt. And yet when he ſayd theſe wordes: he ſayd not the ſtone ſignified Chriſt: but he ſayd, the ſtone was Chriſt, whiche leſt they ſhould be taken carnally, hee calleth it ſpirituall, that is to ſay, he teacheth it to bee vnderſtand ſpiritually. whert is now Mores litteral ſenſe, and materiall meate?

Now ſhall ye heare Chriſoſtome. Nihil ſenſibile tradidit Chriſtus: licet dederit panem & vinum: non quod panis & vinum non ſint ſenſibilia, ſed quod in illis mentem hærere noluit. Nam in ſuum corpus, quod eſt panis vitæ, ſubuehit dicens. Hoc eſt corpus meum: perinde ac dicat. Hoc licet panis ſit, ſignificat tamen tibi corpus. Thus it is in Engliſhe. Chriſt geuyng bread and wyne, gaue no ſenſible thyng: not that bread and wine be not ſenſible: but that he would not our mynde to ſticke ſtill in them. For hee lifted vs vp into hys bodye, which is the bread of lyfe: ſaying. This is my body: as though he ſhould ſay. Though this be but bread, yet it ſignifieth vnto thee, my body. Now iudge thou (Chriſtẽ reader) whether M. More reporteth right, of this nat that alledgeth theſe holy Doctours, or no.

Now haue ye the pure vnderſtandyng of the wordes of the Lordes ſupper confirmed with the old holy Doctours. That, this is my body, is as much to ſay, as this ſignifieth my body. And this is my bloud: is, this ſignifieth my bloud. But yet was there neuer ſuch maner of ſpeaking in the ſcripture. This is that: that is to ſay. This is conuerted and tranſubſtanciated into that. Or this is conteined in that: the thyng conuerted and chaunged keepyng ſtill her forme, qualities, quantities &c. As to ſay. This is my body, that is to ſay. This bread is conuerted into my body, the bread abydyng ſtill in his faſhion, taſt, colour, waight. &c. For Chriſt when hee conuerted water into wyne, dyd not leaue the fourme, colour, and taſt ſtill in the water. For ſo had it bene no chaungyng. But let our couetous conuerters choppe and chaunge bread and wyne till we there feele, ſee, & taſt neither bread nor wyne, and then will we beleue them ſo they bryng for them the word of God. For as for their falſe iugglyng we feele it at our fingers ende: we ſee it, had we but halfe an eye: we taſt it at our tongs end, and know it with all our wyttes and vnderſtandyng ſo manifeſtly, that we perceiued them openly long agoe, to be the very Antichristes, of whom Christ and his Apostles warned vs to come in this last tyme.

The Papistes say that the transubstantiation is done by miracles.

And if they say. That this conuersion is made by miracles. Then must euery one of them as dee say a Masse, make vs many a miracle the very markes of M. Mores Churche. For it is one great miracle that Christs body should come so sodenly inuisible and so oft out of heauen, and that such a miracle as the worde of God neuer knew. An other that so great a body should be conteyned in so litle a place, and that one body should be at once in so many places and two bodyes in one place. An other that it is eaten, neither the eater feelyng it, nor the body eaten suffering nor feelyng the teeth of the eater. with as many moe marueloꝰ & like miracles or rather absurdities of the bread and wyne, that there must be the forme, colour, tast, wayght, broken &c. and yet neither to be bread nor wyne in our belefe except we will be burned of thē bycause we beleue not their iugglyng castes. O mischieuous miracle makers. O cruell conuerters: O bloudy butchers.

But hearke (Christen reader) and I shall learne thee to knowe Christes playne and true miracles, from the sleighty iuggling of these crafty cōueyers. Christ would neuer haue done miracle had men beleued hym onely by hys wordes, but when dee sayd first these wordes. This is my body, no mā doubted at them, no man was in any vnbeleue of them, wherfore these wordes must needes bee playne single and pure without miracle, as these. The iij. braunches are thre dayes: without any subtile transubstantiation, such insensible conuersion, or any false miracle. Christ wrought all his miracles for the glory of God to declare hym selfe both God and man, so that all Christes miracles were cōprehended vnder mans sences or commō wyttes, which bryng in such knowledge vnto the vnderstādyng. As when he chaunged water into wyne, the miracle was first receiued with the sight, open at the eye, tasted with the mouth and so conueyed vnto the vnderstandyng. And now though we neither see nor tast that miracle, yet we heare it, see it, read it, and so vnderstād that it was once a miracle done of Christ: whē he restored the sight to the blynd, healed the lame, cleused the lepros, reared the dead: all was seen, heard, and so comprehended vnder our most swete senses: that his very enemyes were compelled to confesse them for miracles. But our miracle makers, that make dayly so oft and so many, are so farre from this cleare poynt, that their miracles in this matter, be not, neither shalbe cōtained nor comprehēded vnder any of our fiue wittes, but they rather delude and deceyue both sight, tast, feelyng, hearyng, and smelyng: ye our fayth and vnderstandyng to. Beware therefore of these mischieuous miracle makers for theyr owne glory and profite and will kill thee to, if thou beleuest not their lyes. Beware I say of those Marchauntes that will sell the wares, which they will not suffer thee to see, nor to tast, nor to touch but when they shewe the white, thou must beleue it is blacke: If they geue the bread, thou must beleue it without any word of thy fayth, that it is Christes body, and that of their owne makyng. If thou tast, see and feele it bread yet thou must say it is none though the Scripture calleth it bread iij. tymes. Beware, beware I say of Antichrist: whose commyng sayth Paule (He is come alredy sayth John, now are there many Antichristes) shall be after the worckyng of Sathan with an almighty power, with false signes and wonders lying miracles, & with all deceite of vnrighteousnes. &c.

All Christs miracles were such as were cōprehended vnto our senses.

To be to curious in so playne a Sacrament and signe, to cauill Christes cleare wordes with sophisticall sophismes, and to tryfull out the truth with tauntes and mockes, as M. More doth, is no Christen maner. And if our Papistes, and Scholasticall Sophisters will obiect and make answere to this Supper of the Lorde, bringyng in for them, their vnwritē wordes, dedes, & dreames (for we haue compelled More with shame to slitte frō the Scripture) strewed with their vaine straunge termes which Paul damneth, and geueth Timothe warning of: I shall by gods grace so set the almighty word of God against them, that all Christen shall see falshead and deceite in this Sacramēt: and so disclose theyr deuilish doctrine and sleighty iugglyng, that all that can read Englishe, shall see the trouth of Gods word openly beare downe their vnwritten lyes. For it is verely the thyng that I desire, euen to be written agaynst in this matter, for I haue the solutions of all theyr obiections ready. And know right well, that the more they stryre this Sacrament, the broder shall theyr lyes be spread, the more shall theyr falsehead appeare and the more gloriously shall the trouth triumph: as it is to see this day by long contention in this same, and other lyke Articles: which the Papistes haue so long abused, and how More hys lyes vtter the truth euery day more and more. For had he not come beggyng for the Clergy from Purgatory, with his supplication of soules, and Rastel and Rochester had they not so wysely played theyr partes: Purgatory peraduenture had serued them yet another yeare: neither had it so soone bene quenched, nor the poore soule and Proctour there bene with his bloudy Byshop Christē catte, so farre coniured into hys owne Vtopia with a sachell about hys necke to gather for the proude Prieستes in Synagoga Papistica.

The contentious and wicked doctrine of ỹ Papistes hath prouoked the lyght of gods truth to be set forth to the vnderstandyng of the people.

When Christ was ascended into heauen: and had sent his Apostles the spirite of truth to leade them into all truth perteinyng vnto our saluation, euen into hym that sayd: I am the truth of whiche truth hee instructed them after his resurrection. Luke. xxiiij. and they had preached the same truth nowe at Jerusalē Actes. ij. at which preachyng there were that receiued their wordes and were Baptised, about iij. M. hys Apostles remembryng how their maister Christ at his last Supper did institute and leaue them this holy Sacrament of his body and bloud to be celebrated and done in his remembraunce among such as had receiued his Gospell, were Baptised, had professed hys fayth, and would perseuer in his Religion: dyd now in this first congregation celebrate the Lordes Supper breakyng the bread and eatyng it as Christ dyd teach them, which Supper, Luke and Paule called afterward the breakyng of the bread. As Actes. ij. saying. That they which gladly had now receiued Peters acte, & were baptised: were perseuering in the doctrine of the Apostles, and in the communiō, and in the breakyng of the bread, and in prayer, whiche Sacrament was now a token of the perseueraunce in theyr Christen Religion now professed. Of this breakyng of bread, Luke writyng of Paule commyng vnto Troades, sayth also, that their vpon a Sabboth day, when the Disciples were come together vnto the breakyng of the bread: Paule made a Sermon duryng to mydnight &c. And that this was no common nor prophane vse but an heauenly Sacrament and a reuerent rite and vsage, the circumstaunces of the action declare, both in Luke and Paule, shewyng it to be the very institutiō that Christ ordeyned at his Supper. Paule thus recityng this breakyng of the bread: saying. The bread whiche we breake, is it not the felowshyp of the body of Christ? ỹ is to say, doth it not signifie vs to be the body of Christ that is hys congregation and people, as doth the wordes folowyng declare? Paule addyng the cause saying. For we beyng many are all together signified by the one loafe to be one body: for that we be partakers of the same bread. Also before, he calleth in the same Supper, the cup of thankes geuyng the felowshyp of the bloud of Christ: that is to say, the congregation redemed with Christes bloud.

How the Apostles dyd in the first congregation celebrate the Lordes Supper.

Actes. 22.

The holy Sacrament therefore, would God it were restored vnto the pure vse, as ỹ Apostles vsed in it their tyme. would God, the secular princes which should be the very pastours and head rulers of their congregations cōmitted vnto their cure, would first cōmaunde or suffer the true preachers of Gods woorde to preache the Gospell purely and playnly with discrete libertie: and constitute ouer eche particulare Parish such Curates as cā and would preach the word, and that once or twise in the weeke, appoyntyng vnto theyr flocke certeyne dayes after their discretion and zeale to Godward, to come together to celebrate the Lordes Supper. At the which assemble the Curate would propone and declare them first this texte of Paule. i. Corinthians. xi. So oft as ye shall eate this bread and drinke of this cuppe: see that ye be ioyous, prayse, and giue thankes preachyng the death of the Lord &c. whiche declared, and euery one exhorted to prayer, he would preach them purely Christ to haue dyed and bene offered vpon the altare of the Crosse for theyr redemption: whiche onely oblation to be sufficiēt sacrifice to peace the fathers wrath, and to purge all the sinnes of the world. Then to excite them with humble diligence, euery man vnto the knowledge of hym selfe & hys sinnes: and to beleue and trust to the forgyuenesse in Christes bloud: and for this so incomparable benefite of our redemption, (whiche were sold bondemen to sinne) to geue thankes vnto God the father for so mercyfull a deliueraunce through the death of Jesu Christ, cue-

Then the bread and wyne set before them in the face of the Churche vpon the table of the Lord purely and honestly layed: let hym declare to the people the significations of those sensible signes, what the action and deede moueth, teacheth and exhorteth them vnto: and that the bread and wyne be no prophane common signes: but holy Sacramentes reuerently to be considered and receiued with a depe fayth, and remembraunce of Christes death and of the shedyng of his bloud for our sinnes, those sensible thynges to represente vs the very body and bloude of Christ, so that while euery man beholdeth with his corporall eye those sensible Sacraments: the inward eye of his fayth may see & beleue stedfastly Christ offred and dying vppon the Crosse for his sinnes, how his body was broken and his bloud shed for vs, and hath giuen hym selfe whole for vs, hym selfe to be all ours, and what soeuer he dyd to serue vs, as to bee made for vs of hys father our righteousnes, our wisedome, holynesse, redemption, satisfaction, &c.

The bread and wyne are not prophane but Sacramentes to holy vse.

A wholesome and good lesson namely for all ministers.

Then let this preacher exhort them louyngly to draw neare vnto this table of the Lord, and that not onely bodely, but also (their hartes purged by fayth, garnished with loue and innocency) euery man to forgyue eche other vnfaynedly, and to expresse or at least wise to endeuour them to folow that loue whiche Christ dyd set before our eyes at his last Supper when he offered hym selfe willyngly to dye for vs hys enemyes: whiche incomparable loue to commende, bryng in Paules Argumentes, so that this, hys flocke may come together, and be ioyned into one body, one spirite, and one people. This done let hym come downe: and accompanyed honestly with other Ministers come forth reuerently vnto the Lordes table, the congregatiō now set round about it, and also in their other conuenient seates, the pastour exhorting them all to pray for grace, faith and loue, whiche all this Sacrament signifieth and putteth them in mynde of. Then let there be read apertely and distinctly the vj. Chapter of John in their mother toung: wherby they may clearely vnderstand, what it is to eate Christes flesh and to drinke his bloud. This done, and some brief prayer and prayse long or read, let one or other ministre read the xj. chapter of the first to the Corinthians, that the people might perceiue clearely of those woordes the mistery of this Christes Supper, and wherfore he did institute it.

A good and necessary exhortatiō to be made to ỹ people at the tyme they receaue the communiō.

These with such lyke preparations and exhortations had, I would euery man present should professe the Articles of our fayth openly in our mother toung, and confesse his sinnes secretly vnto God, praying intierly that hee would now vouchsafe to haue mercy vpon hym, receiue his prayers, giewe hys hart vnto hym by fayth and loue, encrease his fayth, gene hym grace to forgyue and to loue his neighbour as him selfe, to garnish hys lyfe with pureues and innocency, and to confirme hym in all goodnes and vertue. Then againe it behoueth the curate to warne and exhorte euery man deepely to consider and expende with hym selfe, the signification & substaūce of this Sacrament, so that he sit not downe an hipocrite and a dissembler, sith God is searcher of hart and raines, thoughtes and affectes: and see that he come not to the holy table of the Lorde without that fayth whiche he professed at hys Baptisme, and also that loue which the Sacrament preacheth and testifieth vnto hys hart, lest hee now, founde guilty of the body and bloud of the Lord (that is to wytte a dissembler with Christes death and sclaunderous to the congregation, the body & bloud of Christ) receiue his own damnation. And here let euery man fall downe vppon hys knees saying secretly with all deuotion their Pater noster in English, theyr Curate as example kneelyng downe before them. Which done, let hym take the bread and eft the wyne in the sight of the people hearing him with a loude voyce, with godly grauitie, and after a Christen religious reuerence rehearsyng distinctly ỹ woordes of the Lordes Supper in their mother toung. And thē distribute it to the ministers, which taking the bread with great reuerence, will deuide it to the congregation euery man breakyng and reaching it forth to hys nexte neighbour and member of the mistike body of Christ, other ministers folowyng with the cuppes powring forth & dealing them the wyne, all together thus beyng now partakers of one bread and one cuppe, the thyng thereby signified and preached printed fast in their hartes. But in this meane while must the minister or pastour be readyng the communicatiō that Christ had with his Disciples after his Supper, beginnyng at the washyng of their feete: so readyng till the bread & wyne be eaten and dronken and all the action done. And then let them all fall downe on their knees geuing thankes highly vnto God the father, for this benefite and death of his sonne, whereby now by faith euery man is assured of remission of his sinnes, as this blessed Sacrament had put them in mynde, and preached it them in this outward action and Supper. This done, let euery man commende and geue them selues whole to God and depart.

Thankesgeuyng to God.

I would haue hereto put my name, (good Reader) but I know well that thou regardest not who writeth, but what is writtē: thou estemest the word of the veritie, and not of the authour. And as for M. More, whom the veritie most offendeth, and doth but mocke it out when he cannot soyle it: he knoweth my name well inough. For the deuill his gardian, as him selfe sayth: commeth euery day into Purgatory, (if there be any day at all) with his haynous and enuious laughter, gnashing his teeth and grynnyng, tellyng the Proctour with hys Popes prisoners, what soeuer is here done or written against them, both his person and name to. And he is now, I dare say, as great with his gardian, as euer he was.

These wordes of his are in his booke that he made for the poore soules in Purgatory.

If any man tel ye, loe here is Christ, or there is hee, beleue hym not: For there shall aryse false Christes false annoynted giuyng great miracles. Take hede, I haue told ye before, if they therefore tell ye: loe, hee is in the desert, go not forth, loe hee is in the priuy pire, beleue it not.

The ſtorie, life, and Martirdome of Iohn Frith with the Godly and learned workes and writings of the ſayde Author, here after enſueing.

THe ſayd Iohn Frith was borne in Kent and was the ſonne of Richard Frith Inholder in Sene-nock in the Countye of Kent. This yong man ſo greatly profited in lerning, that ſcarcely in his time there might bee anye found equall vnto him. And vnto his great knowledge and learning, was adioyned ſuch an honeſt conuerſation and godlynes of life, that it was harde to iudge, in whether of them he was more commendable. Of the great godlines that was in him, this may ſerue for experiment ſufficient, that not withſtanding his other manifold and ſingular giftes and ornaments of the mynde in him moſt pregnant, wherwith all hee might haue opened an eaſye way vnto honour, and dignitie, yet he choſe rather wholye to conſecrate him ſelfe vnto the Church of Chriſt, excellently ſhewing forth and practiſing in him ſelfe the Precept ſo highly commended of the Philoſophers touching the lyfe of man, which life (they ſay) is geuen vnto vs in ſuch ſort, that how much better the man is, ſo much the leſſe hee ſhould liue vnto hym ſelfe, but vnto other, ſeruing for the common vtilitie: And that we ſhoulde thinke a great part of our birth to bee due vnto our parentes, A greater part vnto our countrey, And the greateſt parte of all, to bee beſtowed vpon the Church, if we wil be counted good men.

Fyrſt of all he began his ſtudie at Cambridge where he had to his tutor Stephen Gardiner, who afterward was Byſhop of Winchester. And in the nature of this yong man being but a child, God had planted meruelous inſtincts, and loue vnto learning, where vnto he was addict. He had alſo a wonderfull promptnes of wit, and a redye capacitie to receaue and vnderſtand any thing, in ſo much that he ſemed not to bee ſent vnto learning, but alſo borne for the ſame purpoſe. Neither was there any diligence wanting in him equall to that towardnes or worthy of his diſpoſition. Whereby it came to paſſe, that he was not onely a louer of learning, but alſo became an exquiſite learned man.

And at that tyme it happened that Thomas Wolſey Cardinall of Yorke prepared to buyld a College in Orforde, whiche had the name and title of Frideſwyd, but now named Chriſtes Church. And vnto this College the ſayd Cardinall gathered togither ſuch men as were founde to excell in any kinde of Learning, and knowlege. Amonge whom this Iohn Frith, the Author of theſe notable workes was one, who then being a ſtudient in Cambridge, and Bacheler of arte was called from thence, and placed in ỳ ſaid College. And when he had diligently Labored in moſt godly ſtudy certaine yeares, not without great profite both of Latyn and Greeke. Then being ſuſpected to be a fauorer of Martyn Luthers doctrine. He was apprehended and committed to priſon, from whence afterward being deliuered he reſorted to the Citie of London, and there came in acquayntaunce with William Tyndall. And not long after the ſayd William & Iohn Frith had many metinges and great conferences, and by the ſayd William he fyrſt receaued into his hart the ſeede of the Goſpell and ſencere godlines, & after with great perill and Daunger they both being inquired & ſought for, fled. William Tyndall firſt placed him ſelfe in Germany, and there did firſt tranſlate the Goſpell of S. Mathewe into Engliſhe, and after the whole new teſtament &c. And not long after the departure of Tyndall, Iohn Frith eſcaped and fled into Flaūders where he remayned almoſt the ſpace of iij. yeares, and there he made his booke againſt purgatory, and dyuerſe other Godly and learned workes, as in the perface of the ſayd booke doth appeare. But at the laſt he being driuē to neceſſitie and lacke of money, was forced ſecretly to returne ouer into this Realme to be releued of his frendes: namely of the Prior of Reading. And (as it was thought he purposed to haue had the Prior ouer with him. And he being at Reading, it happened that he was there taken for a vagabond, and brought to examination. Where the simple man loth to vtter him selfe what he was, and vnacquainted with their maner of examinations, and they greatly offended with him, committed him to ỳ stockes, where when he had sitten a long tyme, and was almost pined with hunger, & would not for all that declare what he was: At the last he desired that ỳ Scholemaster of the towne might be brought vnto him, which at that tyme was one Leonard Coxe, a man very well learned. Assone as he came vnto him, Frith by and by in the Latyn tongue began to bewaile his Captiuitie. The schole master being ouercome with his eloquence, did not onely take pitie and compassion vpon him, but also began to loue and embrace such an excellent witt, and disposition vnlooked for, especially in suche state of mysery. Afterward they conferring more togither vpon many thinges as touching the Vniuersities, Scholes, and tonges, fell frō the Latyn tongue, to the Greeke, wherein Frith did so inflame the loue of the sayd schole master towardes him, that he brought him into a meruelous admiration, especially when as the schoolemaster hard him so promptly by hart rehearese Homers verses out of his first booke of Iliades. Wherupon the schoolemaster, went with all speede vnto ỳ Magistrates, greuously cōplayning of the iniury which they did shewe vnto so excellent and innocent a yong man. And so through the helpe of the sayde schoolemaster, the said Frith was freely set at libertie. All be it, his sauetie cōtynued not long, through the great hatred and deadly persute of Sir Thomas More who at that tyme being Chauncelor of England, persecuted him both by land and Sea: besetting all the wayes, hauens, and portes, yea and promysing great rewardes if any man could bring hym any newes or tydinges of hym. Thus Frith being on euery part beset with troubles, not knowing which way to turne hym, sought for some place to hide him in. And so flyeng from one place to another, & often chaunging both his garmentes and place, yet could he be in safetie in no place, no not long amongest his very frendes, so that at the last he comming to a Porte towne in Esser called Milton shore, and there purposing to haue taken shipping to haue passed ouer into Flaunders, was betrayed and brought bounde backe agayne, and layed in the Tower of London. And diuerse tymes after was called before Sir Thomas More, & also before the Bysshops with whom he had many conflictes. And he continuing long prisoner in the Tower, at the last a false brother resorted vnto him whose name was William Holt a Taylour, who (feyning that he bare great frendship vnto him) so flattered him (and he himselfe being vtterly voyde of all suspicious nature) that he began to communicate vnto him his very Secretes, and among other entred into a longe discourse of the sacrament, which Frith had penned in a booke in the tyme that he was Prisoner in the Tower. And when the sayd Holt had seene the sayd booke, he required him most instantly to lend him the same onely to reade ouer, the which the sayd Iohn Frith did vnaduisedly graunte, which after was the occasion of his greate trouble and finally of his death. So sone as this false brother had the booke, he departed, for now he had the praye that he had long watched for, And forth with he caried the sayde booke vnto Sir Thomas More, who reioyced not a litle at the hauing thereof, and forthwith whetted his wittes, and cauled his spirites togither, meaning to refute his opinion by a contrary booke, but that was more then he could doe. Yet he attempted to doe asmuch as he might, and at the last wrote a booke agaynst him, the Copie whereof when it came to Frithes handes, although he were then prisoner in the Tower and destitute both of bookes and conference, yet he aunswered it, omitting nothing that any man coulde desire to the perfect and absolute handeling of the matter. Beside all these cōmendations of the afore sayde Learned yong man, there was also in him a frendly and prudent moderation in vttering of the trueth, ioyned with learned godlines, which vertue hath alwayes so much preuayled in the Church of Christ, that without it all other good giftes of knowledge be they neuer so great can not greatly profite, but oftentimes doe very much hurt. And in all matters, where necessitie did not moue him to contend, he was ready to graunt all thinges for quietnes sake.

After he had sufficiently contended in his writynges with More, Rochester, and Rastall, Raſtall Mores ſonne in lawe, whom he did ſo valiauntly fight withall and confounde, that he converted Raſtall to his part. Then he was caryed to Lambith before the Biſhop of Caunterburie, and afterward to Croydon where was preſent Stephē Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter who had bene his tutor in Cambridge as aforeſayd, and ſeemed to owe vnto him greate loue and fauour, but in the ſtede thereof he found in the ende his great malice and tyrannye, and laſt of all he was called before the Biſhoppes in a Common aſſemblye at London, where he ſo conſtantly defended him ſelfe that he had preuailed, if he might haue bene heard, as indeed he was not. The order of his iudgment with the maner of his examinatiō and Articles which were obiected agaynſt him, are compriſed and ſet forth by himſelfe in a letter written to his frendes, which letter alſo is imprinted and ſet forth in this booke. After ſentence geuen againſt him by the Byſhop of London, he was delyuered to the Maior & Shirifes of the ſayd Citie (Syr Stephen pecocke, a ſimple man being then Maior) and forth with he was committed to new gate, where he was put into ẏ Dungeon vnder the ſayd Gate, and laden with Boltes, and Irons as many as he could beare, and his necke with a Coler of Iron made faſt to a poſt, ſo that he could neyther ſtand vpright nor ſtoupe downe, yet was he there continually occupied in writing of diuerſe thinges, namely with a candell both day, and night, for there came none other light into that place. And in this caſe he remayned iij. or iiij. dayes, and then was from thence caried into Smithfælde ẏ iiij. day of July. 1533. where with great pacience, and conſtancy he ſuffered that moſt helly, and cruell death of burning.

And when the fyer was ſet on the faggottes he embraced the ſame in his Armes, and with all pacience commytted his ſpirite vnto almighty God. But this one thing is yet to bee remembred, that he being bounde to the ſtake with an other good Martyr, which was a very ſimple young man named Andrew Hewet, there was preſent one Doctour Cooke that was perſon of the Church called Allhalowes in hony lane ſituate in the myddes of Cheprſyde. And the ſayd Cooke made an open exclamation and admoniſhed the people that they ſhould in no wiſe pray for them no more then they would doe for a dogg. At which wordes Frith ſmyling, deſired the Lord to forgeue him. But the vngodly and vncharitable wordes of the ſayd Doctour did not a litle offende the people. And thus for the teſtimony of the true doctrine of Chriſt, which the ſayd Frith ſealed with his bloud the day, and yeare afore ſayd, he dyed in the xxiij. yeare of his age (as ſome ſaye) but his parentes reported in the xxx. yeare of his age.

the Christen Reader.

GRace and peace bee with thee Christē reader. I am sure there are many that will much meruell & coūt it a great presumptiō that I beyng so young and of so small learnyng dare attempt to dispute this matter against these thre personages of the which nūber two, that is to say, my Lord of Rochester and Sir Thomas More, are auncient men both of great witte, and dignitie. Notwithstanding I will desire thē patiently, to heare myne answere, not aduertisyng who speaketh the wordes, but rather what is sayd. And as cōcernyng myne youth, let them remember what Paule monisheth. 1. Timot. iij. willyng that Timotheus should instruct the cōgregation and that no mā should despise his youth: for as the spirite of God is bound to no place, euē so is he not addict to any age or person, but inspireth when hee will and where he will, makyng the young to see visiōs and espye the truth, and the elders to dreame dreames, and to wander in phantasies Actes. 2. Ioel. 2.

And as touchyng my learnyng I must nedes acknowledge (as the truth is very small, neuertheless that litle (as I am bound, haue I determined, by Gods grace) to bestow to the edifying of Christes congregation which I pray god to encrease in the knowledge of his word.

I would not that any man should admit my wordes or learnyng, except they will stande with the Scripture, and be approued therby. Lay them to the touchstone, and trye them with Gods word. If they be found false and counterfaite, then damne them, and I shall also reuoke them with all myne hart. But if the Scripture allow them, that you can not deny but it so is, then resist not ỹ doctrine of God, but knowledge your ignorāunce and seduction, and returne gladly into the right way. For if you cā not improue it by Gods word, and yet, of an hare and malicious mynde that you beate to the truth labour to resist it & condemne it that it should not spread: I ensure you your sinne is irremissible and euen agaynst the holy ghost, and the bloud of them that perish for faute of instruction shalbe required on your handes.

Peraduenture some of you will say, your fathers & old progenitours, with many holy men and Doctours haue so beleued & that therfore you will abyde by the old. I answere: The wayes & iudgementes of God are meruelous, who knoweth whether God haue suffred his elect to erre and be seduced for a season, to the entent that the vnfaithfull which would not beleue the truth, but had pleasure in iniquity might stōble at their errour into their vtter confusion and ruine? Although a man be neuer so faythfull and holy, yet is there much imperfectiō in him as long as he is included in this mortall body, how be it, it is not imputed vnto him, but through ỹ fayth in Christes bloud who lye pacified and forgeuen. And therfore it is not sure, that we folow their externe workes or other imaginatiōs, but let vs euer, cōferre them vnto the pure word of God, and as the Scripture testifieth so let vs receaue them.

My Lord of Rochester doth testifie him selfe writyng vpon the xviij. Article, that there are many pointes both of the Gospels and other Scriptures which are now discussed more diligētly, and more clearely vnderstand, then they haue bene in tymes past. And addeth furthermore that there are diuerse places in Scripture yet some deale darke, which he doubteth not, but that they shalbe more open and light vnto our posteritie, for why shal we dispaire of that (saith he) sith that the Scripture is for that entent left with vs, that it may be vnderstād of vs exactly, and to the vttermost point? Of this may you euidently perceaue that the old fathers and holy Doctours haue not sene all the truth. But somewhat is also left, through the high prouision of God, to be discussed of their successours. And therfore is it not mete, that we straight wayes cleaue vnto their wordes, without any further enserchyng the scriptures, but we must examine all thyngs by the Scriptures although. S. Paule or Peter should preach it vnto vs, as we see experience Actes. xvij. that whē Paule preached, the audience dayly searched the Scriptures, whether it were as he sayd.

But you haue bene of long continuaunce secluded from the scriptures, whiche is cause of such grosse errours as ye are now fallen in, so that ye could neither search them, nor yet once looke on them. Alas what blindnes doth occuppy our eyes? Are ye so childish to beleue that the same worde whiche hath made the vnfaythfull and heretickes, faythfull and Christen in tymes past, is nowe so farre altered that it should cause the faythfull and Christen to become heretickes? I praye God open your eyes. Howbeit wee may nowe well tast at our fingers endes that we haue long bene in that miserable case that Paule prophesied vppon vs. ij. 2. Thess 2. Thes. ij. that God hath sent vs strong delusions because we would not receaue ỹ knowledge of the truth: what greater delusion can we haue, then to thinke that the very worde of God, whiche was written for our comforte, which is the very fode and sustenaunce of our soules, whiche is the sure metyarde and perfect touchstone that iudgeth and examineth all thynges: to Rom. 15. thinke (I saye) that this wholesome worde should be our poyson and condemnation?

And all be it our forefathers haue lyued without it and receaued all for truth that our Prelates belyes haue imagined: yet is not theyr fault & ours a like (although I can not excuse their ignorannce but that it is sinne before the face of God) for they had not the light of Gods worde opened vnto thē. Wilfull ignorance, not to bee excused. Nowe sith we haue the light declared vnto vs, and yet will procede in blynd ignorauncie and not conferre and examine these iugglyng mistes with the light of Gods worde, our ignorannce is wilfull and without excuse.

Suffer therefore all thynges what soeuer they be, to be tryed and examined by the Scripture. If they be true then shall the Scripture doe them no hurt, but stablish and strēgthen them, for the Scripture discloseth nothyng but falsehead, and cōdemneth nothyng but that is damnable.

The cause of Iohn Frithes writyng against Purgatory. And now to descend vnto our matter and disputation whiche is of Purgatory, I shall shew you what occasiō I had to take it in hand. I wrote a letter vnto a certaine frende in England, desiryng hym instantly to send me certaine bookes which I though necessary for my vse, and were not to be gotten in these parties, as the Chronicles, Syr Thomas Mores booke agaynst the Supplication of Beggers, and certein other. These bookes I receaued vpon S. Thomas day before Christmasse, the yeare of our Sauiour a. M. cccc. & xxx. with a letter written in this forme: Sir I haue sent you such bokes as you wrote for, and one moe of Rastels makyng, wherin he goeth about to proue Purgatory, by naturall Philosophie: whiche thyng (quoth he) I thinke be more easie to do, thē to proue it by any good Scripture. &c. This stuffe receaued, I was meruelously desirous and tickled to see what reasons he brought for his probations. And in the begynnyng and Prologe of the booke, he set seuen reasons which he sayd that fonde felowes alledged for thē to proue that there could be no Purgatory. And in deede they are very fonde that would deny Purgatory, if there were no better Argumentes to confute it then hee assigneth. But by Gods grace I will propounde vij. times seuen which shal haue such pith, that their painefull purgatory shall not bee able to abyde the worst of them, for these seuē that Rastell assigneth are not worth one Beane.

When I had read and well ponedered these reasons, I thought that hee should sharpely haue confuted thē, as he might full well haue done, specially sith they were but of his owne imagination. Neuertheless when I came vnto his solutions I founde not one but it had certaine poyntes repugnaūt vnto the Scripture (vnto which our reason must euer be obediēt) yea and also they were extremely iniurious vnto Christ and his precious blond. Mans reason must be obedient to the Scriptures.

Then left I him, & read: Syr Thomas Mores booke, to see what Scripture might bee brought for that purpose, and after that made I diligēt enquire to come by my Lord of Rochesters booke which also writeth on the same matter, and when I had well examined their reasons and had sene the order and processe of the Scriptures whiche they alledged: I founde that clearely verified whiche Aulus Gellius sayeth, that it were a great deale better for a man to bee sharpely rebuked yea and openly to haue his faultes published of his enemy, then to bee coldly and slenderly prayed of his frende. Aulus Gellius. For a mans enemy enserecheth narrowly and gathereth together all that he can imagine, and so accuseth a man more of a fumous heate then of any veritie: and therfore the audience (if they be wise) conlider his wordes thereafter, and so geue very small credence or els none vnto them. But if a mans frende before audience doe prayse hym slenderly and coldly, it is an argument that the person is very faultie, for a frende beholdeth all qualities and circum- The rebuke of an open enemy better then the slender prayse of a frend.

cumstaunces, his byrth, bringyng vp, & what feates hee hath done all hys lyfe long: yea and applieth many thynges vnto his frendes prayse, whiche serue but smally for it, for he will leane nothing behynd that may be imagined to employ his frendes fame and honour. Now if in all these pointes he can not colour out a glorious apparant laud, but is compelled for lacke of matter to prayse his frēd slenderly, then (if the audiēce be wise) they may soone cōiecture that he is no prayse worthy, & also may well doubt whether that small prayse which he gaue him be true or not. Euē so, when I had read these bookes of Syr Thomas More and my Lord of Rochester, and saw the small probations & slender reasons that those two witty and learned men had brought to confirme Purgatory: considering also that they are the chiefest frendes, proctours and patrones therof, and that they had applied many reasons and Scriptures for their purpose (for lacke of matter) that rather made against them: yea and not that onely, but also that they dissented betwene them selues in their probations: for M. More sayth that there is no water in Purgatory. And my Lord of Rochester sayth that there is water. Master More sayth that the ministers of the punishmēt are deuils. And my Lord of Rochester sayth that the ministers of the punishment are aungels. Master More sayth, that both the grace and charitie of them that lye in the paynes of Purgatory, are increased. My Lord of Rochester saith, that the soules in Purgatory obtain there neither more fayth nor grace nor charitie then they brought in with them. These thynges cōsidered, it made mine hart yerne and fully to cōsent, that this their paynefull Purgatory was but a payne imagination, and that it hath of long time but deceaued the people and milked them from their money.

M. More & my Lord of Rochester can not agree.

Notwithstanding God hath left vs two Purgatories. One to purge the hart and clense it from the filth whiche we haue partly receaued of Adam (for we are by nature the children of wrath. Ephe. ij.) and partly added thereto by consentyng vnto our natural infirmitie. This Purgatory is the word of God as Christ sayth. Iohn. xv. Now are ye cleane for the worde whiche I haue spoken vnto you. This purgation obtayneth no man but thorough fayth, for the vnfaythfull are not purged by the word of God, as the Scribes and Pharises were nothyng the the better for hearing his word but rather the worse for it was a testimony against them vnto their condemnatiō. And because we receaue this purgatiō onely through beleuyng the word, therfore is the vertue of this purgyng applied also vnto fayth, for Peter sayth. Act. xv. that the Gentiles hartes were purged thorough fayth, that is to say, through beleuing the word. And what word is that? verely the preaching that Christes death hath fully satisfied for our sinnes and pacified for euer the fathers wrath towardes vs. &c. This fayth purifieth the hart and geueth vs a will and gladnes to do what soeuer our most mercyfull father commaundeth vs.

The Purgatoryes, that God hath ordeyned.

Iohn. 15.

The Purgatory of the hart.

The Purgatory of the hart, is fayth.

Neuertheless because our infirmitie is so great, and our mēbers so weake and fraile that we cā not eschew sinne, as our hart would, and as our wil desireth: therfore hath God left vs an other Purgatorye whiche is Christes crosse. I meane not his materiall crosse that he him selfe dyed on, but a spirituall crosse which is aduersitie, tribulation, worldly depression. &c. And this is called the rodde or scourge of God wherewith he scourgeth euery sonne that he receaueth, that we may remember his law and mortifie the old Adam and fleshly lust which els would ware so rebellious that it would subdue vs, raigne in vs, and hold vs thraull vnder sinne. When soeuer we haue committed a crime thē is God presēt with this rod as he sayth Psal. lxxxix. If they defile my ceremonies and not obserue my cōmaundementes, then with a rod shall I punish their sinnes and with beatyngs shall I reward their iniquities, but yet my mercy shall I not take from him neither will I deceaue hym of my promise.

The Purgatory of the members.

Heb. 12.

The Purgatory of the mēbers is the crosse of Christ.

Psal. 89.

This crosse must we receaue with a glad hart and thanke our louing father for it, for it is but a medicine to heale our infirmitie and to subdue our rebellious members. But when our members are fully mortified, that is, when death hath subdued our corruptible body, and our flesh cōmitted to rest in the earth, then ceale the Purgatories that God hath ordeined, & then are we fully purged in his sight.

God nayleth vs to the crosse, to heale our infirmities.

If our Clergy could haue found in their hartes to haue taken these Purgatories vppon them, they had neuer neded to imagine any other, but sith their lyfe bega to ware so dissolute, specially sith they should be the salt of the earth and lanternes of light: It was necessary for them to imagine Purgatory after this lyfe, for els they might be sure that the most part of them were neuer like to come in heauen.

Iudge Christen reader whiche hast the spirite to discerne and knowest the voyce of Christe what reasons Rastell hath brought and how he hath soluted them: for in my mynde both his reasōs and solutions are so childish and vnsauery, so vnlearned and baren, so full of faultes and phantasies, that I rather pitie the mans deepe ignoraunce and blindnesse (which hath so deceaued him selfe through Philosophie and naturall reason) thē I feare that he by his vaine probations should allure any man to consent vnto hym.

Iudge and conferre the Scriptures which Sir Thomas More and my Lord of Rochester alledge for theyr opinion, and I doubt not but that God shall open thine eyes to espy that thing which hath blinded them.

Iudge and compare the Scriptures together which I haue brought to confirme my purpose, ponder their reasōs and my solutiōs vnto them, and I am sure thou shalt perceaue that my small learnyng hath condemned theyr hyghe eloquence, that my foly hath brought to nought their wisedome, and that my youth hath disclosed their old and festred ignoraunce.

And this is euen the old practise of God: to chose the folish thynges of the world: to confound the wise: to chose the weake to confounde the mightye: And to chose the vyle thynges whiche are of no reputation: to confound them of high degree: that no flesh might boste it selfe in his sight to whom onely be prayse and thankes for euer. Amen.

The wisedome of the world foolishnes afore God.

¶A Prologe whereby a man may the better perceaue the occasion and whole cause of this Booke.

Symon Fishe the maker of the booke of the Supplication of Beggers.

THere was a brother of ours named Simon Fishe (whiche nowe I trust resteth in Gods handes) whose eyes God had opened, not onely to espy the wily walkyng of hipocrites and ruyne of the realme whiche through their meanes was nye at hand: but also to marke and ponder the peril of mēs soules, and how that the ignoraunt people by their seduction was fallen into that franticke imagination that hey more feared the Pope and hys Decrees whiche are but vanitie, then God him selfe and his law whiche are most righteous and eternall. This man therfore of a feruent and burnyng zeale that hee bare to the wealth of the comminaltie brake out and touched these hypocrites in a litle treatise whiche hee called The Supplication of Beggers, willyng that wee shoulde geue the aboundaunce of our richesse vnto the poore to whom it is due by the law of God: and that we should no lenger suffer our selues to bee dispoyled and robbed of a sight of sturdy lubbars whiche vnder a false cloke of vertue and prayer deceiue the poore of their liuyng and both the poore and the riche of their soules health, if credence be geuen vnto them.

Our riches is to be bestowed on the poore.

And where these wilye Foxes would haue pretēded the cloke of Purgatory affirmyng that it were due vnto them because they praye for their frendes soules that they might come to rest, he aunswered vnto that poynt preuentyng theyr obiection, and proued that either there could be no such Purgatory, or els that the Pope were a mercylesse tyraunt which (as he saith him selfe may deliuer them from thēce and will not except hee haue money. At this point began M. More to fume and tooke vpon hym selfe to bee Proctour for Purgatory (I will not say that he was hyred ther to of our spiritualtie although many men dare sweare it) and to confirme his purpose hee wrested sore the Scriptures, and triumpheth also that the very miscreantes and Idola-

He addeth thereto(to ſtabliſh his matter with all)that there is no man whiche beleueth that there is a God, and that the ſoule of man is immortall, but hee muſt nedes graunt that there is a Purgatory. There tooke Raſtell his hold, whiche is á Printer dwellyng at Paules gate in London and of Maſter Mores alliaunce,which alſo coueteth to counterfayte his kinſmã, although the beames of his braines be nothyng ſo radiaunt nor his cõueyaunce ſo commendable in the eyes of the wiſe. Notwithſtandyng this Raſtell hath enterpriſed to dilate this matter, and hath diuided it into three Dialoges, imaginyng that two men diſpute this matter by natural reaſon and Philoſophie, ſecludyng Chriſt and all Scripture. The one of them (that ſhould diſpute this matter)he calleth Gingemen,& fayneth hym to be a Turke and of Mahometes law.The ſecond he nameth Comingo an Almany & of Chriſtes fayth. And he maketh the Turke to teach the Chriſten mã what he ſhould beleue.

Raſtell followeth M. More.

The names of the diſputers in the matter of Purgatory

The ſome and contentes of Raſtels iij. Dialogues

The firſt Dialoge goeth about to proue by reaſon that there is a God, which is mercyfull and righteous. The ſecond entendeth to proue,that the ſoule of a man is immortall. Agaynſt theſe two Dialogues I will not diſpute, partly becauſe this treatiſe ſhould not be ouer long and tedious, and partly becauſe that thoſe twoo poyntes which he there laboureth to proue are ſuch as no Chriſten man will deny (although many of his probations are ſo ſlender, that they may well be improued) but as concerning his thyrd Dialogue wherin he would proue Purgatory,it is wholly iniurious vnto the bloude of Chriſte and the deſtruction of all Chriſten fayth, if men were ſo mad as to beleue his vayne perſuaſions. And therfore I thought expedient to cõpare this third Dialoge with all the deceitfull reaſons vnto the true light and pure worde of God that at the leaſt Raſtell hym ſelfe might perceiue his owne blind ignoraunce and returne agayne into the right way.And if any man haue bene deceiued through his booke (as I truſt there are but few except they bee very ignoraunt) that they may repent with hym and glorifie GOD for his ineſtimable mercy which hath ſent his light into this world to diſcloſe and expell theyr darke and blynd ignorauncy, that they may ſee his wayes and walke in them prayſing the Lord eternally.Amen.

The firſt Booke whiche is an aunſwere vnto Raſtelles Dialogue.

In aunſwere to Raſtels Dialogue.

THere is no man as I thinke that hath a naturall wytte, but hee will graunt me that this booke of Raſtels making is either true, or falſe, If it be falſe thẽ how ſo euer it ſeeme to agrée with naturall reaſon it is not to be allowed: if it be true, then muſt we approue it. Naturall reaſon muſt bee ruled by Scripture. If naturall reaſon conclude agaynſt the Scripture, ſo is it falſe, but if it be agréyng to Scripture then is it to be heard.

Raſtels booke is either true or falſe.

Of this may I conclude that if Raſtels booke be agréyng to Scripture, then is it true and to be allowed, if it determine cõtrary to the Scripture, then is it falſe and to bee abhorred, how ſoeuer it ſeeme to agrée with naturall reaſon.

If naturall reaſon conclude agaynſt the Scripture then is naturall reaſõ falſe.

Now is there no Chriſten mã but hee beleueth ſurely that if Chriſt had not dyed for our ſinnes we ſhould all haue bene damned perpetually & neuer haue entred into the ioyes of heauen, whiche thyng is eaſie to be pro-ned, for Paule ſayth Rom. 5. As thorough one más ſinne, that is Adã, enſued death in all mẽ vnto condẽnatiõ: Euen ſo thorough one mans righteouſnes which is Chriſt, came righteouſnes, in al men vnto ỹ iuſtification of lyfe. Also. John. xi. It is necessary that one man dye for the people, that all the people perishe not: ſo that we had ben condemned and had perished perpetually if Chriſt had not dyed for vs. But Raſtel with his Turke Gingemin excludeth Chriſt and knoweth not of his death, wherfore al ỹ reasõs that they can make vnto domesday cã neuer proue Purgatory (except they imagine ỹ we muſt firſt go to Purgatory and then after to hell:) for this is a playne cõcluſiõ that without Chriſt (whom they exclude) we can neuer come to heauen: what fondnes were it then to inuent a Purgatory. Now may you ſee that Raſtels boke is fully aunſwered, and lieth already in the dyrte, and that his thyrd Dialogue is all falſe and iniurious vnto the bloud of Chriſt. As for the firſt and ſecond Dialogue, although there be ſome errours both agaynſt Diuinitie and all good Philoſophy, yet wil I paſſe them ouer, for they are not ſo blaſphemous agaynſt God and his Chriſte as the thyrd is.

Roma. 5.

2. Raſtels boke cleare ly & quickly confoũded.

Notwithſtandyng I will not thus leaue his boke, although I might full well, but I will declare vnto you what ſolutions he maketh to theſe ſeuẽ weake reaſons which he hath propounded hym ſelfe) for hee anoydeth them ſo ſlenderly, that if a man had any doubte of Purgatory before, it would make hym ſweare on a boke that there were none at all. Beſides that it hath not one ſolutiõ but there are in it certaine pointes repugnaũt vnto Scripture, ſo that it is greate ſhame that any Chriſten man ſhould Printe it, and much more ſhame that it ſhould be Printed with the kynges priuilege.

Raſtel beaten to the wall.

The firſt & chief reaſon made for Purgatory

The firſt and chiefeſt reaſon that moueth this man (yea and all other) to affirme Purgatory is this, whiche he putteth both in the firſt Chapter of his third Dialogue, and alſo in ỹ laſt. Man (ſayth he) is made to ſerue and honour God, now if man be negligent about the commaundements of God and committe ſome veniall ſinne, for which he ought to be puniſhed by the iuſtice of God, & dye ſodenly without repentaunce, and haue not made ſufficiẽt ſatiſfactiõ vnto God here in the worlde, hys ſoule ought neither immediatly to come into the glorious place of heauen, becauſe it is ſomewhat defouled with ſinne, neither ought it to go to hell vnto eternal dãnatiõ: but by al good order of iuſtice that ſoule muſt bee purged in an other place, to make ſatiſfactiõ for thoſe offences, that it may afterward bee receiued into the glorious place of heauẽ. And ſo by the iuſtice of God there muſt nedes be a Purgatory.

Raſtell.

Aunſwere to the firſt argument.

For ſoth this reaſon hath ſome apperaunce of truth and the ſimilitude of wiſedome, howbeit in dẽde it is nothyng but mans imagination and phantaſie. For if we compare it vnto Gods word, then baniſheth it away. But we regarde not the word of the Lord, and therfore chaunceth euẽ the ſame thyng vnto vs, that happened before vnto the children of Iſraell. Pſal. 81. My people regarded not my voyce and Iſraell gaue no hede vnto me: therfore let I them go after the appetites of their owne harts. They ſhall wander in their owne imaginations. Now what goe they about in this their inuention and imaginatiõ of Purgatory, but to ponder the iuſtice of God in the balance of mãs iuſtice, ſaying. It is no reaſon that we ſhould enter into heauen which haue not here ſatiſfied vnto God for our iniquitie except that we ſhould be tormẽted and purified in an other place. We were ſurely in euill takyng if God were of mans cõplection which remitteth the fault and reſerueth the payne. Nay, nay, Chriſt is not gredy to be auenged. He thirſteth not after our bloud, but ſuffered all tormentes in his owne body to deliuer vs from the paines that we had deſerued. But seyng they thinke their reasō so strōg and inuincible, I will confute it with one question that they shal not know whyther to turne them. But first I will ground me vpon this Scripture.

1.Thess. 4. S. Paule writeth. 1. Thess. 4. on this maner: we that liue and are remayning in the comming of the Lord (vnto iudgemēt) shall not come yere they that slepe, for the Lord himselfe shall descende from heauen with a shoute and the voyce of the Archaungell and trōpe of God. And the dead in Christ shall arise first, then shall we which liue and remaine bee caught vp with them also in the cloudes to mete the Lorde in the ayre, and so shall we euer be with the Lord. Now harken to my question. Those men that shal be found alyue at the last day (for as it was in the tyme of Noe, euē so shall the last day come vppon vs vnwares and as a thefe in the night. Math. 24. those men I speake of, shall any of thē be saued or not? There is no mā that liueth but hee may well say his Pater noster, of the which one part is: Forgeue vs Lorde our trespasses as we forgeue them that trespasse against vs, therfore is no man pure and without all sinne. And this confirmeth S. John, saying: If we say we haue no sinne, we deceaue our selues and the truth is not in vs. 1. John. 1. what remedie now? shall they all be damned? There is no doubt but some of them shall not be very euill, although they haue not made sufficient satisfaction vnto God in this world, & they ought not to go vnto hell to euerlastyng dānatiō (as your owne reason proueth) and then shall there be no Purgatory to purge and punishe them. Besides that if there were a Purgatory at ỳ time yet could they not be cast into it, for all shall be done in the twinklyng of an eye. 1. Cor. 15. and they shall be caught vp to mete the Lord. 1. Thess. 4. Is God not as iust then as he was before? will he not haue punished as well then as before. Nowe see you no euasion for all your suttle imaginations, for they are not pure and without spotte (as you say) except they make satisfaction them selues vnto God. But they must be without spot or wrincle that shall enter into heauē, as Rastell him selfe doth proue in the ir. Chapter of hys third Dialogue. Howbeit I regarde not his testimony, but the Scripture affirmeth that to be true, as Paul sayth. Ephesians. 1. and. 5. Now sith they must be pure euē without spot or wrincle that shall enter into heauen, and these persons are yet spotted with sinne, and haue neither place nor space to purge them in: you must nedes conclude whether you will or not that they must all bee damned and yet you thinke that vnreasonable to.

Math. 24.

The confutatiō of Rastels first & chief argument.

1.Iohn. 1.

1.Thess. 4.

See whyther your Argumentes of naturall reason bring you. But what sayth the Scripture? verely Paule. 1. Thess. 4. espyed an other way: for he saith: and so shall we euer be with the Lord: and not damned. Of this may we euidently conclude, that some shal be saued although they be sinners & neuer come in Purgatory (there taketh Rastell a fall & all his faultours) and sith God is as iust and mercyfull now as he shall be then: why shall we go more in Purgatory thē they? But marke I pray you how properly that substauntiall reason wherewith they go about to stablishe Purgatory concludeth: which condemneth into hell so many thousandes, yea and euen them whom Paule affirmeth to be saued. And yet at the begynnyng it semed very reasonable.

Rastell ouerthrowē in his owne turne.

Now haue I proued you sufficiētly that this their reason can proue no Purgatory, for as I sayd there shall sinners enter into heauen and neuer come in Purgatory. Here peraduenture you bee desirous to know how Gods iustice is pacified. For all sinne by the iustice of God must nedes be punished. Now can the world espy no punishment here, and therefore they thought it necessary to imagine a purgatory to purge & punish sinne. Here aunswere I with S. Paule.

Christ the sonne of God beyng the brightnes of his glory & very image of his substaūce bearing vp all things with the word of his power, hath in hys owne person purged our sinnes

Hebr. 1.

Christ is the onely Purgatory and purger of our sins.

and is set on the right hande of God. Behold the true Purgatory and consumyng fire, whiche hath fully burnt vp and consumed our sinnes, & hath for euer pacified the fathers wrath towardes vs. Marke how he sayth, that Christ in his owne person hath purged our sinnes. If thou yet seke an other purgation, then are you iniurious vnto the bloud of Christ. For if thou thought his bloud sufficiēt, then wouldest thou seke no other Purgatory, but geue him all the thākes and all the prayse, of thy whole health and saluation, and reioyse whole in the Lord.

4. Ephe. 5.

Paul writeth Ephes. 5. on this maner, Christ loued the congregation. And what dyd he for it, sent he it into Purgatory there to be clensed. Nay verely, but gaue hym selfe for it that he might sāctifie it and clense it in the fountaine of water, thorough the word to make it vnto hym selfe a glorious congregation, without spot or wrincle or any such thyng, but that it should bee holy and without blame.

A frutefull and excellēt argument.

Now if Christ by these meanes haue sanctified it and made it without spot, wrincle and blame, then were it agaynst all right to cast it into Purgatory, wherfore I must nedes cōclude that either Paul saith not true which affirmeth that Christ hath so purged his congregatiō, or els that Christ is vnrighteous if he cast them into Purgatory whiche are wout spot wrincle and blame, in his sight.

5. Ephe. 1.

Christ chose vs in hym before the begynnyng of the worlde, that we might bee holy and without spotte in his sight. Ephes. 1. If through his chosyng and election we be without spot in his sight, Alas what blind vnthāke fulnes is that to suppose that he will yet haue vs tormented in Purgatory.

Christ by his election doth purge and clense vs.

6. 1. Iohn. 1.

Peraduenture euery man perceaueth not what this meaneth, that we are righteous in hys sight seyng that euery man is a sinner. 1. John. 1 Therefore I will briefly declare the meanyng of the Apostle. This is first a cleare case, that there lyueth no mā vppon the earth without sinne. Notwithstandyng all they that were chosen in Christ before the foundatiō of the world were laid, are without spot of sinne in the sight of God. Ephes. 1. Ephe. 1.
So that they are both sinners & righteous. If we consider the imperfectiō of our fayth and charitie, If we consider the conflict of the flesh and the spirite. Gala. 5. If we consider our rebellious members, which are sold vnder sinne. Roma. 7. then are we greuous sinners. Gallat 5. Roma 7.
And cōtrarywise, if we beleue that of mercyable fauour God gaue his most deare sonne to redeme vs from our sinne: If we beleue that he imputeth not our sinnes vnto vs, but ẏ his wrath is pacified in Christ and his bloud, If we beleue that hee hath frely geuen vs hys Christ and with him all thinges so that we be destitute in no gift. Roma. viij. then are we righteous in his sight, and our cōscience at peace with God, not thorough our selues, but thorough our Lord Jesu Christ. Roma. v. So mayst thou perceaue that thou art a sinner in thy selfe, & yet art thou righteous in Christ, for through him is not thy sinne imputed nor rekened vnto thee. And so are they to whom God imputeth not their sinnes, blessed, righteous, without spot, wrincle or blame. Roma. 8. Roma. 5. Roma. 4. Psal. 31. And therfore will he neuer thrust thē into Purgatory.

Justification freely, doth exclude Purgatory.

Paule sayth there is no difference, for all haue sinned and lacke ẏ glorye whiche before God is allowed, but they are iustified frely by his grace, through ẏ redemption ẏ is in Christ Jesu. Roma. iij. what saye you now, shall they yet go into Purgatory? Call ye that iustificatiō frely by his grace, to lye in the paynes of Purgatory. Surely that were a newe kynde of speech, whiche I thinke Paule neuer vnderstode. Roma. 3.

Obiection.

Peraduenture some man will thinke myne Argumentes to bee of small pyth, and to dissolue them by a distinction, saying: It is truth ẏ God hath so purged and clensed vs from all our iniquities, neuertheles hys mercy, purgyng & forgeuenesse, haue onely purified vs from the faulte and crime, but not from the payne which is due to the crime.

To

In aunswere to the first obiection.

To this obiection I aunswere that if God of his mercy and thorough the bloud of his sonne Iesus haue not remitted ẏ payne due vnto that crime, then shall we all be damned: for the payne due vnto euery disobedience that is agaynst God, is eternall damnation. And therefore if this payne were not forgeuen vs, then are we still vnder cõdemnation, and so were Christes bloud shed in vayne, & could saue no man.

Obiection.

If they will say that this euerlasting payne is not wholy forgeuen vs, but that it is altered into the temporall payne of Purgatory, out of which the Pope may deliuer them by his pardon, for els haue they no euasion at all, then may we some confute them and that by diuers reasons.

1. In aunswere to the second obiection.

First, ẏ their wordes are nothyng but euen their own imagination, for they cannot confirme their sayinges by the Scripture, neither ought we to accept any thyng as an article of out fayth whiche is not approued by Gods word: for we may neither decline vnto the right hand nor vnto the left: but onely do that the Lord commaundeth vs. Deut. 4. 5. 12. 13.

2. The Pope selleth Christes merites for money.

And agayne if a man should aske them by what authoritie the pope geueth such pardon. They aunswere, that it is out of ẏ merites of Christes passiõ. And so at the last they are compelled to graũt euen againſt them selues, that Christ hath not onely deserued for vs the forgeuenes of ẏ crime but also of the payne. If Christ haue deserued all for vs, who geueth the Pope authoritie to reserue a part of his deseruynges from me, and to sell me Christes merites for money.

3. We may not robbe God of his honour.

Besides that, euery Christen man ought to apply vnto God all thynges whiche should employ his honour as farre forth as the Scripture will suffer. Now seyng it is more vnto the honour of God that he should deliuer vs in his bloud both from the crime and from the payne, and also not repugnaũt vnto the Scripture but that he hath released vs from the payne as well as from the sinne: for what entent should we bee so vnkynde as to despoyle him of this great honour, & without any authoritie of Scripture imagine that he hath not deliuered vs from the payne as well as from the sinne.

4. Blasphemy to say Christes bloud is not full remission for our sinnes.

Moreouer if he should reserue the payne, then were it no full remission and forgeuenesse, but what blasphemy is that to thinke ẏ Christes bloud was not sufficient to geue full remission vnto his faythfull?

5. There is no satisfaction for sinne, but Christes death.

Furthermore, for what entent should the payne be reserued? to satisfie towardes God for their offences? Nay verely, for all mẽ liuyng are not able to satisfie towardes God for one sinne. Neither are all the paynes of hell able to purge one sinne or satisfie for it: for then at the length the damned soules should bee deliuered out of hell.

Finally, I thinke that there was neuer any temporall punishment institute of God to be any satisfactiõ for sinne, but the vse of all tẽporal paines and chiefest cause why they were ordeyned is this.

7. Why temporall paynes are ordeined.

Temporall paynes are profitable for the commõ wealth, that they may be examples to learne the vnfaithfull (which els feare not God) that they may at the lest for feare of punishmẽt abstaine from committyng like offences, for if they? sinne were vnpunished then should all vice raigne to the vtter subuersiõ of the cõmon wealth.

They are also profitable for the faythfull, for they try and purifie the fayth of Gods elect, and subdue and mortifie their carnall members, that they may bee the more able to serue their brethren and to withstand the vehemẽt assaultes of tẽptation which are euer at hand: and lest they should ware prowde and boast them selues for those giftes which they haue receiued of God.

Furthermore they set out and aduaunce the glory of God. For after that we be put in remembraunce and made to fele our fraile nature that so continually displeaseth God our father: then haue we occasion to ponder and compare this trãsitory payne which we here suffer with those enormous mous trespasses that we haue cõmitted and so to espy the infinite mercy and fauour of God, and euen in our aduersities to be compelled to prayse God our mercyfull and tender father whiche scourgeth vs so fauorably for those greuous offences that haue deserued a thousande tymes more punishment.

Howbeit (to say truth) there is no man that can take any such profite of them that men fayne to be punished in Purgatory. For we neither see it nor heare it, neither haue we any mẽtion made of it in Scripture, that we may be sure that it so is. Now sith we haue no infallible euidence, but onely phantasticall imaginatiõs, it is plaine inough that there was no such thyng ordeined neither to aduaunce Gods honour nor yet to the profit of the cominaltie or els of Gods elect, for then I am sure that Christ and al his Apostles would not haue forgottẽ to haue remembred vs of it.

Scripture maketh no mention of Purgatory

NOw let vs see some of Rastels reasons which he sayth that fond felowes lay for them selues to proue that there should be no Purgatory.

Rastels first argument.

They say (sayth Rastell) that contrition which some call repentaũce is that whiche is the very payment and satisfaction for sinne, and they say that when a man committeth a sinne and after is repentaunt therfore, that God of his goodnesse doth forgeue him, and that that repentaunce is the onely satisfaction that God woulde haue made and done for that sinne. And then sith a mã by such repẽtaunce hath made such payment and satisfaction for his sinne as God would haue to be made therefore, if then that man should go to Purgatory and haue a new punishement after his death, that repẽtaunce that he had before should be but voyde.

Frith.

Forsoth I thinke that neither Rastell euer heard any such reason, neither yet that any man euer would be so fonde as to say ỹ this argumẽt cõfuted Purgatory, except it were one ỹ were cleane purged of hys wytte before. But whose reason so euer it be, whether Rastels, or any other mans, let vs lay it vnto ỹ touchstone, that is the Scripture, to proue whether it be gold or copper, bright or counterfaite, truth or vntruth. And to bee short, the first proposition and Maior of his reason is this, that cõtrition or repentaũce is the very payment and satisfaction for sinne. That is a starke lye to begyn withall. For if we by all our contrition, repentaũce, sacrifices and woorkes (I adde more to helpe hym) can fully pay and satisfie for our sinnes, then is Christ dead in vayne, and mought full well haue spared his bloud. This can no man deny, but he that will set at nought both Christ & all the Scripture. Now marke how he procedeth. And they say (saith Rastell) that when a man committeth a sinne and after is repẽtaunt therfore, that God of hys goodnesse doth forgeue him, and that that repentaunce is the onely satisfaction that God would haue to bee made and done for that sinne.

A fond argument.

The Maior of Rastels argument is a lye.

Rastell.

That is the next part of his argument and containeth two lyes at once cheined together, for where he sayth that whẽ a man committeth a sinne and after is repentaunt therefore that God of his goodnes doth forgeue him: you must first cõsider that neither he nor his Turke Gingemin know any thyng of Christ. Now if it were not for Christes sake, all the repentaũce that man can imagine could not moue the goodnes of God to forgeue one sinne. But by his iustice (where Christes death hath no effect) he must nedes condemne. The second lye is this, that that repentaunce is the onely satisfactiõ that God would haue made and done for that sinne: for if this be true, thẽ is our fayth false. For our fayth holdeth that if Christe had not dyed for vs, we had all perished. Then procedeth he as though all that he had sayd before were true, on this maner. And then (sayth he) sith a man by such repentaunce hath made such paymẽt and satisfactiõ for his sinne as God would haue to be made therfore, If

Frith.

Christes death onely is the cause of the forgeuenes of our sinnes.

Rastell.

Rastels fond argument beateth to the ground.

then

then that man ſhould go to Purgatory and haue a new puniſhement after his death, that repentaunce that he had before ſhould bee but voyde. Euen iuſt, if heauen fell we ſhould catche larkes.

Frith. Now let vs ſée how properly hée aunſwereth vnto his owne queſtion. And you ſhall finde moe blaſphemies agaynſt Chriſt in his aunſwere then preceded in ỹ argument. Thinke you this man hath not takē great paynes.

Three lyes at once. To prepare him ſelfe vnto his matter hee bryngeth in three lyes in the firſt chapter. The firſt is he ſayth that onely the ſoule ſuffereth and not the body, & maketh Comingo, whō he layneth to bee a Chriſten man, to graunt it well and wiſely. Forſoth this is new learnyng in déede. For if this be true, then Chriſtes body ſuffered no harme, neither when he was ſcourged, neither whē he was crowned with thorne neither whē he was nayled on the croſſe. But I report me vnto your owne ſelues if ye cutte but your finger, féele ye no payne: and yet I thinke ye will not ſay that ye cutte your ſoule. From hence forward if you ſée a poore man ſhiuerynge for cold in the ſtréete, you may byd him walke a knaue and beare hym in hand that he féeleth no harme, for as this man ſaith his body féeleth no harme, and I promiſe you of honeſtie that his ſoule catcheth no cold. But what néede I to make mo woordes of this matter ſith you may make experiēce your ſelues. The ſecond lye is this. That mā was created of God, to do him honour and ſeruice. For if a mā may ſay the truth man was not made for the entent to be a ſeruaūt & do ſeruice. For God hath no néede of our ſeruice, but was in as full honour and as well ſerued before the world begā as he now is. So that his honour, ioye and ſeruice is whole in hym ſelfe, and is by vs neither employed nor diminiſhed.

what folye is in naturall reaſon, to reaſon agaynſt the Scripture.

A good concluſion.

Gods honour conſiſteth not in our ſeruice.

Why man was made. But the cauſe why hee made man was this that man ſhould haue ỹ fruition of his ioy and honour. Such was his goodnes, he made vs not that hée ſhould haue any pleaſure by vs, but that we ſhould haue pleaſure by hym. The third lye is this, that no other creature here in earth doth ſeruice and honour to God but onely mā. This is alſo a ſtarke lye for all creatures honour God through their creation and being, for the whole glory of their creation redowneth into the honour of God and what ſeruice cā they do better thē ſo to glorifie God? Neither yet letteth he them bee idle but worketh thorough them meruelous thynges and all to his glory. Fire at his commaūdement came downe frō heauen and burnt Sodome and Gomorra. Geneſis xix. was that no honour and ſeruice: he made a ſtronge and burnyng wynde to drye vp and deuide the red Sea. Exod. xiiij. At his voyce the winde and ſea were obedient and ware calme. Pſal. cvij. was this no honour & ſeruice? But a man may ſée that his wytte was ſo purged in Purgatory, that hee hath not one droppe left to eſpye any truth at all.

God made vs not for his pleaſure but that we ſhould receaue pleaſure by him

Gene. 19. Exod. 14. Math. 8.

But yet let vs ſée how he aunſwereth the argument, and ſeuerally examine euery part. The firſt part was: that contrition or repentaunce is the very payment & ſatiſfaction for ſinne.

Raſtell.

To this hee aunſwereth, that when thou takeſt repētaunce and aſkeſt mercy of God for thyne offēce: No mā ought to be ſo fooliſh to thinke that God ſhould bee reſtrayned or cōpelled, but that it is at his libertie whether he will forgeue or no.

An other of Raſtels fooliſh argumentes.

Frith. I would be loth to moue the man and aſke hym what repentaunce is: for ſurely as farre as I can gather by his woordes he wotteth nothing what it meaneth. But I pray you ſée how ſubſtantially he aunſwereth the argument. It argueth that contrition or repentaunce is the very payment and ſatiſfaction for ſinne. And to that aūſwereth he neither yea nor nay, for feare of trappyng (all beit the woordes are cleane agaynſt Scripture.) But he aunſwereth that when thou takeſt repentaūce and aſkeſt mercy of God for thy ſinne: no man ought to be ſo folliſhe to thinke that God ſhould bee conſtrayned or compelled to forgeue thée. But for all ỹ this is ſure inough that if repentaunce be the very pay-

Repentaunce is no satisfactiō for our sinne, but Christes death onely ment and satisfaction for sinne (as the argument falsly supposeth) that God of his iustice must nedes forgeue me when I repent. For thē haue I wholly payed him his and may require my right euen by his iustice. If thou obiect that God were then restrayned & compelled, I aunswere nay. But it were rather a greate pleasure vnto him to forgeue all mē if so they could make satisfaction vnto hys iustice by repentaunce, for he reioyseth not in Rastell. punishyng vs. Then addeth Rastell that it is at his libertie alway to execute iustice or mercy at his pleasure. To that I aūswere, that he hath Frith. no pleasure to do agaynst his Scripture, but therein hath he fully opened his pleasure. His pleasure is to forgeue frely all them that beleue in his sonne Christ Jesu, and to condemne thē that belene not. If Rastell meane on this fashion then graunt we hym. But if he vnderstād that God taketh hys pleasure & libertie in ministryng his mercy and iustice, so that hee may condemne him which hath geuen the very payment and full satisfaction of sinne (as it seemeth he should meane seing hee denyeth not the first part of the argument) and agayne saue hym that belened not, then will I say that Rastell rūneth ryotte and taketh hys own pleasure. For God hath no power agaynst hym selfe and hys Scripture, but loke what he hath promised and that he will performe. And therfore in this can Rastell proue no purgatory for all that hee groundeth hym on so many lyes.

God forgeueth for Christes sake & not otherwise.

Rastell groundeth hym vppon lyes & imaginations.

But yet is it necessary that we declare vnto you what is the very satisfaction for sinne and then shall we see whether Purgatory may stand with it or not.

8. Heb. 10. Paule sayth Hebr. x. that Christ with one oblation hath satisfied for our sinnes, for we are halowed (saith hee) by the offeryng of the body of Christ Jesu whiche was once done (vppon the crosse) and with that one oblation hath hee made them whiche are halowed perfite for euer. Now if this be true that we are made perfite by the oblation of hys owne body vpon the crosse, then is Purgatory in vayne. For if he haue so purged vs, what nede we an other purgation? If we be made perfite thorough hym what nede we after this lyfe to bee purged? If hee haue satisfied for vs, why seke we an other satisfaction? why leaue we the fountaine of liuing water and seke our refreshing out of polluted powles and specially sith the headspryng is so ready at hand?

Christes merites vterly setteth aside Purgatory.

If we must make satisfaction vnto God for our sinnes, then would I know why Christ died? thinke ye that his bloud was shed in vayne? This is no doubt, if there were any other way vnto the father thē thorough Christes bloud, whether Purgatory or sacrifices or what thou canst imagine, thē was his death not necessary. But alas what vnkindnesse is ý so to deiect the precious bloud of Christ and to set his gracious fauour at naught? If there be any meanes by the which I may satisfie for my sinnes, I nede no redemer nor yet any fauour. But may call for my right and duety. And so were there no nede of Christes bloud mercy & fauor. But what may be more blasphemous vnto Christes bloud and his frē redemption?

9. There is no meane to purge vs but onely the death of Christ.

Christ is able fully and for euer to saue thē that come vnto God by hym seyng hee euer lyueth to make intercession for vs. Hebr. vij. If he be able fully & for euer to saue vs, why runne we from hym and seke an other Purgatory? If he make intercession for vs, then is it lyke that he is no cruell stepfather towardes vs, but rather ý by all meanes hee seketh our health, why flye we from hym that offereth hym selfe so louyngly to vs? why dare we not put our trust in hym, whiche when we were his enemyes vouchsafed to dye for vs, and to reconcile vs vnto his father. Rom. 5.

10. Christ is hable fully to saue all that commeth to God by him.

Now maketh he Comyngo his Almany, to bryng in an example, and in confutyng that he thinketh to wynne the fielde. But we will shew you that his similitude is nothing lyke in dede. But if he will imagine that it be lyke, then doth he not cōfute it but maketh it stronger. The example is this: If I

Raſtell. humbly deſire thee to forgeue, diſcharge & pardon me & thou make me a cleare releaſe therof then am I not bounde to make thee any other payment or ſatiſfaction.
Frith. To proue that the ſimilitude is nought, and nothyng lyke to the purpoſe, is very eaſie. For the purpoſe and firſt part of the argument was this: that contrition or repẽtaunce is the very paymẽt and ſatiſfactiõ for ſinne.
Raſtels ſimilitude is not good. Therfore if he will haue it like, then muſt he ſuppoſe that this humble requeſt of forgeueneſſe, diſcharge and pardon is the very payment and ſatiſfaction for that. C. li. and therfore vpõ that ſhould they firſt haue agreed or els cã the example ſerue for nothyng. Now if he make them lyke and imagine that this humble deſire or forgeuenes is the very payment and ſatiſfactiõ for that. C. li. then hath he made a rod for his own arſe, for he ſhall neuer be able to anoyde it. But let vs ſée his aunſwere.

Raſtell. In the caſe that you haue put (ſayth Raſtell) if you deſire me forgeueneſſe of that. C. li. yet is it at my libertie and gentlenes whether I will forgeue thee the whole. C. li. or els part therof, well bitte Maſter Raſtels ſimilitude clearely cõfounded.

Now where you obiect the recompenſe for the loſſe of tyme and damages, hurt and hinderaunce that you haue had for the none paymẽt of that. C. li. and ſo forth, that can not be applyed vnto God and the remiſſion of our ſinnes. For there is no ſuch loſſe of tyme, damage, hurt or hinderaũce towardes God. For we neither hurt nor hynder hym although we neuer aſke forgeueneſſe but be damned perpetually. So that it is our profite to aſke it, and our hurt and hinderaũce if we aſke it not. If I owe a mã. xx. li. the lenger I kẽpe it the more is my profite & the more his loſſe: but God receaueth vs young, he receaueth vs at mãs ſtate, he receaueth vs old, and thinketh it no loſſe or hurt then to receaue vs, for he ſaith by his Prophet.

The second argument.

NOw let vs see his secõd argumẽt which is in the .iij. chap. and is surely fond, how beit his solution is yet more folishe. The summe of his argument is this.

Rastell. Man was made and ordeined to haue an infinite beyng, therfore after this mortalitie and death hee must haue infinite ioye or infinite payne.

Frith. I will put you a like argument. A man is ordeined in this world to be a kyng or a subiect therefore after he is borne he is euer a kyng or els euer a subiect. Now may this be false, for peraduenture he may be borne a subiect and after made king or els he may bee borne a kyng and after deposed & made a subiect. Therefore this argument holdeth not formally. But it holdeth on this maner, as I should say to an Ape thou must nedes be an ape or an asse, whiche now is true. But if I should say the very same wordes to M. Iohn Rastell, I thinke he would be angry and say that it were false. And I suppose our scholemen will say that he lyeth, and put hym an example of the infantes that dye without Christendome, whiche (as the scholemen say) shall neuer haue ioy nor payne. But I wil graunt him his argument to see how properly he will confute it.

Rasteis second argument confuted.

Vnproper conclusion.

Now marke his aunswere which standeth in the v. chapter.

Rastell. There are degrees in sinnes, some sinnes are great and some greater, and therfore must there be degrees in punishment, some punishment is great and some greater.

Frith. Well for your pleasure I am content to graũt you this to. But els were it a matter worthy disputation what now?

Rastell. When that a man (sayth Rastell) here in earth hath committed a great sinne and offence and taken repentaunce whereby the sinne is forgeuẽ (marke that he beyng ignoraunt of Christ, sayth through repentaunce the sinne is forgeuẽ,) and yet hath not taken such sufficient repẽtaunce therfore, nor had any sufficiẽt punishmẽt which should make a full payment and satisfaction for that sinne, and dyeth before any condigne or full satisfaction made, God must then of his righteousnes ordeine a place of Purgatory, wher his soule shall haue a further punish ment to make a condigne and full satisfaction for that sinne, and so to bee purged and purified before it shalbe able and woorthy to be admitted to receaue the eternall ioye in heauen.

Rastelles fond argument to proue a Purgatory

Frith. First brethren you must graunt, that we haue a Christ or no Christ: a redemer or no redemer: a iustifier or no iustifier. If there be none such (as Rastell with his Turke Gingemini suppose) then all the repentaunce in the worlde could not satisfie for one sinne, but who soeuer committed a sinne should be damned therfore. So that Rastell speaketh and seyeth all in diminutiues, for where he should of truth spye hell, there espyeth he but Purgatory. And where he should say that all sinners (if they sticke not to Christes bloud) shall be damned eternally, there sayth he that they shalbe punished in Purgatory. And to be short, if Rastell say truth thẽ is Christ dead in payne: If hee say not truth why sticke you to his reasõ? But peraduenture thou that knowest Christ wilt say (as many doe) that Christes death and redemptiõ serueth thẽ but for originall sinne, or at most for those sinnes that thou committedest before Baptisme: To that I aunswere with S. John.

Rasteis second argument clearly cõfuted.

In aunswere to an obiection.

Childzen, this do I write vnto you that ye sinne not. And if any man sinne, yet we haue an aduocate with the father, Jesus Christe, whiche is righteous. And he it is that obtaineth grace for our sins, not for our sinnes onely, but also for the sinnes of all the world. To whõ wrote. S. John. this Epistle? Thinke you that he wrote not vnto the Christen and them that were all ready Baptised? And yet he sayd: if any man sinne, we haue an aduocate with ỹ father, Jesus Christ which is righteous: and he it is that obtaineth grace for our sinnes. Loe he admunbreth him selfe also: for he sayth

Ye may ſee that he meaneth not onely original ſinne, neither yet the ſinnes done before baptiſme: for I doubt not but he was Baptized whē he wrote this Epiſtle, and yet ſayd he: if we ſinne (meaning after Baptiſme or when ſoeuer it be) we haue an aduocate with the father Jeſus Chriſt, this is S. Johns learning: he knew no other remedy if we fell into ſinne, but onely Chriſt. Notwithſtandyng our Prelates haue prayſed further, for they ſay: if any man ſinne be ſhal lye in the paynes of purgatory, vntill he be delinered thence by Maſſe pence, the Popes pardon or certaine other Suffragies, but not without money you may be ſure.

If we fall into ſinne, we haue no remedy but Chriſt our aduocate.

16. Chriſt ſayth (no man commeth vnto the father but thorough me. John. xiij. for ſayth hee) I am the way, yes Lord, our Prelates haue eſpyed an other way, whiche although it be more paynfull vnto the poore, yet is it more profitable for Prelates.

Now ſeyng he had occaſion to make mention of the dead, and ſpake not one word of Purgatory, it is playne inough that he knew nothyng of it or els was hee very negligent to ouerhyppe it. But yet had I leuer ſay that Purgatory were but a phantaſie of mans imagination, then to aſcribe ſuch forgetfulnes or negligence vnto that Apoſtle.

Purgatory is but a phanſie of mans imagination.

The thyrd reaſon that Raſtell alleageth is in the vj. chapter, the ſume is this. There are degrees of ioye in heauen, and degrees of payne in hell. And therefore may God paſſe euery mā and geue him accordyng to his deſerte, either more or leſſe and neuer needē Purgatory. Well let vs graūt theſe degrees for Raſtels pleaſure although the queſtion be ſo diſputable that I am ſure he can not defend it. What folowyth on this? forſoth he bryngeth in proper examples if they could ſerue for ỹ purpoſe. But let vs paſſe ouer to his ſolutiō which is in the end of the vj. chapter.

The thyrd argument.

Whē a man (ſayth Raſtell) is infected with a great mortall ſinne and ſo depart, then his ſoule ought not to doe ſeruice in heauen vnto God becauſe it is putrified with that foule ſinne. But if that man had taken the medicine of full repentaunce in hys lyfe, that medicine would haue reſtored him againe to his ſoule health and vertue. (But here you muſt remember that Chriſt is dead in vayne, for if repentaunce be the medicine that reſtoreth agayne the health & vertue of the ſoule, what nēdeth Chriſt.) Now forth. But if he haue taken (ſayth Raſtell) ſome repētaunce for that ſinne and not ſufficient, and had not ſufficient tyme to make ſufficient ſatiſfaction therfore, yet by the takyng of that medicine of repentaunce, that ſinne is expelled and gone, and the ſoule of that ſickeneſſe and ſinne is clearely whole, but yet the ſpottes and tokens of the ſinne which is a deformitie to the ſoule doe ſtill remayne till the ſoule haue a time to be purged from thoſe tokens and ſpottes to make it pure and cleane of that deformitie.

Frith. This man is euer in one ſuppoſition which is both falſe and iniurious vnto the precious bloud of Chriſt. I wonder who taught him that concluſion, and why hee graunteth ſo ſone vnto it, for he would not haue graunted that there were a God, neither that ỹ ſoule was immortall (although they were both true) vntil he had proued it (as he thought him ſelf) by good naturall reaſon. Raſtels naturall reaſō doth foule deceaue both hym & his Turke Gyngemin. But as for this that is ſtarke falſe (that is to ſay) that repentaūce while he excludeth Chriſt, doth ſatiſfie for our ſinne, hee neuer putteth in queſtion, but graunteth it by and by, belike the Turkes haue ſuch an opinion. But let him go with his Turke and let vs Chriſten men graunt nothing contrary to the ſcripture, but euer captiuate our reaſon vnto that, for it is the infallible reaſō and wiſedome of God, & paſſeth our reaſon farre.

The iiij. argument. Ephes. 5. Cant. 4. Raſtell. THe fourth reaſon is propounded in the viij. chapter whiche is this: that the ſoule vnpurged maye doe ſome meane & low ſeruice to God in heauen, though it bee not the higheſt & beſt, which thing is falſe & agaynſt Scripture. Epheſ. v. Cāt. iiij. But let vs ſée what aunſwere he maketh vnto it. His aūſwers begynneth in the ix. chap. & the ſumme is this.

Raſtelles aunſwere to his iiij. argument. Heauen is ſo pure and cleane of nature, that it muſt expell all maner of impuritie and vnclennes, neither can it ſuffer any thyng therin, that is of any maner vnclenneſſe or euill, or other thyng vnpleaſaunt. So now it foloweth that when a mā hath cōmitted a mortall ſinne and after taketh repentaunce by the whiche he is healed of the ſoule infirmitie. (Sée how he harpeth all of one ſtring whiche is alſo ſo farre out of tune that I wonder how any man tā abyde him. For if I can heale mine infirmitie through repentaūce wherfore dyed Chriſt? Frith. But yet (ſayth he) the ſpots and tokens remayne for lacke of ful ſatiſfaction. I aunſwere that it remaineth euery whitte, ſinne, ſpottes, tokens, & all together except Chriſt haue takē it frō of vs, through his death and bitter paſſiō. Therfore ſaith Raſtel) God of his iuſtice may Raſtell. not condemne his ſoule to eternall paine in hell for that offence which is purged and put away. Wherwith is it purged and put away?

There is no remiſſion of ſinne without bloud. Hebr. ix. If there be no remiſſiō without bloud, what ſhall repentaunce doe, where the bloud of Chriſt is excluded? yea or what ſhall thy Purgatory doe, for there is no bloudſhed. So is there nothyng that taketh awaye ſinne: but onely the bloud of Chriſt Jeſu, ſhed for our redemption. 21. Frith. Hebr. 9. Sinne can not be take away but by ỹ bloud of Jeſu Chriſt.

And yet (ſayth Raſtell) God by his iuſtice and by hys diſcrete wyſedome and goodnes ought not immediatly to receaue that ſoule into that cleane and moſt pure place in heauen to accompany the pure aungels. &c. No mary I waraunt thée, be not afrayde of that, for neither Gyngemin thy companyon nor thou neither ſhall enter in there, either immediatly or mediatlye, if ye exclude Chriſt as ye haue done hetherto, no not if ye had taken all the repentaūce in the world, and would thereto imagine as many Purgatoryes as will peſen into a Monkes coule. Raſtell. The v. argument. Raſtell. THe fift Argumēt that he bryngeth agaynſt Purgatory is touched in hys his x.chapter, the summe is this. It should seeme conuenient that this Purgatory (if there were one) should be in earth: partly because the body which offendeth with the soule might be purged with the soule: & partly to bee a good example to all men lyuing to put them in feare to doe any like offence, and so should cause many to abstayne from committyng any such lyke offence and sinne, or elles where should Purgatory be?

Frith. This reason hath no great pyth. Notwithstanding if it were well prosecuted, it would be to hard for Rastell to auoyde it. For this is no formall argument, it is méete ỳ the body which offendeth with the soule should be purged with the soule, Ergo, Purgatory must be vppon the earth. For God may ioyne the body and soule together agayne after they be departed and so punishe them together although purgatory were not in earth, euen where soeuer it be. And therfore thus me thinketh it shoulde well followe.

How Rastel proueth that Purgatory is vpon the earth.

13. The body was felow and partener with the soule in committyng the crime and sinne, and shall also be partaker of the glory, which is prepared for them that loue God. Wherfore it is reason if the soule should bee purged and punished in Purgatory: that the body should also suffer with hym in Purgatory: fayne the place of Purgatory where you will, in heauen, in earth or in hell. But wote ye what Rastell would here say vnto me? forsoth euen as he dyd in the first chapter of the thyrd Dialogue, that is to say: hee would stoutely affirme that the body suffereth neither well nor woe, ioy nor payne, good nor euill, and therfore it needeth not goe to Purgatory. And by that reason it is follie that the body should go either to heauen or hell, for it neither feeleth pleasure nor payne, this is new learnyng in déede. But I thinke there is no Christen man so folishe as to beleue hym.

Rastelles fond conclusiõ of his v. argument.

And as for the second poynt that it should be a good example to put men in feare for committyng such trespasses, it were sone aunswered. For we ought not to abstaine from euill because of ỳ punishmẽt that followeth the crime but onely for the loue that we haue to God without any respect either of saluation or of damnatiõ. If thou abstaine for feare, so art thou vnder the law and vnder damnatiõ: The law of God and the law of man are farre vnlike: for the law of má is fulfilled by the exteriour act although the hart be farre from it. As if I owe a man.xx.pound and be compelled by the law to pay hym at a certaine day: if I then pay albeit myne hart be neuer so grudging and euill willing, yet haue I fulfilled the law so that there shall no procesle or sentence passe agaynst me. But Gods law requireth a thyng to bee done with a well willyng hart, and euẽ for pure loue. For if thou do it for feare or vnwillyngly ỳ shall be imputed vnto thée for sinne. If thou do it for feare, then worke thou not of loue, but rather hatest both the thing that thou doest, and also the law that constraineth the vnto it. And if thou do it vnwillyngly then willest thou to do the contrary, and so wouldest thou that there were no such lawe neither yet any God that should iudge thée in so doyng. And sith God iudgeth thée after thine hart and will, then must thée néedes condemne thée, for thou willest contrary vnto his law and wil: yea & willest in thine hart contrary to that thou doest in thyne outward déede.

We may not abstaine from sinne for feare, but for loue

The law of God, & the law of man doth greatly vary.

The law of God requireth the hart and mynde.

The law of man requireth the body and outwarde deedes.

Now let vs sée his solution which is in the xi.chapter and so folish, that if it were not for the great length of the chapter, for losse of tyme and for the more cost in Printyng, I would surely haue aunswered vnto it at length, euen that he should haue ben ashamed of hym selfe. But to be short we will touch some of hys woordes. The first part of the argument which he entendeth to aunswere to, is this: that it should seeme cõuenient that Purgatory should be here on earth, because the body which offendeth with the soule should bee purged with the soule. This reason is of no value as I haue shewed you before. But what sayth Rastell?

Rastelles solution.

That reason (sayth Rastell) proueth not onely that there is no Purgatory, but also that there should be neither heauen nor hell. For if a man haue lyued so vertuously in earth, that he ought to be saued & goe to the ioyes of heauen, (let vs pardon hym this lye, for the Prophet sayth that no man shall be iustified in ỹ sight of God, if he enter into iudgement with vs Psalme. C. xliij. And yet did neuer meritorious acte but onely when the soule was ioyned with the body, then should he neuer be rewarded, but here in earth while his soule is ioyned with the body. Here may ye perceaue what Rastell thinketh of heauen and hell, euen thus that the body shall neuer come in heauen nor hell, whiche poynte I will touche more largely anone. First where Comingo in hys argument sayth, that it should seme conuenient for Purgatory to be vpō earth, there sayth Rastell ỹ he would take away the libertie, prerogatiue, and authoritie of God. As by example, if I would say, It should seme cōuenient that the Byshop of Londons palace should be in Londō, partly because it is ỹ chiefest Citie of his Diocesse, and partly because it is nigh the Court whereto he may the better resort to get further promotion, there would Rastell say by and by that I take the Byshops libertie, prerogatiue, and authoritie that he might not set it where he would: belike this mā hath dronke of a mery cuppe. He affirmeth also that this argument taketh away both heauen and hell: why so? Because hee supposeth it conuenient that Purgatory should be here vppon earth. Albeit he say it is conuenient, yet sayth hee not that it must needes be. Nay, but there is an other thyng that Rastels sore yes can not abyde. What is that? verely for he added that it were most conuenient that the body whiche is partaker in committyng the crime, should also be purged and punished with the soule. And that as ye knowe plucketh Rastell by the beard, for he went about to proue the contrary in the first chapter, that ỹ body hath neither payne nor pleasure. &c. But how should this take away heauen and hell? forsoth on this maner. Rastell thinketh not that God cā and will ioyne the body agayne with the soule after this transitory life that they may together receaue ioye or payne for ỹ passeth his natural Philosophy. But thus he imagineth, when the body and soule are once departed, thē say they adieu for euer and a day. Therfore (thinketh he) if God will punish them in hell together, or saue them together in heauen, thē he must take them whiles they are here liuyng in earth. And so this supposition that the body must suffer with ỹ soule (after Rastels learnyng) must proue that heauen and hell be here in earth or els there cā be none. Se this learned man ỹ would proue Purgatory by good Philosophy.

Rastels reason kapieth hym.

Frith.

Rastell doth to much abuse hym selfe.

Rastell. Frith.

Rastells contrary to hym selfe.

Rastell hath here a foule ouerthrow.

The second cause, that Purgatory should be a good example to the liuing to put them in feare to do any like offence, is not soluted of Rastell, but I haue soluted it before and will yet satisfie you agayne because Rastell leaueth it out. We haue here in ỹ world Moses & the Prophetes that is ỹ old Testament, yea & also Christ & his Apostles, which we call the new Testament, now if we beleue not these thē shall we not surely beleue although we had Purgatory & hel to amōg vs. And this may well bee gathered of Christes owne wordes. Luke. xvi. Where he brought in ỹ parable of ỹ rich mā & Lazarus, for ỹ rich mā being in paynes desired Abrahā to send Lazarus vnto his brethrē to warne them that they might not come into that fire. Abrahā aunswered agayne, ỹ they had Moses & the Prophetes. And added, let them heare them. Thē sayd the rich mā: Nay father Abrahā, but if any of them that are departed appeare vnto them, then will they beleue it. And Abraham concludeth on this maner. If they beleue not Moses and the Prophetes, no more will they beleue if any of the dead should rise agayne. And therfore may I likewise conclude, that if they beleue not, neither yet feare the paynes which Moſes and the Prophets, yea and Chriſt and his Apoſtles haue propheſied to fall on the vnfaythfull, then will they not beleue for feare of the paynes of Purgatory.

Raſtell. Now to the laſt pointe where Purgatory ſhould be, he aunſwereth as Frith. you ſhall heare. Firſt ỳ it is a fooliſh queſtion (for hee can not aunſwere vnto it by his Philoſophy.) And then Raſtell can not tell where purgatory is, whether on the earth or els where. he ſayth that no man can tell, neither the place neither yet the maner of the payne. Here maketh he. S. Thomas yea and all our Scholemen fooles by craft: partly becauſe they take vpon them to aunſwere vnto this queſtion whiche he calleth fooliſh, and partly becauſe they fully determine that the place of Purgatory is the third place in hell, and all to aſſigne fire to be the maner of ỳ payne. And agayne in this laſt part hee proueth thẽ double fooles. Once becauſe they ſtoutly affirme that thyng which no man can tell (as Raſtel ſayth) And agayns becauſe they reſtrayne God of his libertie that aſſigne any place & make him of leſſe authoritie then an inferiour iudge: which hath no place aſſigned hym, but may doe execution and puniſh the giltie in what place he will. I wonder that our Scholemen may abyde this felow.

Raſtell. And then he ſayth that Purgatory is in a place limitatiue. And where ſoeuer God doth limitte the ſoule to bee purged there is the limitatiue place of that ſoule and there is Purgatory is not in one place onely but in many & diuers places. the Purgatory of that ſoule. So ỳ a man may gather by Raſtell that the ſoules bee not limited to one place to be purged and puniſhed. And therto a greth alſo his ſimilitude of the iudge whiche aſſigneth one to be puniſhed in one place, and an other in an other place, euen at his pleaſure. If ſuch geare had come from beyond the Sea it ſhould ſone haue bene condemned although it had not bene halfe ſo grenous agaynſt our Scholemen. But let this paſſe as it is well worthy, and let vs ſée & examine more of this newfangled Philoſophy.

NOw are we come vnto the firſt argument whiche begynneth in the.xy.chapter the effect is this. Raſtels vi. argument.

Repentaunce is the full payment and ſatiſfaction of ſinne and bryngeth remiſsion, therfore as ſoone as repentaunce is taken, God of his iuſtice muſt geue remiſsiõ, and ſo there ought to be no Purgatory.

Frith. This argument is nothyng worth, for the firſt part as we haue oftẽ proued is falſe. For if repentaunce were the full payment and very ſatiſfaction for ſinne, then dyed Chriſt in vayne. Notwithſtandyng if hee graunt this firſt part to be true, neither he nor all his felowes ſhal be able to ſolute this argument whyle they lyue. But becauſe we will be ſhort, let vs paſſe ouer to his aunſwere whiche is in the.xiij.chapter.

Raſtell. In ſolutyng this argument hee groundeth hym on two lyes at once, the firſte is that God neuer geueth remiſsion except he ſee in vs a conuenient cauſe counterpayſyng hys iuſtice.

Frith. What cauſe ſounde he in the man that was brought vnto hym ſicke of the palſie, to whom he ſayd: be of good comfort (ſonne) thy ſinnes are forgiuen thée? Math.ix. Marke.ij. Luke.v. what cauſe found he in the thefe that was crucified with him, but that hee had bene an vnthryft all his life lõg? And yet euen the ſame day that hee ſuffred with Chriſt was he partaker of ioye with him in Paradiſe. Luke. xxiij. Where was Purgatory then where was the puniſhment that hee ſhould haue ſuffered for his enormities? If any mã ſhould ſuffer in Purgatory, it is like that this thefe ſhould haue done it. But he went from death to life, & neuer came in Purgatory, wherfore I may conclude that no mã ſhall come there, if there were any. What cauſe I pray you doth Paule aſſigne as touching our redẽptiõ & remiſſion of our ſinne? forſooth no other but ỳ we were wretched ſinners and the very enemyes of God. Roma.v. 25.

The ſhedyng of Chriſtes bloud is our ſaluation.

But the whole cauſe of the remiſſion of our ſinnes & of our ſaluation, is the bloud of Chriſt which hath fully counterpayſed the iuſtice of God the father, & hath pacified his wrath towardes vs that beleue. He is the very Purgatory for all faithful which hath already purged our ſinnes & ſitteth on the right hand of the father.

And in lyke maner if I haue offended God and my neighbour, Albeit God for geue me his deale, yet can he not of iuſtice forgeue me my neyghbours deale to, but yet muſt I make ſatiſfaction vnto my neyghbour. Now in caſe I would and be not able to ſatiſſie my neyghbour, and There is no way to pacifie the wrath of God agaynſt our ſinnes, but fayth in Chriſt. yet he forgeue me not, then muſt I ſuffer in the paynes of Purgatory for it: & thoſe paynes ſhall ſtãd my neighbour in profite for part of his Purgatory if he come there or els to the increaſe of his ioy if he go to hea-heauē: this is ỹ ſūme but he ſpeaketh it in many mo wordes. Now becauſe he hath touched the matter of ſatiſfactiō I wil ſhew you my minde therin.

Frith. There are twoo maner of ſatiſfactions. The one is to God: the other to my neighbour. To God can not all the worlde make ſatiſfaction for one crime. In ſo much that if euery graſſe of the grounde were a man, euen as holy as euer was Paul or Peter and ſhould pray vnto God all their lyues long for one crime, yet could they not make ſatiſfaction for it. But it is onely the bloud of Chriſt that hath made full ſatiſfaction vnto God for all ſuch crimes. Heb. vij. or els were there no remedy but we ſhould all periſh: as I haue proued before. And he that ſeeketh any other ſatiſfaction towardes God then Chriſt our Sauiour, hee doth wrong vnto his precious bloud.

Hebr. 7.

There is an other ſatiſfactiō which is vnto my neighbour whom I haue offended. As if I haue taken any mās good from hym. For then am I bound to paciſie him either by reſtoring it agayne or els by other meanes as we two can agrée. If I haue diffamed hym, then am I bound to paciſie him, and to reſtore him vnto his good fame agayne, and ſo forth. But if I be not able to ſatiſfie him, thē muſt I knowledge my ſelfe giltie and deſire him to forgeue me and then is he bounde to forgeue me, or els ſhal he neuer enter into heauē. For God hath taught vs to pray. Math. vj. that he ſhould forgeue vs, as we forgeue them that treſpaſſe againſt vs, ſo if that we forgeue not one an other then will not God forgeue vs. To this well agréeth the parable. Math. xviij. The kyngdome of heauen is likened vnto a certaine kyng which would take accomptes of his ſeruauntes. And when he had begon to recken, one was brought to hym, whiche ought him ten thouſand talentes: but when he had nought to pay, the Lord commaunded him to be ſold, and his wife and his children, & all that he had, & payment to be made. The ſeruaunt fell downe & beſought him ſaying: Syr geue me reſpite, and I will paye it euery whit. Then had the Lord pitie on the ſeruaunt and loſed him and forgaue him ỹ debt. The ſame ſeruaunt went out and founde one of his felowes, which ought hym an. C. pence. And layed handes on hym and toke him by the throat, ſaying: pay that thou oweſt. And his felow fell downe and beſought him ſaying: haue pacience with me & I will pay thée all: & he would not, but went and caſt him into priſon till he ſhould pay the debt. Whē his other felowes ſaw what was done they were very ſory and came & told vnto their Lord all that happened. Then the Lord called hym & ſayd vnto him. O euill ſeruaunt I forgaue thée all the debt, becauſe ỹ praydeſt me: was it not méete alſo ỹ thou ſhouldeſt haue had cōpaſſion on thy felow, euen as I had pitie on thée: And his Lord was wroth and deliuered him to the gaylers, till he ſhould paye all that was due to hym. So lykewiſe ſhall your heauenly father doe vnto you if you will not forgeue with your harts, eche one to his brother their treſpalles. Here mayeſt thou ſée that if you forgeue hartly the ſmall debt or offence ỹ thy neighbour hath done againſt thée, then will thy heauenly father forgeue thée, ỹ whole and great debt that thou oweſt hym, for the which thou art well worthy to be damned. And ſo is it more profitable for thée to forgeue it then that thy neighbour ſhould broyle in Purgatory for it, as Raſtell fayneth. And contrarywiſe if thou forgeue him not, thē ſhall not God forgeue thée thy great debt, but thou ſhalt ſurely be dāned, and ſo ſhall not thy neighbours Purgatory profite thée (be it in caſe there were one and that he ſhould goe thether) but it is rather the cauſe of thy dānation: but this can not Raſtell ſée.

Except we be ready to forgeue thē that offend vs God will not forgeue vs.

NOw be we come vnto the ſeuēth reaſon which is in the. xiij. chap. The argumēt is this. God is the very owner of all, and thy neighbour hath no propertie, but as a ſeruaūt to God, as but to make accompt to God. Therfore when thou doeſt an offence to God and to thy neyghbour, whē God forgeueth it thou nedeſt no other ſatiſfactiō vnto thy neighneighbour. And to ſtablish his reaſō hē bringeth in a ſimilitude, which is nothing to ẏ purpoſe. The ſimilitude is this. I put caſe thou haue a ſeruaunt whom thou putteſt in truſt to occupy for thee, to make bargaynes chaunge and ſell to thy vſe, to take bondes and agayn to make acquitaunces and releaſes in hys own name. If this ſeruaunt ſell part of thy ware and take an obligation for the payment of xx. pounde, if thou afterward knowyng of this, either for loue or ſome other cauſe wilt make vnto the ſayd debtour a cleare releaſe: I ſuppoſe no mā will deny but that this debtour is fully diſcharged of this. xx. pounde, and is not bounde by any iuſtice to make any ſatiſfaction either vnto thy ſeruaunt or to any other man. For thou art the very owner therof, and thy ſeruaunt had but the occupation as to geue the accoumptes therof.

This ſimilitude is not proper betwene God and man, as it is betwene man and man.

Frith. This ſimilitude can not well be applyed vnto God & man. For albeit it is true that all our ſubſtaunce pertaineth vnto God as it is writtē. Agge. ij. Gold is myne and ſiluer is myne: yet hath not God geuen it vs to occupy it for his profite and vſe (as the ſeruaunt doth for his maſter) but onely that we ſhould vſe his giftes for ẏ profite of our neighbour and to ẏ vſe of the cōgregation. i. Cor. xij. And where as he inducēth that when God forgeueth vs whiche is the principall part, ẏ thou nēdeſt no other ſatiſfaction to thy neighbour. I aunſwere that God forgeueth no mā which had offended his neighbour, vnleſſe that he make ſatiſfaction vnto his neighbour, if he be able but if he be not able, yet is he bound to knowledge his faulte vnto his neighbour and then is hys neighbour bound vnder the payne of damnatiō to forgeue him, ſo that God neuer forgeueth vntyll thy neyghbour be pacified in caſe the cryme extende vnto thy neighbour. This ſoluteth both the reaſon and alſo improueth the ſimilitude. Now let vs declare his ſolution.

1. Cor. 12.

God forgeueth no mā that offendeth hys neighbour, except he firſt reconcile him ſelf to his neighbour.

Raſtell. God of him ſelfe hath two powers: One is an abſolute power, and an other is an ordinary power. The abſolute power is the authoritie that God hath ouer all thing in the world, by that he may geue to euery creature what pleaſeth him, and alſo forgeue euery offence done by any creature at his pleaſure without any cauſe. And by this may he forgeue both the crime done towardes him ſelfe, and alſo towards my neighbour. But by his ordinary power hee doth euery thyng by order of iuſtice and equitie. And by this can he not forgeue the offence done to him and my neyghbour without ſatiſfaction.

Raſtels ſolution to his ſeuen argument.

Frith. Now would I fayne wete, whether Raſtel imagine ẏ God by his abſolute power may ſaue ẏ vnfaithfull & dāne the faithfull. If he ſay nay, then may I cōclude ẏ Raſtels diffinition is falſe where he ſaith: that god by his abſolute power may geue to euery creature what pleaſeth him, and alſo forgeue euery offence done by any creature at his pleaſure without any cauſe. If he ſay yea, thē muſt I cōclude that God hath power to do contrary to hys Scripture, for the Scripture ſaith: that he that beleueth and is Baptized ſhalbe ſaued, but he that beleueth not ſhalbe condemned. Mark. xvi. Now if he graunt me that he hath power to do againſt his ſcripture, (ſith his Scripture is the truth & his own word,) then muſt it nēdes folow ẏ he hath power to doe agaynſt his truth: & conſequētly he hath power to be falſe, and ſo to ſinne. And ſith hee hath power agaynſte hys owne word, and that word is his ſonne, thē muſt we graunt hym power agaynſt hys ſonne, euen to make hym a lyer where he ſayth in the foreſayd texte Mark. xvi. And ſith hys ſonne is God, then hath God power to doe agaynſt God and ſo can not his kingdome indure. Math. xij.

vayle vntil his abſolute iuſtice be fully counterpeſed. And ſo is it falſe that Raſtell begynneth withall, that God by his abſolute power may forgeue euery offence at his pleaſure without any cauſe. For (as I ſayd) his abſolute iuſtice muſt nedes be ſatiſfied & fully counterpeſed. If Raſtell dare ſay that God hath an abſolute power and no abſolute iuſtice, then taketh he his pleaſure in dede. For if he make one Nocionall in God greater then an other (by this word Nocionall which ỹ Scholemen vſe, I would you ſhould vnderſtand the godnes, wiſedome, power, iuſtice and mercy of God &c.) then ſhall he make a diſſentiō in God and imagine that one Nocionall ſubdueth an other: yea and beſides that, ſith eche one of theſe Nocionals is very God (for the power of God is nothyng but God hym ſelfe, and the iuſtice of God is nothyng but God hym ſelfe, & ſo forth of all the other) then if his power were greater then his iuſtice, it ſhuld folow ỹ God were greater thē God, & conſequētly we ſhould haue a great God and a litle God and moe Gods then one, ſuch reuell maketh Raſtel with his Turke. But the Chriſten beleue that one power of God is no greater then an other and that hys power is not aboue hys iuſtice, neither hys iuſtice aboue hys mercy &c. And ſo may you ſée that Raſtels imagination of Gods abſolute power is but very childiſh and vnſauery. For he hath no power agaynſt his Scripture and hym ſelfe. Thus finiſh his ſeuen reaſons with their ſolutions.

There is no one power in God greater then an other.

Raſtels imagmatiō of Gods abſolute power is childiſh.

But yet that his worke ſhould lōg indure all tempeſtes and ſtormes, he addeth a batelment and weatherſtone to auoyde and ſhote of the rayne, for feare it ſhould ſoke in and make his buildyng decay. And therwith concludeth his booke.

The concluſion of Raſtels booke.

To beleue (ſayth hee) that there were no Purgatory to purge and puniſh our ſinnes after we be departed, ſhould put away that drede of God from the moſt part of the people and geue them boldnes to commit offences and ſinnes. And agayne, if the people ſhould beleue that they neuer neede to make any ſatiſfaction nor reſtitution to their neighbours for the wronges done vnto them, they ſhould neuer force nor care what iniuries, extortions, theftes, robberies and murthers they did. Finally if they beleued that ſuch a light repētaunce ſhould be ſufficient without any other ſatiſfaction to be made, it ſhould be an occaſion to deſtroy all vertue & increaſe vice and ſinne to the vtter deſtruction of the common wealth and quyet lyuing of the people. And thus much he maketh an end.

As to the firſt where he ſayth that it would put awaye the dreade of God and geue boldnes to ſinne, if we thought there were no Purgatory, we ſée and may euidently perceaue the contrary all day both in young & old of them that beleue there is a Purgatory. The young ſay I wil take my pleaſure whyle I may, and if I may haue but one houres reſpite to cry God mercy, I care not, for then ſhall I go but to Purgatory & ſo ſhall I be ſure to be ſaued. The old ſay: I will kéepe my goods as long as I may for I wote not what nede I ſhal haue. But when I dye I will cry God mercy, and then ſhall I go but to Purgatory, and myne executours that haue my goodes ſhall redeme me thēce well inough. And ſo to beleue Purgatory, is rather an occaſiō of recheleſſe, boldneſſe, then of the feare of God. Beſides that if they knew ỹ there were no Purgatory, then ſhould many the more feare God and do wel them ſelues and not truſt to their executours for feare of damnation, howbeit as I haue ſayd before they that feare not God but for payne whether it be of hell or Purgatory are yet vnder condemnation and not in Gods fauour. And this dare I boldly affirme, that they whiche feare not God but for Purgatoryes ſake ſhall neuer come in it no nor yet in heauen. And therfore it is but folye to imagine Purgatory for that intent.

Frith.

The feare of Purgatory cannot kepe vs frō ſinne but rather ỹ feare of hell and euerlaſting damnation.

Such as feare not God but for Purgatory and helles ſake ſhall neuer come in heauen.

As concernyng the ſecond poynte. If the people beleue that they neded not to make ſatiſfactiō to their neighbours for their treſpaſſes &c. I haue ſufficiently aūſwered before, that we muſt make ſatiſfaction vnto our neighbours, if we be able or els will God neuer forgeue vs. And if we be not able, yet muſt we knowledge our offence & then is our neighbour bounde to forgeue vs vnder the payne of damnation. And ſo can this proue no Purgatory.

Now as touchyng the third, that if they beleued that ſuch a light repentaunce were ſufficient without any other ſatiſfaction, it ſhould be an occaſion of vice and ſubuerſion of the common wealth: I aūſwere, as I haue done before almoſt in euery argument: ſith thou art ignoraunt of Chriſtes death and his ſatiſfaction vnto the father for vs, that all the repentaunce whiche we can take is not ſufficient to counterpeſe one cryme, but that if Chriſt were not we ſhould all be damned. Here will I leaue Raſtell and his Turke Gingemin with all their naturall Philoſophy (which is now proued folilhnes) for hetherto hath he proued no Purgatory, neither hath hee one good reaſon nor yet to that baren reaſons one good ſolution, as we haue ſufficiently declared. But let vs heare ſomewhat more of Gods word: and ſee how Purgatory ſtandeth with that.

All the penaunce and repentaūce in ỹ worlde without fayth in Chriſtes bloud can not ſaue vs.

27. Paul ſaith, we muſt all be brought before the iudgement ſeate of Chriſt, that euery man may receaue accordyng to the workes of his body, whether it be good or bad. 2. Cor. 5. If this be true, then can there be no Purgatory whiche ſhall profite hym after he is diſſolued from his body, for then ſhould he not receaue accordyng to ỹ workes of his body. But rather accordyng to the paynes that he ſuffered in Purgatory. Now if this tert be true then muſt it folow that all thyne executours dealyng, & offeryng of Maſſe pence. &c. helpe thē not a myte. And by this tert it is not poſſible that there ſhould be a Purgatory.

2. Cor. 5.

Upon this tert would I fayne diſpute a poynt of Sophiſtry, whiche I would gladly haue diſſolued of them that thinke thē ſelues learned in Philoſophy. My Sophiſme is, ỹ y. contradictories may ſtād together & be both true. Whiche I am ſure no Sophiſter dare graunt, for it hath in tymes paſt ben condemned in Orford for an hereſie. The cōtradictories are theſe. Euery man ſhall receaue accordyng to the workes of his body. And ſome mā ſhall not receaue accordyng to the workes of his body, that theſe two cōtradictories be both true I will proue. The firſte propoſition is Paules. 2. Cor. 5. which no man will deny to be true. And the ſecōd may eaſely be proued true, which is, that ſome mā ſhall not receaue accordyng to the workes of his body. For be it in caſe ỹ there depart a mā out of this world, which is not cleane purged by fayth and the word of God, neither are his rebellious members ſubdued through death (as they imagine) but that the ſpottes and remnauntes of ſinne remaine in him, for the which he is worthy to lye in the paynes of Purgatorye for the ſpace of fiue yeare. This graunted, which I am ſure they will not deny, then alſo put I the caſe that this man lyeng in Purgatory by the ſpace of a moneth, haue a frend which offereth for hym a peny vnto S. Dominikes bore (which hath ſuch power that aſſone as the tinging is hard in ỹ bore, ſo ſone the ſoule is frē in heauen) or that a frende of his bye a Pardon for hym which may abſolue him a pœna & a culpa for all commeth to one effect. This man deliuered on that maner doth not receaue accordyng to the workes of his body for by the workes of his body he ſhould yet lye in Purgatory more thē fiue yeares: And that doth he not, but is by and by deliuered from Purgatory. Ergo, I may conclude that ſome mā receaueth not accordyng to the workes of his body, & ſo are two contradictories true or els there can be no ſuch deliueraunce out of Purgatory, whiche deſtroyeth all Pardons, Maſſepence and Suffragies for the dead. This would I haue ſolued. Now beit I will not adnumber it for an argument becauſe the vnlearned people (to whom I write this booke)

Contradictories.

How two contradictories may be both true.

booke) can not well perceaue it. But this Sophiſme haue I writtē to ſtop the chatteryng mouthes of the Sophiſters and to caſt them a bone to gnaw vpon.

28. Paule ſayth, you whiche were in tymes paſt ſtraungers and enemyes becauſe your myndes were ſet in euil workes hath he now recōciled in the body of hys fleſhe thorough death to make you holy & ſuch as no man can complayne on, and without faulte in his owne ſight if ye continue grounded and ſtabliſhed in the fayth, and be not moued away from the hope of the Goſpell. Coloſ. i. Here Paule affirmeth that you are reconciled through his death, ſo that ye are made holy and without faulte in his ſight (I haue expounded what it is to bee without fault in his firſt argument) loke ye yet for an other Purgatory? are ye ſo childiſh and inſenſible no imagine that ye muſt yet go through Purgatory, ſith ye are already without faulte in his ſight? This a playne caſe, God of his righteouſnes will not puniſhe a man for nothyng: but all that are groūded and ſtabliſhed in the fayth are in hys ſight without faulte (for their ſinnes are not imputed vnto them but forgeuen through Chriſtes bloud (wherfore of neceſſitie I muſt conclude that no faythfull ſhall euer come there.

29. Euery man that departeth this world is either faithfull or vnfaithful if he be faithful then commeth he not there, as ý foreſaid argumēt proueth. And if he be vnfaythfull thē commeth he neuer in Purgatory, but is all ready damned. John. iij. Marke the laſt. Now if neither faythfull nor vnfaithfull enter into it, then ſhould it be in vayne: but there is nothyng made in vaine wherfore I muſt conclude that there is no ſuch Purgatory.

Seyng, we are on ý maner deliuered, how chaūceth it that we are taken priſoners agayne vnder ſinne, that we muſt be purged a freſh by the fire of Purgatory? I pray God geue vs grace that we may be purged frō this our blynd ignorance thorough hys ſpirite of knowledge, that we may perceaue how it is Jeſus Chriſt that purgeth our ſinnes, and hath deliuered vs thorough his bloudſhedyng. So ſhould we geue hym the prayſe whiche hath deſerued it. And not be ſo vnkind vnto hym as we now be.

34. They that are the chief patrones and proctours of Purgatory, do fayne it for no other intent, but to purge euill workes, and to be as a penaunce to ſupply the good workes whiche we lacked beyng in this world. But all this can not bryng vs into heauē. For then were Chriſt dead in vayne. And of this haue we euident examples. Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, Dauid and all holy Prophetes were excluded from heauen vntill Chriſte had ſuffered death, this all men teſtifie. But if good workes or penaunce could haue brought them to heauen they ſhould

Obiections

Peraduenture thou wilt ſay vnto me, ſhall I then do no good workes?

Good workes.

I aunſwere yes. Thou wilt aſke me wherfore? I aunſwere, thou muſt do them becauſe God hath commaūded them. Thou wilt ſay, for what intent hath he commaunded them? I aunſwere, becauſe thou art liuing in this world, and muſt nedes haue conuerſation with men, therfore hath God appointed thée what thou ſhalt doe to the profite of thy neighbour and tamyng of thy fleſh. Ephe. 2. ſaying: by grace are ye made ſafe through fayth and that commeth not of your ſelues, but it is ỹ gift of God & cōmeth not of workes leſt any man ſhould boaſt him ſelfe. Loe here ſayth Paule playnly that our ſaluatiō is the gift of God & cōmeth not of workes, if it come not of workes then are we worſe then mad to fayne a Purgatory. For the chiefeſt operation of that ſhould be but to ſupply the woorkes which we haue not accompliſhed beyng in this body.

35. Ephe. 2.

Our ſaluatiō is ỹ gift of God, and cōmeth not by workes.

Paule ſayth Roma. xi. The remnaunt which are left at this time, are through the election of grace. If it be through grace thē is it not by workes, for then grace were no grace. Or if it be for the workes ſake ſo is it not of fauour and grace, accordyng to that which he wrote before. Roma. iiij. If Abrahā (ſayth Paul) were iuſtified by his workes, then may he reioyſe but not before God. But what ſayth the Scripture? Abraham beleued God & that was imputed vnto hym for righteouſnes, for he that worketh receaueth his reward not of fauour but of dutye. Now if it be duty, then nedeth he not to thanke God, but rather him ſelfe for thē God geueth him nothing but that which is his owne of dutye. Where is then the prayſe and glory that we owe to God? Therfore it foloweth in the ſame terte: vnto hym that worketh not, but beleueth in him that iuſtifieth the wicked, is his faith imputed for righteouſnes. Now if our ſaluatiō come of fayth and not through our workes & deſertes, then is Purgatory ſhut out of dore & quite baniſheth away.

And agayne, payne ingendreth and kyndleth hate againſt God and not loue or charitie. Furthermore My Lord of Rocheſter is cõpelled to graunt that the ſoules in Purgatorye obtayne there neither more fayth nor grace nor charitie then they brought in with them, and ſo can I ſee no reaſonable cauſe why there ſhould be a purgatory. thy hart. Now if thy will be vpright and ſo that thou haue a deſire to fulfill the law, then doth God reken that will vnto thée for the full fact. If then through the frayltie of thy members thou fall into ſinne, thou mayeſt well ſay with the Apoſtle Roma. vij. The good that I would doe, that do I not: that is, I haue a will and deſire to fulfill the law of God, & not to diſpleaſe my heauenly father, yet that I do not. But the euill which I hate, that do I, that is I do committe ſinne whiche in déede I hate. Now if I hate the ſinne whiche I do, then loue I the law of God whiche forbiddeth ſinne, and do conſent vnto this law that it is good righteous and holy. And ſo the ſinne whiche I hate and yet commit it thorough the frayltie of my members, is not imputed or rekened vnto me for ſinne. Neither will S. Paule graunt that it is I which do that ſinne: but he ſayd: I haue a will to doe good: but I can not performe that will. For I do not that good which I would, but the euill whiche I would not, that do I. Now if I doe that thyng whiche I would not do, then is it not I that do it but the ſinne that dwelleth with in me. I delight in the law of God with myne inward man (that is with my will and minde which is renued with the ſpirite of God) but I ſée an other law in my members which rebelleth agaynſt the law of my mynde and maketh me bonde vnto the law of ſinne which is in my members. So that I my ſelfe in my will and mynde do obey the law of God (hatyng ſinne as the law cõmaundeth me and not conſentyng vnto it in my mynde & will) but in my fleſh and members I ſerue the law of ſinne, for the frayltie of my members compelleth me to ſinne. Rom. 7.

Roma. 7.

we haue a will and minde to obey the law of God, but our ſinfull fleſh will not conſent thereunto.

Example. As by example if I ſée a poore man whiche is not of abilitie to do me any pleaſure, and nevertheles doth all his diligence to ſéeke my fauour & would with hart and mynde geue me ſome acceptable preſẽt if he were of power beyng alſo ſory that hee can not performe his will and mynde towardes me. Now if there be any point of humanitie or gentleneſſe in me, I will count this man for my frende, and accept his good will as well, as though he had in dede performed his wil. For his habilitie extendeth no further. If his power were better, better ſhould I haue. Euen ſo ſith we are not of power and habilitie to performe the law of God, and yet beare a good hart towardes God and his law, lamentyng our imbecillitie that we can do him no further pleaſure: then will God recount vs not as his enemyes, but as his deare children and beloued frendes. Neither will hee afterward thruſt vs into Purgatory, but as a tender father pardon vs our treſpaſſes, and accept our good will for the full déede.

God acceteth our good will if we do that in vs is to obey his cõmaundementes.

S. Paule exhorteth vs Gal. vj. that we worke well while we haue tyme, for what ſoeuer a man doth ſow that ſhall he réepe, by this may we euidently perceaue that hée ſhall not receaue according to his doing or ſuffryng in an other world, and therfore cã there be no Purgatory. 48. Gallat. 6.

Purgatory is nedeleſſe.

The wiſeman ſayth Eccle. xlix. worke righteouſnes before thy death for after this lyfe there is no méete, that is to ſay ſuccour to bee founde. There are ſome which wil vnderſtãd this place & alſo the text in the xlviij. argument on this maner that there ſhould be no place of deſeruyng, but yet there may well bee a place of puniſhment. But this ſolution beſides that it is not grounded on Scripture, is very ſlender. For I pray you wherfore ſhould their inuention of Purgatory ſerue but to bee a place of purgyng, puniſhment, and penaunce, by the which the ſoule ſhould make ſatisfaction, that it might ſo deſerue to enter in to the reſt of heauen? 49. Eccle. 14.

Some imagine Purgatory to be a place of ſatiſfaction.

Bleſſed are the dead which dye in the Lord from hẽce forward, yea truly ſayth the ſpirite, that they may reſt frõ their labours. But their workes folow with them. This text they vſe in their ſoule maſſes as thoughe it made for Purgatory. But ſurely me thinketh that it maketh much againſt them. For let vs enquire of all the practours and fautours of Purgatory, 50. Apoca. 14.

The dead that dye in the Lorde are bleſſed, and therfore are not in Purgatory.

whether ỹ ſoules that muſt be prayed for, are departed in the Lord or not? And they muſt nedes aunſwere that they are departed in the Lord, for the vnfaithfull which dye not in the Lord muſt not be prayed for. And therfore muſt they be vpright Chriſten ſoules which are tormẽted, for the other are all damned. Now ſayth the text that all ſuch dead as dye in the Lord are bleſſed: but what bleſſednelle were that to bryde in Purgatory? And if they would here fayne a gloſe (as their maner is) when they are in a ſtraite euer to ſeke a ſtartyng hole & ſay that they are bleſſed becauſe they are in a good hope, although they haue not yet the reſt, but muſt ſuffer before in Purgatory: that euaſion will not this text ſuffer, for the text ſayth that they reſt and are in peace as Eſayas

Eſay. 57. alſo ſayth in the .lvij. that the righteous (and euery faythfull man is righteous in the ſight of God as we haue often proued before) when he departeth reſteth in peace as in a bed. And Sapien. 3. Sapiẽ. iij. it is ſayd that the righteous ſoules are in peace: & ſo is it not poſſible that there ſhould be ſuch a paynefull Purgatory.

Thus haue we confuted Raſtell: both his argumentes and alſo ſolutions, for all that he writeth is falſe & agaynſt Scripture. Furthermore, we haue brought in, to proue that there cã be no ſuch Purgatory l. argumẽtes all grounded on Scripture. And if nede were a mã might make a thouſand of which our Clergy ſhould not be able to anoyde one.

The cõcluſiõ of Iohn Frith agaynſt Raſtels booke.

Here I thinke ſome mẽ will wonder that I haue the Scripture ſo full on my ſide becauſe that there are certaine mẽ, as my Lord of Rocheſter & Syr Thomas More, which by Scripture go about to proue Purgatory: & this is ſure that Scripture is not contrary vnto it ſelfe. Therfore it is neceſſary that we examine the textes which they bring in for their purpoſe, in markyng the proceſſe both what goeth before and what cõmeth after. And then ſhal we eaſely perceaue the truth, & how theſe ỹ. men haue bene piteouſly deceaued. Firſt I will aunſwere vnto M. More which hath in a maner nothyng but that he toke out of my Lord of Rocheſter, although he handle it more ſuttelly. And what ſoeuer is not aunſwered in this parte, ſhalbe touched and fully conuinced in the third, whiche ſhall be a ſeuerall booke agaynſt my Lord of Rocheſter.

¶ The ſecond booke which is an aunwere vnto Syr Thomas More.

Mr. More begynneth pitifully.

MAiſter More begynneth with the ſely ſoules of Purgatory and maketh them to wayle and lamẽt, that they heare the world waxe ſo faynte in the fayth of Chriſt that any mã ſhould neede now to proue Purgatory to Chriſtẽ mẽ, or that any mã could be found which would in ſo great a thyng ſo fully and faſtly beleued for an vndoubted article this .xv. hundred yeare, begyn now to ſtaggar and ſtand in doubt. &c.

Frith. Uerely me thinketh it a foule faute ſo ſore to ſtomble euen at the firſt. It were a great blot for him, if he ſhould be compelled by good authoritie to cut of .iiij. hundred of his foreſayd nũber.

Purgatory in 400. yeare after Chriſt was neither beleued as an article of ỹ fayth nor yet for an vndoubted truth.

Now if we can not onely proue that he muſt cut of that iiij. hundred yeare, but alſo bryng witneſſe that it was neither at that time beleued for an article of ỹ fayth nor yet for an vndoubted truth: thẽ I thinke ye would ſuppoſe this man ſomewhat out of the way. And that will I proue by Gods grace. S. Auſten was foure hundred yere after Chriſt. And yet in his time was it not fully and faſtly beleued for an article of the fayth, no nor yet fully and faſtly beleued to bee true. For hee him ſelfe writeth in his Enchiridion on this maner ſpeakyng of Purgato-gatory. After he expounded the place of Paul. 1. Cor. 3. and had taken this word fire not for Purgatory, but for temptation and tribulation, he added these wordes in the. 69. chapter. It is not incredible that such a thyng should also chaūce after this life, & whether it be so or not it may be questioned &c.

1. Cor. 3.

S. Austen doubted of Purgatory

Of these woordes may we well perceaue that he counted it not for an article of ỹ fayth, neither yet for an vndoubted truth for if it had bene an article of ỹ faith, or an vndoubted truth then would hee not haue sayd, Potest etiā quęri, that is to say: it may be questioned, doubted or moued: for those holy fathers vsed not to make questions & doubtes in articles of the fayth among thē selues, neither yet in such things as were vndoubted true: they vsed not to dispute whether Christe dyed for our sinnes & rose agayne for our iustificatiō, but onely beleued it.

Rom. 2, 4.

Beside: that the occasion why hée wrote the boke entitled Enchiridion was this. There was one Laurētius a Christē man, which instantly required of S. Austen that he would write him a forme of his beleke whiche hée might continually beare in hand and whereunto he should sticke. Upō this wrote him S. Austen this litle boke, where in he commaundeth hym not fully and fastly to beleue (these are M. Mores wordes) that there was a Purgatory: but sayth that it may be questioned, doubted or moued whether there be such a place or not. Of this haue we playne euidence that it was none article of ỹ fayth in S. Austens tyme (which was foure hūdred yeare after Christ) neither yet vndoubted truth. And so may all men sée that M. More is fore deceaued and set on the sand euen at the first brunte and in the begynnyng of his viage.

M. More much deceaued in the accomplyng of hys

M. More.

His second reason that he hath to proue Purgatory is this. The very miscreauntes & Idolaters, Turkes, Saracenes and Paynimes haue euer for the most part thought and beleued that after the bodyes are deceased: the soules of such as were neither deadly dampned wretches for euer, nor on the other side, so good but that their offences done in this world haue deserued more punishment then they had suffered and sustained there, were purged and punished by payne after the death, ere euer they were admitted vnto their wealth and rest. And so must there nedes be a Purgatory.

M. Mores second reason.

I aūswere, if it were lawfull to require wisedome in a man so wise as M. More is counted, here would I wish him a litle more wit, for I thinke there is no wiseman that will graunt this to be a good argumēt, ỹ Turkes, Saracenes, Paynimes & Iewes beleue it to be true, Ergo, we must beleue that it is true: for I will shewe you a like argument. The Turkes, Saracenes, Paynimes & Iewes beleue that we haue not ỹ right Christ, but that we are all damned which beleue in Christ. Is it therfore true: shal we turne our fayth because they beleue that we be deceaued & I thinke there is no man so folish as to graūt him this. But if M. More will haue his reasō hold, he must argue on this maner: The miscreauntes and infidels before named beleue that there is a Purgatory & their beleke is true, therfore we must beleue that there is a Purgatory. Now folowēth this argument somewhat more formally. Here might I put him to the prose of his Minor: which is, that their beleke (in beleuyng Purgatory) is true: which thyng he shall neuer be able to proue. But I haue such confidence of the truth on my side that I will take vpon me to proue the negatiue, Cuē that their beleke is not true as cōcernyng Purgatory. For these miscreauntes which beleue Purgatory, beleue that there is a Purgatory for vs that be Christen: for they beleue that we are fallē from all truth and vtterly dāned. But they thinke that there is a Purgatory for them selues wherin they shalbe purged & punished vntill they haue made full satisfactiō for their sinnes committed: but that is false, for neither Turkes, Saracenes Paynimes nor Iewes whiche beleue not in Christ haue or euer shall enter into any Purgatory, but they are all

Frith.

M. More maketh a false and fond argument.

John Frith amēdeth M. Mores argument.

John Frith proueth the negatiue to be true.

dãned wretches becauſe they beleue not in Jeſu Chriſt. Iohn. 3. Now ſith they be deceaued, for they haue no Purgatory, but are all damned as many as beleue not. Alas what blindnes is that to argue that we muſt folow them which are both blynd and out of the right way?

Iohn. 3.

Raſtell had his argumentes frõ M. More.

After this diſputeth he by naturall reaſon that there muſt be a Purgatory, his diſputation continueth a leafe and an halfe, out of the which Raſtell toke all his booke. And ſo are all his apparent reaſons diſcloſed before agaynſt Raſtell. Then begynneth he with the Scripture, on this maner.

M. More. Ezechias.

IT ſemeth very probable and likely that the good kyng Ezechias for no other cauſe wept at the warning of his death geuen him by the Prophet, but onely for the feare of Purgatory.

Frith. 4. Kinges. 2 Eſay. 38.

The ſtory is written. 4. Kinges. 2. And Eſay. 38. Ezechias was ſicke vnto the death. And Eſay the Prophete and ſonne of Amos came vnto him ſaying, this ſayth the Lord, diſpoſe thy houſe for thou ſhalt dye and not liue. He turned his face vnto the wall and prayed the Lord ſaying, I beſeche thée Lord, remember I pray thée, how I haue walked before thée in truth and in a perfite hart & haue done that thyng which is pleaſaunt & acceptable before thée. Then Ezechias wept with great cryeng: theſe are the wordes of the text. We cã not perceaue by the text that he was a great ſinner, but rather the contrary, for he ſayth that hee had walked before the Lorde in truth and in a perfite hart, & hath done that thyng which is pleaſaunt and acceptable before the Lord. And therfore it is nothyng lyke that hee ſhould feare Purgatory neither yet hell. Thou wilt peraduẽture aſke me, if he wept not for feare of Purgatory, why did he then wepe? I will alſo aſke you a queſtion, and then will I ſhew you my minde. Chriſt dyd not onely wepe, but feared ſo ſore that he ſweat like droppes of bloud runnyng downe vppon the earth, whiche was more then to wepe. Now if I ſhould aſke you why Chriſt feared & ſweate ſo ſore: what would you aũſwere me? that it was for feare of the paynes of Purgatory? forſoth he that would ſo aunſwere ſhould be laughed to ſcorne of all the world, as he were well worthy. Wherfore was it then? Verely euen for feare of death, as it playnly appeareth after: for he prayed vnto his Father, ſaying: my father if it be poſſible let this death paſſe fro me. Math. xxvj. So fearefull a thyng is death euen vnto the moſt pureſt fleſh. And euen the ſame cauſe will I aſſigne in Ezechias, that he wept for feare of death and not for Purgatory. Now proceedeth he further & promiſeth to proue it by playne euident tertes, as it is very needefull for the text that hee alledged before is ſomewhat to farre wreſted and yet will it not ſerue him.

A queſtion to Maiſter More.

A very apt ſimilitude.

Math. 26.

M. More.

Haue ye not (ſayth he) the wordes of Scripture written in the booke of the kynges, Dominus deducit ad inferos & reducit: Our Lord bryngeth folke down into hell, and bringeth them thence agayne? But they that bee in that where damned ſoules be, they be neuer deliuered thence againe. Wherfore it appeareth well that they whõ God deliuereth and bryngeth thence agayne, be in that part of hell that is Purgatory.

Frith. 1. Kynges. 2

This texte is written in the firſt booke of the kynges and in the ſecond chapter, and they are the wordes of Anna which ſayth: The Lord doth kill & quickẽ againe: he ledeth downe into hell & bryngeth agayne. Here he thinketh to haue good hold. But ſurely his hold will fayle hym, for in this one text hee ſheweth him ſelfe twiſe ignorant. Firſt becauſe he knoweth not that the Hebrue word, Sheol, doth not ſignifie hell, but a graue or a pitte that is digged. As it is written Gene. 42. Si quid aduerſitatis acciderit ei in terra ad quam pergitis, deducetis canos meos cum dolore ad inferos, that is if any euill chaũce vnto my ſonne Beniamin in the lãd whether you go, you ſhall bryng down myne hoore heares with ſorow vnto my graue, not vnto hell nor yet vnto Purgatory, for he thought thought neither to go to hell nor Purgatory for his ſonne, but thought that he ſhould dye for ſorrow if his ſonne had any miſchaunce.

M. More here ſemeth to be ignorant in the Hebrue toung. Gene. 41.

M. More ignorant of the maner of the ſpeakyng of the Prophetes.

Beſides that he is cleane ignoraũt of the cõmon maner of all Prophetes which for ỹ moſt part in all Pſalmes, Hymnes and other ſonges of prayſe (as this is) make the firſt ende of the verſe to expounde the laſt and the laſt to expounde the firſt. He that obſerueth this rule ſhall vnderſtand very much in the Scripture although hee be ignoraunt in the Hebrue. So doth this place full well expounde it ſelfe without any imagination of Purgatory. Conferre the firſt part of ỹ verſe vnto the laſt and you ſhall eaſely perceaue it. The firſt part of the halfe verſe is this. The Lord doth kill, and that expoũdeth the other halfe of this verſe where ſhe ſayth, hee leadeth downe to hell, ſo that in this place to kill and to leade downe to hell is all one thing. And likewiſe in the ſecond part of the halfe verſe, to quicken agayne and bryng agayne is all one thyng. Now if any man be ſuperſtitious that hee dare not vnderſtand this thyng as figurately ſpoken, then may he verifie it vpon them that God rayſed from naturall death as he did Lazarus. John. xj. And all beit no man can deny but that this ſence is good and that the text may ſo be vnderſtãd, yet in my minde we ſhal go more nye vnto the very and pure truth, if we expounde it thus. The Lord doth kill and quickẽ agayne, he leadeth downe to hell and bringeth agayne: that is, hee bryngeth men into extreme affliction and miſerie (whiche is ſignified by death and hell) and after turneth not hys face vnto them and maketh them to folow hym. And to this well agreeth the. 78. Pſalme that ſpeaketh of the children of Iſrael (which figure his elect Church and congregation.) Their yeares paſſed ouer in perpetuall trouble, whẽ he deſtroyed or killed them, then they ſought hym, they turned and beſought him buſely. He meaneth not here that he had firſt killed them by temporal death and after their death made them to ſeeke hym: but that he had wrapped them in extreme afflictions and perpetuall troubles, and that he ſore ſcourged them whẽ they brake his cõmaundements & yet after turned his mercyfull face vnto hym.

The Lord doth kill & rayſe again.

When God doth he kill & doth quicken again, what meaning therein.

Finally, if you will haue the pure vnderſtãdyng of this place. Note the wordes of the iij. children Daniell. 3. whiche were caſt into the fornace of fire and yet preſerued frõ death thorough the mighty hand of God, their wordes & ſong was this: Benedicite Anania, Azaria, Miſaell Domino, laudate & ſuperexaltate eum in ſecula: quia eruit nos de inferno, & ſaluos fecit de manu mortis, & liberauit nos de medio ardentis flammæ, & de medio ignis eruit nos. That is: bleſſe ye anania, azaria, and miſaell the Lord: prayſe and aduaũce him for euer. For he hath plucked vs out of hell, & hath ſaued vs frõ the power of death. He hath deliuered vs from the middeſt of the burnyng flãme and hath plucked vs out frõ the middes of the fire. Here may you ſée the ſame maner of ſpeakyng & how the laſt ende expoundeth the begynnyng. Theſe childrẽ ſay that God hath plucked them out of hell, and yet were they neither dãned nor in Purgatory nor dead. But the next part of this verſe expounded their meaning which ſayth: he hath ſaued vs from the hand of power of death. So may ye know that to bee plucked out of hell, and to be ſaued from the power of death, are all one thyng. And again where they ſay that God hath deliuered them from the burnyng flamme, and that hee hath plucked them from the middes of the fire, is all one ſenſe as euery child may well perceiue: and therfore is M. More to blame to be ſo buſie ſeyng he vnderſtandeth not the phraſe and manner of ſpeache of the Scripture.

Daniell. 3.

A true interpretatiõ of Scripture.

A foule fault in M. More.

When bryngeth hee in the Prophet Zachary which ſayth. Tu quoq; in ſanguine Teſtamenti tui eduxiſti vinctos tuos de lacu in quo non erat aqua. Thou haſt in the bloud of thy Teſtament brought out thy bounden priſoners out of the pitte or lake

M. More. Zacharie.

in

in which there was no water. Now in hell is there no redemption, and in lymbo patrum the ſoules were in reſt? wherfore it appeareth clerely that thoſe priſoners whiche hee brought out of their payne, hee brought onely out of Purgatory.

Frith. This tert is ſpoken Zachary. 9. for a full aunſwere of this tert I nede no more but to bring the authoritie of my Lord of Rocheſter agaynſt hym.

Zacharie. 9

Psal. 66. For hee expoundeth the place of the Pſalme. 66. for Purgatory, whiche ſayth. Tranſiuimus per ignem & aquam & adduxiſti nos in refrigerium, we haue gone thorough fire and water & thou haſt brought vs into coleneſſe: If this tert of the Pſalme ſerue for Purgatory which ſayth that there is both fire and water, as my Lord of Rocheſter doth affirme & bringeth alſo Origine to confirme it, then can not this place of Zacharie ſerue, whiche ſayth that there is no water. And ſo muſt M. More nedes bee overſene, for Origene and Rocheſter bee able to wey vp him. Here might I ſay vnto the both that they ſhould firſt agree with in the ſelues and then would I ſhape them an aunſwere. Howbeit I know my part ſo ſure that I will confute them both, and proue that neither other place ſpeaketh any thyng of this paynfull Purgatory that the deſcribe. But my Lord of Rocheſters authoritie ſhall be differred vntill the third part whiche ſhalbe a ſeverall boke agaynſt hym.

More and Rocheſter can not agree.

How the ſayyng of the Prophete Zachary is to be vnderſtand.

This place verely approueth not Purgatory but ſheweth the vertue of Chriſtes redemption which through his bloud redemed his captiues & priſoners that is to ſay them whom hee foũd bound with the ſtrõg bondes of ſinne to everlaſtyng damnatiõ which were ſubiectes vnto the deuil and the extreme enemyes of God, but why calleth hee them his? verely becauſe they were choſen in Chriſt Jeſu before the begynnynge of the worlde, that they with him and through hym ſhould enioy the everlaſtyng inheritaunce of heauen. Why are they called bounde and priſoners? Surely becauſe they were captiues, boũde and impriſoned vnder the deuill through the ſinne that Adã committed. Roma. v. why ſayth he that he deliuered thẽ out of the pitte where in is no water? For ſoth that is euen as much to ſay, as hee deliuered them out of hell and from eternall damnation. Thou wilt happely ſay, hee deliuered them not out of hell and from eternall damnation, for his priſoners that is to ſay, they ẏ ſhalbe ſaued neuer came there. I aunſwere, that they ſhould without doubt haue gone thether & haue bene dãned perpetually, except that Chriſt by his death had deliuered and loſed them. And therefore ſayth the Scripture that Chriſt deliuereth vs out of hell, becauſe he ſaueth and deliuereth vs that we come not there, which els ſhould ſurely enter into it for euer. It is alſo a common maner of ſpeach among vs, if a man ſhould go to priſon for debt or any ſuch matter, & one of his frendes come in ẏ meane ſeaſon which pacified the aduerſaries & payeth that debt, then may we well ſay, that he hath deliuered this man out of priſon although hee came not there, but ſhould haue gone thether. And likewiſe when we ſay that ſuch a mã hath deliuered his frend from the galowes, we meane not that he was all ready hanged, for then were the deliueraũce to late but we meane that he deliuered him that hee ſhould not be hanged. Furthermore if a mã might bee bold to aſke M. More whether Chriſt haue redemed, loſed and deliuered him in the bloud of his Teſtament? I thinke he would aunſwere yea. Now if we ſhould aſke him further, from whence he hath deliuered him? I am ſure he is not ſo ignorannt as to ſay that Chriſte hath deliuered him from Purgatory, but euen that he hath deliuered him from eternall death and damnation. And ſo hath Chriſte deliuered vs from the pytte wherin is no water, that is to ſay, frõ hell and everlaſtyng damnation, not ẏ we were in hell all ready (although we were bound vnder ſinne and ready to be caſt therein, but becauſe we ſhould not enter into hell. This is the pure vnderſtandyng of the terte.

Roma. 5.

In obiectiõ and aunſwere thereunto.

A queſtion to maiſter More.

Here

A true and plaine expoſition of the prophet Zachary.

Here might I diſpute wᵗ him both of hell & of Limbus patrum but becauſe I wilbe as ſhort as poſſible is I will deferre ẏ vntil an other occaſiō ẏ I may reaſon with hym ſomewhat at large.

M.More. AN other place is there alſo in the old Teſtament that putteth Purgatory quyte out of queſtion. For (ſayth he) what is playner then the places whiche in the booke of the Machabees make mention of the deuoute remembraunce, prayour, aſmoſe & ſacrifice to be done for ſoules, when the good and holy mā Iudas Machabeus gathered money among the people to buy ſacrifice withall to be offered vp for the ſoules of them that were dead in the battaile. What ſhift finde they here? Surely a very ſhameleſſe ſhift and are fayne to take them to that talkyng which is their ſhote anker alway, when they finde the ſtorme ſo great that they ſee their ſhyppe goeth all to wracke. For firſt they vſe to ſet ſome falſe gloſſe vnto the text, and if that helpe not, then fall they to a ſhameles boldnes, and let not to deny the Scripture and all.

Machabeus.

Howe ſpoken of M. More.

Frith. The place whiche hee reciteth is wꝛitten. 2. Macha. 12. And to ſay the truth, ẏ booke is not of ſufficiēt authoritie to make an article of our fayth: neither is it admitted in the Canō of the Hebꝛues. Here he obiecteth that the Church hath allowed it, and the holy Doctours, as S. Hierome. S. Auſtine and ſuch other I aunſwere: S. Hieromes mynde is opened vnto vs by the Epiſtle which he wꝛote befoꝛe ẏ Pꝛouerbes of Salomō, his woꝛdes are theſe. Sicut Iudith & Tobie Machabeorum libros, legit quidem eos eccleſia, ſed inter canonicas Scripturas non recipit, ſic & hac duo volumina legat ad edificationem plebis, non ad authoritatem eccleſiaſticorum dogmatum confirmandum. That is lyke as the Church doth read the bookes of Iudith, Tobias, & the Machabees, but receaueth them not amōg the canonicall Scriptures, euen ſo let it read theſe twoo bookes (he meaneth the booke of Sapience and Eccleſiaſticus) vnto the edifieng of the people, and not to confirme the doctrine of the Church therby. And it is nothyng lyke that S. Auſten ſhould diſſent from S. Hierome, foꝛ they were both in one tyme, yea & S. Hierome out lyued S. Auſten. And therfoꝛe the Church could not admit any ſuch bookes either befoꝛe S. Auſtens tyme oꝛ in his tyme, but that S. Hierome ſhould haue knowne of it. And ſo may you gather that if S. Auſten allow theſe bookes, oꝛ els ſay that the Churche hath allowed them, you may not vnderſtād that they haue allowed and receaued them as canonicall Scriptures, foꝛ then you make S. Hierome a lyar. But thus you muſt vnderſtād it, that they haue receaued them to be read foꝛ the edifying of ẏ people, and not to confirme the doctrine of the Church oꝛ articles of the fayth thereby, accoꝛding to S. Hieromes expoſitiō. Now may you ſée that our ſhote anker (as he called it) is ſo ſtrōg that all his ſtoꝛmes and waues can not once moue it, foꝛ we deny not but that the booke is receaued of the church to be read, and we ſhew by S. Hierome foꝛ what entent it is receaued and read, not to pꝛoue any article of our faith therby, but onely to oꝛder our maner of liuyng therafter in ſuch poyntes as are not repugnaunt vnto the canonicall Scripture.

2,Mach. 12

The bokes of the Machabees are not in the Canon of ẏ Hebꝛues.

But yet foꝛ this once, to do the mā pleaſure we will let ſlyppe our ſhote anker & take the ſeas with him. And foꝛ all their furious wyndes and frothy waues, we wil neuer ſtrike ſayle, ſo ſtrong is our ſhyp and ſo well ballaunced. Be it in caſe that this booke of the Machabées were of as good authoꝛity as Eſay: yet can he not pꝛoue this fury and paynefull Purgatoꝛye therby. Foꝛ it ſpeaketh not one woꝛd neither of fire noꝛ payne, but it ſpeaketh of a ſacrifice offred foꝛ the dead, ẏ they might be loſed frō their ſinnes becauſe there is a reſurreciō of ẏ ded. which may wel be without any paine oꝛ fire. So that this concluſion is very bare and naked: It is good to offer ſacrifice foꝛ the dead that they may be loſed from their ſinnes, Ergo, there is a ſenſible fire which doth puniſhe the holy and choſen people of God. I am ſure ſure there is no child, but he may perceaue that this argument is naught.

The meaning & true expoſition of the Machabees touching purgatoꝛy.

6. Beſides that it is to bee doubted whether Iudas did wel or not in offering this ſacrifice. And therfore ought we not of a folish preſumption to folow his facte vntill we knowe how it was accepted. Peraduenture thou wilt ſay that the dæde is commended in the ſayd text, where it ſayth: But becauſe he conſidered that they which with godlynes had entred their ſlæpe (that is their death) had good fauour layd vp in ſtore for them, therefore is the remẽbraunce to pray for the dead holy & wholeſome, that they may be loſed from their ſinnes. I aunſwere, that the perſons whiche were ſlayne in the battayl for whom this prayer & ſacrifice was made, were founde to haue vnder their clokes oblations of idols which were at Iamniam, & for that cauſe were they ſlayne as it is playne in the text, yea and all the hoſt prayſed the right iudgement of God. Now theſe men that were ſo ſlayne were damned by the law. Deut. vij. whiche ſayth. The images of their Gods thou ſhalt burne with fire, & ſée that thou couet not the ſiluer or gold ỳ is on them nor take it vnto thée leſt thou be ſnared therewith, for it is an abomination vnto the Lord thy God. Bryng not therfore the abomination vnto thine houſe leſt thou be a dãned thing as it is: But vtterly deſie it and abhorre it for it is a thyng that muſt be deſtroyed. Of this may we euidẽtly perceaue, that albeit Iudas dyd this thyng of a good mynde, yet was he deceaued, for his ſacrifice could nothyng helpe them ſith they were damned by the law, and entred not their ſlepe with godlyneſſe as he ſuppoſed.

The ſlaughter of the Iewes was for idolatry.

Deutro. 7.

Iudas Machabeus was deceaued in hys ſacrifice.

3. Furthermore it is euident that the Iewes had ſacrifices for the ſinnes of them that liued. Leuit. 4. 5. 6. &c. But how knew they that theſe ſacrifices would extende them ſelues vnto the ſinnes of the dead: And they were cõmaunded vnder the payne of curſing that they ſhould adde nothyng vnto the word of God. Deut. 12. Verely it is lyke that the Prieſtes euen at that tyme ſought their owne profite, abuſed the ſacrifices, & deceaued the ſimple people.

Deut. 12.

4 M. More alſo ſayth, that the money was ſét to buy ſacrifices which ſhoulde be offered for the ſinne of the ſlayne. Now knoweth euery Chriſten that all maner of ſacrifices & offeryngs were nothyng but figures of Chriſt, which ſhould be offered for the ſinne of his people. So that when Chriſt came, all ſacrifices & oblations ceaſed. If thou ſhouldeſt now offer a calfe to purge thy ſinne, thou were no doubt iniurious vnto the bloud of Chriſt, for if thou thought his bloud ſufficiẽt, then wouldeſt thou not ſéke an other ſacrifice for thy ſinne.

By Chriſtes death all ſacrifices ceaſed.

5 Yea I will go further with you there was not one ſacrifice in the old Teſtamẽt that purged or toke away ſinne. For the bloud of orẽ or goates can not take away ſinne. Heb. x. But all the ſacrifices which were thẽ offered, did but ſignifie that Chriſt ſhould come and be made a ſacrifice for vs, which ſhuld purge our ſinne for euer. Now were their ſacrifices and oblations inſtitute of God and yet could they not take away ſinne: but onely ſignified that Chriſt through his blud ſhould take it away. What madnes then is come into our braynes that we thinke that our oblations whiche are ordained but of our owne imagination ſhould take away ſinne?

Heb. 10.

No ſacrifice cã take away ſinne but onely the ſacrifice made by Chriſt.

6 What if Iudas gathered ſuch an offeryng in the old Teſtamẽt, ſhould it then folow that we muſt doe ſo to, which know that Chriſt is come and that all oblations are ceaſed in hym: ſhall we become Iewes and go backe agayne to the ſhadow and ceremonie ſith we haue the body and ſignificatiõ whiche is Chriſt Ieſu: Be it that Iudas were a holy man, might he not do yet amiſſe? Be it in caſe that he dyd well, ſhall we therfore ſtraight wayes out of his worke ground an article of our fayth? Dauid was an holy man & yet committed he both murther and aduoutry ſhal we without further enſearchyng the Scriptures ſtreightwayes folow his example? Abraham was an holy man and was commaũded of God to offer his owne ſonne:

The holieſt men haue fallen.

ſhall

ſhall we offer our childzen therfore? Gedſon and Ioſua deſtroyed the vnſaythfull kyngs and Pzinces and did well and were pzayſed of God. Muſt we do ſo to? And wherfore ſhall we more felow the example of Judas thē of the other? Shall I tell you why? Uerely for this example of Judas bringeth money vnto our ſpiritualty. Theſe xij. thouſād dzachmas ſhyne ſo bright in their eyes, ỳ without other cādle lanterne oz ſpectacles they haue eſpyed an article of our fayth: you may not conſider that they haue taken this tert of.xij. thouſand dzachmes foz an Epiſtle in ſoule maſſes, foz then peraduēture you might fall into ſome ſhzewed ſuſpection, that they ſhould do it of couetouſnes, which faulte can not be eſpyed in our ſpiritualtie, as you know well inough.

The example of Judas Machabeus is profitable to ỳ church, and therfore it muſt be followed.

7. He that holdeth any ceremony of the law as neceſſary, is boūd to kēpe and fulfill the whole law. This is euident of Paul. Gal. 6. where he ſayth, If ye be circumciſed, then are ye debtours to fulfill the whole law. That is if ye put any confidence in circumciſion oz recounte it as neceſſary (foz els it is of it ſelfe, neither good noz euil) then make you your ſelues boūde vnder the law which burthen neither we noz our fathers could beare, and tempt God. Act. xv. And this ſacrifice of Judas was but a ceremony & ſignified ỳ Chriſt ſhould with his bloud quench our ſinnes. Ergo, he that keepeth oz coūteth this ceremony as neceſſary (as are all the articles of the fayth) doth captiue him ſelf vnder the law and tempteth God to ſpeake no more ſharpely.

8. Yet will I go a litle nere vnto you. Judas hym ſelfe beleued not ỳ there was a Purgatozy. Foz in the tyme of the old Teſtament there was no purgatozy as the Scholemen graūt them ſelues but onely a place of reſt which they called Limbus patrum: wherfore they are pitiouſly deceaued that will pzoue Purgatozy by the textes of the old Teſtament, ſith, as they ſay them ſelues, there was no Purgatozy at that tyme.

The ſcholemē ſay that in the tyme of the olde Teſtament there was no Purgatozy.

9. Finally, I cā not finde a place that of it ſelfe moze pzoperly cōfuteth this phantaſticall Purgatozy, then doth this ſame texte whiche they ſticke ſo ſoze to, imaginyng that it ſtabliſheth Purgatozy. The tert ſaith on this maner, except hee had hoped that they which were ſlayne ſhould riſe agayn, It ſhould ſeme voyde and in vayne to pzay foz the dead. If you fayne a Purgatozy, thē muſt this tert nedes be falſe: foz be it in caſe that the dead ſhould not riſe agayne. Now ſayth the tert that it were voyde & in vayne to pzay foz the dead if they ſhould not riſe agayne. But if there were a Purgatozy wherein they ſhould be purged and puniſhed in the meane ſeaſon: then were it not in vayne to pzay foz them to deliuer them out of that payne, but rather very fruteſull and neceſſary although they ſhould neuer ryſe agayne. And therfore if this tert be of authozitie, is it impoſſible that there ſhould be any Purgatozy, neither is there any tert that in my iudgement can better vndermine Purgatozy and make it fall.

Peraduenture you deſire to know my mynde in this place, and that I ſhould expoūd vnto you what Judas ment in his oblatiō ſith he thought of no Purgatozy as ỳ forezayd tert doth well ſpecifie. Uerely I thinke that Judas beleued that there ſhould be a reſurrection, as this tert pzayſed hym, ſaying, thinkyng well and deuoutly of the reſurrection. Foz among the Jewes there were many that beleued not the reſurrection of our fleſh, and they that beleued it were yet ſo rude and ignozaūt, that they thought they ſhould ryſe but to obtayne a carnall kyngdome & haue their enemyes ſubdued vnder them without rebellion. And thereto ſticke the Jewes vnto this day. And it is moſt lyke that this ſhould be his meanyng, we ſhall all ryſe agayne, and poſſeſſe this land in peace, and theſe men which are ſlaine are out of the fauour of God becauſe they haue contrary to the law. Deut. xij. Take of the idols oblations, therfore is it beſt that we ſend a ſacrifice vnto Jeruſalem to pacifie the wzath of God towardes them, leſt whē they riſe againe the Lord ſhould ſend ſome plague amongeſt vs for their trãſgreſſiõ which they committed while they were here lyuyng. If any mã can better geſſe I am wel cõtent to admit it, but this is playne inough: he thought that this ſacrifice could not helpe thẽ before they ſhould riſe agayne, which doth fully deſtroy Purgatory. For where he ſayth that it were voyde & in vayne to pray for the dead excepte they ſhould ryſe agayne: Is euen as much to ſay vnto hym that hath any witte as that this prayer & ſacrifices can do them no good before they be riſen agayne from death: for els were it not in vayne to praye for them although they ſhould neuer ryſe agayn. As by example, if I ſay to a man that he ſhall neuer obtayne his purpoſe excepte he ſhould ſue to the kings grace, it is euen as much to ſay to a mã that hath any wytte, as he ſhall neuer obtaine his purpoſe before he hath ſued to the kynges hyghnes.

Iudas Machabeus thought of no Purgatory.

M. More is like to be proued an inſipient.

Maſter More goeth about to ieſt them out of countenaunce which ſay that the booke of Machabées is not au tẽtike becauſe it is not receaued in ỹ Canon of the Hebrues and ſayth that by this reaſon we may alſo denye the booke of Sapience & proue our ſelues inſipientes: but verely, if he admitte the booke of Sapience to be true and autentike, I feare me it will go nye to proue hym an inſipient for graunting that there is a Purgatory. Read the. 45. argument agaynſt Raſtell, & then iudge whether I ſay true or not.

10. Hetherto haue I let ſlyp our ſhoteanker and haue runne the Seas with hym, grauntyng him for his pleaſure that this booke ſhould be of as good authority as Eſay. Not that the Church or holy Doctours, or any wiſe man ſuppoſeth it of ſo good authoritie, but onely to ſée what concluſion might be brought vpon it (that once graũted.) And if any man would require my iudgement as concerning this booke, I would ſhortly aunſwere that either this booke is falſe and of no authoritie, or els that Chriſt & his Apoſtles all holy Doctours & Scholemen therto are falſe and without authoritie.

John Frithes iudgement of ỹ bookes of the Machabees.

For he that admitteth prayers and ſacrifice to be done for the dead, yea & alſo affirmeth that they are holy and wholeſome for ſuch ſinnes as are dãned by the law of God (which are in dede very mortall) doth not he agaynſt the word of God, yea and alſo agaynſt the cõmon conſent of all mẽ? But this booke doth ſo: which admitteth prayer and ſacrifice to bée done for the dead that were ſlayne in the battayle for their offence, yea and alſo damned by the law. Deut. 7. Now conclude your ſelues what ye thinke of this booke.

Thus much hath M. More brought (to proue his purpoſe) out of the old Teſtament and I thinke ye ſée it ſufficiently aunſwered. And now he entendeth to proue hys Purgatory by good and ſubſtaunciall authoritie in the new Teſtament alſo.

FIrſt let vs conſider (ſayth Maſter More) the wordes of the bleſſed Apoſtle and Euangeliſt. S. Iohn, where he ſayth. Eſt peccatum ad mortem, non dico vt pro eo roget quis. There is ſayth hee ſome ſinne that is vnto the death, I byd not that any man ſhould pray for that, this ſinne as the interpreters agree is vnderſtãd of deſperation and impenitẽce, as though Saint Iohn, would ſay: that who departe out of this world impenitent or in deſpayre, any prayer after made can neuer ſtand hym in ſtede. Then it appeareth clearely that S. Iohn meaneth that there are other whiche dye not in ſuch caſe for whom hee would men ſhould pray, becauſe that prayer, to ſuch ſoules may be profitable. But that profite can no man take beyng in heauen where it needeth not, nor beyng in hell where it boteth not, wherefore it appeareth that ſuch prayer helpeth onely for Purgatory, which thou muſt therfore nedes graunt except thou deny S. Iohn.

M. More. 1. Iohn. 5.

Deſperatiõ and impenitency are damnable ſinners.

The text is written. 1. John. 5. which ſayth: there is a ſinne vnto the death, I byd not that any man ſhall pray for that. In this place doth M. More vnderſtãd by this word death, temtempozall death, and then he taketh his pleaſure. But we will deſire hym to loke two lynes aboue, and not to ſnatch one peece of the text on this faſhion. I will rehearſe you the whole text and then ye ſhal heare myne aunſwere. The text is this, if any man perceaue that his brother doth ſinne, a ſinne not vnto ẏ death, let him aſke and he ſhall geue hym lyfe, to them that ſinne not vnto death. For there is ſome ſinne that is vnto death I bid not that any mã ſhould pray for that. Now marke myne aunſwere. Death and life be contrary and both wordes are in this text, therfore if you vnderſtand this word death for tempozall death, then muſt you, alſo vnderſtand by this word life, tempozall lyfe. And ſo ſhould our prayer reſtore men agayne vnto tempozall lyfe. But I enſure you, M. More taketh this word death ſo confuſedly that no mã can tel what he meaneth. For in one place he taketh it for tempozall death, ſaying: who ſo depart out of this world impenitent. &c. And in an other place he is compelled to take it for euerlaſtyng death. Therfore will I ſhewe you the very vnderſtandyng of ẏ text. And better interpzeters deſire I none then Chriſt him ſelfe which ſayd vnto the Phariſeis, euery blaſphemy ſhall be forgeuen, but ẏ blaſphemy againſt the holy ghoſt (which S. Iohn calleth a ſinne vnto the death) ſhall neuer be forgeuen, but is giltie vnto euerlaſtyng damnation. Marke. iij. what ſinne or blaſphemie is this? verely ẏ declareth S. Marke, ſaying. They ſayd that he had an vncleane ſpirite ẏ was ẏ ſinne vnto death euerlaſtyng, that was the ſinne, that ſhould neuer be forgeuen. He prooueth ſo euidently vnto thẽ that his miracles were done with ẏ ſpirite of God, that they could not deny it. And yet of an hard and obſtinate hart, euen knowyng the contrary, they ſayd that he had a deuill within hym. Theſe Phariſeis dyed not forth with, but lyued peraduenture many yeares after. Notwithſtãding if all the Apoſtles had prayed for theſe Phariſeis whiles they were yet lyuing, for all that their ſinne ſhould neuer haue bene forgeuen them. And truth is that after they dyed in impenitencie and deſperation, which was the frute of that ſinne, but not the ſinne it ſelfe.

M. More is confuſe in the interpretation of the ſcriptures.

Marke. 3.

what blaſphemy and ſin againſt the holy ghoſt is.

Now ſée ye the meanyng of this text, and what the ſinne vnto death or agaynſt the holy ghoſt is. If any man perceaue his brother to ſinne a ſinne not vnto death, that is not againſt the holy ghoſt: let him aſke and he ſhall geue him life, that is, let him pray vnto God for his brother and his ſinne ſhalbe forgeuen him. But if he ſée his brother ſinne a ſinne vnto death, that is, agaynſt the holy ghoſt, let him neuer pray for him for it boteth not. And ſo is not the text vnderſtand of prayer after this lyfe (as M. More imagineth) but euen of prayer for our brother which is lyuing with vs.

The pure vnderſtanding.

Notwithſtanding this ſinne is not lightly knowne, excepte the perſon knowledge it hym ſelfe, or els the ſpirite of God opẽ it vnto vs. Therfore may we pray for all men, except we haue euident knowledge that they haue ſo offended as is before rehearſed. And this is his text taken from him wherwith he laboureth to proue Purgatory.

What ſay they to the wordes of S. Iohn Apoc. 5. I haue heard (ſayth he) euery creature that is in heauen and vppon the earth and vnder the earth, and that be in the Sea and all thynges that be in them, all theſe haue I heard ſay, benediction, and honour, and glory and power for euer be to him, that is ſitting in the throne and vnto the lambe. By the creatures in heauen hee meaneth aungels. By the creatures vpon the earth, he meaneth men. By the creatures vnder the earth, he meaneth the ſoules in Purgatory. And by the creatures in the Sea hee meaneth men that ſayle on the Sea.

M. More. Apoca. 5.

Note.

By this text I vnderſtand not onely aungels and men, but alſo heauen and earth and all that is in them, euẽ all beaſtes, fiſhes, wormes, and other creatures & thinke that all theſe creatures do prayſe the Lord. And where he taketh the creatures vnder ẏ earth for the ſoules in Purgatory: I take it for all maner of creatures vnder ẏ earth, both wormes vermine and all other. And where he drawith the text and maketh the creatures in the ſea, to ſignifie men that are ſayling on the Sea: I ſay that the creatures in the Sea do ſignifie fiſhes, and ſuch other thyngs, and that S. Iohn by this text ment euen playnly that all maner of thynges geue prayſe vnto God and the lambe, yea and I dare be bold to adde that euen the very deuils & damned ſoules are compelled to prayſe hym. For their iuſt punihment commendeth his puyſaunt power & righteouſnes. Neither nedeſt thou to wõder or thinke this any new thyng, for Dauid in the 148. byddeth Serpentes beaſtes and byrdes to prayſe the Lord, as it is alſo written Dani. ij. And Paule ſayth Roma. 8. All maner of creatures long for our redemption and prayſe God for it, yea and mourne that the laſt day is not yet come that the elect children of God might enter into reſt: for then ſhall alſo thoſe creatures be deliuered frõ their corruptiõ and bondage into the libertie and glory of the children of God. Now iudge Chriſten reader whiche ſentence ſtandeth moſt with the Scripture and glory of God.

A true expoſition of the Scripture.

M. More. Doth not the bleſſed Apoſtle. S. Peter as it appeareth. Actes. ij. ſay of our Sauiour Chriſte in this wiſe. Quem Deus ſuſcitauit ſolutis doloribus inferni. In theſe woordes he ſhewed that paynes of hell were loſed: but thoſe paynes were not the paynes of damned ſoules. And in limbo patrum there was no payne, Ergo, it was the payne of Purgatory which he looſed.

Frith. Alas what ſhall I ſay? I am in a maner compelled to ſay that this mã wandreth in wilfull blindneſſe. For els were it not poſſible that he ſhould erre ſo far as to bring in this text for hys purpoſe. The woordes of Peter are theſe: Ye men of Iſraell heare theſe woordes, Ieſus of Nazareth a man ſet foorth of God for you wyth powers, wonders, and tokens which God hath done by hym among you, as (you your ſelues know) after he was deliuered by the purpoſed counſell and foreknowledge of God, and you receyued hym of the handes of the wicked, ye crucifyed and kylled him whom God hath rayſed, diſſoluing the paynes of death: for it was impoſſible that he ſhould be ſubdued of it. Here in ſtead of theſe woordes The paynes of death, he ſetteth the paynes of hell (as it is moſt like) eũ of a purpoſed deceit. For albeit the mã would not take the payne to read the græke, yet if he had but once loked vpon the tranſlation of hys olde frende and companion Eraſmus, it would haue taught him to haue ſayd, ſolutis doloribus mortis, that is, diſſoluing the paynes of death, according to the Græke, and very woordes of Luke which wrote theſe actes in the græke tongue.

More purpoſely corrupteth the ſence of the Scripture.

And albeit the old tranſlation vſeth thys woorde Infernus which is diuerſly taken in ſcripture, both for death, for a graue, & for hell, yet in this place is maiſter More wythout excuſe which calleth it hell in our Engliſh tongue. For albeit the woord of it ſelf were indifferent in the Latine, yet it is not indifferent in the Engliſh: for there is no Engliſh man that taketh thys woord hell, eyther for death, or for a graue, no not maiſter More himſelf. For firſt he tranſlateth the text falſely calling it hell, and then he deſcanteth on a falſe ground, and calleth hell, not death but purgatory: when S. Peter brought in theſe woordes for no other purpoſe but to proue ẏ Chriſt was riſen from death through the power of hys Father, meaning, that God the Father dyd rayſe hys Sonne Chriſt notwythſtanding the ſorowfull paynes and panges which he ſuffred vnto ẏ death, for it was impoſſible that Chriſt ſhould be vtterly ſubdued of death. So that thys text proueth no more purgatory, then it proueth that maiſter More was hyred of the ſpiritualty to defend purgatory. Beſides that, if it ſhould ſerue for Purgatory (which no wiſe man wil graunt whẽ he ſeeth the proceſſe of the Text) it ſhould proue nothing, but that Chriſt ſhould lye in the paynes of purgatory vntill God hys Father had holp him out: for the paynes which he ſpeaketh of were Chriſtes paynes, which no man can deny if he read the Text. But what a fond opinion were that, to fayne that Chriſt which was without ſinne, ſhould be tormented in the paynes of purgatory.

M.More. 1.Cor.3. The bleſſed Apoſtle Paule in his firſt epiſtle to the Corinthians the third chapter, ſpeaking of our ſauiour Chriſt the very and only foundation of all our fayth and ſaluation, ſayth: If any man builde vpon this foundation gold, ſiluer, precious ſtones, wood, hay, or ſtrawe, euery mans worke ſhall be made open, for the day of the Lord ſhall declare it, for in the fire it ſhalbe ſhewed, & the fire ſhall proue what maner of thyng euery mans worke is. If any mans worke that he hath builded thereon do abide, he ſhall haue a reward: if any mans worke burne, he ſhall ſuffer harme, but he ſhalbe ſafe, but yet as by fire. And finally he concludeth that thys word fyre, muſt nedes ſignifie the fyre of Purgatorye.

M. More would fayne proue a purgatory.

Fith. He that conſidereth the order or proces of the text ſhall eaſely perceiue that thys man erreth: for the Text ſpeaketh of the preachers, & blameth the Corinthians that they made ſuch ſectes and diſſentions among them ſelues, for one ſayd that he was Paules man, and held on hys ſide: an other ſayd that he was Peters man: the thirde did sticke to Apollo, and ſo forth, euen as our friers do now a dayes, one ſect holdeth on S. Fraunces, an other of S. Dominike, the third of S. Auſten. &c. S. Paule rebuketh theſe ſectes, & called the perſons carnall, commaunding them to take Chriſt for their head, & to cleaue onely to him: and as for Apollo, Peter, and Paule he ſayth, that they are but miniſters of the word, euery mã according to the gyfte geuen hym of God, the one more, the other leſſe.

Paule planted Apollo watred, that is, Paule ſet the Corinthians in the ground of Chriſtes fayth, and then came Apollo and preached them further of Chriſt, and comforted them to abide in the way which they walked in: howbeit it was onely God that made them proſper in the word and gaue the encreaſe. Neuertheles euery man ſhall receaue according to his labour: if he preach much, the more ſhall be his reward: if he preach litle, therafter ſhall he be rewarded. For we are Gods workmẽ to preach hys worde, and you are Gods husbandry whom we muſt till and dreſſe in declaring you the word and perpetuall will of God: you are become Gods building thorough the grace of God which he hath geuen me, whome we muſt frame and ſo couch by the word of God, that we may make of you a temple of liuing ſtones. Lyke a wiſe workemaiſter haue I layd the foundation, for I firſt beganne to preach you Chriſt. Now commeth there an other and buildeth vpon this my foũdation entendyng to inſtruct you further in the wayes of Chriſt. But let euery mã take hede how he buildeth or preach vnto you, for no man cã lay any other foundation then is layed al ready, for all our buildyng and preachyng leneth onely on this pointe and principall ſtone, to declare vnto you what Chriſt hath done for you.

He that labozeth much in Gods vpnard ſhall receaue much. &c.

If any builde on this foundation gold, ſiluer, or precious ſtones, that is: if any man preach purely the word of God, which is likened to gold, ſiluer, and precious ſtones becauſe that as theſe are not conſumed with materiall fire, but rather made more pure, euen ſo the pure word of God ſuffreth neither hurt nor damage in ſpirituall fire, that is temptation and perſecution.

What it is to builde on gold, ſiluer or precious ſtone.

Or els if any man build vpon this foũdation wode, hay, or ſtubble, that is, if a man of good entent (but yet thorough ignorauncе) preach and teach you to sticke vnto ceremonies & mẽs traditions (although they ſeeme neuer ſo glorious) and to ſuch thynges as are not groũded on Scripture (as S. Cyprian taught and defended to rebaptiſe hym, that was once Baptiſed and after fallen into hereſie, yea &

What it is to buyld on wood, haye or ſtubble.

Cyprian.

many Byſhops conſented vnto hym, yet was it ſurely a great errour) this is wode, haye and ſtubble that cā not endure the fire of temptation & lyght of Gods word.

Euery mans worke ſhalbe declared for the day ſhall open it. Albeit it proſpere for a ſeaſon in the darke and can not be perceiued, yet whē the day commeth, which is the light of Gods worde, it ſhalbe eſpyed and iudged. The day ſhal open it that ſhalbe reuelated in fire, and the fire ſhall proue euery mans worke what it is. Fire ſignifieth temptation, tribulation, perſecution &c. whiche ſhall proue euery mans workes. If any mans worke that hee hath builded doe abyde this fire, that is, if the word that a man hath preached do abyde all aſſaultes & temptatiōs, it is a token that they are ſurely grounded on the Scripture of God, and then ſhall the preacher receiue his reward. If any mans worke be burnt, that is if the preachers wordes will not abyde the tryall and light but vaniſh away, then is it a token that they are not well grounded on Scripture, and ſo ſhall he ſuffer hurt, for it ſhalbe a great croſſe and veration to the preachers hart that he hath bene ſo deceiued hym ſelfe and hath alſo ledde other into his errour. Notwithſtādyng he ſhalbe ſaued, becauſe of his fayth in the foundation, which is Chriſt, and his ignorannce ſhalbe pardoned ſith he erreth not of a malicious purpoſe but of a good zeale. But yet ſhall it be as it were a fire to him, for it ſhall greue his hart to ſée that he had laboured in vayne, and that hee muſt deſtroy the ſame which he before through ignorannce preached: this is the proceſſe & pure vnderſtandyng of the text.

How euery mans worke is tryed by fire.

There is no man but he graūteth that theſe wordes, foundation, laying of foundation, buildyng, gold, ſilner, precious ſtones, wood, haye and ſtubble are figuratiuely ſpoken: and why cā they not ſuffer that this word fire be ſo taken to? But where they finde this word fire, what ſoeuer the proceſſe be, there plante they Purgatory by and by, without any further conſideratiō. And yet if they had any iudgement at all, they might well perceaue by Paules owne wordes that he toke not this worde fire for materiall fire, as they groſſely imagine, but proceded in his Allegory and ſpake it figuratiuely: for Paule ſaith, He ſhalbe ſaued, but ſo as it were thorough fire. Marke well his wordes, he ſayth not that he ſhalbe ſaued through fire. But as it were thorough fire, ſignifiyng that it ſhalbe a great grief & vexatiō vnto him. So that by theſe wordes of Paule, a very child may perceaue what he ment.

Wordes figuratiuely ſpoken.

Furthermore, if they be ſo ſtifnecked that they will not bow to ỹ truth, but ſtill perſeuer in their owne phantaſies faynyng Purgatory out of this place: thē will I boldly ſay vnto them that there ſhall no man enter into it but onely preachers. For in this place Paul onely ſpeaketh of them, and affirmeth that it is their preachyng and learnyng that ſhall be ſo proued thorough fire, and that ſuch a Preacher ſhall be ſaued, but yet as it were thorough fire. And therfore may the temporaltie be of good comfort, for I promiſe them that by this terte they ſhall neuer haue hurt in this their painfull Purgatory.

DOth not our bleſſed Sauiour him ſelfe ſay that there is a certaine ſinne which a man may ſo cōmit agaynſt the holy ghoſt, that it ſhall neuer be remitted nor forgeuen, neither in this world, nor in the world to come? Now when our Lorde ſayth that the blaſphemy agaynſte the holy ghoſt ſhall not be forgeuē, neither in this world, nor in the world to come, he geueth vs cleare knowledge, that of other ſinnes, ſome ſhall bee forgeuen in this world, and ſome in the world to come. M.More. Math.12.

Although this argument be a very Sophiſme, yet is there neither one rule in Sophiſtry that can proue this argument, nor yet one Sophiſter ſo ſwliſh as to graunt it. Frith. A ſubtile ſophiſme.

For if I ſhould ſay vnto mine enemy that I would neither forgeue him as lōg as I lyued no; after my death, becauſe hee had done me ſome haynous treſpaſſe, then would men coūt hym wo;ſe thē made that would ſay, Frith will not fo;geue his enemy as long as he lyueth no; after his death, Ergo, ſome mē will fo;geue their enemyes after their death. Fo; when I ſay that I will not fo;geue hym, neither in my life no; after my death, I meane that I wil neuer fo;geue him, and make that addition becauſe hée ſhould not of fo̅liſhnes lóke fo; any ſuch fo;geueneſſe.

There is no remiſſiō of ſinnes after this lyfe.

But thus foloweth the argument well, It ſhall not be fo;geuen in thys wo;ld no; in the wo;ld to come, ergo, it ſhall neuer be fo;geuen. And euen ſo doth the holy euangeliſt S. Marke expounde theſe wo;des of Chri;ſt in the thy;d chapter. Fo; Mathew ſaith chap. 12. He that ſpeaketh agaynſt the holy Ghoſt ſhal neuer haue it fo;geuen in this wo;ld no; in the wo;ld to come: Marke expoundeth it thus, he that ſpeaketh a blaſphemy agaynſt the holy Ghoſt hath no remiſſion fo; euer, but is giltie vnto euerlaſtyng damnation.

Marke. 3.

But of thys I haue ſpoken ſufficiently befo;e (in ſoluting the Tert 1. Joh. 5.) both what the ſinne and alſo how the tert is to be vnderſtand. Neither affirmeth the Scripture in any place that any ſinne is fo;geuen after thys lyfe, but ſayth, be ready fo; ye know not the time when the Lo;de ſhall come, as who ſhould ſay, in this lyfe is remiſſion and full mercy to be had: labour therfo;e to attayne it, fo; after thys lyfe is no ſuch fo;geuenes, but euen as the Lo;d findeth thee, ſo ſhall he iudge thée. Hys next and laſt argument of ſcripture is this:

M. More. Math. 12.

CHriſt ſayth, as it is rehearſed in the xij. of Matthew, that men ſhall yeld a reckenyng of euery idle worde, and that ſhall be after thys preſent lyfe. Then wotteth euery man that by that reckoning is vnderſtand a puniſhment therefore, which ſhal not be in hell, and much leſſe in heauen, and therfore can it be no where els but in Purgatory.

Frith.

Verily I haue not heard of a patrone that ſo vnpro;fitably defendeth hys clyent, no; yet of any man that geueth himſelfe ſuch pro;per trippes to caſt himſelfe, except he went about to betray and vtterly deſtroy the part which he would ſéme to fauour: fo; thys tert maketh mo;e agaynſt hym, then any that be bro;ught befo;e ſéme to make with him. The wo;des of Mathew are theſe: I tell you that of euery idle wo;d that men ſpeake, ſhall they yéld a reckoning in the day of iudgement: but that leaueth he out full craftely. Now let vs reaſon of thys tert. By the reckoning is vnderſtod a puniſhment fo; the ſinne (as maiſter Mo;e ſayth himſelf) and thys reckoning ſhall be vppon the day of dome, ergo, then this puniſhment fo; ſinne, can not be befo;e the day of dome, but either vpon o; els after the day of dome: Fo; God will not firſt puniſh them, and then after reckon with them to punyſhe them a new: And ſo is purgato;y quite excluded: Fo; all they that euer imagined any purgato;y do put it befo;e the iudgement: fo; when Chri;ſt commeth to iudgement then ceaſeth purgato;y as they all conſent: neyther is there any pra;yer o; ſuffrage which at that time can do any helpe at all. And ſo hath maſter Mo;e by thys tert geuen him ſelfe a pro;per fall.

M. Mo;e doth quyte ouerthro;w hym ſelfe.

Here by M. Mo;es argument, Purgato;y is quyte excluded.

Here may you ſe how ſtrong hys reaſons are: and what wil happen to him that taketh in hand to defend the falſhode agaynſt the truth of Goddes wo;d: fo; hys reaſons make mo;e agaynſt him then wyth him. You may well know that if hys matter had ben any thing lykely, he would haue coloured it of an other faſhion. But ſith ſuch a patrone ſo greatly commended fo; his conueyance & wiſedome handleth this matter ſo ſlenderly, you may well miſtruſt hys cauſe. Thys is the laſt reaſon grounded of Scripture, wherwith he hath laboured to pro;ue purgato;y. And after thys reaſon he reckeneth vp the doctours, and ſayth fo; his pleaſure that al make fo; him: but as touching the doctoures I will make a ſufficient aunſwer in the third part, which is agaynſt my Lorde of Rochester.

Thus he leaueth the Scripture, which he hath full vnmanerly handled, and now endeuoureth himſelfe to proue his purpoſe by ſome probable reaſons. And firſt he bringeth in hys old argument that the church can not erre, to the which reaſon I nede not to anſwer, for William Tyndall hath declared aboundantly in a treatiſe which by Goddes grace you ſhall ſhortly haue, what the church is, and alſo that it both may erre, & doth erre, if the pope and his adherents be the church, as M. More imagineth.

M.More. AFter thys he confirmeth hys fantaſie with phantaſticall apparitions, ſaying: that there haue in euery country and in euery age apparitions bene had, and well knowne & teſtified, by which men haue had ſufficient reuelation and proofe of purgatorye. Howe many haue by Gods moſt gracious fauour appeared to theyr freendes after theyr death, and ſhewed themſelues holpen and deliuered thence by pilgrimages, almeſdeedes, prayer. &c. If they ſay that theſe be lyes, then they be much worſe then their maſter Luther himſelfe, for he conſenteth in his ſermons that many ſuch apparitions bee true, and they be true: then muſt there needes be a purgatory.

M. More is a ſubtill Sophiſter. Here playeth maſter More the ſubtle ſophiſter, and would deceiue men wyth a fallace, which lyeth in thys worde, true, ſo that when he ſayeth that ſuch apparitions be true, thys ſentence may be taken two maner of wayes. One, that it is true that ſuch phantaſticall apparitions do appeare to diuers, and that I thinke no man be ſo foliſh but he will graunt him.

And yet in dede are they no ſoules but very deuils that ſo appeare to delude men, that they ſhould fall frō the the fayth of Chriſt and make a God of their owne workes truſtyng to be ſaued thereby. But to ſuppoſe this true that they are the ſoules of Purgatory which ſo appeare, is very fonde falſe and agaynſt all Scripture, for Eſay ſayth, ſhall we go from the quicke vnto the dead? that is, ſhall we enquire of the dead and beleue them in ſuch pointes as cōcerne our wealth? Nay ſayth he, but vnto the law & witnes, that is vnto God and his word. Eſay. 8.

And ſo are we monished by Eſay in the. 8. that we beleue no ſuch phantaſies, we are commaūded by the law of God, that we enquire not of the dead, not for the truth, for God abhorreth it. Deut. xviij. Truth is not to bee ſought of the dead.

Beſides that the parable of the rich man and Lazarus doth vtterly condemne all ſuch apparitions, that they are no ſoules which appeare but very deuils. For when the rich man deſired that Lazarus might go & warne his brethrē, that they ſhould not come into that place of payne, Abrahā aunſwered, that they had Moſes and the Prophetes, addyng alſo, that if they beleued not them, then would they not beleue although one ſhould riſe agayne and tell it them. Luke. 16.

And ſo may I conclude that it were in vayne to ſend them any ſuch apparitions of ſoules, & that in very dede there are no ſoules ſent of God, but that they are verely deuils whiche come to delude the people, & to withdraw them from Chriſt. Furthermore all men graunt that the appearyng of Samuell was but an illuſion of the deuill, thou ſhalt finde the ſtory. i. Reg. xxviij.

It is not long ſith ſuch a queſtion was moued in Oxford, the thing was this, there was a poore man of the cōtrey, whiche was ſore troubled with ſuch apparitions, for there came a thyng to him which deſired him to go certaine pilgrymages and to do certaine other ceremonies whereby it ſayd that it ſhould be deliuered from innumerable torments which it now ſuffered. The poore man beleued that this thyng ſayd truth, and dyd as it commaunded. Notwithſtandyng it came ſo often vnto him, that what with labour and what with feare, the mā was almoſt beſides him ſelfe, and then was hee ſent to Oxford to aſke counſell what was beſt to bee done. The queſtion was moued to one Do- 1. Kinge. 28 tour Nicolas, and hee affirmed by ꝫ by that it was no ſoule but the very deuill, and that he ſhould no more folow the fendes appetite. Then was it moued to D. Kyngton, and he affirmed the ſame. Finally, they enquyred of D. Roper what his minde was therin, ꝫ he ſayd that he would loke on his booke, and when he had loked his pleaſure, he gaue this aunſwere. Let him alone a while (quoth he) and I warraunt you, that this felow ſhall either hang him ſelfe, or drowne hym ſelfe, or come to ſome other miſchief. Thus determined theſe men whiche are a great deale to ſuperſtitious to diſſent from any of the old Doctours, yea or els from their owne Scholemen. And yet would M. More make vs beleue that they were very ſoules, ꝫ that by ſuch ceremonies they might be deliuered.

Frith.

Now commeth M. More to ſolute thoſe two reaſons that were brought agaynſt Purgatory in the Supplication of Beggers, which was ỹ whole occaſion of his booke. And marke how ſlender his ſolutiõs are. The firſt reaſon is this. If there were any Purgatory out of which the Pope might deliuer one ſoule by hys pardon, then may he by the ſame authoritie deliuer many: and if he may deliuer many, then may he deliuer them all. The ſecond reaſon is this. If he can deliuer them for money: then may he alſo deliuer them wythout money. And then is he a very cruel tyraunt which kæpeth them in paynes ſo intollerable (as he imagineth him ſelfe) vntill they pay money.

M. More his argument is falſe.

M. More his ſolution of the two former reaſons.

The firſt hee ſoluteth on this maner: Sith our Lord ſendeth them thether for ſatiſfaction to be made in ſome maner for their ſinne: the Pope ſhould rather agaynſt Gods purpoſe delyuer them free then chaunge the maner of their ſatiſfaction frõ payne into prayer, almoſe or other good workes to be done by their frendes for them in ſome pointe profitable and neceſſary for the whole corps of Chriſtẽdome or ſome good member of the ſame.

As concernyng ſatiſfaction, I haue ſpoken ſufficiẽtly before agaynſt Raſtell. The Scripture knoweth no other ſatiſfaction to be made for ſinne towardes God, but onely the bloud of his ſonne Jeſu Chriſt, for if there were an other ſatiſfaction then dyed Chriſt in vayne: yea and he that ſæketh any other ſatiſfactiõ for his ſinne (towardes God) then Chriſtes bloud (which muſt be receiued with a repẽtyng hart through fayth) doth deſpiſe Chriſtes bloud and treade it vnder his fæte. And ſo is the firſt part of M. Mores ſolution falſe, that they ſhould be ſhut in Purgatory to make ſatiſfaction.

Beſides that where hee ſayth that if the Pope ſhould ſo deliuer them, he ſhould deliuer them free. I ſay nay. For the Pope can deliuer no mã from thence vntil ſatiſfactiõ be made, as both he ꝫ all his adherentes graũt. And therefore to finde away how he might ſeme to deliuer thẽ, he fayneth that he hath in his hands the merites of Chriſtes paſſion, and the merites of all Saintes to deſtribute them at his pleaſure. And therfore might the Pope apply the merites of Chriſtes paſſion ꝫ of other Saintes vnto theſe ſely ſoules and ſo deliuer them. For thoſe merites ar inough to ſatiſfie for ỹ ſoules in purgatory, if there were ten tymes ſo many. And ſo ſhould the Pope deliuer them not frꝛe, but chaũgyng the maner of their ſatiſfaction from payne, into merites of Chriſtes paſſion and of all Saintes. And ſo is this reaſon not abated but rather ſtrõger thẽ it was before. Howbeit to ſay the truth, the merites of Chriſtes paſſion are onely diſtributed vnto the faythfull, and that by God and his ſpirite and not by the Pope. And as for the merites of Saintes can not helpe other, for they haue to litle for them ſelues if God ſhould enter into iudgement with them. Pſalme. 104. And Chriſt ſayth: Luke. 17. when you haue done all that is commaunded you, ſay we are vnprofitable ſeruauntes. To this well agræth the parable of the x. Virgins. Math. 25. whiche could not depart with any of theyr oyle, for feare that they ſhould

not haue had inough for them ſelues.

The ſecond reaſon byteth him ſomwhat, and therefore he calleth it vnreaſonable, and would auoyd it by an example on thys wiſe:

M. More his aunſwer to the ſecond reaſon.

Preſuppoſe that the Pope may deliuer al ſoules out of purgatory, yet if he were therfore cruell as oft as he leueth any there. This vnreaſonable reaſon layeth cruelty vnto the blame of God which may vndoubtedly deliuer al ſoules thence and yet he leaueth thē there. This blaſphemye ſhould alſo touch hys hye maieſtie for keeping any ſoule in hell, from whence no man doubteth but that he might if he liſt deliuer them all for euer.

Frith.

I aunſwere, that the example is nothing like, for God can deliuer no man neither from hell, nor from purgatory (if ſuch one were) vntill hys iuſtice be counterpayſed, as I haue ſufficiently proued agaynſt Raſkell. And if you obiect his abſolute power then aunſwer I that he hath an abſolute iuſtice as well as an abſolute power, and ſo can hys abſolute power do nothing vntill hys abſolute iuſtice be ſatisfyed. And agayne I ſay, that God hath no power nor luſt to do agaynſt hys ſcripture and himſelf: but his power & luſt is to fulfill that he hath promiſed: vnto the faythfull, euerlaſting glory: and vnto the wicked eternall damnation. So that god by hys ſcripture can deliuer no man out of hell, for then had he power to make himſelfe a lyer, & ſo were he no God: neither can he deliuer any man out of purgatory (ſuppoſed that there were one) vntill hys iuſtice be pacified. But the pope (as he ſayth himſelfe) hath the full ſatisfaction in hys own hand wherby Gods iuſtice muſt be pacified: wherfore it is onely the popes fault, which hath the ſatisfaction in his power, and will not gene it til he haue money, & not Gods fault which muſt nedes tary vntill ſatisfaction be made. And ſo is thys reaſon as ſtrong as it was before, & the pope proued a cruell tyraunt.

God cānot be againſt himſelfe.

M. More.

But yet to excuſe the pope he ſayth, It is not meete that the Pope ſhould be ſo quicke in deliueraūce: for ſo ſhould he geue a great occaſion to mē boldly to fall into ſinne and litle to care or feare how ſlowly they ryſe agayne, and that were not mete for his office.

Frith.

Forſoth this is a gentle reaſon. He may not be quicke in deliueraūce becauſe he ſhould geue men occaſion of ſinne. But for one peny he will quyte deliuer you and that with ſpede. For if ye offer a peny into S. Dominikes bore, aſſone as ye heare ỳ peny ryng in the bore, euen ſo ſone is the ſoule in heauē. Call you not that quicke deliueraūce? If you geue not that peny, then may he not deliuer the ſoule, for it ſhould be an occaſion of ſinne. But if you geue that peny thē is there no ſuch occaſiō of ſinne. Such great vertue hath that one peny in M. Mores ſight, that it cleane wypeth away the occaſion of ſinne.

A penny offred into S. Dominickes bore worketh great matter.

Note what vertue is in a penny.

Furthermore, if this redemption may be done for money, it ſhall be ſtill an occaſion vnto the rich that they regard not ſinne, and yet they had more nēd to be brydeled then the poore: for where riches & aboundaunce is there raygneth ſinne moſt of all. Howbeit I haue ſhewed ſufficiently before agaynſt Raſkell, that they which feare not to ſinne but for feare of purgatorye, ſhall neuer come into it, but be damned in hell. For we ſhould not abſtaine from ſinne for any feare, but for the pure loue that we haue to god our moſt mercifull Father. &c.

M. More.

Then commeth maiſter More to this imagination, that we ſhould ſay, how no mans prayer or good deed can help an other. And (ſaith he) if that were true, thē could not Chriſtes bitter paſſion profite vs.

Frith.

Sir mine opiniō of Chriſtes death is this: 1 We haue al ſinned in Adam without our own conſent and worke. 1 And we are looſed from ſinne thorough Chriſt without our workes or deſeruinges. 2 Sinne is come into the world thorow Adam, and is punished wᵭ death. 2 The death through Chriſt is turned into a medicine, and cleane finiſheth ſinne.

Joh. Frith declareth his opinion of Chriſtes death.

3 One

3 One mans ſinne whiche is Adam, hath condemned many men.
3 One mans grace which is Chriſt, hath banquiſhed ſinne and holpen many.
4 If one mans ſinne be able to condemne vs without our workes.
4 Then much more is Gods grace of power to ſaue vs without our workes.
5 Sinne thorough Adam was planted in vs.
5 Grace thorough Chriſt is planted in vs.
6 Sinne hath had dominion ouer all men through Adam.
6 Grace preuaileth ouer vs through Chriſt.
7 Death thorough ſinne is planted in vs.
7 Life through grace is plãted in vs.
8 Death thorough ſinne hath dominion ouer vs.
8 Lyfe through grace preuayleth ouer vs.
9 Synne and death haue cõdemned all men.
9 Grace and life haue ſaued all men.
10 Thorough Adam, Adams ſynne was counted our owne.
10 Thorough Chriſt, Chriſtes righteouſneſſe is reputed vnto vs for our owne.

¶ Of this may you perceaue that we thinke that Chriſtes death profiteth vs, for we take hys death and reſurrection for our whole redemption and ſaluation. Now as concernyng mens good dedes and prayers, I ſay that they profite our neighbours: yea and good woorkes were ordeined for that entent that I ſhould profite my neighbour through them: And prayer ought to bee made to God for euery ſtate. But if I ſhould graũt that ſuch workes & prayers ſhould helpe them that are departed, thẽ ſhould I ſpeake cleane without my booke, for the word of God knoweth no ſuch thyng. Let them therefore that pray for the dead examine them ſelues well with what fayth they do it, for fayth leaneth onely on the word of God, ſo that where his worde is not there can be no good fayth: and if their prayer procede not of fayth, ſurely it can not pleaſe God. Hebrues. xj.

How mens prayers & good dedes do help one an other.

NOw ſuppoſe (ſayth M. More) that Purgatorye could in no wiſe be proued by Scripture, and that ſome wold yet ſay plainly that there were one and ſome would ſay playnly nay, let vs now ſee whether ſorte of theſe twayne myght take moſt harme if their parte were the wrong. Firſt he that beleued there were Purgatory, & that his prayer and good workes wrought for his frendes ſoules might relieue them therein, and becauſe of that vſed much prayer and almoſe for them, he could not leſe the reward of his good wil although his opiniõ were vntrue and that there were no Purgatory at all. But on the other ſide, he that beleueth there is none, and therfore prayeth for none: if his opiniõ be falſe and that there be Purgatory in deede, hee leſeth much good, and getteth hym alſo much harme. For hee both feareth much leſſe to ſinne, and to lye lõg in Purgatory, ſauing that his hereſie ſhall keepe hym thence, and ſende hym downe deepe into hell. M. More.

I aũſwere, that he ſhould take moſt harme that beleued there were a Purgatory, if his opiniõ were wrong and could not be proued by the Scripture (as M. More ſuppoſed) for he ſhould ſinne and tranſgreſſe agaynſt the law of God which ſayth. Deut. xij. That I commaunde thée that onely do vnto the Lord, neither adde any thyng nor diminiſh. And before in the iiij. chap. of the ſame booke, ye ſhall not adde vnto the worde that I ſpeake vnto you neither ſhall ye take any thyng from it. And agayne in the v. chapter ye ſhall not decline neither to the left hãd (doyng that which is good in your owne ſight) neither yet vnto the right hand, doyng that which I manifeſtly forbyd you as though he ſhould ſay, doe that onely whiche I commaunde thée. And where M. More ſayth that hee can not leſe the rewarde of hys good will, although his opinion be vntrue. I aunſwere yes for it is but choſen holyneſſe which Paule cõ- Frith.

neth. Colloſ. 2. which ſurely ſhall rather be imputed vnto hym for ſynne then for any good worke. And becauſe (as I ſayd before) it can not be done through fayth. I ſay that it is vtterly reproued of God. And on the other ſide he that beleueth it not, ſith it can not be proued by Scripture, cā catch no harme at all, although his opinion were falſe, but rather much good and prayſe both of God and all good men: becauſe he feareth to ſwerue frō the word of God, and had leuer not to beleue that thyng which is true (be it in caſe that purgatory were) and not ſet forth in Scripture, for ſo ſhall he be ſure not to ſinne: then to beleue for an article of ỹ fayth that thyng which is falſe in dede, for ſo ſhould he ſurely ſinne and tranſgreſſe agaynſt God and his holy worde. And ſo is there great perill to beleue a thyng for an article of the fayth whiche is not opened nor ſpoken of in Scripture: But if I beleue it not (although it were true) yet is there no ryght nor law that can condemne me. Now may you ſée, that to beleue for an article of the fayth that there is a Purgatory, ſith it can not be proued by Scripture, may condemne a man and make hym lye for euer in the paynes of hell, where as the other ſhoulde but a litle lenger lye in the paynes of Purgatory (if there were one) and ſo ſhal he be ſure to catch moſt harme that beleueth there is a Purgatory.

It is better not to beleue that which the ſcripture alloweth not, thē to make a fayth where we ſhould not.

M.More. Sauyng (ſayth Maiſter More) that hys hereſie ſhall keepe hym from thence, and ſende him downe depe into hell.

Frith. Before he ſuppoſed ỹ it could not be proued by ſcripture. And now (ſtanding the ſame ſuppoſitiō) he calleth it an hereſie, & anhereſie is a ſtiffe holdē opinion repugnant vnto Scripture. If Purgatory can not bee proued by Scripture (as he maketh his ſuppoſition) then cā not the contrary opiniō be repugnaunt to Scripture, & thus of his own ſuppoſitiō he doth euill to cal it an hereſie. And where he ſayth, that his opiniō ſhall ſende hym down depe into hell, verely he ſteppeth to farre in Gods iudgement to conclude and determine ſo cruelly, & ſpecially in the ſame argument where he ſuppoſeth that it can not be proued, for if it can not bee proued by Scripture, whereby will ye condemne hym ſo deepe that holdeth the contrary? for ſoth you are a fierce iudge. God geue you eyes to ſée.

What is hereſie.

M. More is a ſore iudge.

FInallye, if ye pitie any man in payne, neuer knewe ye payne comparable to ours, whoſe fire paſſeth as farre in heate all the fires that euer burned vppon earth, as the hoteſt of all thoſe paſſeth a fayned fire paynted on a wall. M. More. The fire of purgatory is a meruelous hot fire.

Verely among all his other Poetrie it is reaſon that we graunt hym this. Yea and that our fire is but water in compariſon to it. For I enſure you it hath alone melted more gold and ſiluer for our ſpiritualties profite out of poore mens purſes, then all the gold ſmithes fires within England, neither yet therewith can the ragyng heate be aſſwaged. But it melteth caſtels, harde ſtones, landes and tenementes innumerable. For all your ſectes of Religion, Monkes, Friers, Chanons and Nunnes, with other Prieſtes regulare & ſeculare, by this fire, multiplication and alcumye haue obtayned their whole riches and pleaſures: euen the ſwete of England. And ſo muſt we graunt hym that this fire is very hote. Frith. Beholde here the force of the fire of purgatory.

Now may you wel perceaue what a ſlender foūdation their hote purgatory hath. For by this confutatiō may you eaſely ſée that it hath no grounde nor authority of Scripture. Notwithſtandyng it is the foundation of all religions and cloyſters, yea and of all the gōdes that nowe are in theſe ſpiritualtie. Are not they witty worke men whiche can buylde ſo much on ſo ſlender a foundation? Howbeit they haue made it ſo toppeheuye, that it is ſurely lyke to haue a fall. Thus hath Maiſter More a full aunſwere, both to hys Scriptures whiche were to farre wreſted out of theyr places, and alſo to hys owne apparent reaſons. Howbeit if hys maiſterſhyppe be not fully pacified, let hym more groundly

M. More fully aunſwered to all that he can ſay for purgatory.

ly open hys mynde, and bryng for his purpoſe all that he thinketh to make for it and I ſhall by Gods grace ſhortly make hym an aunſwere and quyet his mynde.

¶ Thus endeth the ſecond booke.

¶ The third booke, which aunſwereth vnto my Lord of Rocheſter and declareth the mynde of the old Doctours.

NOw will I addreſſe me to the thirde part, which ſhallbe an aunſwere vnto my lord of Rocheſter. And all his reaſons and argumentes both of the Scriptures, and doctoures, which are not before diſſolued in the ſeconde part, wyll I clene confute (by Gods grace) in this thirde booke. Howbeit the chefeſt of his ſcriptures hath M. More peruſed and hath in a maner nothing but that was before writtē by my lord of Rocheſter: ſauing that he maketh the ſelfe ſoules to pull, to helpe his matter withall. My lord of Rocheſter is the firſt patrone and defender of thys phantaſie. And cuē as M. More toke his worke out of my lord of Rocheſters: euen ſo pluckt Raſtell hys booke out of M. Mores.

M. More was the Byſhop of Rocheſters Diſciple.

Rocheſter the firſt patrone of Purgatory

My lord of Rocheſter to confirme hys ſentence, rekoneth vp the doctors by heape, M. Iohan, M. William, M. Thomas, & omnes. But as concerning the doctors, that they are not ſo fully on hys ſide as he woulde make thē ſeme, is ſone proued. And where ſhould I better begin to confute him, then of hys owne wordes? for he writeth himſelfe vpon the xviij. article on this maner:

Rocheſter. THere is no man now a daies that doubteth of Purgatorye (ſayeth he) and yet among the olde auncient fathers was there eyther none, or els very ſeldome mention made of it. And alſo among the Grecians euen vnto this day is not purgatory beleued? Let him read that will the commentaries of the olde Grecians, and as I ſuppoſe he ſhal finde eyther no worde ſpoken of it, or els very few.

The Byſhop of Rocheſters owne wordes.

These are my lordes wordes. I wonder what obliuiouſnes is come vppon hym, that he ſo cleaueth vnto the Doctors, whome he affirmed before eyther to make no mention of it, or els very ſeldome. Notwythſtanding I will declare you ſomewhat of the Doctors, that you may the better know they meaning. Frith.

To ſpeake of the Doctors, & what they minde was in thys matter, it were neceſſarye to declare in what time they were, and what condition the worlde was in they dayes. S. Auſtine, Ambroſe, & Hierome were in one time, euen about iiij. hundred yeares after Chriſt, and yet before they time were there ariſen infinite heretikes by whole ſectes, as the Arrians, Domitians, Eunomians, Vigilanttians, Pelagians, with infinite other, which had ſo ſwerued from the truth, and wreſted the Scripture out of frame, that it was not poſſible for one man, no nor for one mans age to reſtore it agayne vnto the true ſenſe. Among theſe there were ſome which not onely fayned a purgatory, but alſo doted ſo far, that they affirmed that euery man were he neuer ſo vicious ſhould be ſaued through that fire, and aleaged for them the place of Paul 1. Corinthians 3. These holy doctours perceauing thoſe greate erroures, thought it not beſt by and by to condemne all thinges indifferētly: but to ſuffer and diſſemble wyth the leſſe, that they might wæde out the opinions which were moſt noyſom, as the Apoſtles graunted vnto the Iewes, that the Gentiles ſhould kæpe ſome of Moyſes law, Actes xv. that they might the better com to their purpoſe to ſaue the Iewes with the Gentiles. For if they had at the firſt vtterly ſet of the law, then would the Iewes ne- Sectes of heretickes. 1. Cor. 3. Actes. 15.

uer haue geuen any audience vnto the Apostles. And euen so S. Austen went wisely to worke: First condemning by the Scripture that errour which was most noysome, and wrote on thys maner. Albeit some might be purged through fire, yet not such as the Apostle condemneth when he sayeth, that the persons which so do, shal not possesse the kingdome of heauen. And where they woulde haue stucke vnto Paules text 1. Cor. 3. and affirme that they shoulde be saued thorough fire, S. Austen answered, that Paules texte was vnderstande of the spirituall fire, which is, temptation, affliction, tribulation &c. Thys wrote he in the 67. 68. of hys Enchiridion, to subuert that grosse errour, that all should be saued through ỳ fire of purgatory. Yet in the 69. he goeth a litle neare them and sayth, that it may be doubted whether there be any such purgatory or not. He durst not yet openly cõdemne it, because he thought that men could not at that time beare it. But after in his boke which he entituled, De vanitate huius sæculi, there doth he fully shew his minde in these wordes: Scitote quòd cum anima a corpore auellitur, statim aut pro meritis bonis in Paradiso collocatur, aut pro meritis malis in infernitartara præcipitatur. i. Wote ye well that when the soule is departed from the body, eyther it is by and by put into paradise according to hys good desertes, or els it is thrust hedlong into hell for hys sinnes. Here he cleane condemneth purgatory: for if thys be done by and by assone as the soule is departed from the body, then can there be no purgatory: and so maketh S. Austen wholy with vs. Thinke ye that S. Austen dissenteth from his companion S. Hierome, or from hys owne Master S. Ambrose? Nay verely: Howbeit I will alleage theyr owne wordes, and then iudge.

S. Austen sheweth what hee thought of Purgatory

Saint Ambrose.

SAint Ambrose dissenteth not from S. Austine, but doth stablysh hys sentence as fully as is possible: for he writeth in the second chapter of hys boke which is called De bono mortis, on this maner bringing in the wordes of Dauid Psal. 39. Aduena ego sum in terra, & peregrinus sicut omnes patres mei. Et ideo tanquam peregrinus ad illã sanctorum communem omnium patriam festinabat. Petens pro huius commorationis inquinamento remitti sibi peccata, priusquam discederet de vita. Qui enim hic non acceperit remissionem peccatorum illic non erit. Non erit autem, quia ad vitam æternam non potuerit peruenire, quia vita æterna remissio peccatorum est. Ideoq; dicit, remitte mihi vt refrigerer priusquam abeam. &c. that is, I am a straunger and a pilgrime in the earth as all my fathers haue bene. And therfore as a pilgrime he hasted vnto the common countrey of all saintes, requiring for the filthines that he had receaued in this bodely mansion, that his sinnes might be forgeuen him before he departed from thys lyfe. For he that here hath not receaued forgeuenesse of hys sinnes, shall not be there. He shall not surely be there, for he can not come vnto euerlasting life, for euerlasting lyfe is the forgeuenes of sinnes. And therfore he sayth, forgeue me that I may be coled before I depart. Here may you euidently perceaue, that S. Ambrose knew not of purgatory, nor of any forgeuenesse that should be after thys lyfe: But plainly affirmeth that he ỳ receaueth not forgeuenesse of hys sinnes here (that is, in thys life) shall neuer come in heauen. And for a more vehement affirmation he dubleth hys own wordes saying: He that here hath not receyued forgeuenesse of hys sinnes, he shall not be there, he shall not surely be there. He meaneth that he shall neuer come to Heauen, which here hath not his remission.

S. Ambrose sheweth his opinion of Purgatory.

Saint Hierome. Eccle. 9.

SAint Hieromes minde may sone be gathered by hys exposition of the ix. chapter of Ecclesiastes vpon thys text: The dead haue no part in thys world, nor in any worke that is done vnder the Sunne. There addeth Sainte Hierome, that the dead can adde nothing vnto that which they haue taken with them out of this life, for they can neither do good nor sinne, neyther can they encrease in vertue or vice. Albeit (sayth he) some wyll contrarie thys exposition, affirming

All suffrages prayers & good dedes done for the dead are in vayne.

also

alſo that we may encreaſe & decreaſe after death.

Here are thꝛée things to be noted: first, that the Text ſayth, that the dead are not partakers of any woꝛk that is done vnder the ſunne. And there may you ſée that all ſuffrages, offringes, and diriges foꝛ the dead are in vaine, and pꝛofite them not, foꝛ they are partakers of nothing vnder the ſunne.

2. Secondarily, you may ſée S. Hieromes owne minde, that the dead can neyther do good noꝛ euill, neyther encreaſe in vertue noꝛ vice. And ſo is purgatoꝛy put out: foꝛ if they can do no good, what ſhould they do in purgatoꝛy? And agayne, if they can not encreaſe in vertue, they be lyke to lye long in purgatoꝛye. Peraduenture ſome man would thinke that they do no good, but onely that they ſuffer good. To that I aunſwer that he that ſuffereth good, doth good: foꝛ if a man ſhould ſuffer hys body to be burnt foꝛ the ſayth of Chꝛiſt, would you not ſay that he did a good déed? and yet doth he but ſuffer.

The dead can neither do good oꝛ euil, noꝛ increaſe in vertue.

3 Thirdly ye may note, that S. Hierome was not ignoꝛant that certeine (as they which did fayne purgatoꝛy) would denye hys expoſition, and ſay that we might encreaſe and decreaſe in vertue and vyce after death, yet notwithſtanding he held his ſentence condemning theyꝛ opinion, whych thing he would not haue done (ſpecially ſith he knew that he ſhould haue aduerſaries foꝛ it) except he had bene ſure that his ſentence was right. Sée I pꝛay you how that not onely ſcripture, but euen theyꝛ owne doctoures condemne this phantaſticall purgatoꝛy: and yet my loꝛds are not aſhamed to ſay that all make foꝛ them.

NEuertheleſſe, I wyll go further wyth hym. Be it in caſe that all the Doctours dyd affirme purgatoꝛy, as they do not: what were my Lord the nearer hys purpoſe? Uerely not one iote: foꝛ the authoꝛitie of doctoꝛs by my loꝛdes owne confeſſion extendeth no further, but is onely to be admitted whileſt they confirme theyꝛ woꝛdes by Scripture, oꝛ els by ſome pꝛobable reaſon. Foꝛ my Loꝛde wꝛiteth on this maner, Article xxvj. The Pope hath not ſo allowed the whole doctrine of S. Thomas, that men ſhould beléue euery poynte he wrote were true. Neither hath the church ſo approued eyther S. Auſtine or S. Hierome, nor any other authors doctrine, but that in ſome places we may diſſent from them: for they in many places haue openly declared themſelues to be men, and many times to haue erred. Rocheſter,

The doctoꝛs haue erred in many thinges.

These are my loꝛdes owne woꝛds. Now ſith the doctours ſomtime erre, and in certayne places are not to be admitted (as he graunteth himſelfe) how ſhould we know whē to appꝛoue them, and when to deny them? If we ſhould hang on the Doctoures authoꝛity, then ſhould we as well alow the vntruth, as the truth, ſith he affirmeth both. Therfoꝛe we muſt haue a iudge to diſcerne betwéene truth and falſehode. And who ſhoulde that be? the pope? Nay verely: foꝛ he being a man (as well as the Doctours were) may erre as they did, and ſo ſhall we euer be vncertaine. Our Judge therefoꝛe muſt not be parciall flexible, noꝛ ignoraunt (and ſo are all naturall men excluded:) but he muſt be inalterable, euen ſearching the bottome & ground of all thing. Who muſt that be? Uerely the ſcripture and woꝛd of God, which was geuen by his Sonne, confirmed and ſealed by the holy Ghoſt, and teſtified by miracles and bloud of all martyꝛes. This woꝛd is the iudge that muſt examine the matter, the perfit touchſtone that tryeth al thing, and day that diſcloſeth all iuggeling miſtes. If the doctours ſay any thing not diſſonant from this woꝛd, then it is to be admitted and holdē foꝛ truth. But if any of theyꝛ doctrine diſcoꝛde from it, it is to be abhoꝛred, and holden accurſed.

The woꝛde of God is the touchſtone & tryeth all of all doctrine.

The ſayinges of the Doctoꝛs are no further to be credited then they agree with ỹ ſcripture.

To this full well agréeth S. Auſten whiche wꝛiteth vnto S. Hierome on this wiſe: Deare bꝛother, I thinke that you wil not haue your bookes reputed lyke vnto the woꝛkes of the Pꝛophetes and Apoſtles: foꝛ I (the Scripture reſerued) do read all other S. Auſtine mens wordes on that maner, that I doe not beleue them because the author so sayth, be he neuer so well learned and holy, except that he can certifie me by the Scripture or cleare reason that he sayth true. And euen so would I that other men should read my bookes, as I read theirs. These are S. Austēs wordes. And thus haue I proued both by S. Austen and also by my Lordes owne wordes, that no man is bound to beleue the Doctors, except they can be proued true either by Scripture or good reason not repugnaunt to Scripture. Therefore let vs sée what Scripture or good reason my Lord bryngeth to approue his doctours withall. For els they can not helpe hym (as we haue declared both by S. Austen & my Lordes owne confession,) although they all made with hym, as they do not. First he bringeth in the sinne agaynst the holy ghost. Math. 12. And Paule. 1. Cor. 3. And. 1. John. 5. And Apoca. 5. which textes I passe ouer because I haue aunswered vnto them before in the seconde booke, agaynst M. More.

S. Austen read old auctors, and would also haue all mē read his wordes.

THe first reason that my Lord hath which is not before soluted (for as I sayd the reasons that are already dissolued will I now ouerhyp) is this which he groundeth on diuers Scriptures. Of the soules that are departed, some are all ready damned in hell, and some are all ready in heauen. And to proue this true, he alledgeth the parable of the rich mā. Luke 16. I am sure my Lord is not so ignoraūt as to say that a parable proueth any thyng. But the right vse of a parable is this, to expound an harde terte or poynte, that was before touched & could not entre into euery mans capacitie. Neither are all thynges lyke which are spoken in a similitude, neither yet all thynges true that are touched in a parable: but we must consider the thyng wherefore they be spokē, and apply them onely to that they are spoken for, and let the residue go: as William Tyndall hath well declared vnto you in the parable of wicked Mammon. This parable is very hard to be expounded. The cause is this, no man can wel espye by the tert for what purpose it was spoken. But this should séeme to be the cause, that there were many of the Phariseis & other multitude which would not beleue the preaching of Christ although he confirmed his wordes with the authoritie of Moses and the Prophetes, but they were curious and some deale phantasticall and therfore would they not beleue his wordes except some apparitions had bene made vnto thē that they might haue bene assured by them that were before dead, that hys wordes were true.

Rochester. Luc. 16.

Parables in ỹ scripture proue nothing, but only open and expound dark and hard thinges.

Vnto such it is lyke that hee speaketh this parable, playnly concludyng that they should haue no such apparitions of the dead, and also that it was not necessary: but that they had Moses & the Prophetes, to whom if they would geue no credence, then should they not beleue although one of the dead should ryse againe & tell it them. Notwithstandyng let me graunt it hym, that some are all ready in hell and some in heauen (which thyng he shall neuer bee able to proue by the Scripture, yea and which playnly destroyeth the resurrection and taketh awaye the argumentes wherewith Christ and Paule doe proue that we shall ryse) yet I say let me graunt it hym to sée how he will cōclude. What folowyth on that?

By Moses and the prophtes is meant the old Testament.

Rochester. Neither it is credible (sayth he) that all whiche are cast into hell should streight way goe to heauen, therfore must we put a Purgatorye where they may be purged.

Frith. I aunswere: All that liue are sayth-full or vnfaythfull. If he be vnfaythfull then is he damned. John. 3. If he beleue then is he not condemned, but is gone from death to lyfe. John. 3. 5. The righteous man when hee dyeth shall rest in peace. Sapi. 3. And euery faithful mā is righteous before God, as ỹ whole Epistle, to the Romaines proueth: Ergo, then euery saythfull man shall rest in peace and be tormented in the paynes of Purgatory. And as touchyng this poynte where they rest, I dare be bold to say that they are in the hand of God and that God would that we ſhould be ignoraunt where they be, and not to take vpon vs to determine the matter.

Abrahams boſome, what it ſignifieth.

Peraduenture you would enquire of me (ſith the parable ſayth that Lazarus reſted in Abrahams boſome) what Abrahams boſome is? To that would I aũſwere that Abrahams boſome were nothyng els then Abrahams fayth. For all we are called the children of Abraham becauſe of hys perfite fayth whiche we ought to folow. In this fayth are many and in a maner infinite degrées: notwithſtandyng if it be no greater thẽ a muſtard ſéede that is to ſay very ſmall, yet ſhal it ſaue vs. He that departeth in this fayth reſteth in peace, and wayteth for the laſt day when God ſhall geue vnto hys faythfull, that is, to his elect (for onely are the elect faythfull & the faythfull elect) the crowne of his glorie which he hath prepared for them that loue hym. This crowne doth Paule ſay that he ſhall receaue it in that day. 2. Timo. 4. that is in the day of iudgement. And in the meane ſeaſon God hath ſo prouided for vs, that they ſhall wayte vntill the number of their brethren which dayly ſuffer and ſhall ſuffer for Chriſt, be wholy fulfilled, and ſo ſhall they not be made perfite without vs. Heb. xj. If my Lord will vnderſtãd by Abrahams boſome heauen, I will not be contentious, let the Chriſten iudge which ſentence ſemeth moſt true. But this is once a cleare caſe that of this he cã proue no Purgatory. For the vnfaythfull are all ready dãned, and the faythfull reſt in peace, let him call that what he wil, whether to reſt in heauen or to reſt in their fayth vntill the laſt day. For I am ſure there is no man ſo madde as to ſay, that to reſt in peace ſhould ſignifie to lye in the paynes of Purgatory.

The elect are faithful & the faythful are elect

Abrahams boſome can proue no purgatory.

To reſt in peace is not to lye in tormentes.

Furthermore, this text ſhal rather make ſore agaynſt hym thẽ any thyng with hym. For Lazarus whiles hée was lyuyng was not without ſinne, nor no man els. 1. John. 1. ſo that no man as long as he hath breath in hys body can ſay that he is without ſinne, for then ſhould hee make S. John a lyar. And yet was not Lazarus caried into purgatory to be purged of his ſinnes which were remainyng in his body the houre of his death: wherefore I may conclude that there is no ſuch Purgatory. For God is as iuſt vnto hym as vnto vs, and therefore would he purge hym as well as vs, & agayne he is as mercyfull vnto vs as vnto him, and will as wel forgeue vs as hym, without broyling on ẏ coales in purgatory: for his iuſtice and mercye are euer one and not alterable. But our perfite purgatiõ is the pure bloud of Chriſt which waſheth away the ſinne of the world. And albeit we euer haue the remnauntes and dregges of ſinne, and rebellion of our mẽbers as long as we haue lyfe, yet are they wholy finiſhed in death: for of ſuch efficacitie is Chriſtes death, that it hath turned the death of hys faythfull (which was layed vpon vs as the payne of ſinne) into a medicine agaynſt ſinne which fully cureth it and maketh an end of it, as it was well figured in Golias that was ſlaine with hys owne ſword.

A good concluſion againſt purgatory.

Chriſtes death hath ouercomme our death, & turned it into life.

AND where as my Lord bryngeth for his purpoſe. Math. xij. that mẽ ſhal geue accoumptes of euery idle worde. I haue ſoluted that before againſt M. More, that I thinke he ſhal ſay hym ſelfe that he is aunſwered. For if men ſhall geue a rekonyng for them on the day of dome (as the text ſayth) that ſhould rather argue that there were no Purgatory wherein thoſe ſinnes ſhould be purged, for if they had bene purged before of them, then ſhoulde they not geue an accoumpte for them. And if it proued any thyng at all, it ſhould proue that there were a Purgatory after domeſday which no man was euer ſo fooliſh as to graunt.

Rocheſter, Math. 12.

Frith.

If there be any purgatory it muſt be after domeſday, for before there can be none.

But the true vnderſtãdyng of this text is this. There are two kyndes of men one faythfull, the other vnfaythfull. The faythful through their fayth in Chriſtes bloud are all ready fully purged in their hart, and their rebellious mẽbers through death are wholly ſubdued. These men shall geue no reckoning, neyther of idle worde, nor euill dæd: for all theyr sinnes are couered of Christ, and hys bloud shall gene the whole accomptes for them. The vnfaythfull to theyr vtter confusion shall haue the boke of theyr conscience opened, and there shall be presented before them all theyr euill deades, woordes, and thoughtes. And these are they that Christ speaketh of which shall geue thys great accompt. Note also that in the text they are called men, which word in Scripture is euer for the most part taken in the worste sense, and signifieth wicked men, fleshly men, and men that folow their own lustes and appetites.

Vnfaythfull.

Men.

Rocheſter. Pſal. 66.

Then confirmeth he purgatory out of the 66. Psalme, which sayth: we haue gone through fire and water and thou hast brought vs into colenesse. I am sure you haue not forgotten that M. More alledgeth the Prophet Zachary in the ix. and affirmeth that there is no water in Purgatory. It were hard to make these two agrée, for when mẽ ground them on a lye, then for the most part theyr tales and probations are cõtrary and will not well stand together. Neuertheleſſe in one poynte they agrée full well, that is, both of them say vntruly: for neither nother text serueth any whit for Purgatory. And as concernyng the place of Zachary: it is sufficiẽtly declared what it meaneth. And now wil I also declare you the vnderstandyng of this text, and first that it can not serue for purgatory. I beseech you that haue the psalter once to read the Psalme & I thinke you shal wonder at their dotyng dreames and ignorannce which allege this text for Purgatory. The text of ỳ Psalme is this: Thou hast brought vs into a straite & laden our backes with trouble or heynesse. Thou hast set men vpon our heades, we haue gone through fire & water and thou hast led vs out agayn into a place of refreshyng. The textes before and after in the same Psalme will not suffer that this place should be vnderstand of Purgatory. For the text immediatly before sayth, thou hast set men vpon our heades. But the chiefest defenders of Purgatory (and euẽ M. More hym selfe) say that they are not men, but deuils which torment the soules in Purgatory, notwithstandyng my Lord of Rochester (good man) affirmeth that they are aungels whiche torment the soules there: but neuer man doted so farre as to say that men torment the soules in Purgatory, wherefore I may conclude that this text is not ment of purgatory, but that the Prophet mẽt that men ranne ouer the childrẽ of Israell & subdued them, and wrapped thẽ in extreme troubles which in the Scripture are signified by fire and water. Besides that the textes folowyng wil not admit that this should be vnderstãd of Purgatory for it foloweth immediatly, I will enter into thy house with burt offrynges, I shall offer vnto thée fat sacrifices with the reke of wethers I shall burne to the Oxen & Goates. Now is there no mã so mad as to thinke that the soules of Purgatory should offer vnto God any such sacrifices. So that the text is playnly vnderstand of the children of Israell, which through the Lord were deliuered from their afflictiõs and enemies & then offred theyr loyall sacrifices of prayse and thankes to the Lord theyr shield and protection.

NOwe sayeth my Lorde vnto the Church & sayth, that because the Churche hath affirmed it we must needes beleue it, for the Church cã not erre. As touchyng this poynte I will referre you vnto a woorke that William Tyndal hath writtẽ agaynst M. More wherin ye shal wel perceiue what the Church of Christ is, & that hys Churche neuer determined any such thyng. But that it is the Synagoge of Sathan that maketh articles of the fayth & bindeth mẽs consciẽces further then the Scripture will.

Frith.

The chirch sayth Rocheſter, meaning the popes church can not erre.

Then wareth his Lordshyp somewhat hote agaynst Martine Luther, because he would that no man should be compelled to beleue Purgatory.

tory. For my Lord sayth that it is profitable and wel done to compel men to beleue such thynges whether they will or will not. And to stablishe his opinion hee plucketh out a word of the parable of Luke.xiiij. that a certayne man made a great supper, and sayd vnto his seruaũtes, go forth quickly into the wayes and compell them to enter in. Luke. 14.

Frith. Verely there Christ ment no other thyng, but that his Apostles should go forth into all the world and preach his word vnto all nations, openyng vnto them the miserable state and conditiõ that they be in, and agayne what mercy God hath shewed thẽ in his sonne Christ. This would Christ that his Apostles should expound and lay out so euidently, by reasons, Scriptures, and miracles vnto the Gentils, that they should euẽ by their manifest persuasions be compelled to graunt vnto them that he was Christ, and to take vpon them the sayth that is in Christ. On this maner did Christ compel the Saduces to graunt the resurrection. Math.xxij. And by these meanes compelled hee the Pharisеis to graunt in their consciences that he dyd his miracles with the power of God, & yet afterward of very hate knowyng in their hartes the contrary, they sayd ỹ he dyd them by the power of the deuill. Math.xij. But to say that Christ would haue his Disciples to compell men with prisonment, fetters, scourgyng, sword and fire is very false and farre from the mildenesse of a Christẽ spirite, although my Lord approue it neuer so much. For Christ dyd forbyd his Disciples such tyrãny, yea and rebuked them because they would haue desired that fire should descende from heauen to consume the Samaritanes which wold not receiue Christ. Luke ix. But he commaunded them that if mẽ would not receiue their doctrine, they should departe from thence and spryncle of the dust of their fẽte to be a testimony agaynst the vnfaythfull that they had bene there & preached vnto them the word of life: But with violence will God haue no man compelled vnto his law. Paule also testifieth. 2. Cor. 1. that he had not rule ouer the Corinthiãs as touchyng their sayth. By our sayth we stand in the Lord, & by our infidelitie we fall from hym. As no man can search the hart but onely God, so can no man iudge or order our sayth but onely God thorough his holy spirite. The parable of Luke 14. truly interpreted. How men should be compelled to beleue. Christ was meeke and gentle and no tyrannous scholemaster. Luke. 9. Paul sayth he had no power ouer their sayth.

Furthermore sayth is a gifte of God, which he distributeth at hys owne pleasure. 1. Cor. 12. If he geue it not this day, he may geue it to morow. And if thou perceaue by any exterior worke that thy neighbour haue it not, enstruct him with Gods word, and pray God to geue hym grace to beleue: that is rather a poynte of a christen man, then to compell a man by death or exterior violence. 1. Cor. 12.

Finally, what doth thy compulsion and violence? Verely nothing but make a starke hypocrite: for no man can compel the hart to beleue a thing except it see euidence and sufficiente prose. I haue herd tell of a boy which was present at hys fathers burning for hys beleefe, and allone as the officers had espyed the boy, they sayd ech to other, Let vs take hym and examine him also, peraduenture we shal finde him as great an heretike as hys father. When the boy saw that hys father was dead, and that the catchpoles began to snatch at him, he was sore dismayed, and thought that he should dye to. And when one of them apposed him, asking him how he beleeued, he answered, Maister I beleue euen as it pleaseth you. Euen so by tormentes and crafty handling a man may be compelled to say that he beleueth the thing which he neyther thinketh, nor yet can beleue: for a mãs sayth is not in his own power. Sayth is not procured by violence, but is the mere & onely gift of God. Feare maketh sayth no sayth at all.

But how doth God accepte thys thing, to say that I beleue that which indeede I beleue not? Verely he vterly condemneth it, whether the opinion be true or false. For if the opinion be true (as by example, that the sayth in Christes bloud iustificth me before God) and I confesse it before all the bishops in England with my mouth, and beleue it not with mine hart, then am I nothing the better, (for I ſhould haue no part of Chriſtes bloud) but I am much the worſe. For firſt God condemneth me, which iudgeth me after myne hart, and alſo mine owne hart condemneth me, becauſe I haue openly graunted that mine hart denyeth.

Fayth is firſt the gift of God and proceedeth from the hart, which may not be compelled.

And contrariwyſe, if I ſhould beleue thys fully in mine hart, and yet for feare of perſecution ſhould deny it when I were examined openly of my fayth, then ſhall I be condemned of God (except I repent,) and alſo myne owne hart ſhall be a witnes to condemne me. And ſo it is very noiſome & vngodly to be compelled vnto any thing: for God euer ſearcheth the hart which can not be compelled.

Rocheſter. BVt my Lord obiecteth writing vpon the xviij. article ſaying: If a man take away Purgatorye, for what entent ſhall we need any pardons? As long (ſayth he) as no man regarded purgatory, there was no man that ſought any pardon: for all the eſtimation of pardons hangeth thereof, ſo that we ſhall haue no neede of them, if there be no purgatorye.

Pardons.

Rocheſter ſayth herein very truly and yet was not ware of it.

Verely I care not though I graũt him that to. And I thinke that money was the mother of them both. For out of the ſcripture ſhall he be able to proue neyther nother.

Purgatory and pardõs haue bene goodly marchaundiſe for the clergye.

But Mammon is a great god, euẽ of power enough to innent ſuch knackes, yea and to make them articles of the fayth, and to burne thoſe that can not beleue them. And it was a preaty practiſe to make ſuch pointes articles of the fayth. For after that our holy fathers had geuen vp preaching, and would take no more paynes, neyther ſerue their brethren any more, then ſette they vp ſuch articles of the fayth, as ſhoulde bring in money to vpholde their eſtate withall. And he that would not beleue them, rid him out of the way for feare of diſcloſing their ingling: for he that doubteth of pardons and purgatory, he plucketh our holye father by the beарde.

Rocheſter. NOtwithſtanding my lord confirmeth both pardons and purgatory, by the text that Chriſt ſpake vnto Peter, Math. 16. To the will I geue the kayes of the kingdome of heauen: and whatſoeuer thou bindeſt vpon the earth, it ſhall be bound in heauen, and whatſoeuer thou loſeſt on the earth it ſhall be loſed in heauen. But theſe woordes (ſayth my lord) had bene ſpoken in vayne if he could not geue pardons, and loſe men out of purgatory. &c.

Frith. As touching the kayes, albeit they haue oftentimes bene declared, and in maner in euery treatiſe that hath bene put forth in the engliſh tongue, yet will I ſomewhat ſhew my minde in them. There is but one kaye of heauen, which Chriſt calleth the kaye of knowledge. Luc. 11. And this kay is the woorde of God. Chriſt rebuked the law geuers for taking away thys kay from the people: for they with their traditions, and falſe expoſitions had fully excluded the kaye of knowledge which is the word of God, and had cleane ſhut vp the Scripture, as ours haue done now a dayes. It is alſo called the kaye of Dauid, whych ſhutteth, and no man openeth: openeth, and no man ſhutteth. Apoc. 3. And becauſe of theſe two effectes which it worketh (for it both ſhutteth and openeth) hath it the nomination of kayes, and yet (as I ſayd) indeede it is but one, which is the worde of God. Thys kay or kayes (now call it as you wyll ſith you know what it meaneth) Chriſt deliuered vnto Peter, and vnto hys other Apoſtles a like, which you ſhall eaſely perceaue if you marke where and when they were geuen. For Mat. 16. they were onely promiſed, and not yet geuen: for Chriſt ſayd, I will geue thée the kayes, and not, I geue thée. But after he was riſen from death, then performed he hys promiſe, and gaue the kayes to all indifferentlye, as thou mayſt ſée, Joh. 20. And Luke cap. 24 expoundeth it, that he opened their wittes to vnderſtand the Scripture, that repentaunce and forgeuenelle might be preached. &c. Therfore it is the word that bindeth and loſeth thorough the preaching of it. For when thou thou telleſt them theyr vices and iniquities condemning thē, by the law then bindeſt thou them by the worde of God: And when thou preacheſt mercy in Chriſt vnto all that repent, then doſt thou loſe them by the worde of God. Therfore he that preacheth not the worde of God, can neyther binde nor loſe, no though he call him ſelfe pope. And contrarywiſe, he that preacheth his worde, he bindeth and loſeth as well as Peter and Paule, although he be called but Sir John of the countrey. And conſequently, to ſay that the pope cā deliuer any ſoule out of purgatory (if there were one) is but a vaine lie, except he can proue that he goeth downe vnto them, and preacheth vnto them the woorde of God (which is the ſalt that muſt ſeaſon them, and kay that muſt let them out) for other loſing there is none. And likewiſe, to ſay that the Pope can geue any pardon to redéeme ſinnes, except he preach me that Chriſtes bloud hath pardoned me, is euen like vanitie.

To open, & to ſhut, to binde & to loſe, what it is.

The pope can deliuer no ſoule out of purgatory, except he firſt go thether, & preach vnto them.

We thinketh alſo that he wadeth to déepe to deſcende to purgatorye by thys text. For the text ſaith, that what ſoeuer he bindeth on earth, ſhall be bound in heauen, and whatſoeuer he loſeth on earth, &c. But now they graunt themſelues, that purgatory is not on earth, but the thirde place in hell: And therfore it palleth his bondes to ſtretch his hand to purgatory: and ſo this text can not ſerue him.

Math. 16.

Purgatory is not on earth, but as Rocheſter ſayth is the third place in hel.

NOtwithſtanding my lorde is not content to geue him thys power onely, but he hath ſo farre waded in the popes power, that he hath graunted him full auctoritie to deliuer all men from hell, if they be not damned already: For (ſayth he) whoſoeuer hath committed a capitall crime, hath therby deſerued damnation: and yet may the Pope deliuer hym both from the crime, and alſo frō the payne due vnto it. And he affirmeth that thre times in the rrj. article for feare of forgetting.

Rocheſter.

Rocheſter is in this place far beſide him-ſelfe.

Upon this poynte will I a litle reaſon with my Lord, and ſo wil I make an end. If the Pope may deliuer any mā from the cryme that he hath committed & alſo from the payne due vnto it, as you affirme, then may he by the ſame authoritie deliuer .rr. an hundred, a thouſand, yea & all the world: for I am ſure you can ſhewe me no reaſon why he may deliuer ſome and not all. If he can do it, then let him deliuer euery man that is in the poynte of death both from the crime and frō the payne, & ſo ſhall neuer man more neither enter into hell nor yet into Purgatory: which were the beſt dede & moſt charitableſt that euer hée dyd, yea & this ought he to do (if he could) although it ſhould coſt hym his owne lyfe and ſoule thereto (as Moſes and Paule geue him exāple) but yet there is no ieoperdy of neither other. Now if he cā do it (as you ſay) and will not, then is he the moſt wretched & cruell tyraunt that euer lyued, euen the very ſonne of perdition and worthy to bée damned in an hundred thouſand helles. For if he haue receaued ſuch power of God that hée may ſaue all men & yet wil not, but ſuffer ſo many to be damned, I repoꝛt me vnto your ſelues what hée is worthy to haue?

A playne declaration of ỹ popes tyranny.

Exod. 32. Roma 9.

The Pope a proude ſhameleſſe & tyranous Antichriſt.

Now if any man would ſolute this reaſon and ſay that he may do it, but that it is not méete for hym to do it, becauſe that by theyr paynes Gods iuſtice may be ſatiſfied: I ſay that this their euaſion is nothyng worth, neyther yet cā I imagine any way wherby they may haue any apparēce to eſcape. For my Lord ſayth hym ſelfe that the Pope muſt pacifie Gods iuſtice for euery ſoule that hée deliuereth from Purgatory, and therefore hath he imagined that the Pope hath in hys hand the merites of Chriſtes paſſiō which he may apply at his pleaſure where he will. And alſo he ſayth that the merites of Chriſtes paſſion are ſufficient to redeme all the ſinnes in the world. Now ſith theſe merites on their part are ſufficiēt to ſatiſfie ỹ iuſtice of God and redeme the whole world, & alſo that the pope hath them in his hand to diſtribute at his pleaſure, then lacketh there no more but euen the Popes diſtribution vnto the

the saluatiō of the worlde. For he may pacifie Gods wrath and satisfie hys iustice (sayth my Lord) by applying these merites to them that lacke good workes. And so if the pope wil, Gods iustice may bée fully satisfied & the whole worlde saued. Now if hée may so iustly & easely saue the whole worlde (charitie also mouyng him vnto it) and yet will not apply these merites so frutefully, then is the faulte onely his, and he the sonne of perdition and worthy more payne then can be imagined. And so is not the reason improued but much more stablished, and as I thinke inexitable.

The pope is the sonne of perdition worthy of more payne then can be imagined, if Rochesters doctrine be true.

Beholde I pray you whether my Lord of Rochester hath brought our holy father in auaunceyng hys power so high, euen into ỹ dépest pit of hell, which (if my Lord sayd true) it is impossible for hym to auoyde. But it chanceth vnto hym euen as it doth customably where such pryde raigneth: for whē they are at the highest, then fall they downe headlong vnto their vtter confusion and ruine.

If any man féele himselfe grieued, and not yet fully satisfied in this matter, let him write hys minde, and by Gods grace I shall make hym an answere, and that with spéede.

¶ An other booke agaynst Rastell, named the subsedye or bulwarke to his first booke, made by Iohn Frithe prysoner in the Tower.

IT ncadeth not Christē reader (I thinke) now that thou hast ouerread and diligently pondered in thine inward sences that the treatise of John Frith, wherein he confuteth all the reason which Rastel, More, and Rochester, made for the maintenance and vpholding of the bitter paynes of purgatory: to commende vnto thee thys briefe worke folowing, named a subsedy, defence, or bulwarke to the same. And much les needeth it to dehorte thee from the vayne & childish feare, which our forefathers haue had of that place of purgatory, as they good woorkes which at this day remayne vppon the earth founded for theyr thence deliuerance, do testifie. And forasmuch as thou art a Christen man, and reioysest in Christ, I dare boldly affirme for thee, that thou takest neyther pleasure nor ioy of that place, like as some persons do, which triumphed of late, and with much ioy and clapping of handes sent tidinges into all partes, that purgatorye was founde agayne: because they read in a booke named the Institution of a Christen man, this worde Purgatory. And yet haue I not heard hetherto, that the selfe same persons haue shewed any tokens of gladnes, for Gods woorde translated into english: so that to me they seeme to reioyce more, to haue the sely soules purged with punishmentes when they be departed, then to haue them purged with the worde of God while they be here. Who wil think but as they haue vttered theyr hartes concerning Purgatory with theyr tongues, euen so say they in theyr stomakes, that their holy father the Pope (whome we may as iustly call the Bishop of Rome, seeing he is there the head of S. Peters church: as we may call the head of S. Paules church in London, Bishop of London) hath recouered agayne here in England his old authority, yea that he neuer yet lost, because they finde in theyr churches copes, ropes, bels and beades, with other lyke holinesse, and on themselues long gownes, shauen crownes, and fingers annointed with the holy oyle of idlenes. For who will say but that these holy reliques declare the byshop of Rome as clarkly as this worde purgatory proueth a place to be where soules after the departure from theyr bodies suffer paines and punishmentes. Doth not this preaty pageant of purgatory signifie and prognosticate what Tragedye they will play here-

A subsedy, defence, or bulwarke.

Much ioy made for ỹ finding of purgatory although it were to small purpose.

Christ is deuided into Peter & Paule.

hereafter, when the worde of God shall blow and scatter from the face of the earth, the darke cloudes and mistes of mens inuentions, and shall scoure away ỹ rust of fleshly vnderstanding of the scriptures in other things likewise as it hath done in this, if ought may be found in that booke wherwith they may resist: that such thinges may be picked out of it, the fruite which commonly hath come of all counsels, conuocations, and synodes since the Apostles time (very few excepted) causeth me somewhat to feare: for if a mā wey the good with the bad that hath sprong from them, he will perchaunce thinke that the lay people of all estates may well and iustly say, farewell the one wyth the other: and no maruayll, for they haue not bene all the children of one father that haue bene in counsels, as they haue not bene all sheepe that haue gone in sheepes clothing: and oft times the greater part ouercommeth the better. Which things gathered by experience and by reading, causeth me oftentimes to wishe, that they which would be counted sincere and true ministers of the Gospell, eyther might and would cleane abstayne from such counselles, that they haue no part in them, or els that they would geue no more place to the fruites of infidelitie (I meane mans inuentions and carnall interpretations which the fayth in Christ neuer begatte) then S. Paule gaue to Peter hys colleague, when he left the table of the Gentiles and went to the Iewes, which facte of Peter in my iudgement Paule might more conueniently haue approued, seeing Peter did it to the entent he would not offēd his weake brethren the Iewes wyth hys eating: then the true and sincere ministers of Christ in the Gospell may winke at many thinges vsed in these dayes among the disciples of the Gospell: much lesse may they approue thē with the fashion of theyr own liuing, and confirme them with the auctorityе of a Counsell, and with preching they say it is not time to speake against thē: yet is it time to leaue them, and no longer to seeme to allow them, vnlesse they entend alwayes to walk in them. Had the author of this booke looked after a time, as some do, he had not written against Purgatorye when he did. I feare me some maintaine blindnes more with theyr simulation, then they open the lyght with theyr preaching. But this haue I spoken (good Reader) besides my purpose, which was none other then to admonish the that although Rochester, More, and Rastell, haue all three (as thou perceiuest by reading thys former treatise) stiffely defended one heresie, yet shouldest thou not haue of all three, one iudgement or opinion.

Rochester, More, and Rastel, are all three defenders of one heresy.

More and Rochester were men of high dignitie in thys worlde, the one a Byshop, the other Chauncelor of this noble realme of England, both auncient in yeares, of so great wit, and so singular erudition in all kinde of learning, esteemed as well of themselues, as of many other, that no two lyke might in all this land be found: it was thought that for theyr dignity no man durst, for theyr yeares witte and learning no man was hable to gaynsaye them: wherfore they were perswaded to be the most meete of all other to take in hand the defence of the terrible paynes of purgatory, eyther the very foūdatiō, or els the chief building set vpō ỹ foūdatiō of ỹ church of Rome. Rastell had nothing cōmon wt them. But onely many yeares, and a witte sophisticall, which he called naturall reason. As appertayning to Gods worde, he acknowledged himselfe ignorant therof: notwithstanding he had such opinion of his witte, that he thought he could as well proue purgatory by it, as the other two had done by the scriptures, wherin I thinke he was not deceiued. And as these three persons were not like, so tooke they the answer made to them not a like: More and Rochester thought foule scorne (see what the glory of this world, and high estimation of our selues doth) that a yong man of small reputation shoulde take vppon him so cleane contrary to theyr opinion to write against them, and (to be short) tooke the matter so grenously, that they could neuer be at quiet in theyr stomackes vntill they had dronken his blood. Rastell though he perceaued his naturall reason to be sore sayd to, yet was he not malicious, as the other were: and therfore wrote he agayne. which worke of Rastell came to his handes, when he was prisoner in the Tower of London, where he made the answere following to the same: which answer after Rastel had read, he was well content to count his naturall reason foolishnes, and wyth harty thankes geuen to God, became a childe againe, and sucked of the wisedome which commeth from aboue and

More and Rochester were mē of great auctoritie and learning.

Rastel was but an inferior to Rochester and More.

More and Rochester thoughte foule scorne of Iohn Frithes answere.

¶ Here foloweth the Preface of this booke.

BRother Raſtell I thãke you that it hath pleaſed you to be ſo fauourable vnto me a poore priſoner, as to ſhew me a copie of your booke whiche you haue written to confute my reaſons and Scripture that I haue alledged agaynſt Purgatory, for that hath cauſed me to make a ſubſidie defẽce and bulwarke to my booke, whiche by Gods grace ſhalbe an occaſion to open more light, although not to you, yet at the leſtwiſe vnto them whoſe hartes the prince of this world hath not blinded but that the light of the Goſpell and glorie of Chriſt may ſhyne in them. And where as you write and proteſt that you will bryng no Scripture agaynſt me. But onely rehearſe my Scripture agayne which I haue alledged vnperfeitly and woũde me with myne owne dartes, and will but euen do as one that playeth at tennes with an other toſſing the balle agayne, I doe verye well admitte your ſimilitude.

2. Cor. 4.

Notwithſtanding you know right well that it is not inough for a man playing at tennes to toſſe the balle agayne, but he muſt ſo toſſe it that the other take it not. For if the other ſmite it ouer agayne then is the game in as great ieoberdy as it was before, beſides that hee muſt take heede that he neither ſmite to ſhort of the line not yet vnder, for then it is a loſſe and he had bene better to let it goe. And finally ſometyme a man ſmiteth ouer and thynketh all won, and yet an vngracious poſt ſtandeth in the way and maketh the ball to rebounde backe againe ouer the corde & ſo loſeth the game. And that wil anger a man, and I aſſartayne you that ye haue toſſed neuer a ball but ye offende in one of theſe pointes, & yet beſides that ſome tyme ye playe a touche of legerdemayne and caſt me a ball which whẽ it commeth I perceaue to be none of mine, and all the court ſhall iudge the ſame. Theſe poyntes ſhalbe declared when we come to them and now I will aunſwere in order.

John Frith ſemeth that he could play well at tennice.

Raſtell.

IN your Prologue you aſſigned two cauſes of the making of your firſt boke of purgatozy without allegyng any tertes of ſcripture foꝛ ỹ pꝛofe therof, which are the controuerſie of two ſoꝛtes of people. One ſoꝛte you ſay be thoſe that beleue not in Chꝛiſt, but deny Chꝛiſt and his Scripture as dꝛe the Turkes Paynimes and ſuch other miſcreauntes. An other ſoꝛt be they that beleue in Chꝛiſt & his ſcripture noꝛ wil deny no tert of holy ſcripture, but yet they will conſtrue expounde and interpꝛete theſe terts after theyꝛ owne willes and obſtinate mynde. &c.

Raſtel alleageth two cauſes why he made hys fyrſt booke in the defence of purgatorie.

Now let vs conſider your foꝛeſayd cauſes & ponder whether your boke haue oꝛ may do any ſuch good as you ſay pꝛetended, & whether it haue conuerted thoſe ſoꝛtes of people, oꝛ els be any thyng lykely to do ſuch a fact. And firſt let vs ſée what it pꝛofiteth ỹ firſt ſoꝛt which are infidels not beleuyng in Chꝛiſt noꝛ his ſcripture. Our ſauiour Chꝛiſt ſayth, he that beleueth is not damned, & John Baptiſt confirmeth the ſame ſaying: he that beleueth in ỹ ſonne hath euerlaſtyng lyfe, but he that beleueth not in the ſonne ſhal not ſée life, but the wꝛath of God abydeth vpon hym. Here it is euidẽt not by my expoſition, but by the conſent of all Chꝛiſten men, that thoſe infidels are damned, foꝛ what entent then ſhould Raſtell teach them that there is a Purgatoꝛy: without Chꝛiſt ther is no way but dãnation, as ſcripture & all faythfull men teſtifie. Then would I know by what way he wold perſuade that there were a Purgatoꝛy (which ſhould be away & a meane to ſaluation and not to dannatiõ) foꝛ thẽ which beleue not in Chꝛiſt. This I am ſure of (and I thinke Raſtell beleueth it alſo) that the infideles ſhall neuer come in it though there were one: This you may ſée that his firſt cauſe is very vayne, and that if they dyd beleue it they were in déde deceyued.

Iohn. 3

John Frith anſwereth to Raſtels two cauſes.

Raſtelles firſt cauſe proued to be in vaine.

Now let vs pꝛocéde vnto the ſecond ſoꝛt of people (which beleue in Chꝛiſt and his ſcripture) and yet miſconſtrue it expounding it after theyꝛ owne willes. And let vs ſée what frute they take of this boke & what it pꝛofiteth them & we ſhall finde that it leſſe ſerueth theſe men then the firſt: foꝛ if this this men beleue in Chriſt and in hys Scripture, then is it not poſſible that they ſhould receaue or admitte that thyng which is agaynſt the Scripture both by the expoſition of them ſelues & of all the world. For this is both agaynſt Scripture and all faithfull mē that there ſhould be any way to health if we exclude Chriſt and hys Scripture. And ſith Purgatory is counted away to health, he that would go about to proue it (ſecludyng Chriſt and Scripture) is agaynſt Scripture and all faythfull men.

Beſides that if they be ſo obſtinate that they will not receaue the verye Scripture but expounde it after their own willes & wreſt it after the ſame, then wil they much leſſe receaue your booke which is ſo playne agaynſt ſcripture, & therfore if you would thinke that they could bee tamed by your booke which notwithſtandyng ſo wreſteth Scripture, then may I very wel lyken you to hym that hath a wilde horſe to tame which when he perceiueth that hee can not hold hym with a ſcoktiſhe ſnaſle will yet labour to breake him with a rotē twine threde: So that I can eſpye no maner of profite that cā come of your booke if you can alledge no better cauſes then you yet ſhew, but that it had bene a great deale better vnwritten.

An apt and good exāmple.

Frith aunſwereth gently Raſtels bitter tauntes.

And brother Raſtel where you ſay that I auaunce & boaſt my ſelfe much more then becommeth me, and that I detract and ſlaūder my neighbours, & that I prouoke all men that read my booke rather to vyce then to vertue with ſuch other thynges as ye lay to my charge, I truſt I ſhall declare my inconuenience and geue you a ſufficient aunſwere.

¶An aunſwere to Raſtels firſt chapter which reproueth me for boaſtyng my ſelfe.

Raſtell.

IN the firſt chapter of this booke Raſtell laboureth to proue that I am ſore ouer ſēne in laudyng & boaſtyng my ſelfe & that I lyke my ſelfe ſo well that he is ſure that other men do lyke me the leſſe, and that he feareth that God will therfore lyke me & fauour me rather the worſe then the better.

Here he iuggeleth wyth me, and would make me beleue that he tolled me mine own ball agayne, but when I beholde it, I perceaue it to be none of mine: for he hath cut out all that ſhoulde make for me, ſo that he hath geuen it cleane an other ſhape then euer I entended that it ſhould haue, as it appeareth by hys writing which rehearſeth my words in this maner. Frith. Frith meteth here with a falſe ball.

I am ſure, there are many that maruell that I being ſo yong dare attempt to diſpute thys matter agaynſt theſe thre perſons. But my wordes are theſe: I am ſure that there are many that will much maruell, that I being ſo yong and of ſo ſmal learning dare diſpute this matter. &c. Raſtell. Frith.

Here Raſtell leaueth out the wordes, (and of ſo ſmall learning) for if he had put that in, he had bewrayed himſelfe. For I thincke no man ſo mad as to ſay, that he which ſayeth himſelfe to be both yong and of ſmall learning, ſhoulde prayſe and boaſte hym ſelfe.

Alſo immediatly after the wordes of hys firſt allegation I ſay on thys maner: And as touching my lerning I muſt needes acknowledge (as the truth is) that it is very ſmall, which I thinke is but a baſe boaſting: and anone after I ſay, I would not that any man ſhould admit my wordes or learning except they will ſtand wyth the ſcripture, and be approued therby. Lay them to the touchſtone, and trye them with Gods word, if they be found falſe and contrary, then damne them, and I alſo ſhall reuoke them with all mine hart. &c. Note here the modeſty of Iohn Fruth.

Finally, I exhorted them to read my booke, not aduertiſing who ſpeaketh the wordes, but rather what is ſpoken: by which wordes you might well ſee, that I entended not to boaſt my ſelfe, and all this haue I written, and he left it out euē in the firſt page (as he calleth it) wherin he reporteth that I boaſt my ſelfe.

Notwithſtanding one thing doth ſore vexe him, that I ſhould recite the Epiſtle of S. Paule, wherby he ſaith Raſtell.

I would haue men beleue that I had the spirite of God, and thinke that though I be young that I sée visions and espye the truth, and that myne elders haue dreamed dreames and wandered in phantasies.

Frith.

Thys he recounteth to be a great boast, and that thys one place shoulde winne him the fielde: whereunto I aunswer that indéede my wordes do not proue that thing which you séeme so surely to gather of them: but my wordes do argue on this maner, that no man ought to condemne a thing before he read it, and then to geue sentence, and because you séeme ignorannt in the matter, I shall declare it vnto you, and how it standeth. It is a coulour of Rhetorike, and is called Auantopodosis, that is to saye, An aunswere to an obiection that a man might haue here made, on thys maner: thou graunteste thy self yong and of so small learnyng, dost thou then thinke that we shall once read or regard thy booke, specially sith it is written against auncient mē both of great wit & dignity? To these two pointes I aunswer preuenting their obiection, that they should not despise it because of my youth: for as the spirite of God is bound to no place, euen so is he not addict to any age or person, but enspyreth where he will, & when he will, and bring in for an example that he enspyred yong Timothy proning thereby, that the youth of it selfe is not to be despised, but according to the learning which it bringeth, and that therfore they may not despise my youth, but first read what doctrine I bring, and therafter to iudge it. No more in this I proue not, that I am enspyred, and haue the spirite of God as Timothie had, but onely proue that God may enspyre youth, as he did Tymothe, and that therefore ye ought first to read before you condemne: for you know not who is enspyred, and who not, vntill you haue read their workes, or séene their factes. Thus you may sée that my wordes define not, that all youth is enspired, although some may be: but I exhort that no man despise prophesies, but proue all, and approue that is good. And to make the matter more playne I shall bring you an example out of Paule to the Hebrues, which exhorteth them to hospitalitie, for by that some men vnwares haue receaued Angels to harbour, be not therefore vnmindfull of it. Here Paule exhorteth you to hospitalitie, and shewing you that by those meanes some men haue receaued angels into their house, he would not haue you thinke ỳ all the gestes that you shall receaue shall be angels, but some shall be leud losels. And likewise I in exhorting you to read my booke, and not despising my youth, because that sometime God enspireth the yong, would not haue you thinke that the bookes made of yong men (which ye shall receaue) shall be holesome doctrine, but some men be lewd and vnfruitfull, neuertheless euen as if they receaued not those gests they should also put away angels if any came. So if you despise to read such bookes as be written by young men, you may also fortune to despise them which are written by the inspiration of Christes spirit, and therefore ye ought to read.

No man ought to condemne that which he hath not sene.

God inspireth youth aswell as age.

2. Thess. 1.

Hebr. 13.

But be it in case I had indéed praised my selfe (as I haue not) and that I had sayd that I had the Spirite of God, what inconuenience should follow therefor? would you therof argue that my doctrine were false? If that were a good argument, then were Christes Doctrine false, then were Paule a false prophet, and our sayth nothing: for Christ said to the Iewes that he was the light of the worlde. And againe he sayd, It is my Father that glorified me, whome ye call your God. Now if it had bene a sufficient argument to condemne hys doctrine because the world calleth it boasting, thē should we haue beleued no truth at all. Besides that Paul séemeth not a little to boast him selfe, if men loke on it with a carnall eye, for he sayth, that he thincketh not him selfe inferiour vnto ỳ hyest Apostles: and sayth againe, that if they glory to be the ministers of Christ (though he speake vnwisely) he is more copious in laboures, bours, in ſtripes aboue meaſure, in priſon more often, often at the poynt of death. &c.

Should we for theſe words thinke that his doctrine were not right? Nay verely that doth not improue the doctrine, but that it may be good & holeſome for a man may boaſt him ſelfe & do well ſo he referre ỹ prayſe to God from whom all godnes commeth: but be it in caſe that I ſhould ſay that God of hys mere mercy and for the loue that he oweth me in Chriſt and hys bloud had geuen me hys ſpirite that I might be to his laude & prayſe to whom be thankes for euer. Amen. would you thinke that this were ſo greate a boaſtyng that the doctrine ſhould be impayred therby? Ah blinde guides I pray God geue you the light of vnderſtandyng, I beſeche you brother Raſtell be not diſcõtent with me if I aſke you one queſtion, be ye a Chriſten man or no? I am ſure you will aunſwere yes, then if I brought you the text of Paule which ſayth, he that hath not ỹ ſpirite of God is none of his, I pray you how will you auoyde it, notwithſtãdyng if you wold auoyde ỹ text, yet will I lay an other blocke in the way that you ſhal not be able to remoue, and that is the ſaying of Paule. 2. Cozin. 13. Know ye not your ſelues that Chriſt is in you? except ye be reprobate perſons, now how ſoeuer you would iudge of your ſelues, I thinke verely that I am no ſuch & therfore whereas before I dyd not ſo write. Now I certifie you that I am Chriſtes, cõclude what ye wil, & the day ſhall come that you ſhall ſurely know that ſo it is, albeit in meane ſeaſon I be reputed a laughyng ſtoke in this world for I know in whom I truſt and he can not deceaue me.

This is a thankfull, & godly boaſting.

Roma. 8.

2. Cor. 13.

Frith the faithful ſeruaunt and true martyr of Chriſt.

Then bryngeth he againſt me that I ſay we haue bene long ſecluded frõ the Scripture and alſo that our fore fathers haue not had ỹ light of Gods word opened vnto them.

Raſtell.

I maruell what Raſtell meaneth by bryngyng this for his purpoſe, for I thinke it no boaſtyng of my ſelfe, but if ye thinke that it be vntrue, I thinke he is very blynde. For what Scripture hath the pore commons bene admitted vnto euen til this day? It hath bene hid and locked vp in a ſtraunge tounge and from them that haue attayned the knowledge of that toung hath it bene locked with a thouſand falſe gloſes of Antichriſtes makyng and innumerable lawes. And where I ſay our forefathers haue not had the light of Gods worde opened vnto them, I meane that they haue not the Scripture in their owne mother toung, that they might haue conferred theſe iugglyng miſtes with the light of Gods word as the proceſſe of my wordes can teſtifie which be hath holy left out, but I beſech the Chriſtẽ reader once to read the place for my diſcharge and his confuſion, ye ſhall finde it in the ſecõd leafe of my booke.

Frith.

Raſtell ſheweth himſelf to be very ignorant.

Frith ſheweth his meaning how ỹ ſcripture was kept from our forefathers

And now he alledgeth againſt me that I ſhould ſay this: iudge Chriſten reader what reaſons Raſtell hath brought and how he hath ſoluted thẽ, for in my minde both his reaſons and ſolutions are ſo childiſh and vnſauery, ſo vnlearned and baren ſo full of faultes and phantaſies that I rather pitie the mans dẽpe ignorance and blyndnes which hath ſo deceiued him ſelfe through Philoſophie and naturall reaſon, then I feare that he by his vayne probations ſhould allure any man to conſent vnto hym.

Raſtell.

I thinke Raſtell layeth not this againſt me, becauſe I boaſt my ſelfe in theſe wordes: And verely as touchyng the truth of thoſe woordes I will adde thus much more vnto thẽ, that I neuer wyſt man ỹ was coũted wiſe whiche hath brought ſo ſlender reaſons except he entended to deſtroy a thing which ye ſeme to haue build.

Frith.

And finally where as I exhorte all men to iudge and conferre the Scriptures which Syr Thomas More and my Lorde of Rocheſter alleadge for theyr opinions and would haue them to ponder their reaſons and my ſolutions vnto them anneryng theſe wordes I am ſure ỹ my ſmal learning hath condẽned their hygh eloquence, that my folye hath brought to nought their wiſedome & that my youth hath diſcloſed their feſtered ignorance.

Raſtell.

Raſtell cauilleth.

Frith. There Raſtell thinketh that I ſtād well in my owne conceite and boaſt my ſelfe aboue the Pone becauſe I touch M. More his kynſman: but let Raſtell take this for an aunſwere, if M. More would kepe him within his owne bondes that is with medling of worldly matters onely, I would neuer compare with him, yet he muſt remember that a dawber may correct hym in his owne craft, but it is euen as Socrates ſayeth, when a man is wiſe in one thyng then will hee take vpon him to define all thynges and be ignoraunt in nothyng and ſo diſdayneth the gift that he hath and proueth hym ſelfe vnwiſe.

More would not be ignorant in any thing & therfore vnderſtood nothing as he ſhould haue vnderſtand, neyther his duty to the prince, nor yet to God.

Furthermore I ſée no great praiſe that I here attribute vnto my ſelfe: but confeſſe my ſmall learning, my folly, and my youth: neuertheleſſe if he recount it a prayſe, becauſe I ſay it hath cõdemned they hie eloquence and they wiſedome, and diſcloſed they ignoraunce, then let hym alſo annere the wordes that I wrote ſaying. And it is euen the olde practiſe of God, to chooſe the fooliſh things of the worlde to confound the wiſe, to chooſe the weak to confound the mighty, and to chooſe the vile things which are of no reputation to confound thē of hye degrée, that no fleſh might boaſt it ſelfe in his ſight, to whom onely be prayſe and thankes for euer. Amen.

A good concluſiō made by Iohn Frith againſt Raſtels firſt chapter.

Where all men may ſée that I referre all prayſe to him which onely is worthy: and ſo I may conclude, that you haue not loked indifferently on my booke.

An aunſwer vnto Raſtels ſecond chapter, which improueth me for rayling & diſpraiſing others.

Raſtell. IN the ſecond chapter he raungeth the field, and ſearcheth out with all diligence, what worde I haue ſpoken that might be take in the worſt ſence, and calleth them rayling, gelting, and ſcolding woordes: And becauſe he would haue me to be abhorred of the Reader, he alleageth not onely theſe wordes that are ſpoken againſt himſelfe, but alſo that are ſpoken againſt my lorde of Rocheſter, and ſyr Thomas More, not that he entendeth to aunſwer for them, or to defend they parties ye may be ſure, but onely to leaue nothing behinde which ſhould ſéeme to make for him, like a noble orator, the wordes that he reproueth are theſe:

Raſtell. There Raſtell taketh hys foundation vpon a ſtarke lye, and there he maketh two lyes: and there he maketh thrée lyes.

Frith. Here I would deſire my brother Raſtell to pardon me of a little ignoraunce, for ſurely I thought it had bene no more offence to call a lye, a lye, then to call a ſhéepe a ſhéepe: notwithſtanding ſith he recounteth it to be rayling, gelting, and ſcolding, I will hereafter temper my ſelfe, and chaunge my words, and will ſay that when he lyeth (that by hys leaue) he maketh a fitten.

Raſtell. It angreth him when I ſay, that Raſtel hath loſt his wit in purgatory, and therefore I will ſay ſo no more.

Frith. But thys I will affirme (be Raſtell neuer ſo furious) that whoſoeuer maketh ſuch reaſons and ſolutions, and counteth them good in earneſt, that he hath no wit in hys head, whereſoeuer he loſt it: but if you would read Raſtels firſt argument which I haue ſet in my booke in the twelf leafe, then you ſhall perceyue whether I ſay the truth, or not.

Raſtell. Alſo he aleageth that I ſhould ſay, that ſaying of Raſtell is againſt ſcripture: but if ye count that railing, and and would not haue me ſay ſo much vnto him, I will count the man ſomFrith. whatſtately: and this I enſure him, that if God ſuffer me to liue, I wyll ſay ſo agayne, take it as he will.

Raſtell. Alſo he reciteth as a great reproch that I ſhould ſay, I marueyll how our ſcholemen may abide this felow. And ſurely the ſame I ſay agayne, for Frith. he proueth both ſainte Thomas and them alſo foles & double foles, which if I ſhoulde ſo do, would be counted haynous hereſie.

Raſtell. Then he rehearſeth what I ſay of M. More, and my L. of Rocheſter, and all to helpe his matter, that when I ſay, the ſmall probations and ſlender reaſons that thoſe two witted men, Syr Thomas More, and my Lorde of Rochester had brought to confirme Purgatorye, made my hart to yerne.

and

Frith. What rayling or ieſting this is, let other men iudge, but thys I dare awow that I ſayd the truth: for what ſhould a man do or ſay, to ſee them ſo contrary in theyr tales. M. More ſayeth, that there is fire and no water in purgatory: and my lord of Rochester ſayth, that there is both fire and water. M. More ſayth, that the miniſters of punishment are deuils: and my lorde of Rochester ſayth, that the miniſters of punishment are angels. M. More ſayth, that both the grace & charity of them that lye in the paynes of purgatory are increaſed: my lorde of Rochester ſayth, the ſoules of purgatory obtayne there neyther more fayth, nor grace, nor charitie thē they brought in with them. Now iudge good Reader, whether I haue rayled, or ſayde the trueth, but all this doth Raſtell leaue out full craftely: he reciteth full diligently both the head and tayle, but the middle which expoundeth the matter wil he not let you ſee.

Rochester contrary to More, and More contrary to Rochester.

Raſtell. He alleageth alſo againſt me, that I ſay, M. More is ſore deceaued, and ſet on the ſand euen at the firſt brunt, and in the beginning of hys voyage, and that I would wiſh M. More a little more witte.

Frith. Euen that I ſay agayne, and affirme it to be true, and is ſo euidently proued in the beginning of mine aunſwer againſt M. More, that I need to ſay nothing, but only referre the reader vnto the place.

Raſtell. Alſo he improueth me for ſaying in an other place, that M. More ſheweth him in one tert twiſe ignorannt, and ý he is to buſie, for he vnderſtandeth not the phraſe of ſcripture.

Frith. This and ſuch other ſayinges he alleageth (which I paſſe ouer:) for I count it folly to ſpend paper and laboure about the rehearſing of them, for if you read my booke, you ſhall ſee all theſe points ſo plainly proued that he mought be aſhamed to make mention of them.

Raſtell. This he counteth geſting, ſlaundering, and rayling, ſaying that no reaſonable man will thincke theſe poyntes to be thinges belonging to vertue, but rather ſpices and braunches of pride, and that I ſhew not my ſelf therin charitable but rather malicious, nor no wiſedome therein but rather folly, adding that if I had bene halfe a yeare at two ſcholes, that is to ſay, the ſchole of diſcretion, and the ſchole of charitie, I ſhould more haue proſpered in vertuous learning, then I haue done in other ſcholes this byeare: and ſayth, that I haue bene at the ſcholes of ſlaundering, rayling, and geſting.

Raſtell is a bitter taunter.

Frith. Deare brother, if it had bene ſo, that I had ſpoken certayne wordes in deede, which might haue ſeemed in your eyes to be rayling, detracting, and ſlaundring (as I haue not, ſaning a little geſting) woulde you diſproue my doctrine thereby? What will you then ſay to S. John baptiſt which calleth the phariſies (then heades of the church, as are now our doctoures) generation of vipers? would you therefore conclude that his doctrines were naught? I thinke you be not ſo chyldiſh. And it ſeemeth this one ſentence to be more rayling, and ſlaundering, then all that I haue written.

Math. 3.

What wil you ſay to Chriſt which called the ſcribes and phariſies hypocrites, Math. 15. 16. 22. And in the 13. he ſeemeth to raple aboue meaſure where he calleth thē hypocrites, and blinde guides, painted ſepulchers, whych outwardlye appeare righteous, but within are full of hypocriſie, ſerpents, and generation of Vipers. Beſides that he calleth Herode Fore. Luc. 13: and the Jewes he called a froward and aduouterous generation, Math. 12. 16: and in the 17. he ſayth, O vnfaythfull and ouerthwart nation: woulde you thinke it ſhould excuſe the Jewes which refuſed his doctrine to ſay that he rayled, and that no reaſonable man woulde thinke thoſe things to be pointes, belonging to vertue, but rather ſpices and braunches of pride and that hée ſhewed not hym ſelfe charitable, but malicious, nor no wiſedome therein but folie, would it excuſe them to ſay (as you do to me) that if he had bene one halfe yeare at ſchole of diſcretion and charitie, he ſhould more haue proſpered in vertuous learning and that he had bene at the ſcholes of ſclanderyng, rayling and ieſtyng.

The reproouing of the papiſticall hypocrites muſt not be called rayling.

Finally S. Paule in your eyes might appeare to rayle and ſlaunder and to be cleane deſtitute of Gods ſpirite, which as Luke ſaith replenished with the holy Ghoſt ſayd to Elemas that reſiſteth hym. Actes. 13. O thou ful of all ſuttelty & deceite thou ſonne of the deuill and enemy of all righteouſnes ceaſeth not to peruerte the rightwayes of the Lord. I can bryng many mo ſuch ſayinges of Peter, John, James, and Judas, and yet I thincke you will not improue their doctrine thereby but becauſe I ſtudye to be ſhorte, I ſhall count it ſufficient to haue warned the reader of this. Notwithſtanding peraduenture Raſtell wil not yet be aunſwered, but will ſay that albeit I haue touched inough as concernyng thoſe thynges that appeare railyng and ſlanderyng in his eyes, yet I brought none that ieſt as I do, whereunto I may aunſwere and alledge for me Helias the Prophet which both mocked the falſe Prieſtes and ieſted with them, ſaying call loude vnto your Gods for peraduenture they are a ſléepe and cā not here, or els they be gone out of towne. I cannot inough meruell that my brother Raſtell would vſe ſuch maner of reaſoning with me as to improue my doctrine becauſe of my raylyng and ieſtyng.

Luc. 13.

The Prophetes and Apoſtles were great reprouers of the vngodly and wicked.

For ther with he hath made a foule hole in his kinſmans beſt coate for euery mā perceiueth that M. More his bookes are ſo full of rayling, geſtyng and baudye tales, that if the furious Momus & Venus had take out theyr partes there ſhould be very little left for Vulcanus.

After this Raſtell diſſenteth to the purpoſe of his matter & would proue that my expoſitions of Scripture are not good becauſe they are an occaſion to bryng ỳ people to boldnes of ſinne and to moue the people to delite in other mens faultes, and to laugh therat, and to put you an exāple: he ſayth, if I ſhould take vpon me the expoſitiō of this text. In principio erat verbum & verbum erat apud deum &c. and expound it after this maner.

Raſtell.

In the begynnyng of this yeare
Iohn Frith is a noble Cierke
He killed a mylſtone with his ſpere
Keepe well your geeſe your dogges do barke.

Is it is a fond expoſition, ſo it is falſe metre.

I trowe ſayth Raſtell all wiſe men would thinke that this were a fonde expoſition & yet this expoſition would pleaſe childrē fooles and mad men, as well as the expoſition of S. Auſten or S. Hierome or any other Doctor of ỳ Church, becauſe it would make them to laugh, ſo (ſayth Raſtell) Frith maketh ſuch expoſitiōs with ieſtyng and rayling to make the people laugh, not regardyng to edifie the people, nor to prouoke them to vertue mekenes or charitie nor to leaue their ſinne, but rather geueth them boldnes & to beleue that there is no Purgatory nor hell, but mocketh and ieſteth at thoſe reaſons that bee made for proofe of Purgatory.

A ſore and fond ſayng of Raſtell.

Frith.

Now as touchyng the firſt part, where he ſaith that my expoſitions be an occaſion to bryng the people to boldnes of ſinne, I aſke hym why his aunſwere is becauſe I geue thē boldnes that there is no Purgatory, nor yet hell, thereto Raſtell by his leaue (maketh a fitten) I dare not ſay hee maketh a lye for that hee would call rayling for I neuer denyed hell, but affirme in many places of my booke & euē in the firſt ſide of myne aunſwere agaynſt him I affirme hell, and perpetuall damnation, but when ye come to the proofe of his wordes, then you ſhall ſée how wiſely the mā cōcludeth, for he thinketh that ab inferiori ad ſuū ſuperius confuſe diſtribue, men ſhall thinke it a good conſequent as if I ſhould ſay that we lacke fire in priſō, then would he cōclude that there lacked fire in all Middleſex. Or if I wold ſay their were no wit in Raſtels head

Frith is a good ſcholer & ſone hath lerned his leſſon, he will ſay no more they lye, for that is bitter.

then

then would hee conclude that there were no witte in no mãs head, but he hath ſo long ſtudyed Philoſophy, that hee hath cleane forgotten his principals of Sophiſtry, notwithſtandyng we wil forgeue him this faute for the man is ſomewhat aged and therfore I thinke it is lõg ſince he read them, and that they are now out of his memory: neuertheleſſe he will ſay that hys argument is not ſoluted for although I denye not hell, yet I denye Purgatory, and ſo I geue the people an occaſiõ to ſinne, becauſe they feare not Purgatory, whereunto I haue ſo ſufficiently aunſwered in Raſtels by. argument that I wonder that hee is not a ſhamed to bryng the ſame agayne but he truſteth that my bookes ſhall neuer be read, and his may go ſurely abroad, and therefore he may ſay what he will onely hee careth not what he ſaith ſo he hold not his peace.

Raſtell. And where hee reporteth that I make expoſitions to make the people to delite to heare of other mẽs faultes and to laugh thereat, therto will I ſay Frith. nay, till he be at layſure to proue it, and where he ſayth, if he ſhould take vppon hym to expounde, In principio erat verbum in this maner.

Raſtell. In the begynnyng of this yeare
John Frith is a noble Clerke
He killed a mylſtone with his ſpere
Keepe well your geeſe the dogges do barke.

Saying that all wiſe men would ſay that this were a fonde expoſition.

Frith. Therto I aunſwere that, ſaying: for the ryme & meter they might well ſay that a goſe had made it for any reaſon, that is therin, and yet as touchyng the meter, the ſecond verſe lacketh a foote, and is ſhorter then his felowes, but if you put out this worde Frith, and put in this worde Raſtell for it, then ſhall his meter alſo be perfite, and that halting verſe ſhal runne merely with his felowes vppon hys right feete on this maner.

I gooſe would haue made better ryme and meter then Raſtell did.

In the begynnyng of this yeare
Iohn Raſtell is a noble Clerke
He killed a mylſtone with his ſpere
Keepe well your geeſe the dogges do barke.

Thus I haue amended his meter, but as for the reaſon I leaue it to him ſelfe to amende it at his layſure. In the end of his ſecond chapter he ſayth that I entende with my expoſitions to bring the people to beleue in foure other great errours, wherof the firſt is that there is no hell, ordeined for any that is of Chriſtes faith, although he do neuer ſo many ſinnes but let vs ſee how he proueth it.

Frith taketh payns to amende Raſtels meter, but not his reaſon.

An Aunſwer to Raſtels third Chapter, which would proue that I deny hell.

IT ſeemeth (ſayth Raſtel) by the reaſons that Frith hathe alleaged that his entẽt is to bring the people in beleefe that there is no hel, for I alleage in my aunſwer to Raſtels dialoge the ſaying of S. Paule. Ephe. 1. Chriſte chooſe vs in him before the beginning of the world, that we might be holy & without ſpot in his ſight, and againe Eph. 5. Chriſt loued his cõgregation and gaue himſelf for it, that he might ſanctifie it in the fountaine of water thorow the word to make it wythout ſpot or wrincle or any ſuch thing, but that it ſhould be holy and wythoute blame.

Raſtell. Ephe. 1.

Frithes aunſwere to Raſtels third chapter.

And vpon theſe textes I conclude, that if Chriſte haue ſo purged vs that we are wout ſpot, wrinckle or blame in his ſight, (as Paule teſtifieth) then wil he neuer caſt vs into Purgatorie. For what ſhould be purged in them, that are withoute ſpotte, wrinckle or blame. And then ſomwhat to declare the matter how we be ſinners as lõg as we liue, and yet without ſynne in the ſight of God, adde theſe wordes which I would that all men did well note, and becauſe Raſtell leaueth out the beſt of the matter, I will rehearſe my owne wordes againe.

Frith.

Peraduenture euery man perceiueth not what this meaneth that we are rightwiſe in his ſight, ſeing that euery man is a ſinner. 1. Ioh. 2. therfore I will breefely declare the meaning of the Apoſtel. This is fyrſte a cleare caſe, that there liueth no man vppon the earthe without ſynne, not withſtanding all they that were cho-

Epheſ. 1. ſo that they are both ſinners, & righteouſe if we conſider the imperfection of our faith and charitie, if we conſyder the conflict of the fleſh and the ſpirite. Galath. 5. if we conſider our rebellious membres whiche are vnder ſinne. Rom. 7. then are we grieuous ſinners: and contrary wiſe, if we beleeue that of that merciſull fauor God gaue his moſt deare ſonne to redeme vs from oure ſinne, if we beleeue that he imputeth not our ſinnes vnto vs, but ẏ his wrath is pacified in Chriſte & his bloud, if we beleeue that he hath freely giuen vs his Chriſte, and with him all things, ſo that we be deſtitute of no gift. Rom. 8. then are we righteous in his ſight, and oure conſcience at peace with God, not thorowe oure ſelues, but thorowe oure Lorde Jeſu Chriſt. Ro. 5. So maiſt thou perceiue that thou art a ſinner in thy ſelfe, and yet art thou righteouſe in Chriſte, for thorow him is not thy ſinne imputed nor reckened vnto thee, & ſo are they to whome God imputeth not theyr ſinnes, bleſſed righteouſe wout ſpot, wrinkle, or blame. Rom. 4. Pſal. 31. And therfore will he neuer thruſt the into purgatorie, and for proofe of this I alledge (as Raſtel beareth me witneſſe) diuers texts of S. Paul. Eph. 2. Rom. 4. 5. 7. 8. but that notwithſtanding Raſtel ſayth that I haue not recited them ſufficiently, for I haue left out ſomwhat which I haue reherſed for the opening of the truth, and then bringeth in that S. Paule exhorteth and biddeth vs we ſhall vſe no fornication, vnclenneſſe, auarice, filthe or fooliſh ſpeaches, for ſuch ſhall haue no inheritance in the kingdom of heaue, and euen ſo ſay I to, but iudge good reader, what is this to the purpoſe: for it neither maketh for purgatorie, neither agaynſt it. This text I coulde haue alleaged if I had endeuored my ſelfe that we ſhould doe good workes (which I neuer knew chriſtian man deny) but elſe as touching my matter it is nothing to the purpoſe, and as well he might haue improued me bicauſe I bring in no text to proue that ẏ father of heauen is good, or to proue that which neuer man doubted of.

Raſtell.

Frith.

Raſtell. Then he alleageth Paul. Ro. 6. bj. ſaying, though grace doe raigne thorow Chriſt, ſhall we therfore dwel in ſinne, nay God forbid ſayth Paule, & euen ſo ſay I againe: he alleageth Rom. viij. that there is no dampnation to them which be in Chriſt Jeſu if they liue not after the fleſhe, and euen ſo ſay I, but Raſtell will ſay the contrary anone.

Raſtell ſetteth a trap wherein he wilbe taken hym ſelfe.

Beſides that he alleageth Rom. iij. we be freely iuſtified by grace, by Chriſtes redemption to ſhew hys iuſtice for the remiſſyon of ſynne done before (and yet ſayth Raſtell) Paule ſayth that the law is not deſtroyed by fayth but made ſtable, but thys hathe Frith left out of his boke to cauſe the people to beleeue that they be cleane purged by the bloud of Chriſte only, and that there neede no purgatorie.

Frith. By theſe words you may euidently perceyue what Raſtell meaneth by thys alleaging of Paule, for the eſtabliſhing of the lawe, verely that the worke of the lawe ſhould iuſtifie and cleane purge you from ſynne whyche is contrary to Paul and all ſcrypture, for euen in thys ſame Chapter that he alleageth, Paule ſaith: that of workes of the law no fleſh ſhalbe iuſtified in hys ſyght, and ſayth that the righteouſenelle of God commeth by fayth of Jeſu Chriſt vnto all, and vppon all that beleeue. But as touching good works, I wil touch more hereafter.

The workes of the law can not iuſtifie vs.

Raſtell. Furthermore Raſtell ſayth, that if my argumentes coulde proue that there is no purgatory, it muſt follow as wel that there is no hell for vs that be chriſten men though we continue ſtill in ſinne: for if we be bleſſed without ſpot, wrinkle, or blame, and that therefore he will not caſt vs into purgatory, then he will not caſt vs into hell whatſoeuer ſinne we do commit.

Raſtelles blind argument.

Frith. Here Raſtell vttereth his blindenes vnto you, and ſheweth you what vnderſtanding he hath in ſcripture: firſt he armeth himſelfe with a falſe ſuppoſition, and yet therupon he concludeth his argument falſly. His ſuppoſition position is this, that al men which are baptized with materiall water are very Christen men and haue the true fayth, and be those which Paule affirmeth to be without spot, blame, or wrinkle. But thereto I say nay, for euen as the outwarde circumcision made not the Iewes the elect people and children of saluation, so doth not the outwarde baptisme make vs the faythfull members of Christ: but as they were the children of God, which were inwardly circumcised, euen so they that are washed inwardly from the concupiscens of thys worlde, are the members of Christ, whom Paule affirmeth so to be purged through his bloud. Agayne, you may know that Rastell knoweth none other faith but that which may stand with all maner of sinne, but the faith which we speak of, is the same which worketh through charitie, wherof Paule speaketh Gal. 5. They that haue thys fayth, are borne of God and sinne not, these that haue this faith do hope and looke daily for deliuerance out of this thraldome and body of sinne: and in the meane season they purify themselues as he is pure. For if a man will say that he knoweth Christ or beleeueth in him, and kepeth not his commaundementes, he is a lyar, and we renounce him to be any of this number that we speake of. And when Rastell sayth, I would conclude there is no hell for them that be Christen men, though they continue still in sinne. I aunswer, he that committeth sinne is of the deuill, and I say agayne, that the Christen that we spake of, which are the children of God cannot continue still in sinne, but seeke all meanes to fulfill Gods commaundementes. Notwithstanding the christen which Rastel speaketh of which are the children of the deuill, may do as they list: and indeede they had neede to make a frende of Rastell to helpe them into his purgatory, if it be any better then hell: for they shall neuer come in heauen, except they repent and walke innocently in this world, as Christ and his little flocke haue euer done: for they that walke otherwyse are none of his, though they weare miters.

Note well this worthy & learned argument.

Frith.
Such christen people as are the children of God, will not dwell nor abide in sinne, and so for the there is no hell.
Luke. 11.

This little flocke it is that are so purged (and not Rastels multitude) and for this is there neyther hell nor purgatory ordeyned, euen as for the hope that continueth still in sin is ordayned no heauen. And that there is no hell ordained for these faythfull folowers of Christ, I will proue euen by this worde of Paule which Rastel rehearsed before. Rom. 8. That there is no damnation to them that be in Christ Iesu, if they liue not after the flesh. Here Rastell hath smitten the ball quite vnder the corde, and hath alleged that, that shall condemne him. For if there be no damnation, but because you are somewhat slow in perceauing the matter, I shall reduce it into a Sillogismus on this manner: There is no damnation vnto them that be in Christ Iesu if they liue not after the flesh, but after the spirite. Euery hell is dãnation. Ergo, there is no hell to them that be in Christ Iesu if they liue not after the flesh but after the spirite. This is in the first figure made by Relarent. not by any profite that I thinke that the power cõmõs can take by such babbling but onely to satisfie your mynde and pleasure. Notwithstanding one thyng I must put you in remembraunce, that you haue falsly translated the text for the text hath not that cõditional although I was contented to take it at your handes to sée what you could proue, but the text sayth thus there is no dãnation to them that are in Christ Iesu, which walke not after the flesh but after the spirite: where Paul doth certifie you that they which are in Christ Iesu, walke not after the flesh but after the spirite, so that you may gather by Paule that if they walke not after the spirit they are not in Christ Iesu, that is to say: they are none of Christes, although Rastell will call them Christen men, therfore deare brethrẽ looke that no man deceiue hym selfe, for Christ is not ỹ minister of sinnes. If we be deliuered frõ sinne through Christ, then must we walke in a new conuersation of our life, or els we are still in darknes. Remember that we haue

Now you may see howe he concludeth that I establyshe thys error, that there is no hell, for seeing mine arguments, and Paule Rom. viij. doe conclude that there is no hel nor dampnation to them that are in Chryst Jesu, and are hys faythfull followers, he thinketh it should well folowe that if there be no hell for them, that there is no hell for no man: for in hys seconde chapter, and also in the beginnyng of the third, he sayethe that I deny hell, and when we come to hys probation, there is nothyng sayd but that whych Paul confyrmeth, that is, there is no dampnation for them that are in Chryst Jesu, which walke not after the fleth, but after the spryte, whych are thorow Chryste wythoute spotte wrynkle or blame. And so though Rastel appeare to hymselfe to conclude lyke a sage Philosopher, yet I answer you he cōcludeth lyke an ignorante Sophyster as all mē may see, for it followeth not: Paule and Fryth say there is no hel, as contrarywise it followeth not there is no heauen for Rastelles Chrysten men whych contynue styll in synne, Ergo there is no heauen for the deuyl theyr father, and yet is there heauen for Chryste and hys electe. I haue before declared how Chrystes elect are synners and no synners. And nowe bycause you shoulde not mistake the tertes of S. John whych I before aleaged, I wyll shew you how they do commyt synne, whych I dyd also sufficiently touch in my answer agaynst Rastels dialoge, euen two leaues frō the ende, and yet I wyll touche it agayne, bycause you shall not thyncke that I woulde not leade you in ignorance and darknesse.

There is no hell to those that are in chryst Jesu.

There is a hel for suche as feare not God nor obey his cōmaundements.

As there is no heauē for good & euill, so there is no hell for good and euill.

There are two partes in a faythfull man, whych rebell eche agaynste other, and are at contynuall stryfe, and both of them haue diuers names in scrypture, the one is called the inward man, the heart, the mynde, the wyll, and the spryte: the other is called the outward man, the rebellyous membres, the bodye of synne and the flesshe, and these in a faythfull man kēpe contynuall warre, and allbeit the one be subdued and taken prysoner of the other, yet neuer consenteth to hys ennemy, he can not leaue him, neyther will make peace wyth hym, but wyll laboure what he can, and wyll call for all that he thynketh wyll helpe hym to be deliuered from hys ennemie, and then warreth vppon hym a freshe, what tyme the faithfull man is brought to the knowledge of God, and beleueth in Chryst, and hath his will and mynde renued with the spryte of God that consenteth to the lawe of God, that is good, ryghteous and holy, and beginneth to loue the lawe, and hath a will and a desire to fulfill the lawe of God, and not to despyse hys heauenly father, and loke howe much he loueth the lawe, countyng it ryghtwise and holye. Euen so muche doth he hate synne whych the lawe forbiddeth and abhorreth it in hys heart and inward man, and then albeit the outwarde man and rebellious membres do at time besege him and take hym captyue vnder synne, yet doth not the inward man consent that thys synne is good and the lawe naught, whych forbyddeth it, neyther dothe the heart delighte in thys same synne, neyther can it delyght in suche synne, bycause the spirite of God testyfieth vnto hym that it is abhompnable in the syghte of God, and then fyghteth the inwarde man agaynste the outwarde wyth faythe, prayer, almose dēdes and fastyng, and laboureth to subdue the membres, lamenting that he hath bene ouercome, bycause he feareth to displease God hys father, and despyseth him for the blood of hys sonne Chryste, that he will forgeue that whych is past, and hys diligence that he taketh in tamyng hys membres,

If I doe that thyng that I hate, then is it not I that doe it, but the ſynne that dwelleth in me, and euen lykewyſe the faythfull folowers of Chꝛiſt commit no ſynne, foꝛ they hate it, and if they foꝛtune to be entangled wyth ſynne, it is not they that doe it (as Paule ſaith) but the ſynne that dwelleth in them, which God hathe left to exerciſe them, as he left ẏ Philiſtians to exerciſe and nurtoure the childꝛen of Iſraell, and if the remnauntes of ſinne foꝛtune at anye time to loke aloft and begin to raigne, then he ſendeth ſome croſſe of aduerſitie oꝛ ſickneſſe to helpe to ſuppꝛeſſe them. And thus ſhall it be as long as we liue, but when we be once deade, then oure members rebell no moꝛe, and then nẽdeth neyther purgatoꝛie noꝛ anye other croſſe, foꝛ the outwarde man is turned into vanitie, and our inwarde mã was euer pure thoꝛow beléeuing the woꝛde of God, and neuer conſented to ſinne, and nẽdeth nother purgatoꝛie in this woꝛld noꝛ in the woꝛld to come, but only foꝛ ſubduing the outward man, and therfoꝛe after this lyfe he ſhall neuer haue any purgatoꝛie. Iohn. 15.

The ſeconde erroure that Raſtell layeth to my charge, is, that I wold bring the people in beleſe that repentance of a man, helpeth not for the remiſſion of his ſinne.

IN pꝛouing this ſecond erroꝛ againſt me, Raſtel taketh ſo great paynes, that he is almoſte beſydes hym ſelfe. Foꝛ he ſaith that I would make men beléeue that it foꝛceth not, whether they ſinne oꝛ no. Why ſo bꝛother Raſtel? verely becauſe I allege S. Iohn, S. Paule, Ezechiell and Hieremie to quenche the hotte fire of purgatoꝛie, and allege no auchoꝛities to pꝛoue gꝏd woꝛkes, whervnto I anſwer (as I did beforꝛe) that it is nothing to my purpoſe, foꝛ the pꝛouyng of gꝏd woꝛkes doth neither make foꝛ purgatoꝛie noꝛ againſt it, I coulde haue alleaged all thoſe textes if I had entended my ſelfe to pꝛoue that I ſhoulde doe gꝏd woꝛkes (which I neuer knewe chꝛiſten man denie) but as touchyng my matter it is nothyng to the purpoſe, and as well he mighte haue impꝛoued me, bicauſe I bꝛyng in no textes to pꝛoue that the father of heauẽ is god, oꝛ to pꝛoue that whych neuer manne doubted of, notwithſtanding if Raſtel had indifferent eyes, I ſpake ſufficiently of gꝏd woꝛkes in the. 34. argument againſt hys dialoge, let all men read the place and iudge.

Raſtel. Frith. Raſtelwold fame cauel, but he cannot tell at what.

Raſtel taketh the matter very grẽuouſly that I attempt to allege howe S. Iohn & S. Paul ſend vs to Chꝛiſt, and then adde that we know no other to take away ſinne but only Chꝛiſte, and becauſe I adde this woꝛde only, therfoꝛe he thinketh that I cleane deſtroy repentance, whereunto I anſwere, that I added not thys woꝛde only foꝛ naught, but I did it by the authoꝛitie of S. Iohn, which ſaith: if we walke in the lighte, as he is in the lyght, we haue felowſhip with eche other, and in the bloud of Ieſu Chꝛiſte hys ſonne, purifyeth vs frõ all ſinne, wherupon I ſay that foꝛ vs which are in the lyght, hys bloud only is ſufficient, but foꝛ your chꝛiſten men whych continue ſtill in ſinne, and walke in Raſtell. Frith. There is no meane to put away ſinne, but only by Chꝛiſte.

darkenesse after they? father the Deuill, muste some other meanes be founde, o? else they shall neuer enter into the kingdome of heauen.

For suche as dwell in the lyght of Christ, hys bloud only is sufficiēt.

But bicause I will be shor?t, let Rastell note that I synde two manner of repentance, one is without faith, and is suche a repentaunce as Judas and Rastels christen men which continue still in sinne haue at the latter ende, which dothe rather purchace them an halter then the remission of sinnes.

There are two maner of repentances.

An other repentance foloweth, iustificatiō and remissiō of sinnes, and is a flo?rishing frute of faith, fo? when by faith we do perceiue the fauo? and kindnesse that our louing father hath shewed vs in his sonne Christ Jesu, and that he hathe reconcyled vs vnto hymselfe by the bloude of hys sonne. Thē begin we to loue him, the mo?e we hate the body of sinne, and lamēt and be so?y that our membe?s are so fraile, that they can not fulfil the lawe of God, and so in mourning and bewayling our infirmitie, it causeth vs to abstaine from bothe meat & drinke and all wo?ldly pleasures, which is is the pure fasting that we talke of, but you vnderstande it not: and thys repentaunce commeth not to purge the sinnes which is cōmitted befo?e, but only taketh an occasyon by the sinnes before committed, to knowe what poyson there remained in oure flesshe, and seketh all meanes to make vs hate this body of sinne, and to subdue it wyth all manner of wo?ks that God hathe appoynted, to the entente that it should in time to come no mo?e displease God our moste merciful father, which of gentlenesse so often pardoneth and fo?geueth vs, as I haue touched befo?e. This is the maner of repentaunce which I finde in scripture, but this helpeth that we shoulde sinne no mo?e, but what Rastell dreameth, I wot not. But to expresse to the bittermost what I meane by repentaunce, marke this example. If a man build an house which dothe cost him muche labo? and money, and haue layde no sure foundation, but that when a tempest commeth, hys house dothe fall, then will he be very so?y, and repente that he hathe so fo?lishly bestowed his money and labo?. Notwithstanding, all thys great so?ow & repentance can not set vp his house againe whych is fallen, but only it taketh an occasion by the ruine of the house, to teache the owner witte againste an other time, that when he buildeth againe, he may make a sure foundation. Euen so though thou repent neuer so much, that can not get remission fo? the sinnes that is past, but that muste be pardoned onely by the faithe of Christes bloude. Neuertheleste it dothe teache thee witte, and learne thée to tame thy body and subdue it, and cast a lo?we fo?dacion, that in time thou mayste the better resiste the assaultes of the deuill, the wo?lde and the flesshe. This doth Frith teach of repentaunce, let the wo?lde take it as they will, but Christes shēpe doe heare his voyce.

True repētance is a flo?rishing frute of faith.

What pure fasting is.

Repentāce lucely declared by an example.

¶ The third errour which Rastell sayeth against me is, that I would make men beleue that they need not to do penaunce for the satisfaction of their sinnes.

Euery childe may aunswer him to thys if he euer read o? perceaue what I wrote befo?e of repentaunce, fo? as they take repentaunce fo? the so?ow and mourning that followeth the crime, euen so they call penaunce the good wo?kes that ensue of repentaunce, and these good wo?ks which folow do mo?tifie the members, and exercise vs in Gods commaundementes that we sinne no mo?e: but they can get no mo?e remission of the sinne which is once past, then that which they call repentaunce: and yet do we neyther destroy so?owing fo? sinne, no? good wo?kes as he falsly repo?teth by vs, but we teach you how they ought to be done, and that they are fruites of fayth, and mo?tifie our members, and are profitable to our neighbour, and a testimony vnto vs that we are the childre? of our heauenly Father, as by example I say, that neither the sunne no? the mone do iustifie vs, o? purchase remission

How good wo?kes do mo?tify our membres.

Good wo?kes are the fruites of fayth.

of our ſinnes, and yet I woulde not that Raſtell ſhould ſay, that I deny or deſtroy the ſunne and the mone, for I ſay that without them we can haue no light, and that we can not be without them. And as touching the ſolution of this, that penaunce taking in his largeſt ſignification, both for good workes and taking of paynes, is not ſatiſfaction for ſinnes. I muſt tell you once againe that there are two manner of ſatiſfactions, the one is to God the other to my neighbour. To God can not all the world make ſatiſfaction for one crime: inſomuch that if euery graſſe of the ground were a mā as holy as euer was Paule or Peter, and ſhoulde pray vnto God all theyr life long for one crime, yet could they not make ſatiſfaction for it, but it is onely the bloud of Chriſt, that hath made ful ſatiſfaction vnto God for all ſuch crimes. Heb. 7: or els were there none other remedye, but wee ſhould all periſh. There is an other ſatiſfaction which is to my neighbour whom I haue offended, whom I am bound to pacifie as we two can agrée, and as the lawes of the realme determine betwéne vs, as if I had defamed him, then am I bound to pacifie hym, and to reſtore hym to hys good name againe: if I haue murdered any man, then by the lawes of the Realme I muſt dye for it, to pacifie my neighbour & the common wealth: But yet I am ſure Raſtell is not ſo childiſh, as to thincke that thys ciuyle ſatiſfaction is the verye ſatiſfaction which pacifieth Gods wrath for breaking his law: For if thou murther a man, and ſhould dye a hundred times for it, yet except thou haue ſatiſfaction of Chriſtes bloud, thou ſhalt be damned thereto: and ſo I ſpake that no tẽporall paine was inſtituted of God for the intent that we ſhould ſatiſfye Gods wrath therby, as it is plaine in my boke if Raſtell could ſée.

There are two manner of ſatiſfactions.

Hebr. 7.

Satiſfactiõ to our neighbour.

¶ The fourth errour that he layeth agaynſt me is, that I would perſwade the people that good works ar nothing auailable.

NOw are we come to the fourthe errour, where Raſtell vntruly reporteth on me that I would perſuade the people that good workes done by any man in thys worlde is nothing auayleable vnto him that doth them, & that it is no hurt nor hinderaunce vnto any man, though he neuer do none. Becauſe I ſay they iuſtifie not before God, therfore he thinketh that other men would vnderſtand me as wiſely as he doth, and argue that they are nothing auayleable, but I muſt deſire him to put on hys ſpectacles and loke agayne vppon my boke, and he ſhall finde theſe woordes. Peraduenture thou wilt aunſwere vnto me, ſhall I then do no good dædes? I aunſwere, yes: thou wilt aunſwere me, wherefore? I aunſwere, thou muſt do them becauſe God hath commaunded thē. I aunſwere, thou art lyuing in thys worlde with men, and haſt conuerſation with them, therfore hath God appointed thée what thou ſhalt do to the profite of thy neighbour and taming of thy fleſh, as Paule teſtifieth, Ephe. 2. We are his worke in Chriſt Ieſu, vnto good woorkes, which woorkes God hath prepared that we ſhoulde walke in them. Theſe workes God would haue vs do that the vnfaithfull might ſée the godly and vertuous conuerſation of his faythfull, and therby be compelled to glorifie our Father which is in heauen. Math. 5. and ſo are they both profitable vnto thy neighbour, & alſo a teſtimony vnto thée, by the which a man may know that thou art the right ſonne of thy heauēly Father, and a bery chriſt vnto thy neighbour: and after teacheth that we ought to do theſe woorkes without hauyng reſpect eyther to heauen or hell, but attending through charitie the wealth of our neighbour. &c.

Good workes are to be done and why.

Epheſ. 2.

Good workes are profitable to our neighbour and alſo a teſtimony that we are the children of God.

I wonder that Raſtell is not aſhamed to ſay that I would make them beleue that they are not auayable, therfore good reader note my woordes, firſt I ſay we muſt do them becauſe God hath commaũded them, is it not auayable to kéepe the commaundements of God? ſecondarily I ſay that they are to the profite of my neyghbour bour: is it not auaylable? thirdly I ſay that they tame our fleſh, is it not auailable? fourthly I ſay they are to the glory of God, is it not auailable? Fiftly I ſay they are a teſtimony to them that doth them by the which mē may know ẏ he is ẏ very ſonne of God, is that not auaylable? belyke Raſtell coũteth nothing auailable but that which iuſtifieth before God, he will ſay the ſonne is not auaylable becauſe it iuſtifieth not, fire is not auaylable in his eyes bycauſe it iuſtifieth not. &c.

Then Raſtell ſayth that I make a wonders worke with ẏ Scripture, & alledgeth certaine textes ẏ we ought to do good workes (which I neuer denyed) and thereupon would conclude that workes ſaue and iuſtifie, and playeth me the ball luſtily ouer the corde, but as God would there ſtode a poſt right in the way and he hytte it ſo full, that it made the ball to rebound ouer agayne backward, for in the alledgyng of his purpoſe Paule ſayth. Ephe. 2. he hath cleane loſt the game: the wordes are theſe, by grace you be ſaued by your fayth and that is not of you, it is the gift of God and not of workes that no man ſhould glorifie hym ſelfe, we are the worke created of God in Chriſt Jeſu whiche God hath prepared that we ſhould walke in them, here becauſe he would haue the latter ende of the text to ſerue for hys purpoſe whiche teacheth good workes (which I neuer denyed) hée bringeth in that thyng whiche cleane confuteth his opinió, for his opinion (which in all places he hath laboured to proue) is that we are ſaued by good workes, but now marke what he alledgeth out of Paule by grace you be ſaued by your fayth: and that is not of you, it is the gift of God and not of workes. For that no man ſhould glorifie him ſelfe, here Paule ſaith plainly that our ſaluatiō is not of workes: and ſo hath Raſtell caſt down that he built before, and may be likened to a ſhrewde cowe, whiche when ſhe hath geuen a large meſſe of milke turneth it downe with her hele.

Raſtell hath here ouerthrowē all that he hath before built and ſet vp.

Thus haue I aunſwered to as much of Raſtels treatiſe as I could get, if there be any more whiche may come to my handes I ſhall do my diligence to diſcloſe hys diſceite ſo that God geue me leaue to kéepe the court with hym he ſhall wynne but litle, except he conuey his balles more craftly, and yet the truth to ſay we play not on euen hand, for I am in a maner as a man bound to a poſt, and can not ſo well beſtow me in my play, as as if I were at libertie, for I may not haue ſuch bookes as are neceſſary for me, neither yet penne, inke, ne paper, but onely ſecretly, ſo that I am in continuall feare, both of the Lefetenaũt and of my képer, leſt they ſhould eſpy any ſuch thyng by me: and therfore it is litle meruell though the worke be vnperfite: for when ſoeuer I heare the keyes ryng at the dore, ſtrayte all much be cõueyed out of the way (and then if any notable thyng had bene in my mynde) it was cleane loſt, & therfore I beſeech thée good reader count it as a thyng borne out of ſeaſon, which for many cauſes can not haue his perfeite forme and ſhape, and pardon me my rudenes and imperfection.

Ephe. 2.

We are iuſtified by grace and fayth, whiche is not of our ſelues, but is the gift of God.

¶FINIS.

¶ Iohn Frith to the Chriſtian Reader.

THere is nothyng in this world that is ſo firme, ſtable or godly, but that it may be vndermined, and frowardlye wreſted of mē, and ſpecially if they be voyd of charitie. As it is euident by William Tracyes Teſtamēt and laſt will that he left, agaynſt the which many men, and that of long continuaunce haue blaſphemouſly barked. Whether of a godly zeale, or of a daſing brayne, let other mē iudge. But this I dare boldly profeſſe, that his godly ſayinges are vngodly hād led, which thyng I can not ſo iuſtly aſcribe vnto ignoraunce, as vnto rancour, vnto the furies I had almoſt ſayd, for if they had conferred all things vnto the rule of charitie, which enuyeth not, whiche is not puffed vp, whiche is not ſtyrred to vengeaunce, which thinketh none euill: but ſuffereth all things, beleueth all thyngs, truſteth all things, and beareth all thyngs, they would not ſo heddely haue cōdēned thoſe thynges, whiche might haue bene full deuoutly expounded, howbeit they haue not onely attēpted that thyng, but haue proceeded vnto ſuch madnes, that they haue taken vppon them to ſtryue with dead folkes, for it is a moſt common ieſt in euery mās mouth that after the maker of this Teſtament was departed, and buryed, they tooke vp hys body and burnt it, which thing declared their furye although he felt no fire, Therfore we hūbly require our moſt redoubted Prince, with all his nobles, & preſent aſſembly, that euen as all other thyngs do of right depende of their iudgement, that euen ſo they would bytheir diſcret aduiſe, cure this diſeaſe, ponderyng all thynges with a more equall ballaunce. So ſhall this enormous facte be looked vppon with worthy correction, and the condition of the common wealth ſhalbe more quyet, marke you therefore what thynges they are, which they ſo cruelly condemne.

Maſter Tracie.

IN the name of God. Amen.

I William Tracie of Todyngton in the Countie of Gloceter Eſquier, make my Teſtamēt and laſt will, as hereafter foloweth. &c.

The reſt of whiche Teſtament you ſhall fynde before in the woorkes of william Tyndall. fol. 429.

Iohn Frith.

IT is marueil but here be ſomwhat that they improue, for their mynde is ſo intoricate that there is nothyng, but they will note it with a blacke coale, and yet all may be eſtabliſhed by the teſtimony of Scripture. for fayth is the ſure perſuaſion of our mynde, of God and hys goodneſſe towardes vs. And wheras is a ſure perſuaſion of the mynde, there can be no doubtyng or miſtruſt, for he that douteth is like the floude of the ſea which is toſſed with wyndes & caried with violence, and let not that man thinke that he ſhal obtaine any thing of God Ia. i. And therfore, S. Auſten ſayth, if I doubt I ſhalbe no holy ſeede, furthermore wheras he ſpeketh through the grace and merites of Chriſt to obtaine remiſſion of his ſinnes, ſurely it is a faythful ſaying, and worthy to be cōmended, for it is euen the ſame that Peter profeſſed Actes. rv. where hee ſayth, vnto hym do all the Prophetes beare witnes, that through his name as many as beleue in hym ſhall receiue remiſſiō of their ſinnes, moreouer in that he truſteth through Chriſt to haue resurrectiō of body and soule they haue no cause to blame hym, for thus doth Paule argue, if Christ be risen, then shall we also ryse and if Christ be not risen, then shall not we rise, but Christ is risen, for his soule was not left in hell, therfore shall we also rise (whō Christ shall bryng with hym) and be immortall, both body & soule. 1. Cor. 15. And therfore he doth both righteously and godly deduce his resurrectiō by Christes, by whom the father hath geuē vs all thinges, or els we should not be, but there are some, that gather of his woordes, that hee should recount the soule to be mortall whiche thyng after my iudgement is more suttelly gathered then either truly or charitably, for seyng there was neuer Christen man that euer so thought (no not the very Paganes) what godly zeale, or brotherly loue was there whiche caused them so to surmise, for a good man would not once dreame such a thyng: but I pray you why should we not say that the soule doth verely rise which through Christ rising from the filth of sinne, doth enter with the body into a new conuersation of life, whiche they shall leade together without possibilitie of sinnyng, we say also of God (by a certaine phrase of Scripture) that he ariseth, when he openeth vnto vs hys power, and presence: And why may we not say the same thing of the soule which in the meane season semeth to lye secret, & then shal expresse vnto vs (through Christ) her power and presence, in takyng agayne her naturall body, why should ye then condemne these thynges? There is no man that can receiue venome by those woordes, except hee haue such a spyderous nature that he can turne an hony combe into perilous poyson. Therfore let vs loke on the residue.

Master Tracie.

And as touchyng the wealth of my soule. &c.

Frith.

Here he onely cleaueth to God and hys mercye, being surely persuaded that according to the testimony of Peter, who so euer beléeueth in hym, throwe hys name shall receyue remissyon of synnes. Act. 15. Paule also affirmeth, that who so euer trusteth in him shall not be cōfounded. Ro. 10. And who can denye but thys is moste true, when it is vnderstande of that fayth which is formed wyth hope and charitie, which ỳ Apostle calleth faith, that worketh by charitie. Gal. 5. Now sith these things may be expounded so purely, forsothe he vttereth his owne enuie, which woulde otherwise wrest the mynde of the maker of thys Testament.

And as touchyng the addition of this particle wout any other mannes worke, or workes: it séemeth that he had respect vnto thys saying of Peter, whych declareth that there is none other name vnder heauen geuen vnto men, in whych we shoulde be saued. Act. 4. Besides that, S. Paule committeth the power of sanctifying to Christ only. Heb. 2. where he sayth, bothe he that sanctifyeth (that is to say Christe) and they that are sanctified (that is to say the faithfull) are all of one (that is God) and surely if we labored to prece[l] eche other in loue and charitie, we should not condempne this innocent, but we shoulde rather measure hys wordes by the rule of charitie, in so muche that if a thyng at the first sight did appeare wycked, yet shoulde we take it in the best sense, not iudging wickedly of oure brother, but referring that secreate iudgemente vnto Christe whych can not be disceyued, and thoughe they be disceiued by the pretence of charitie, yet therein they may reioyse, and therfore they would be lothe to condempne the innocent, but lette vs passe these things, and sée what foloweth.

Why loke you so solwerly good brethren? why do you not rather giue hym great thankes? syth he hathe opened ned vnto you ſuche a proper diſtinctiõ, by the whiche you may eſcape the ſcholaſticall ſnares and maſes, he only deſerueth the name of a mid dealer, which being God, became man to make men Gods. And who cã by right be called a mid dealer betwæne God and man, but he that is both God and man, therefore ſithe we haue ſuche a mid dealer, which in all poyntes hath proued our infirmitie (ſauing only in ſinne) which is exalted aboue the heauens, and ſitteth on the right hande of God, and hath in all thyngs obtayned the nexte power vnto him, of whoſe Emperie all things depende, lette vs come wyth ſure confidence vnto the throne of grace. Heb. 4. All other he calleth peticioners whyche receyue grace, but are not able to empreſſe & powre therof into any other man, for that dothe only God diſtribute wyth hys finger (that is to ſay, the ſpirite of God) thorowe Chriſte, I maruell that you are angrye with him that hathe done you ſuch a great pleaſure, howe be it I doe aſcribe this condemnation rather vnto the canoniſtes than vnto deuines. For the godly deuines wold neuer dote ſo farre, as to condemne ſo proper ſayings, but peraduenture this myght moue theyr pacience, that he will diſtribute no portion of hys gwdes, for that entent that anye man ſhould ſay or doo for the weale of hys ſoule, are you ſo ſore afraide of youre market? Be not afraid, ye haue ſalues inoughe to ſouple that ſore, ye knowe that he is not bounde vnder payne of dampnation to diſtribute his goodes on that faſhion, for then thoſe holy fathers were in shreud cauſe, which cõtinuing in long penurie, ſcant lefte at theyr departing, a halfe pennie. Thou wilt peraduenture ſay, that they ſhall ſuffer the grœuous paines of purgatorie, be it ſo, yet may they be quẽched both with leſſe coſt & labor, the popes pardon is ready at hand, where bothe the crime and the paine are remytted at once, and verily there is ſuch plentie of them in all places, that I canne ſcantly beleœue that there liueth anye man that is worth an halfe peny, but that he is ſure of ſome pardones in ſtore, And as for thys man he had innumerable. Notwithſtanding this diſtribution is not of neceſſitie (for vnto him that is dampned, it profiteth nothing, and he that is not dampned, is ſure of ſaluation) why are ye ſo hot againſt thys man? are not hys gwdes in his owne power? he ſhall giue a reckoning of them vnto God, and not vnto you, hœre you maye ſée of howe light iudgement you haue condempned theſe things, nowe let vs ponder the reſidue.

What hath he here offẽded which rehearſeth nothing but the wordes of S. Auſtine. If you improue theſe thinges then reproue you S. Auſtine himſelfe. Now if you can finde the meanes to allow S. Auſten, and charitably to expound his woordes, why do you not admit the ſame fauour vnto your brother, eſpecially ſœing charitie requireth it? Beſides that, no man can deny but that theſe thinges are true, although S. Auſtines auctoritie were of no reputation with you, for if theſe thinges were of ſo great value before God, then Chriſt had euill prouided for his martyres, whoſe bodies are commonly call out to be conſumed with fire and wild beaſtes: notwithſtanding I would be afrayde to ſay that they were any thing the worſe for the burning of theyr bodies or tearing of it in pœces. Be therefore charitable towards your brother and ponder his woordes (which are rather Saint Auſtines) somewhat more iuſtly.

As touching the diſtribution of my temporall goods, my purpoſe is. &c.

Frith.

There is no man doubteth, but that fayth is the rote of the trœ, and the quickning powre out of which all good fruites spring, therfore it is necessary that this fayth be present, or els we should loke for good workes in vayne: for without fayth it is impossible to please God. Heb. 11. Insomuch that S. Austine called those workes that are done before fayth, swift running out of the way. Moreouer that our merite cannot properly be ascribed vnto our workes doth the Euangelist teach vs saying, Whē ye haue done all things that are commaunded you, say, we are vnprofitable seruaunts, we haue done but our duety. Luke 17. By the which saying he doth in a maner feare vs from putting any confidence in our own workes: and so is our glorious pride and hygh minde excluded: then where is our merite? Harke what S. Austine sayth, The death of the Lorde is my merite: I am not without merite as long as that mercifull Lorde fayleth me not. &c. This death of the Lorde can not profite me except I receaue it through fayth: and therfore he rekoneth right wel that the faith in Christ is all his merite, I meane the fayth which worketh through charitie, that is to say, fayth formed with hope and charitie, and not that dead historicall fayth which the deuils haue and tremble. Iam. 2. Furthermore what S. Austine iudgeth of our merite he expresseth in these wordes: marke the Psalme, how the proud head will not receiue the crowne when he sayth be that redemed thy life from corruption: which crowneth thée (sayth the Psalme) Hereuppon woulde a man say, which crowneth thée, my merites graunt that, my vertue hath done it, I haue deserued it, it is not frely geuen, but geue care rather to the pleasure, for that is but thine owne saying, and euery man is a lyer: but heare what God sayth, which crowneth thée in compassion and mercy, of mercy he crowneth thée, of compassion he crowneth thée, for thou wast not worthye that he shoulde call thée, and whome he should iustifie when he called thée, and whome he shoulde glorifie, when he iustifieth thée: For the remnantes are saued by the election which is by grace & fauour. Rom. 11. Now if it be by grace thē is it not of woorkes, for then were grace no grace. Rom. 4. For vnto hym that worketh is the rewarde imputed not of grace but of duety. Rom. 4. the Apostle sayth, not of grace but of duety, but he crowneth thée in compassion and mercy: and if thy merites haue procéded, God sayth vnto thée, bouilt out thy good merites, and thou shalte finde that they are my giftes, this is the righteousnesse of God, not meaning the righteousnesse whereby he himselfe is right wise, but the righteousnes wherewith he iustifieth them whome he maketh rightwise, where before they were wicked. These are Austines woordes.

Finallye, let not that moue you where he addeth, that a good worke maketh not a good man, but rather a good man maketh the woorke good, for there is no man but he is eyther good or euyll. If he be euill then can he not do good but euill: for according to Christes testimonye, A rotten trée beareth no good fruite. Math. 7. And agayne he sayeth, Howe can you say well séeing you your selues are euill. Math. 12. But if he be good, he shall also bring forth good fruite at his season: howbeit that fruite maketh not the man good, for except the man be first good he can not bring foorth good fruite, but the trée is knowne by the fruite. And therfore sayth, as a quickening rote must euer goe before, whyche of wicked maketh vs ryght-wise and good, which thing our woorkes coulde neuer bring to passe. Out of thys fountayne springing those good woorkes which iustifie vs before mē, that is to saye, declare vs to be verye rightwise, for before God we are verely iustified by that rote of fayth, for he searcheth the hart, and therefore this iust iudge doth inwardly iustifie or condemne, geuing sentence according to fayth: but men must loke for the woorkes, for theyr sight cannot enter into the hart, and therfore they first geue iudgement of woorkes, and are many times deceaued vnder the

cloke of hypocrisie.

You may see that here is nothyng, but that a good man may expounde it well albeit the children of this worlde (which with their wiles deceiue thē selues enteryng so presumptuously into Gods iudgement) do seke a doubt where none is, Go ye therfore and let charitie be your guide, for God is charitie, and though our Lawyers hart would breake, yet must you nedes iudge him a Christē man, which saith nothyng but that Scripture confirmeth. And verely the iudgement of this cause came out of season and euē vngraciously vnto our Canonistes, for they are cleane ignorāt of Scripture & therfore condemne all thinges that they read not in their law, wherfore we renounce their sentence and appeale vnto the deuines, which will sone knowe the boyce of their shepheard and gladly admitte those thynges which are allowed by the Scripture whereunto they are accustomed.

¶FINIS.

¶A Letter which Iohn Frith wrote vnto the faythfull folowers of Christes Gospell, whyles he was prisoner in the Tower of London for the worde of God. Anno.M.D.xxxij.

¶ Grace and peace from God the father through our Sauiour Christe Iesu be with all them that loue the Lord vnfaynedly. Amen.

IT can not bee expressed (dearely beloued in the Lord) what ioy and comfort it is to myhart to perceiue how the woorde of God hath wrought and continually worketh among you: so that I finde no smal number walkyng in ỳ wayes of the Lord, accordyng as he gaue vs commaundement, willyng that we should loue ech other, as he loued vs. Now haue I experience of the fayth which is in you, and can testifie that it is without simulation, that ye loue not in word and toung onely, but in worke and veritie.

Iohn.2. Iohn.15. Roma.12. Iohn.3.

What can be more triall of a fayth full hart, then to aduenture not onely to ayde and succour by the meanes of other (whiche without daunger may not be admitted vnto vs) but also personally to visite the poore oppressed, & se that nothyng be lackyng vnto thē, but that they haue both ghostly comfort and bodely sustenaunce, notwithstādyng the strayte inhibition and terrible manacyng of these worldly rulers: euen ready to abyde the extreme ieoperdies that tyrāts can imagine.

This is an euidence, that you haue prepared your selues to the Crosse of Christ, accordyng vnto the councell of the wise man which sayth: my sonne when thou shalt enter into the way of the Lord, prepare thy selfe vnto tribulation. This is an euidence that ye haue cast your accomptes, and haue wherewith to finish the tower which ye haue begon to builde. And I doubt not but that he whiche hath begon to worke in you, shall for his glory accōplish the same, euē vnto the commyng of the Lord, which shal giue vnto euery man accordyng to his dedes. Luke.14. Phil.1.

And albeit God of his secret iudgementes for a time kepe the rod from some of them that ensue his steppes yet let them surely reken vppon it for there is no doubt but all whiche will deuoutly lyue in Christ, must suffer persecution: for whom the Lord loueth he correcteth, and scourgeth euery child that he receiueth: for what child is that, whom the father chastiseth not. If ye be not vnder correction of which we are all partakers, thē are ye bastardes and not children. Roma.21. 2.Ti.3. Heb.12.

Neuertheles we may not suppose that our most louyng father should do that because he reioiseth in our bloud or punishment, but he doth it for our singular profite, that we may be partakers of holynes, and that the remnaunt of sinne (whiche through the frayltie of our mẽbers) rebell agaynst the spirite & will, causing our workes to go vnparfectly forwardes, & may somedel be suppressed, lest they should subdue vs and reigne ouer vs, as I haue sufficiently declared in the Epistle of my boke whiche intreateth of Purgatory, to the which I remit thẽ that desire to be further instructed in this matter.

Of these thynges God had geuen me the speculation before, and now it hath pleased hym to put in vre and practise vpon me. I euer thought and yet doe thinke, that to walke after Gods word, would cost me my life at one tyme or an other. And albeit that the kynges grace should take me into his fauour and not to suffer the bloudy Edomites to haue their pleasures vpon me, yet will I not thinke that I am escaped, but that God hath onely differred it for a season to the intent that I should worke somewhat that he hath appointed me to do, and so to vse me vnto his glory.

And I beseche all the faythfull followers of the Lord, to arme them selues with the same suppositiõ, markyng thẽ selues with the signe of the crosse, not from the crosse as the superstitious multitude doth, but rather to the crosse in token that they be euer readye willingly to receaue the crosse, when it shall please God to lay it vpon them. The day that it cõmeth not, counte it cleare wonne, geuyng thankes to the Lord, which hath kept it from you. And then when it commeth, it shall nothing dismay you: for it is no new thing, but euẽ that which ye haue continually loked for.

Cor. 10. And doubt not but that god which is faythfull shall not suffer you to be tempted aboue that which ye are able to beare, but shall euer send some occasion by the which ye shall stand stedfast: for either he shall blind the eyes of your enemies and diminish their tyrannous power, or els when he hath suffred them to do their best, and that the Dragon hath cast a whole floudde of waters after you, he shall cause euen the very earth to open hir mouth and swalow them vp. So faithfull is he and careful to ease vs what time the veration should be to heauy for vs. Apoc. 12.

Ye shall send a Joseph before you against ye shall come into Egypt, yea he shal so prouide for you, that ye shall haue an hundred fathers for one, an hũdred mothers for one, an hundred houses for one, and that in thys lyfe, as I haue proued by experience. And after this life, euerlasting ioy wyth Christ our Sauiour. Marke. 1.

Notwithstandyng sith this stedfastnes commeth not of our selues (for as S. Austen sayth) there was neuer man so weake or fraple no not the greatest offender that euer lyued but that euery man of hys owne nature should be as fraple and committe as great enormities, except he were kept from it by the spirite & power of God I beseche you brethren in the Lord Jesu Christe and for the loue of hys spirite, to pray with me that we may be vessels to his laude & prayse, what tyme soeuer it pleaseth hym to call vpon vs. Roma. 15.

The father of glory giue vs the spirite of wisedome vnderstandyng and knowledge, and lighten the eyes of our mynde, that we may know hys wayes, praysing the Lord eternally. If it please any of our brethren to write vnto vs of any such doubtes as peraduenture may be founde in our bokes it should be very acceptable vnto vs, and as I trust not vnfrutefull for them. For I will endeuour my selfe to satisfie thẽ in all poyntes by Gods grace. To whom I committe to be gouerned and defended, for euer. Amen. Ephe. 1.

Iohn Frith the prisoner of Iesu Christ, at all tymes abydyng his pleasure.

I Was desired of a faithfull frende (to whom I am so much bound that he might lawfully haue commaunded me) that I would make him a litle treatise, by the which he might be somewhat instructed to knowe himselfe, and so geue God thanckes for the benefites which he hath so aboundantly poured vpon him. This thing I toke vpon me very gladly, partly to fulfill his right wise requeste, which I trust shall be to the great profite of Christes flocke, and partly to declare what I thinke both of my selfe, and of all other.

Herein may all men se, what they haue receaued of God, and how they ought to bestow the talent that is cõmitted vnto them, which if you note well, it will cause you to say with the wise man Salomon: Vniuersa vanitas omnis homo viuens, that is, Euery mã liuing is nothing but vanitie: which also the Prophet Dauid confirmeth saying, If all men liuing were ponedered in one ballance, and vanitie hanged in the ballaunce agaynst them, it should quite way them downe, and be heauier then all they. As by example, if a man prayse a very fole and thinke his witte good and profounde, then is that person in dede more fole thẽ the other. And euẽ so sith mã doth prayse and commende riches, honour, beautie, strength, and such other vaine and transitorie things which are but as a dreame, and vanishe lyke a flower in the fielde, when a man shoulde haue moste nede of them, it followeth well that he hymselfe is more vayne then those thyngs whych are but vanitie. For if it were possyble that thou shuldest haue al these things an hundreth yeare continually wythout any trouble or aduersitie as neuer man had, yet were it but a vaine dreame if it be compared vnto that euerlasting lyfe, whych is prepared for Christes electe and faythfull followers. So that all flesh is as hay, and all hys glory lyke a flower of the hay is withered, and the flower fallen, but God and his worde endure for euer. Esay.40.

Therfore let not the wyse man reioyse in his wisedom, neither ỹ strong man in hys strengthe, nor the ryche in hys riches. But he that reioyseth, let hym reioyse in the Lord, to whome be all honor & praise without end. Amen. Heb.9. 1.Cor.1.

The first Chapter.

That all goodnesse commeth of God, and all euill of our selues.

THe Philosophers to whome God had enspired certaine sparckles of truthe, knowledged that the cheefest poynte of wisdome and direction of a mannes lyfe, was to know hym selfe, whych sentence the scrypture establysheth so clerely, that no man may dissent from the truthe of the same. For Salomon sayth that the feare of the Lord is the beginning of wisedome. Now who can feare the Lorde, but only he that knoweth himselfe, as the scripture teacheth him? For if I perceiue not the imperfection of my nature, which is subiect vnto corruption and voide of all stablenesse: If I perceiue not the vnstableneße of my flesh being prone to all synne, and rebellyous to rightwysenesse, and that there dwelleth no goodnesse in me: If I perceiue not the poyson of the old serpent and hell, and synne whych lyeth hidde wythin me, vnto whych are prepared paines intollerable, I shall haue none occasion to feare God, but rather to aduaunce my selfe equall wyth God, as Lucifer, Nabuchodonozor, Herode and such other haue done, which after were sore chastened for theyr follye. Roma.1. Prouer.1. Roma.8. Roma 7. Math. 25. Esay.14. Daniell. 4. Actes.12.

What hast thou (vain man) wherof thou maiste reioyse? For the scripture testifieth that euery good and perfe

Roma.3. Iam.1 lecte gifte commeth from aboue from the father of lyght, wyth whome is no transmutation. So that whether they be outward giftes or inward, pertaining eyther to ỳ body or soule, if they be good, they come from aboue from the father of lyght. For if thou behold the proportion of thy body, stature or beauty, thou shalt easily perceiue that it cometh of God, euen by the wordes of Christe whych exhorteth vs not to Math. 6. be carefull. For there is none of vs all Math. 5. thoughe we be neuer so carefull, that can adde one stature, eyther make one white heare or blacke.

And as touching our wisedome, eloquence, long lyfe, victory, glory, and such other, the scripture testifieth that they come of God and not of oure selues. For S. James saythe: If any James. 1 lacke wisedom, let hym aske it of god, which giueth it abundantly. As it is euident by Salomon, whych of God 3. Kinge. 3 desired wisedome to iudge betwéene good and euill. And the Lorde made hym aunswere, that because he asked that thing, and not long lyfe, nor ryches, nor the destruction of hys ennemyes, but rather wisedom to discerne in iudgement. Behold, I haue geuen vnto thée an heart full of wisedome & vnderstanding, in so muche that none before thée hathe bene like vnto thée, neyther yet after thée shall any be like vnto thée. And besides that, I haue giuen thée riches and glory.

Furthermore, the moste glorious giftes concerning oure soules, come from God euen of his méere mercye and fauoure whych he sheweth vs in Christ, and for Christ, as predestination, election, vocatiõ and iustification: and albeit M. More wyth hys painted Mores misse. Poetrie and craftye conueyance doe cast a misse before your eyes, that you might wander oute of the right way, endeuoring hym selfe to instructe you that God hathe predestinate and chosen vs before the beginnyng of the worlde, because he knewe before that we should do good workes, yet will I set you vpon a cãdel which shall shine so bright, and so clerely dispel his misty & vaine Poetrie, that you shall plainely perceiue hym daunsing naked in a nette, whiche notwithstanding thinketh himselfe to go inuisible. And although there be scriptures inoughe, bothe Tit. 3. and Rom. 11. to proue the same true, yet wil I let that passe, and alleage for me S. Austine, which is the candell that I speake of, whiche shall disclose hys iuggling, and vtter hys ignorance: for S. Austine saythe, some man will affirme that God dyd chuse vs, because he sawe before that we should do good workes: but Christ sayeth not so, which sayeth: ye haue not chosen me, but I haue chosẽ you, for (sayeth he) if he had chosen vs because he sawe before that we shoulde doe good workes, then shoulde he also haue séene before that we should firste haue chosen hym, which is contrary to the wordes of Christ, and minde of the Euangelicke. Héere may you sée howe euidently S. Austine confuteth M. Mores Poetrie, and openeth hys serpentine deceite. M. More daunsing in a net, thinketh hym selfe inuisible. Iohn. 15.

Finally S. Paule saythe Ephes. 2. Ephe. 2. that we are saued thorowe grace, and that it commeth not of oure selues, it is the gifte of God, and commeth not of workes, least any man should bosse himself, which wordes M. More might be ashamed to heare if he were not an other Lucian, neither regarding God nor man. But S. Austine addeth thus much more vnto it: Non erit gratia vllo modo nisi fuerit gratuita omni modo: That is to say, that it cã in no wise be grace or fauoure, except it be alwayes frée. And therfore I may conclude that it is neyther of the workes going before, nor of the workes comming after, but only of the frée fauor of God.

And thys are we sure of, ỳ whome soeuer he chuseth, them he saueth of his mercy: and whome he repelleth, them of his secrete and vnsearchable iudgement he condemneth. But why he chuseth the one and repelleth the other, enquire not (sayth S. Austine) if thou wilte not erre. In so muche that S. Paule coulde not attaine to the Roma. 11 knowledge therof, but cried oute: O the depth of the riches and wisedome of the knowledge of God, howe vnsearchable are hys iudgementes, and how incomprehensible are his waies.

But

But M. Moze had leuer loude to lye, and farre to erre, than to let God alone with hys secretes, oz to acknowledge hys ignozance in any thing.

And to be shozte, S. Paule saythe, what hast thou that thou hast not receiued? If thou hast receiued it, whye dost thou auaunce thy selfe, as though thou hadst not receiued it? So we may conclude that all godnesse commeth of God, and all sinne oz mischefe of oure owne poysoned nature. In so muche that we may say with the Pzophet Daniel: Tibi domine gloria, nobis autem confusio faciei. O Lozd all glozy be vnto thée, and vnto vs shame and 1.Cor.1. cõfusion, so that he that reioyseth, may reioyse in the Lozd.

The second Chapiter.

For what intent God geueth vs these giftes, and that they are rather a charge and a carefull burthen, then any pleasure to reioyce at.

1.Cor.11. LIke as there are many members of oure body, and euery member hathe his office appoynted vnto hym which he must doe, not foz hys owne wealth and sauegard only, but foz the pzeseruation of the whole body, in so muche that the moste honest member must serue the vilest at his necessitie, foz if the hande woulde not serue the slowe belly, they should bothe perishe together, euen so hathe God appoynted his giftes, and distributed them in this wozld vnto vs (whych shoulde be as one body) that euery nation hathe nede of other, euery occupation nede of an other, and euery man nede of hys neighboure. This is so plain that it can not be denyed. Neuertheless I will moze specially touche the matter, because I woulde haue it so rooted in you, that you might endeuoure youre selues to fulfill it towards eche other.

If God haue opened the eyes of thy mynde, and haue geuen thée spirituall wisedome thozough the knowledge of his wozd, boast not thy selfe of it, but rather feare and tremble, foz a chargeable office is committed vnto thée, whiche (if thou fulfill it) is lyke to cost thée thy life at one tyme oz other with much trouble and persecution. But if thou fulfill it not, then shal that office be thy damnation. Foz 1.Cor.9.
S. Paule sayth: Wo is to me if I pzeach not. And by the Pzophet Ezechiel God saith: If I say vnto the wicked that he shall dye the death, & thou shew hym not of it, the wicked shall dye in his iniquitie, but I shal require his bloud of thy hand. Ezech.23.

But peraduenture our Diuines would expounde these textes onely vpon them that are sent and haue cure of soules. Wherunto I answere that euery man whiche hath the light of Gods wozde reuelated vnto hym, is sent when soeuer he séth necessitie, & hath cure of his neighbours soule. As by example. If God haue geuen me my sight, and I perceiue a blynde man goyng in the way, which is ready foz lacke of sight to fall into a pytte wherein he were lyke to perish, then am I bounde by Gods commaundement to guide hym till hee were past that ieopardy, oz els if he perish therein, (where I might haue deliuered hym) his bloud shalbe required of my hand. And lykewise if I perceiue my my neighbour lyke to perish foz lacke of Chzistes doctrine, then am I boũd to instruct hym with the knowledge that God hath geuen mee, oz els hys bloud shalbe required of my hand.

Paraduenture they will say that there is all ready one appoynted to watch the pitte, and therefoze if any man fall into it he shall make it good, and that therfoze I am discharged & nede to take no thought. Wherunto I aunswere I would be glad that it so were. Notwithstandyng if I perceaue that the watchman be a slépe, oz runne to ỹ ale house to make good cheare, oz gone out of the countrey a whozehunting and thozough his negligence espy my neighbour in daunger of the pitte, then am I neuertheless bounde to leade hym from it, I thinke that God hath sent me at that tyme to saue that soule frõ perishyng. And the law of God and nature byndeth me therto, which chargeth me to loue my neighbour as my selfe, and Obiection. Solution.

to doe vnto hym as I would be done to. And I thinke there is no mā (that is in this case) but he would haue hys neighbour to helpe hym, and therfore is he bound to helpe his neighbour if he be in lyke ieopardy. And euen thus art thou bound to geue good counsell to hym that lacketh it, & to distribute what soeuer talent thou hast receiued of God vnto the profite of thy neighbour. Moreouer besides that ye can not auoyde this my solution, yet I desire you to note how the text it selfe which I alleged doth condemne your vayne obiection, the wordes are these Ezech. iij. If I say vnto the wicked that he shall dye the death, and thou shewe him not of it, the wicked shall die in his iniquitie, but I shall require his bloud of thy hande. Marke I pray you that the Prophet saith not as you obiect that he which should shewe the wicked his iniquitie, and doth not so, shall perish only, and the wicked hym selfe to be saued, because his faut was told him, by him which toke charge to teach him: But contrarywise ẏ wicked shall perishe in his iniquitie (saith God by his prophet Ezechiel) and his bloud shall be required of the hand of him which should haue instructed him in the truthe.

Math.7.

Roma.11. If God haue geuen thée faythe in Christes bloude, be not proude of it, but feare: for sith God hathe not spared the naturall braunches (I meane the Iewes which were hys elect people) sith he spared not the angels that sinned, but hath cast them into hell, to be reserued vnto iudgement, sithe he spared not the olde worlde, but ouerwhelmed them with waters, deliuering Noe the preacher of righteousnes, take hēde lest he also spare not thée. Truth it is that where fayth is present no sinne can be imputed, but this faith is not in thy power, for it is the gift of God. And therfore if thou be vnkynde & endeuour not thy selfe to walke innocently, & to bryng forth the fruites of fayth, it is to be feared that for thyne vnkyndnesse God will take it from thée, and hyer out his bynepard to an other, whiche shall restore the fruite in due seasō, and then shall thyne end be worse then thy begynnyng. Let vs therfore with feare and tremblyng seeke our health and make stable our vocation and electiō, mortifiyng our members and man of sinne, by exercising our selues in Christes preceptes, that we may be the children of our father that is in heauen, and felow heyers with our Sauiour and brother Christ Iesu.

If God haue geuen thée riches, thou mayst not thincke that he hath committed them vnto thée for thine owne vse only, but that he hath made thée a stuard ouer them to destribute them to the profite of the commontie. For indéede thou art not the verye owner of them, but God is the owner, whiche sayth by the Prophet Agge, Golde is mine, and siluer is mine: and he hath committed them for a ceason to thy hande, to see whether thou wilt be faythfull in distributing thys wicked Mammon, according to his commaundementes. And that it so is thou mayst well note by the parable of the riche man, whych was clothed in silke and fared delicately in this worlde, and after was buryed in hell. Wheruppon S. Gregory noteth that he was not damned because he despoiled any other mans, but because he did not distribute his own, as ẏ processe of ẏ Text doth also well declare. Wherefore if we must geue accompts of all that is geuē vs, then haue we litle cause to glory, but rather to feare and tremble, and to count him most happy, to whom least is committed. For God to whom this accomptes must be made, can not be deluded, although the world may be blinded.

Luke.16.

If God haue geuen thée thy perfite limmes and members, then gette to some occupation, and worke wyth thyne owne handes, that thy members which are whole and perfite, may minister to theyr necessitie that lacke theyr members: for that is acceptable in the sight of God, and the contrarye so detestable, that if thou withdrawe thy members from ayding thy neighboures, thou shalt of God be recounted for a thefe and a murtherer.

therer. And therfore I affirme that all our holy hypocrites and idle belyed Monkes, chanons, and prieſtes, whether they be regulare or ſeculare, if they laboure not to preache Gods woorde are thæues and alſo murtherers: for they maintaine their ſtrong members in idleneſſe, which ought to labour for the profite of their neyghbours, that their perfite members might miniſter vnto the neceſſitie of them that lacke their members. As the eye muſt miniſter her fruite of ſight vnto the fæte, handes and other members which lacke it: or els are they in ieoperdie to periſhe at euery pit, and the eye giltie of their deſtruction for withdrawing her office from them. And this may we eſtabliſh by the woordes of S. Paule which ſayth, Ephes. 4. He that dyd ſteale, let hym ſteale no more, but rather laboure wyth hys owne handes that he may haue to diſtribute to them that lacke. And ſome doctoures do very well expounde it of certaine perſons that walked inordinately, and would not worke themſelues theugh they were ſturdye lubbers, but liued on other mens charitie, which thing the Apoſtle calleth theft, and exhorteth them to woorke with their own hands, that they may both helpe themſelues and other.

And for becauſe ſome perſons which fæle them ſelues græued, becauſe they are giltie, will not be content to allow this expoſition I will alledge an other text of the Wiſe man, which ſhall not onely allow this ſentence, but alſo bite them better: for Eccl. 34. he ſayth, Panis egentium vita pauperis eſt, qui autem defraudat eum homo ſanguinis eſt. that is to ſay, The bread of the nædy is the life of the poore, and he that defraudeth him of it is a murtherer. This text holdeth their noſes ſo hard to the grindſtone that it clean diſfigureth their faces, for it proueth our Biſhops, Abbotes, and ſpirituall poſſeſſionaries double thæues and murtherers, as concerning the body (beſides their murdering of the ſoule for lacke of Gods woorde, which they will neyther preache, nor ſuffer any to doe it purely, but perſecute and put them vnto the moſt cruell death) firſte they are thæues and murtherers, becauſe they diſtribute not that which was appoynted by our faythfull forefathers to the entent it ſhould haue bene miniſtred vnto the poore (for then they ſæmed to be very bertuous) but now they beſtow it vpon hawkes, houndes, horſes, &c. vpon gorgious apparell and delicate fare. And glad are ỳ poore whē they may get the ſcrappes. They may haue not ſo much as a pigge of their owne ſow, no ſcant a fether of their own goſe. For he that may diſpend foure or v. thouſand markes a yeare, would thinke it were too much if he gaue xx. nobles of it vnto the poore, which notwythſtanding are the owners vnder God of all together the miniſters kuyng deduct, which (as the Apoſtle ſayth) hauing their fode and clothes to couer them ought therewith to be con- 1. Tim. 6. tent. And thus they defraude the poor of their bread, & ſo are they thæues, and (becauſe this bread is their life) as the aforeſayd text teſtifieth, he that defraudeth hym of it, is not onely a thæfe, but alſo a murtherer.

And when they thinke to beſtow it very well and beſtowe it in buildyng palaces of pleaſure, yet are they therin much to be reproued. For as an old Doctour ſayth, they are in that poynt worſe then the deuill, for the deuill would haue had that Chriſt ſhould haue turned ſtones into bræde (which might haue ſuckored ỳ poore) & theſe builders turne the bread into ſtones. For they beſtow ỳ good which ſhould be geuen to the poore for their ſuſtenaunce, vpon an heape of ſtones.

But here they will obiect (as they Obiection. are neuer without euaſions) that if they ſhould diſtribute it among the poore accordyng as they are bounde, within a while all would be ſpent, & no good ſhould come of it, nor no man know where it is become or who fareth the better for it. Whereunto I Solution. aunſwere that in dæde ye be to wiſe for me, for ſith ye go about to correct Chriſt, and to ſet hym to ſchole and learne hym what is beſt, it were but folye for me to meddle with you. For Eccle.4. Esay.5. Christes minde and commaundement is that we should distribute it and not withhold it from them. And sayth by his Prophet: wo be to them that couple and knit houses together, whiche I thinke may iustly be verified vpon you. Neuertheless this I dare say, that if a Bysshop which may dispende foure thousand marke would vnto the poore of his Dioces distribute euery yeare, but the one halfe geuyng vnto one man. xl. shillyng, and lendyng to an other. xx. nobles to set vp his occupation with all, and so geue and lende as he seeth nede, he should within. v. or. vj. yeares make a florishyng Dioces. And I thinke verely that his face should more be alowed before God, then if he had builded a thousand Abbayes: for Gods commaundement ought first to be done, & is much more acceptable to him then all the workes that procede of our imaginations and folish phantasies.

Besides that they are theeues and murtherers for withdrawyng theyr perfite membes from labour wherby they might minister vnto their neighbours necessity (I speake of as many as are not occupied about preachyng Gods worde) for in that they withdrawe their members from succouryng their poore neighbours, they are theeues. And because this succour is called their lyfe, they are murtherers for keepyng it from them.

Here our beggyng orders of Friers would thinke to be exempt, because they haue not receiued rentes to be distributed. Notwithstandyng if we ponder this texte well we shall finde them condemned as deepe as the other. For they enter into euery mans house, and with vnshamefaced beggyng polle them so nye, that in a maner they leaue nothing behind for the very poore which are sicke, lame, creple, blynd and maymed. For there is not the poorest desolate widowe, but with his fayre flatteryng he wil so deceiue her, that he will be sure either of money or ware: but deare brethren mayntayne ye no such murtherers, lest ye bee partakers of their sinnes, but rather folow the counsell of the Apostle, which chargeth vs in ỹ name of our Lorde Jesu Christ, that we withdrawe our selues from euery brother that walketh inordinatly & worketh not and byddeth if hee will not worke he should not eate. 2. Thess. 3.

Now if they obiect that they liue in contemplation & study of Scripture, and say that they ought not to be let from that holy worke: for Christ sayd that Mary had chosen the best part whiche should not be taken from her.

Thereunto may I make the same answere which that holy father and Abbot S. Siluane made. This Siluane was an Abbot an holy man, hauyng many Monkes vnder him, whō he caused after their prayers (whiche were nothyng so lōg as our Monkes vse now a dayes) whiche thinke for their many wordes to be heard, lyke as dyd the Pharisees whom Christ rebuked, he caused them I say to labour for their lyuyng, accordyng to the mynde of Paule. And vppon a tyme there came a religious man to hys abbay, and when he sawe his Monkes worcking, he asked the Abbot whye he so vsed them, and why they gaue not them selues to holye contemplation, seeing that Marie had chosen the best part. The Abbot made fewe wordes, but gaue this Monke a boke, and sent him into a sell, to be there occupied in studie and contemplation. And at dinner time ỹ Abbot called all his monks to meat, and let hym sit in contemplation. After none when he began to ware very hūgry, he came out againe to the Abbot Siluane, and asked whether his Monkes had not yet dined: And he answered, yes. And why called you not me, quod the Monke, to dine wyth them? Verily sayd the Abbot, I thought you had bene all spirituall, and had needed no meate. Nay quod the Monke I am not so spirituall nor feruent in contemplation, but that I must needes eate. Verely sayde the Abbot, then muste you also needes worke, for Mary hathe neede of Martha. When the Monke heard that, he repented and fell to worke as the other dyd. And I woulde to God that this aunswer would cause our religious euen so to doe, & to fall to worke, that they might succoure theyr nedie neighboures.

And as touching theyr studie in scripture, S. Austine sayeth: how shalt thou better learne to vnderstande the scipture, then by going about to fulfill that thou there readest? And if thou goe aboute to fulfill it saythe he, then must thou worke with thy handes, for that dothe S. Paule teache thée. Of this I haue compiled an whole boke, which if God haue appoynted me to finishe it, and set it forthe, shalbe a rule of more perfection vnto oure religious, then any that they haue vsed this hundreth yeare.

The third Chapter.

The conclusion of this treatise, that no flesh should reioyce, but feare and tremble in all the giftes that he receiueth.

HEre maiste thou perceiue that no man liueth but he maye feare and tremble, and moste he may feare, to whome most is committed, for of him shall muche be required: and muche are we bounde to thanke God in all things. For of oure selues haue we noughte but sinne and vanitie, but thorowe his gracious fauoure haue we all godnesse, and be that we be. And sith all our godnesse commeth of hym, we muste agayne be thanckefull vnto him, and kepe hys commaundements. For els we may feare least he take hys gifts from vs, and then shall we receiue the greater dampnation.

If thou haue receiued the knowledge of hys word, geue hym thanks, and be a faithful minister thereof: for else he shall deliuer thée vnto thyne owne fantasticall imaginations, and cast thée headlong into an heape of heresies, which shall bring thée into bter destruction.

If he geue thée faith in hys worde, geue him thanks, and bring forth the fruites therof in due season, for els he will take it away from thée, and sende thée into finall desperation.

If he geue thée riches, then geue hym thankes, and distribute them according to Gods commaundement, or else he shall take them from thée (if he loue thée) either by theeues, by water, by death of thy cattell, by blasting thy fruites, or such other scourges, to Esai. 5. Ierem. 7. cause thée loue hym, because he wolde alienate thine heart from them, this I say he wil do, if he loue thée, to make thée put thine whole trust in him, and not in these transitorie things. But if Ierem. 12. he hate thée, then will he sende thée great prosperitie, and encrease them plenteously, and gene thée thy heauen in thys worlde vnto thine euerlasting dampnation in the lyfe to come, and therefore feare and take good hede whiles thou hast leasure.

If thou aske me what his honoure, praise, and thankes are? I answere, that his honor, praise and thankes, is nothing els but the fulfilling of hys commaũdementes. If thou aske me what his commaundementes are as touching the bestowing of thy goodes I answer, his cõmaundemẽts are that thou bestowe them in the workes of mercye, and that shall he laye to thy charge at the daye of iudgement. He shal aske you whether you haue fedde the hungrie, and geuen drinke to the thirstie, and not whether you haue builded abbayes or chauntries. He shall aske you whether you haue harbored the harborlesse, and clothed the naked, and not whether you haue gilded images, or geuen copes to churches. He shall aske you whether you haue visited the sicke, and gone to the prisoners, and not whether you haue gone a pilgrimage to Walsingham or Canterburye. And thys I affirme vnto thée, that if thou builde a thousand cloisters, and giue as many copes and chalices to churches, and visitest all the pilgrimages in the worlde, and espiest and seest a poore man whome thou mightest help, perishing for lack of one grote, all these things whereon thou hast bestowed so muche money, shall not be able to helpe thée. Therefore take good hede, and say not but that ye be warned.

If God haue geuen thée thy perfite limmes and members then geue him thankes, and vse them to the tamyng of thy body, and profite of thy neighbour. For els if God loue thée he will send thée some mayne or mischief and take them from thée, that thy negligence and none vsing of them be not so extremely imputed vnto thée. But if he hate thée, he shal kéepe thē whole and sounde for thée, that the none vsing of them may be thy greater damnation. Therfore beware and feare geuing him thankes according to hys commaundementes. For we are hys creatures, and are much bounde to him that he hath geuen to vs our perfite members: for it is better for vs to haue our limmes and to worke with them distributing to other, then that other should distribute vnto vs: for it is a more holy thing to geue thē to take: yea we are much bound vnto him, although he haue made vs imperfect and mutilate: for we were in his handes (as we are yet) to haue done with vs whatsoeuer had pleased him, euen to haue made vs the vilest creature vpon the earth.

Actes. 2.

Ierem. 18.

I haue read of a shepheard which kéeping his shéepe in the field espyed a foule Toade, and when he had wel marked her, and conferred her shape and nature, vnto himselfe and hys nature, he fell a wéeping and cryed out piteously. At the last came a Bishop by, riding right royally: and whē he saw the shepheard so sore lamenting, he reynde hys horse, & asked him the cause of his great wayling. Then aunswered the shepheard, Verely sir I wéepe for mine vnkindnes toward almightie God: for I haue geuen thākes to God of many thynges, but yet I was neuer so kind since I was borne, as to thanke him of this thing. What is that, sayd the Bishop? Syr (quod he) sée you not this foule toade? Yes (quod the Bishop) what is that to the purpose? Verely (sayd the shepheard) it is the creature of God as well as I am, and God might haue made me euen such a foule and vnreasonable beast as this is, if it had pleased him, & yet he hath not done so, but of his mercy and goodnes he hath made me a reasonable creature, after his owne shape and likenes: and yet was I neuer so kynde as to thancke him that he had not made me so vile a creature, which thing I greatly bewayle, and mine vnkindenesse causeth me now thus to wéepe. Wyth ỹ the Bishop departed, and I trust learned to do thereafter. And I beséech God that we may so do, and be the faythfull folowers of our Sauiour Christ Iesu, to whom be prayse, honour, and glory for euer. Amen.

A myrrour or lookyng glasse wherin you may beholde the Sacrament of Baptisme described. Anno. M.D.xxxiij.

By me Iohn Frith.

Considéryng the manifold & lamentable errours wherewith not the ignorannt people onely, but also the learned (as they séeme) haue bene seduced long as touchyng the blessed Sacrament of Baptisme. I thought it expedient therin to write my mynde. Trusting by that meanes to bring agayn the blynde hartes of many vnto the right way, and I doubt not but that the elect and chosē of God, that know their shepheardes voyce, and haue the spirite to iudge all thynges, shall easely perceiue whether this be conformable to their maisters doyce, and shall hereby bee monished to leaue their wandryng in the darke & lothsome wayes which leade vnto death, and to walke without stumblyng in the comfortable light which bringeth their consciences to rest, & such peace that passeth all vnderstandyng.

Iohn. 10.
1. Cor. 2.

Gods elect perceiue easely the spirituall meaning of his Sacramentes.

Walking in the truth bringeth rest of conscience.

One errour is this. They put so great confidence in the outward signe that without discretion they condēne the the infantes, whiche dye or they be Baptised vnto euerlastyng payne, another is this. They cleaue so stronglye vnto the weake ceremonies, that they thinke if a dronken Priest leaue out a worde, as Volo say ye, or Credo say ye, or forget to put spittell or salt in ỳ childes mouth that ỳ child is not christened, yea so much giue they thereunto the beggerly salt, that they will say spill not the salt, for it is our Christendome, and vse also to sweare by it. Saying by this salt that is my Christendome. Alas what blyndnesse is this, these two errours are the principall that I do entend at this tyme to confute. For when they are fallen, the other that are grounded on these must nedes decay. First we must marke three thynges in euery Sacrament to be considered the signe, the signification and the fayth, whiche is geuen vnto the wordes of God. The signe in Baptisme is the ploungyng downe in the materiall water and liftyng vp agayne by the whiche as by an outward badge we are knowen to be of the number of them which professe Christ to be theyr redemer and Sauiour.

Externall signes without spirituall sense taught and beleued of the blinde papistes.

Three thinges ought to be cõsidered in euery Sacrament.

This outward signe doth neither geue vs the spirite of God: neither yet grace that is the fauour of God. For if thorough the washyng in the water the spirite or grace were geuẽ, then should it folow that who soeuer were baptised in water should receiue this precious gift, but that is not so, wherfore I must nedes conclude that this outward signe by any power or influence that it hath, bryngeth not the spirite or fauour of God. That euery man receiueth not this treasure in Baptisme it is euidẽt: for put the case that a Iew or an infidell should say that he dyd beleue, & beleued not in dede, and vpõ his wordes were baptised in dede (for no man cã iudge what his hart is, but we must receiue him vnto Baptisme if he confesse our fayth with his mouth albeit his hart be farre from thence) this miscreant now thus Baptised hath receiued this outward signe and Sacrament, aswell as the most faythfull man beleuyng. Howbeit he neither receiueth the spirite of God, neither yet any grace but rather condemnation. Wherefore it is euident that the exterior signe giueth not this gift whiche is also as certaine in all other Sacramentes, yea in the Sacrament of the altare whiche may be called a double Sacrament. For it is not onely a remembraunce that the naturall body of Christe was broken and hys bloud shed for our redemption as the Euangelistes do testifie, but also it is his spirituall body whiche is the congregation of the faythfull as S. Paul testifieth: saying, the bread which we breake is it not the partaking (that is to say we that are partakers) of the body of Christ? For we (sayth hee) though we be many yet are we one bread & one body. But for all that, the receiuyng of this Sacrament giueth vs not the spirite of God neither yet his fauor: for the wicked receiueth it as well as ỳ good. Howbeit that receiuyng is to theyr dãnation. Wherfore it foloweth that the outwarde signe giueth no mã any grace. Moreouer if the spirite of God and his grace were bounde vnto the Sacramentes, then where ỳ Sacramẽts were ministred there must ỳ spirit of grace waite on, and where they were not ministred, shuld be neither spirit nor grace. But that is false, for Cornelius & all his houshold receiued ỳ holy ghost before they were Baptised. In so much that Peter sayd may any man forbyd that these should be baptised with water whiche haue receiued the holy ghost as well as we. And so he commaunded them to be baptised, in the name of the Lord, here may we se that as the spirite of God lighteth where he will, neither is he bounde to any thing. Yea and this example doth well declare vnto vs that the Sacramentes are geuen to be an outward witnesse vnto all the cõgregation of that grace whiche is geuen before priuatly vnto euery man.

Outwarde signes neyther minister vnto vs Gods spirit nor his grace.

Marke well this example.

He that receiueth the signe of a sacrament outwardly and not the signification inwardly in hart, receaueth his damnation.

Note.

The spirite of God is not bounde to the outwarde signes of sacramẽtes.

Actes. 10.

Gods spirite not bounde to any place.

So is Baptisme giuen before the congregation vnto hym which before he receiue it, hath either professed the Religion of Christ, or els hath the word of promise, by the whiche promesse he is knowen to be of the sensible congregatiō of Christ and for this cause when we baptise one that is come vnto the age of discretiō we are of hym whether he beleue, if he aunswere yea and desire Baptisme then is he baptised so that we require faith in hym before he be baptised (whiche is the gift of God) and commeth of grace, and so it is an outward signe of hys inuisible fayth whiche before was giuen hym of God. If an infant be brought vnto baptisme whom his frendes offer vp willyng to sanctifie and fulfill the commaundement and ordinaunce of God, we enquire of his frendes before the congregatiō whether they will that their child be baptised and when they haue aunswered yea, thē receiueth he Baptisme. Here also went before the promise of God that hee of his grace reputeth our infantes no lesse of the congregation then the infantes of the Hebrues and thorough Baptisme doth the congregation receiue him whiche was first receiued thorough grace of the promise, thus may we see that Baptisme bryngeth not grace, but doth testifie vnto the congregation that he which is baptised had such grace geuen hym before, so is Baptisme a Sacrament, that is the signe of an holy thyng eue a token of the grace and frée mercy whiche was before geuen hym a visible example of inuisible grace whiche is done and geuen through the gentlenesse of God. By this may we perceiue how grosse their ignorance is which without discretion condemne the infantes that departe out of this worlde not baptised in our materiall water. For if that water geue no grace as I haue sufficiently proued, why should they condemne more before that washyng, then after. Beside that the election of God is frée and followeth not our fayth, but fayth followeth the electiō as it is writtē. And there beleued euen as many as were ordeined vnto euerlastyng lyfe for they that are chosen frō ỹ beginnyng are no doubt chosen before they had fayth, we ought not therfore to geue such vnaduised iudgement [illegible] these children which by their [illegible] not yet heard our fayth, seyng [illegible] election is hidde from our eyes.

Note.

Washe iudgement in mysticall matters not lawfull.

The children of Israell were a people which God had chosen from among all nations of the worlde, and gaue them Circumcision for a token and memoriall of that election, which circumcision was a figure of our baptisme, and they thought that the gentiles which were not carnally circumcised had bene all condemned. But their opinion deceiued them for there were also of the Gentiles which although they were not circumcised outwardly were electe of God & were spiritually circumcised, which onely is the thing that God regardeth, as Paule testifieth, saying, He is not a Iew which is a Iew outwarde, neyther is that circumcision any thing which is outward in the flesh: but he is a Iew which is hid within the circumcision of the hart, which is the cutting off, of carnall desires, and is the true circumcision. This circumcision was in price with God, wyth the which the gentiles (as Iob) were circumcised. And in like maner may we say of our Baptisme, he is not a Christen man which is washed wyth water, neither is that baptisme which is outwarde in the flesh: but that is the very baptisme which God alloweth, to be baptised spiritually in the hart, that is, to subdue and weed out the braunches of sinne that it raigne not in your mortall bodies, and bring thē into bōdage vnder it: of ỹ which our Baptisme is but a signe. And there are many (I doubt not) which are thus spiritually baptized although their bodies touch no water, as there were gentiles thus spiritually circumcised and yet neuer cutte of the foreskinne of their priuy members.

Israelites, Gods peculiar people.

Furthermore the children of the vncircumcision are of the people and congregation of God aswell as the children of the Hebrewes vnder the law were members of their congregation. I take the congregation of God in thys place euen somewhat largely, that is, for all them that are thē [illegible] coūted to be the members of C[illegible] it is taken, Mathew 13. where Christe compareth it vnto a nette which receyueth both good fish and euill: and agayne Mathew 25. where he likeneth the kingdome of heauen, that is to say, the congregation of God vnto x. virgins, of the which v. were wise, and v. folish: but I speake not in this place of the elect sanctifyed and inuisible congregation, which is wythout spotte and wrinckle, and onely knowne vnto God which hath chosen her before the foundations of the worlde were layde, neyther is it to be estēmed but that God is as mercyfull vnto vs which are of the spirituall Israell, as he was vnto the carnall Israell. S. John, S. Paule and such other were they not (being infantes) of the cōgregation of God elect in Christ Jesu before the creation of the worlde? howbeit in theyr infancy they neither had fayth, nor yet knew any thing of this election. Mathew, Zacheus, the theef and Mary Magdalene were they not likewise so chosē, yet they themselues knew it not vntill they were lightened of the holy Ghost, and drawne vnto Christ by our heauenly Father, neyther knoweth any man of an others election, but euery man may knowe hys owne through hys fayth and will that he hath to fulfill the law of God. Of this sensible congregation of Christ was Judas, yea and all the other which after forsoke Christ, neither will the Apostles but that Judas had bene of the elect, sanctifyed, and inuisible congregation of Christ, aswell as Peter or John: so that our iudgement recounteth all faythfull and chosen, that seme to be, but Christ knoweth them that are hys, and them that shall forsake him.

Math.13. Math.25. Gods elect Church is without spotte and onely knowen to God. Man is vncertaine of his election vntill the holy ghost worketh in hym assure hym therof. Good and bad are of the sensible Church.

Nowe is there an opinion risen amōg certaine, which affirme ỳ childrē may not be baptised vntill they come vnto a perfecte age, and that because they haue no faithe: but verely me thinketh that they are farre from the mākenesse of Christe, and his spirite, which when children were broughte vnto him, receiued them louingly, and embraced them in his armes. Mat.9. and when his Disciples blamed the bringers, he called them vnto hym, saying: suffer children to come vnto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heauen. Luk.18. And albeit they haue no faith, but are only of that inuisible congregation, that is, wōut spot or wrinkel: yet as I haue saide they haue a promisse as well as the children of the Hebrewes, by the which they are of the visible congregation, which thing only is testified in theyr baptisme. So it appeareth that these men are ignorāt what baptisme is. For oure baptisme doth not testifie that we are of that pure congregation, which was chosen and sanctified in Christe before the worlde began, which haue theyr names wrytten in the booke of life, of the which it is not possible that one shoulde perishe, for then were it a false testimonie: seing many whiche are baptised, fall afterward into perillous heresies, and vtter desperation which bringeth them vnto deathe euerlasting. And as for faith if they haue none when they are baptised, lette them pray vnto God to giue it them afterwarde: for the lacke of fayth hurteth not the sacramente, but the sacrament may be as well ministred vnto a miscreant as to a faithfull, if he say that he hathe faythe, or haue any promise of God, but thys matter will I passe ouer: for I truste the English (vnto whō I wrote this) haue no such opinions.

Math. 9. Luke. 18. Infantes may be baptised because they be partakers of the promise although they as yet haue no fayth.

Nowe will I procēde wyth the second poynte of this sacrament, which is the signification. The signification of baptisme is described of Paule in the.6. of ỳ Romaines, that as we are plunged bodily into the water. Euen so we are dead & buried with Christe from sinne: and as we are lifted again out of the water, euen so are we risen with Christe from oure sinnes, that we might hereafter walke in a newe conuersation of lyfe. So that these two things, that is to be plunged in the water, and lifte vp againe, doe signifie and represent the whole pith and effect of baptisme, that is the mortification of our olde Adam, & the rising vp of our new man. What is ỳ old Adam: verely euẽ that by naturall inheritaunce is planted thorough Adams fall in vs, as to be vnfaythfull, angrie, enuious, couetous, slouthfull, proud, and vngodly, these and suche other vses wherewith oure nature is benemed, ought we withall diligence to cutte of, and mortifie, that we may daily be more pacient, liberall, and mercifull according to that oure baptisme doth signifie. In so much that a Christen mannes lyfe is nothing els saue a continuall baptisme, whych is begon when are dipped in the water, and is put in continuall vre and exercise, as long as the infection of sinne remaineth in oure bodyes, whych is neuer vtterly vanquished vntill the houre of death, and there is the great Golias slayn wyth hys owne sweard, that is deathe, whych is the power of sinne, and the gate of euerlasting lyfe opened vnto vs, and thus is Paule to be vnderstand. Galat. 3. where he sayth. All ye that are baptised into Christ, haue put Christe on you, that is, you haue promised to dye wyth Christe as touching youre sinnes and worldly desires passed, and to become new mẽ, or creatures or members of Christ, this haue we all promised vnto the congregation, and it is represented in our Baptisme. But alas there are but few which in dede fulfil that they promise or rather that the Sacrament promiseth for them. And for this cause it is called of Paule the fountaine of the new byrth and regeneration. Tit. iij. bicause it signifieth that we wil in dede renounce & vtterly forsake our old life & purge our mẽbers frõ the workes of iniquitie thorough ỳ vertue of ỳ holy ghost, which as the water or fire doth clense the body, Euen so doth it purifie the hart from all vncleanesse: yea it is a commõ phrase in Scripture to cal the holy ghost water and fire, because these two elementes expresse so liuely hys purgyng operation.

The whole course of mans life is a continuall Baptisme.

Galat. 3.

Tit. 3. Baptisme is the fountaine of our new byrth.

Now haue we expounded the signification of Baptisme which significatiõ we may obtaine onely by fayth, for if thou be baptised a thousãd times with water & haue no fayth it auayleth thee no more towardes God, thẽ it doth a Gose when she ducketh her selfe vnder the water. Therefore if thou wilt obtaine the profite of Baptisme thou must haue fayth, that is, thou must bee surely persuaded that thou art newly borne agayne not by water onely, but by water and the holy ghost, Iohn. iij. & thou art become ỳ child of God & that thy sinnes are not imputed to thee, but forgeuẽ through ỳ bloud & passion of Christ, according vnto the promise of God. This fayth haue neither ỳ deuils, neither yet the wicked. For the wicked cã not beleue ỳ remissiõ of their sinnes, but fall vnto vtter desperation and make God a lyer as much as in thẽ is. For they beleue not the testimony which he gaue his sonne, and this is that testimony, that all which beleue on hym haue euerlastyng lyfe Iohn. v. And the deuils can not beleue it, for they haue no promise made vnto them. Thus through Christes bloud, wherof our Baptisme hath his full strength and vigour, are we regenerate and made at one with the father. For by our first naturall byrth, we are the children of wrath. Ephes. ij. and the enemyes of God. Roma. v.

Iohn. 5.

Christes bloud is the strẽgth of our Baptisme.

Roma. 5.

Finally baptisme is an ordinaunce institute of God (and no practise of mans imagination) put in vse in Christes time, and after his resurrection commaunded to be ministred vnto all that beleeue, whether they were Iewes or Gentiles. For Christ sayth to his Apostles, Go ye & teach all nations baptizing them in the name of the Father, & of the Sonne and of the holy Ghost. Wherfore although it seeme neuer so exterior a thing, yet ought it to be had in great price and much reuerence because it was commaũded of God to be done. Beside that it is an outward signe or witnesse vnto the cõgregation of the inuisible promise geuen before by grace vnto euery priuate man, and by it doth the congregation receiue hym openly to be coũted one of thẽ which was first receiued by faith, or through the grace of the promise: it putteth vs also also in remembraūce that we (aduertising the kyndnesse of God and our promise in Baptisme) may learne to dye and mortifie our rebellyng members, otherwise gyueth it no grace, nether hath it any secret vertue as we haue sufficiently proued, and therfore is he sore to blame that so vnaduisedly condemneth these infātes iudgyng his brother which is in Gods hand, yea and peraduenture baptised in Christes bloud. For Gods election is vnknowen to man. Now will I endeuour my selfe to ouerthrow and vtterly put out the second errour whiche hath long raigned and seduced many: and that is of them which so strongly sticke vnto the weake ceremonies. Concerning the ceremonies of Baptisme, yea and all other, we must behaue our selues wisely as charitie teacheth vs, sekyng the profite of many, that they may be saued. We must cōsider that we haue our conuersation with men in this world of the which the most part know not God. Some are young, some weake, some peruerse, and some stiffenecked and obdurate vnto the young ceremonies, which although they be not noysome vnto the fayth, nor contrary to the word of God, yet will it be hard to finde such. They are good and expedient (as milke) to leade the young tenderly into the more perfite knowledge of God. The second sort are the weake vnto whom in all thynges it behoueth vs to haue respect & beare their infirmities by charitie: for their sake Actes. xv. dyd Paule circumcise Timothe, yea and for their sake hée had leuer to captiue his libertie and neuer eate flesh nor drinke wyne thē to offende one of them. The thyrde kynd of men are perfite I meane not so perfit that they are cleane without sinne hauyng no remnauntes of old Adā assailyng them for such are there none, but onely Christ: but I call thē perfite which haue perfit knowledge in the vse of thynges whiche know, that what soeuer entreth into the belly defileth not the man, which know that all such thynges be pure vnto thē that are pure Tit. i. whiche know that if we eate we are nothyng the better, or if we eate not we are nothyng the worse. 1. Cor. 8. these are frée betwene God & their conscièce, & may vse all thinges: howbeit they are yet bounde as cōcernyng their neighbour whiche is weake and hath not the knowledge, yea bound vnder the payne of sinne to abstaine from woūdyng of their cōscience, for he sinneth against God that woundeth an other mans conscièce. 1. Cor. 8. The fourth kynde are selfe willed and obstinate which put confidence in such indifferent thynges. For I thinke them not nédefull vnto our saluation. Then ought we to resist in the face, and not to yeld an inche vnto them, as Paule geueth vs example, which would not for theyr pleasure circumcise Titus but vtterly resisted theyr obdurate ignorance. If thou make this diuisiō, thou shalt know how to behaue thy selfe towardes all men, but now it is méete that we shewe thée whiche are the ceremonies of Baptisme.

1. Cor. 8.

Weake consciences eyther by breaking of any auncient custome, or neglecting ceremonies not to be offended.

1. Cor. 8.

The obstinate which put trust in thinges not needefull to saluation must be resisted.

The ceremonies of Baptisme are easly expressed if thou know what the substaunce of it is, and how the Apostles ministred it: and where may we haue that better expressed then Actes. viij. where Philip baptised the Eunuch, chamberlaine to the Quéene of Cādace, this Eunuch did knowledge that Jesus was the sonne of GOD which is the signe of our fayth, and desired Baptisme and Phillip at the next water they came to, washed hym in the name of the father and of the sonne, and of the holy ghost. There will no man deny but that that Baptisme was as full, & as good as ours, & yet was there neither fonte nor holy water, candle, creame, oyle, salt, godfather, or godmothers, or any other, popatrie. Wherfore we may cōclude that all these thinges are but ceremonyes that is to say exterior thynges whiche make Baptisme neither the better nor worse of a myte, thus say I not to haue these ceremonies that want iudgemēt disanulled, which are not noysome to our fayth, for feare of offending the weake, but onely that thou mayest know how to vse them,

Actes. 8.

Philip the Apostle vsed not so many outward ceremonies in Baptisme as papistes doe.

as indifferent and to put no confidēce in them. For then should they hurte and vnquiet our conscience, if thorowe negligence, or otherwise any thinge were vndone, and so shoulde they be an occasion to plucke vs from Christe, which were institute for a meane to bring vs vnto him. Therfore the Seniours and ministers of the congregations ought to instructe their flockes to take these thinges indifferent, which neyther saue nor damne, whether they be done or vndone. And if they perceyue the people cleaue to fore to them, then ought they to sēke out a tyme conuenient, and to abrogate or alter those ceremonies, or elles they can not escape the wrath of God. For they that sēke health in such ceremonies are fallen from grace and treade vnder theyr fote the bloude of Christ, vnto their condemnation. But theyr bloude shal be required at your hādes, which better should haue instructed them. And as concerning the abrogation or alteration of ceremonies, we haue a godly ensample of the Sabaoth. The Sabaoth was instituted and cōmaūded of God to be kept of the chyldren of Israel. Notwithstanding because it was a signe or a ceremony, and did signifie vnto them that it was God which sanctified them with his spirit, and not themselues wyth theyr holy workes. And because also that all ceremonies and shadowes ceased whē Christ came. So that they might be done or left vndone indifferētly. Our forefathers, which were in the beginning of the church, did abrogate thys Sabaoth to the entent that mē might haue an ensample of Christē libertie, and that they might know that neyther the kēpyng of the Saboth, nor of any other day, is necessary according to Paule. Ye obserue dayes, tymes, and monethes, I am afrayde of you that I haue laboured in vayne towardes you. Howbeit, because it was necessary that a day should be reserued, in the which the people might come together to heare the worde of God, they ordayned in the stede of ỹ Sabbaoth which was Saterday, the nexte day folowing which is Sonday. And although they myght haue kept the Saterday wyth the Iewes as a thyng indifferent: yet did they much better to ouerset the day, to be a perpetuall memory that we are frē and not bounde to any day, but that we may do all lawful workes to the pleasure of God and profite of our neighbour. We are in maner as superstitious in the Sonday as they were in the Saterday, yea, and we are much madder. For the Iewes haue ỹ word of God for theyr Saterdaye, sithe it is the seuenth daye, and they were commaunded to kēpe the seuēth day solempne. And we haue not the word of God for vs but rather agaynst vs, for we kēpe not the seuenth day as ỹ Iewes do. But the first which is not commaunded by Gods lawe: but Paule byddeth that no man iudge vs as concernyng holy day meates, and such other exteryour thyngs, yea and in no wise will he that we obserue them, countyng them more holy then other dayes. For they were institute that the people should come together to heare Gods worde, receyue the sacramentes, and geue God thankes. That done, they may returne vnto their houses and do their businesse aswell as any other day. Ye that thinketh that a man sinneth which worketh on the holy daye, if he be weake or ignorannt, ought better to be instruct, and so to leaue his holde. But if he be obstinate and perseuer in hys sentence, he is not of God, but of the deuill, for he maketh sinne in such as God leaueth frē. Accordyng to thys ensample, would I that our ceremonies were altered, because (as I haue sayd) the people sēke health in them. And what vilany can they do more to Christes bloude?

And as concerning Godfathers & Godmothers, they promise for theyr Godchildren that they shall mortifie the rote of sinne which springeth in the bodies, and subdue theyr lustes vnder the lawe of God. They promise also that they will instructe and bryng vp theyr Godchildren in the fayth of Christ: which office pertayneth

WE haue annexed (Chriſten Reader) vnto the end of the Reuelatiõ, a little treatiſe after the maner of an Epitome and ſhorte rehearſall of all things that are examined more diligẽtly in the aforeſayd booke, wherein their falſe and cloked hipocriſie is aboundantly opened, by the compairing of Chriſtes actes and theirs together, for Chriſtes rule can not bee deceauable, whiche ſayth that we ſhould know thẽ by their workes, for Paule ſaith that ſuch falſe Apoſtles are wicked workers which be tranſſigured into Chriſtes Apoſtles. And no maruell for Sathan hym ſelfe, is ſome tyme tranſſigured into an aungell of light, therefore it is no great thyng, if that his miniſters do take vpon them a ſimilitude, as though they were the miniſters of iuſtice, whoſe ende ſhalbe accordyng to their workes. Chriſt cõmaunded his diſciples that if any man treſpaſſed agaynſt them, they ſhoulde go & reproue hym priuely, if he would not obey and be reconcyled, then ſhoulde they take with them one witnes or twayne, if he would not then heare them, that they ſhould tell it to the whole cõgregation. And if he would ſtill continue in his ſtubbernes, that they ſhould auoyde his company.

The Pope and Byſhoppes wyll caſt ſtraight into priſon, there to remaine in pryons to make them reuoke the truth, and graunt to their willes, and if he be ſtronge and will not forſake the truth, they will condemne him without audience, for feare of loſing of their temporall winning. And offering to their wombes, and taking away of their temporaltyes, wherewith the church is venomed.

28. Chriſt charged Peter thryſe, to Iohn.21. kéepe well and nouriſhe his ſhéepe.

The Pope chargeth much more to kéepe well his money. As for the ſhéepe he ſhereth and puniſheth wyth infinite exactions.

The Pope and Byſhoppes, geue great giftes to minſtrelles and meſſengers, to leude lyers and flatterers to crye their name about, that they may haue worſhyppe in this worlde.

30. Chriſt had no ſecular courtes to Math.5. pleade ẏ matters of his diſciples, for they would not reſiſt euill.

The Pope and Biſhoppes, haue many wyth men of lawe to oppreſſe ẏ poore againſt mercy, forgeue they will not, but euer be auenged.

The Pope and Byſhoppes, hunt the wilde Deare, the Fox, and the Hare, in their cloſed parkes, wyth great cryes, and hornes blowinge, with Houndes and ratches running.

32. God was called the holy father Iohn.21. of Ieſu Chriſt his ſonne.

The Pope is called moſt holy father of Sathãs children, & taketh that name on him wyth Lucifers pride: his diſciples ſay ẏ he is god on earth, and we are taught by Chriſtes lawe to haue but one God. Iohn.5

33. Chriſt

Luke.2. 33. Chriſt ſate in the middes of the Doctors, aſking, and hearing them.

The Pope and Byſhoppes ſit in thrones wyth glorious myters, iudgeing and condemning by theyr owne made lawes. A litle matter, long in pleating, which myght be ſone determined by the lawe of God, if they would vſe it, but then were their winning the leſſe, and their lawe wythout profite.

Math.5. 34 Chriſt taught that a man ſhoulde forſake his wife for no cauſe but for aduoutry.

The Pope and Byſhoppes wyll make deuorces for money, as often as they liſt, and ſo they pille the poore and make themſelues rich, nothyng regardyng to breake the law of God.

Actes.2. 35. Chriſt ſent the holy ghoſt in feruent loue, to teach all the truth vnto them which were choſen of God.

The Pope and Byſhoppes ſende commaundements all about to curſe and aſke auengeaunce on them that reſiſte theyr tyranny, And abſoile thē agayne cleane for money: all their doctrines haue golden tayles, for money is euer the ende, geue them money, and you haue fulfilled all theyr lawes.

Math.3. 36. Chriſt fulfilled and kept the olde lawe and the new, and all righteouſneſſe.

The Pope and Byſhoppes kéepe their owne traditions and lawes, but the lawe of God is cleane out of their myndes.

Iohn.13. 37. Chriſt ſayd, that men ſhoulde know his diſciples by their charitie, becauſe they ſhould loue one another as he hath loued them.

The Pope cauſeth his to be knowen, by theyr ſhauen crownes, by gathering vp of tithes, maſſe pence, and offeringes, by the gylden trentalles, and ſalaryes to ſing, by Peter pence gathering, and ſhryning for monye, by peny wedding, and holy water ſprinkling, and many mo markes hath he geuen them, As for charitie, they know it not at all.

Iohn.9. 38. Chriſt bad them that hee healed to go and ſinne no more.

The Pope and Biſhops haue layned penaunce, and commaunde men to faſt bread & water, to go barefote, without a ſhurt, & to offer to certaine idols money or cattell, ſome Maſſes muſt be ſong for them becauſe theyr confeſſours ſhould haue ſome profite, Some muſt go about the church, and Churchyard, with a taper burnyng in hys hand. And euer ſome be puniſhed by the purſe, though they offend not.

39. Chriſt ſent to preach ſeuēty and two Diſciples, whiche promiſed frēely heauen to them that would beleue in the name of Chriſt. Luke.10.

The Pope and Byſhops ſende about foure ſectes of beggers to geue pardon vnder their maſter Antichriſt. And to ſell heauen to whom ſo euer they liſte, the Apoſtles knew no ſuch thynges.

40. Chriſt was buryed in a garden in a poore monument without any funerall pompe. Iohn.19.

The Pope and Byſhops are buryed in tombes well gilt with many a torch and great ſolemnitie, with angels gloriouſly portered that beare their ſoules to heauen. Notwithſtandyng it is to be feared that they go to ſupper with the deuill.

41. Chriſt ſayth if thou wilt be perfite go and ſell all thy goodes and geue it vnto the poore for then ſhalt thou haue treaſure in heauen. Math.19.

The pope ſaith if thou wilt be perfite geue me thy money & I will geue thée a pardon that ſhall abſolue thée cleane a pœna & culpa I will for thy money geue thée, the kaye of heauen gates.

42. Chriſt ſaid vnto his Apoſtles the Kynges and Princes of the Gentiles haue rule and power ouer them, but you ſhall not ſo haue. Luke.22.

The Pope ſayth, all Emperours, Kynges and Lordes be my ſubiectes, This is dayly read in his Buls, wher in he commaundeth the nobilitie, like as a maſter doth his ſeruaunt.

43. Chriſt ſayth, he that among you wilbe greateſt, let him be all your ſeruauntes. Math.23. Marke.9.

The Pope ſayth, The Emperour muſt ſweare an oth vnto me as vnto his Lord, that he will be my ſubiect & eralte and worſhyp me with honour. Ca. Tibi Domino. Di. 63.

Math. 15. 44. Chriſt ſayth that we worſhyppe hym in vayne with mens doctrines & traditions.

The Pope ſayth my traditions in the ſpiritual law, ſhall be kept as duely, as if God had commaunded it hym ſelfe, or S. Peter had preached it hym ſelfe. Ca. Si omnes. Diſt. 19.

Iohn. 14. 45. Chriſt ſayth I am the way and the truth folow me in my learnyng. And rule you by ỹ Scripture for that ſhall be your iudge.

The Pope ſayth, ye ſhall in all thynges folow the Church of Rome (by that meaneth he him ſelf and his Cardinals) Diſt. xi. Cap. quis neſciat. And as for the Scripture, it ſtandeth in my power & authoritie, for I may make of it what ſoeuer I will. Diſt. xix. Cap. Si romanorum.

Marke. 11. 46. Chriſt ſaith he that beleueth and is baptiſed, he ſhall be ſaued, but he that beleueth not ſhalbe damned.

The Pope ſayth hee that geueth much money for my pardõ ſhalbe abſoyled a pœna & a culpa. And thẽ muſt he nedes be ſaued. And he that teacheth otherwiſe is an hereticke, this teſtifieth his bulles and pardons.

Math. 4. 47. Chriſt promiſeth forgeuenes of ſinne. And the kyngdome of heauen vnto them that repẽt and will amend their lyues.

The Pope ſayth, that no man can be ſaued except he bee firſt ſhreuen of his Prieſtes & Friers, for they bryng in money. Cap. omnes.

Math. 5. 48. Chriſt ſayth you ſhall loue your enemyes, and ſhall do good vnto them that hate you.

The Pope ſayth, they that be enemyes, to me & my Cardinals, be curſed with the great excommunication, and cã not be abſoyled without much money, this is euident inough.

Math. 17. 49. Chriſt commaunded his Diſciples not to reſiſt euill, but if a man ſtrike them on ỹ one cheke, that they ſhould offer him the other alſo.

The Pope ſayth we may auenge and driue away force with force. De ſen. excom. cap. dilecto.

50. Chriſt (ſayth God the father) is my deare ſonne, hym ſhall you heare, for hys yoke is ſwete and his burden lyght. Math. 11.

The Pope ſayth you ſhall heare me, and my commaundement ſhall be kept and receaued of euery mã. Diſt. 93. cap. Si cuius. And if my cõmaundement and burthen were ſo heauy that it cã not well be ſuſtained and borne, yet ſhall ye obey me. Diſt. 19. cap. In memoriam.

51. Chriſt ſayd vnto the. ỹ. brethren, who hath ſet me to be your iudge in temporal gõdes. As though he ſhould ſay. It pertaineth not to me, but vnto worldly iudges. Luke. 12.

The Pope ſayth I am iudge in all maner of cauſes for they bryng money vnto me. 9. q. 3. Conqueſtus.

52. Chriſt ſaith geue the Emperour ſuch as pertayneth vnto hym as tribute and cuſtome, for I haue payde tolle for me and Peter. Math. 22. Math. 17.

The Pope ſaith I care not for this. But I excommunicate all them that aſke any toll or tribute of me and my ſhauelynges, for I haue made them all frée. Cap. Nouit. de ſenten. excom. Et ca. Si quis. de conſ. diſt. i.

53. Chriſt ſayth. Peter put vppe thy ſword into the ſheath, for he that ſtriketh with ſword ſhall periſhe with the ſword. Math. 26.

The Pope ſayth, you Emperours, Kynges, Princes, and Lordes, take ſwordes, ſpeares, halberdes, clubbes and gunnes, and helpe me to ſlea thẽ, that will not obey my tyranny. This muſt an Emperour do or els he muſt be periured. After this maner hath Julius the Pope ſlayne. xvi. thouſand men in one day, was not that wel paſtored? Dyd not he well nouriſh the ſhepe which Chriſt dyd committe vn to his tuition?

54. Chriſt ſayde. Drinke you all of this cuppe, for this is the bloude of my promiſe. Math. 26.

The Pope ſayth, I will not graũt this, for my prieſtes alone ſhal drinke of it (becauſe it may crye auengeaũce on them alone) the other ſhall not drinke of it in the payne of hereſy.

55. Chriſt ſayth: Ye are my frendes if Iohn. 15.

if you do all thinges that I my ſelfe commaunde you.

The Pope ſayth, you ſhall do as I bid you, for I haue power and authoritie to make lawes. And after them ſhall you liue. 25.q.j.ca. Sunt quidam.

Math.19. 56. Chriſt ſayth that chaſtitie is not geuen vnto euery mã, they that haue it geuen, let them take it geuing thãkes to God. And let the other vſe the remedy which God hath prepared, for it is better to mary then to burne.

1.Cor.7. The Pope ſayth, all monkes, Fryers, and Nunnes, ſhall vowe and ſweare chaſtitie, be it geuen them or not, my Prieſtes alſo ſhall not be wedded, but as for to kẽpe whores, and rauiſhe other mens daughters & wiues, ſhalbe diſpenſed withall. I will ſée no ſuch thinges, for my Byſhoppes haue yearely great mony by it, like as baudes be wont to haue.

Math.15. Roma.14. Colloſ.2. Tit.1. 57. Chriſt ſayth, all meates that mã taketh with thankes ſtaineth not the ſoule, for all things are pure to them that are pure.

The Pope ſayth, he that eateth egges, butter, or fleſhe in theſe dayes that I haue commaũded to be faſted, doth not onely ſtayne his ſoule wyth ſinne, but alſo is to be denounced an hereticke. Diſt.4.ca.Statuimus. This agréeth with Chriſt euen as the lyght doth with the darcknes. And yet haue we bene thus blynded long, that we could neuer perceaue this Antichriſt till now in the laſt dayes.

Math.16. Math.18. Iohn.15. 58. Chriſt ſayd vnto his Diſciples, that you bynde in earth ſhalbe boũde in heauen, and that you loſe in earth ſhalbe loſed in heauen.

The Pope chalengeth greater authoritie for he will loſe ſoules out of Purgatory, and commaunde the angels to fetch them out and all for money, without money you get nothing.

Luke.17. 59. Chriſt ſayth whẽ you haue done all thynges that I haue commaunded you, yet ſay that you are vnprofitable ſeruauntes.

The Pope ſayth do thoſe thynges that I commaũd thée, and take a ſure conſcience vnto thée that thou art a iuſt and a religious mã, and that thou haſt deſerued heauẽ. And as for I my ſelfe, If I do wrong in euery thyng, I bring many thouſandes with me into damnation, yet ſhall no man rebuke me, but cal me the moſt holieſt father. Diſt.40.ca.Si Papa. Oh abhomination.

60. Chriſt teacheth vs to fulfill the woorkes of mercy to the poore, euer commendyng mercy aboue offerings and ſacrifice. Math.26. Oſea.6. Math.9.

The Pope teacheth vs to geue our money for pardons, maſſes, diriges, to images and Churches, ſo that we may offer vnto their bellyes. And he that ſayth it is better to geue our charitie to the poore (as Chriſt ſayth) is counted halfe an hereticke, becauſe he goeth aboute to marre the Popes market.

Roma.4. Iohn.11. 61. Chriſte ſuffered death for our ſinnes and aroſe for our iuſtification, or els we all ſhould haue periſhed.

The Pope ſayth if thou bye my pardõ, or els be buried in a grap Friers coate thou muſt nédes be ſaued, ſo that Chriſt hath ſuffered in vayne, ſith a Friers coate will ſaue a man.

1.Iohn.2. Iames.5. 62. Chriſt onely is our mediatour which maketh vnite betwirt hys father & vs, howbeit the prayer of a iuſt man is very good and profitable.

The Pope ſayth. The greateſt power and ſaluation nert to Chriſt is myne. Diſt.60.cap.Si Papa. I marueil then why he is ſo curious to cauſe vs to worſhip the Saintes ẏ are a ſléepe. And not rather hym ſelfe, ſith he chalengeth a greater power then euer they dyd while they lyued.

Math.5. 63. Chriſt ſayth, who ſoeuer breake one of my leſt cõmaundementes, ſhal be called the leſt (that is to ſay none) in the kyngdome of heauen.

The Pope ſayth, what pertaineth his law vnto me. I am ſubiect to no lawes. 25.q.1.cap. Omnia. therefore doth the Pope but ſeldome right. And is alwayes agaynſt right yea and agaynſt his owne lawes, as often as men do bryng hym money, for that loueth he aboue all thynges.

Roma.13. 64. Chriſtes law is fulfilled through charitie.

The Popes law is fulfilled by money, if thou haue no money to geue them, thou ſhalt carye a fagot, though thou offende not, money them & they ſée thée not, do what thou wilt.

Ephe. 1. Colloſ. 1. 1. Cor. 10. 65. Chriſt is the head of the Church as the Apoſtle doth teſtifie. And alſo the ſtone whereon the Church is buil ded. And this Church is the cõgrega tion of the faythfull and the very bo dy of Chriſt.

The Pope ſayth, I am the head of the Church. Diſt. 19. cap. Enim vero. And the ſeate of Rome is the ſtone wheron the Church is builded. Diſt. 19. Ita Dominus. Can any thyng be more contrary vnto the honour and glory of God, then thus to diſpoyle hym of his kyngdome, whiche he ſo dearely hath bought ſhedyng his pre cious bloud for it?

2. Pet. 2. 2. Timo. 3. 66. Chriſtes law whiche is the holy Scripture came by the inſpiryng of the holy ghoſt whiche dyd infuſe it a boundauntly into the hartes of the A poſtles, and of the ſame ſpirite hath it his enduraunce and interpretation.

The Pope ſayth. I am Lord of the Scripture to alow and diſalow it, for of me doth it take his full authoritie. ca. Si omnes. And for a token of this, is the Scripture of Chriſt, layd vn der his féete when he is at Maſſe.

Tit. 1. 67. Chriſtes Apoſtle ſayth, that a Biſhop ought to be ſo well learned, that he with the Scripture, be able to ouercome all them that be agaynſt the fayth.

The Pope and Biſhops will diſ pute in Scripture with no man, but call them firſt in priſon, and proper engynes they haue inuẽted to wring their fingers ſo ſore, that the bloude ſhall braſte out at their fingers endes, they pyne them, and ſcourge thẽ with infinite other tormẽtes paynyng thẽ, to forſake the truth. And after make them ſweare on a booke that they ſhal tell no man of it, thus cruelly do they entreate them againſt iuſtice. And if they can not ſubdue them to theyr willes, then do they committe them vnto ỹ ſeculare power to be burned.

Iohn. 19. 68. Chriſtes accuſation, and cauſe why he was condemned vnto death, was writtẽ ouer his head in Hebrew, Gréeke, & Latine, that all men might know the cauſe, this was an argu ment that they vſed iuſtice (although they condemned him vniuſtly) ſithe men might ſée the offence and iudge ment ioyned together.

The Pope and Biſhoppes con demne men, and committe them vn to the ſeculare power, that they ſhold execute the ſentence. But this is a miſcheuous abomination, that they will not ſuffer the ſeculare power, to know the cauſe why they put men to death, worſhipfull, diſ diuines, Ma ſter Doctor. O you gentle nobilitie, ponder this matter indifferently. Be ware how you do execution, except you know the cauſe why. Thinke you the bloude ſhall not be requyred on you, if for an others pleaſure you deſtroy the worke of God. They will ſay vnto you, as the Iewes ſayde vn to Pilate concerning Chriſt: If he were not an euill doer we would not haue deliuered him vnto you. Truſt not their wordes, for (no doubt) they are lyers, know the cauſe your ſel ues, and heare the matter vnfayned ly. Thinke you they woulde not let you know the cauſe and iudgement, if they did iuſtice and not tyrannye? Be therefore no longer boyes to thẽ, which ought to be your ſeruauntes, God hath geuẽ you his ſpirite, grace and vnderſtanding, hide not the ta lent that God hath geuen you, but do your diligence to ſée iuſtice executed, ſecluding all tyranny, for that is your office appoynted you of God.

69. Chriſt ſayth, bleſſed are ye when men hate you, curſe you, and excom municate you for the righteouſnes, that is to ſay, you nothing giltye nor worthy ſuch affliction. Luke. 6.

The Pope and Biſhoppes ſaye that their curſe is ſore to be feared, yea and that it maketh men as blacke as a coale in the ſight of God, though they haue not offended. In ſo much that they muſt nédes be damned ex cept they abſoile them agayne: how beit Chriſt ſayth, that they are bleſ ſed: wherfore Chriſt is falſe, or els they are moſt vayne lyers.

70. Chriſt ſayde, when thou makeſt a dinner or feaſt, call not thy frendes, kinſmen, and neighbours that are Luke. 14 riche, riche, but the poꝛe, lame and blinde, which are not able to recompẽce thée, then ſhalt thou be happye, foꝛ it ſhall be rewarded thée in the reſurrection of the iuſt.

The Pope and Byſhoppes wyll call none ſuch, foꝛ they thinke it great ſhame, but they call men of great authoꝛitie and riches, which wil receiue them wyth an other feaſt, they had leuer haue their bellies well ſtuffed in this woꝛld, then to tary foꝛ the pꝛomiſe of Chꝛiſt. They thinke it long a comming.

Math. 5. Luke, 6. 71. Chꝛiſt ſayth, eyther make ẏ trée good and his fruite good alſo, oꝛ els make the trée naught and his fruite naught alſo: meaning, that the trée firſt ſhoulde be good, and then bꝛinge foꝛth good fruite, the fruite maketh not the trée good, but the trée maketh the fruite good, although we can not know that the trée is good, but by hys fruite (foꝛ we can iudge nothing but by his outward operation) yet God ſéeth the quicknes in the rote, which in the tyme that God hath appointed him, ſhall bꝛing foꝛth his fruite. And appꝛoueth ẏ trée to be good, although he ſéeme dead vnto vs. The trée is fayth, which is the mother of all good woꝛkes, which euer woꝛketh by charitie when he ſéeth occaſion.

The Pope and Byſhops ſay, that the fruite maketh the trée good, cleane contrary to all Scripture and reaſon. And thus turne they the trées and the rotes vpwarde, while they affirme that fayth ſpꝛingeth and is made good of woꝛkes. And not the contrary, euẽ as a man would ſay, the fruite bꝛingeth foꝛth and maketh good the trée. And not the contrary. O what madnes is is? They woulde make men beleue if they ſhoulde longe continue, that ẏ Mone is made of grene cheſe.

72. Chꝛiſt ſayth, I am the dooꝛe of the folde, he that entreth not in by the dooꝛe, but by ſome other waye, is a théefe & a murtherer, and regardeth not the ſhéepe.

The Pope, yea and all the cleargie (foꝛ the moſt part) enter not in by Chꝛiſt, but they runne in and are not called noꝛſent of Chꝛiſt, One entreth by a bagge of money, wherewyth he buyeth a fatte benefice. An other entreth by ſeruing great men, and coꝛrying fauour. An other, becauſe he is a great man boꝛne, muſt be made a Cardinall, oꝛ els a Byſhop. Some haue boyſons of Abbayes and other places, to ſpeake a good woꝛde foꝛ them to the kyng oꝛ other great men. Some enter thoꝛowe their curious ſinging, and minyon daunſing, ſelwe oꝛ none foꝛ vertue & learninge.

73. Chꝛiſt ſayth, I am a good ſhepheard, A good ſhephead geueth hys lyfe foꝛ hys ſhéepe.

The Pope and Byſhoppes ſay alſo, that they are good ſhepheards, how be it, they pille and ſhere the ſhéepe ſo nigh, that they leaue not one locke of wolle on their backes. And in all pointes may be likened vnto the ſhepheardes that Zacharias pꝛopheſied of: which ſayth, I ſhall rayſe vp a ſhepheard in the earth, which ſhal not viſite the thinges that are foꝛſaken, and ſhall not ſéeke that which is gone aſtray, neither yet heale the diſeaſed, noꝛ nouriſhe and mayntayne that which ſtandeth, but ſuch a ſhepheard that ſhall noꝛiſhe himſelfe and not the ſhéepe, and cryeth out of hym, ſaying. O thou ſhepheard and idoll, thynke you that this ſhepheard wyll geue his lyfe foꝛ the ſhéepe?

74. Chꝛiſt ſayth, deſire you not to be called maſter, foꝛ you haue but one maſter, which is Chꝛiſt, and all you are bꝛothers. Math. 23.

The Pope will be called moſt holy, hys Cardinalles, moſt reuerend, hys Byſhoppes reuerend, hys Abbottes and Pꝛioꝛs moſt, and other gloꝛious titles haue they, that paſſe maſter, farre. And except thou call them by thoſe names and titles, thou ſhalt runne farre into their indignation, let Chꝛiſt ſay what he wyll.

75. Chꝛiſt commaunded his Diſciples that they ſhould call no man father on the earth, ſhewing them that they had but one father, which is in heauen. Math. 23.

The Pope muſt be called moſt holy father, if thou geue him not that name he will excommunicate you out of his synagoge, reason not with him, you may shew him the scripture, but it auayleth not, for he will wrest it & wring it into a thousand fashions. And will neuer leaue it vntill he haue brought it vnto his owne purpose.

Acte.7. 76. Christes faithfull seruaunt Stephen, sayd, that God almighty dwelleth not in temples ỹ are made with mans hands, according vnto the prophetes saying. Heauen is my seate, Esay.66. 3.King.7. and the earth is my fotestole. What house will you builde for me, sayth the Lorde? which is the place of my reste? Did not my handes make all these thinges?

The Pope and his adherētes say, that he dwelleth in this place and that place, the Friers say we haue hym, you must bye hym of vs, the Monkes say, he is with vs, be good to our monastery, and you shall be sure to haue hym. And so runne the sely soules frō Herode to Pilate. But they finde not Christ, for he dwelleth in no place but in the hart of a faithful mā, which 1.Cor.3. is the very temple of God.

77. Christes Apostle Paule sayth, Actes.17. We ought not to thinke that God is like gold, siluer, karued stones, or any such thyng as man imagineth.

The Pope and his adherentes say that he is lyke a stocke and a stone, & causeth men to make images of hym, though God commaunded contrary Exod.20. saying. Thou shalt make no grauen image, neither any maner of similitude of those thynges whiche are in heauē aboue or on the earth beneath. Neither of those thynges whiche are in the water, or vnder the earth, neither shalt thou honour or worshyppe them. God Christen beware of these Iohn.5. Idolles as Saint John councelleth thee, truely I thinke it be one of the greatest causes of this execration which God hath sent into the world for sinne.

78. Christ sayd vnto Peter, thou art Symon the sonne of Iona, thou shalt Iohn.1. be called Cephas which if it be enterpreted signifieth a stone as S. John sayth in his Gospell.

The Pope sayth that Cephas sig- Dist.xxij. nifieth the head, and of that gathereth ca.sacro- he to be head of all the Bysshops, here sancta. doth he playnly contrary to Gospell whiche exponndeth Cephas to bee a stone, what impudencie is this? I thinke he would say also that an Asse were a man if he thought to get any auauntage through it.

There are infinite other thynges wherein hee contrarieth Christ in so much that if it be diligētly examined, I thinke there is no word that Christ spake, but the other hath taught or made a law agaynst it. Howbeit for to auoyde tediousnes, we shall leaue them vnto your owne iudgement, for they are sone searched out & espyed. Judge Christē reader all these things with a simple eye, be not partially addict to the one nor to the other. But Judge them by the Scripture. And knowledge that to be the truth which Gods word doth alow, auoydyng all other doctrine for it springeth of Sathan, be not ashamed to confesse pore Christ (and to take him for thy head) before these rauenous Wolues, for then shall he cōfesse thée agayn before Math.10. his father & the aungelles in heauen. Then shalt thou bee inheritour with Jesu Christe, And the faythfull sonne of thy father whiche is in heauen, to whom be all glory eternally. Amen.

¶Here endeth the Antithesis betwene Christe and the Pope.

A booke made by Iohn Frith prisoner in the Tower of London, aunsweryng vnto M. Mores letter which he wrote against the first litle treatise that Iohn Frith made concernyng the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ, vnto which booke are added in the ende the articles of hys examination before the Bishops of London, Winchester and Lyncolne, in Paules Churche at London, for which Iohn Frith was condemned and after burned in Smithfield without Newgate the fourth day of Iuly. Anno. 1533.

¶ The Preface of this booke.

GRace and increase of knowledge from God the father through our Lorde Iesus Christ, be with the Christen reader, and with all them that loue the Lord vnfaynedly. Amen.

I chaunced beyng in these parties, to be in company with a Christen brother which for his commēdable conuersation, and sober behauiour, might better be a Byshop then many that weare miters if the rule of S. Paule were regarded in their election. This brother after much communication, desired to know my mynde as touchyng the Sacrament of the body and bloud of our sauiour Christ. Which thing I opened vnto hym accordyng to the gift that God had geuen me. First I proued vnto hym that it was no article of our fayth necessary to be beleued vnder payne of damnation. Then I declared, that Christ had a naturall body, euen as myne is (sauyng sinne) and that it could no more bee in two places at once thē myne cā. Thirdly I shewed him that it was not necessarie, that the wordes should so be vnderstand as they sound. But that it might be a phrase of Scripture, as there are innumerable. After that I shewed him certaine phrases and maner of speakynges. And that it was well vsed in our English toung and finally I recited after what maner they might receiue it according to Christes institutiō, not fearyng the froward alteration that the Priests vse contrary to the first forme and institution.

1. Timo. 3. Tit. 1.

The order that Iohn Frith keepeth in shewyng his mynde in the Sacrament of the body & blond of Christ.

When I had sufficiently published my mynde, hee desired me to entitle the sūme of my wordes, and write them for hym, because they seemed ouerlong to be well reteined in memorie. And albeit I was loth to take the matter in hand, yet to fulfill his instant intercession, I tooke vpon me to touche this terrible tragedie, and wrote a treatise, whiche beside my paynfull imprisonmēt, is like to purchase me most cruell death, which I am ready and glad to receiue with the spirite and inward man (although the flesh be frayle) when soeuer it shall please God to lay it vpon me. Notwithstādyng to say the truth I wrote it not to the intēt that it should haue ben published. For then I would haue touched the matter more earnestly, and haue written, as well of the spirituall eating & drinking which is of necessitie, as I dyd of the carnall which is not so necessarie. For the treatise that I made was not expedient for all men, albeit it were sufficient for them whom I tooke in hand to instruct. For they knew the spirituall and necessarie eatyng and drinkyng of his body & bloud which is not receiued with the teth and bellye, but with the eares and faith, and onely neded instructiō in the outward eating, whiche thing I therfore onely declared. But now it is cōmon abroad and in many mēs mouthes, in so much that M. More whiche of late hath busied hym selfe to medle in all such matters (of what zeale I will not define) hath hath sore labored to confute it, but some mē thinke that he is aſhamed of his part and for that cauſe doth ſo diligently ſuppreſſe the woorke whiche he printed. For I my ſelfe ſaw the worke in Print in my Lord of Wincheſters houſe, vpon S. Stephens day laſt paſt. But neither I neither all the frēdes I could make, might attaine any copie, but onely one written copie whiche as it ſeemed was drawen out in great haſt: notwithſtandyng I can not well iudge what the cauſe ſhould bee, that his boke is kept ſo ſecret: But this I am right ſure of, that he neuer touched the foundation that my treatiſe was builded vpon. And therefore ſith my foundation ſtandeth ſo ſure and inuincible (for els I thinke verely he would ſore haue laboured to haue vndermined it) I will thereupon builde a litle more, and alſo declare that his ordinaūce is to ſlender to breake it downe, although it were ſet vppon a woorſe foundation.

The occasiō that moued Iohn Frith to write on the Sacrament.

The spirituall eatyng of the Sacrament is by fayth.

¶ The foundation of that litle treatiſe was, that it is no article of our fayth neceſſary to be beleued vnder payne of damnation, that the Sacrament ſhould be the naturall body of Chriſt: which thyng is proued, on this maner.

The Sacrament to be the naturall body of Chriſt is no article of our fayth, neceſſary to be beleued vpon payne of damnation.

FIrſte we muſt all acknowledge that it is no article of our fayth which can ſaue vs, nor which we are bound to beleue vnder the paine of eternal damnation. For if I ſhould beleue that hys very naturall body both fleſh and bloud were naturally in the bread and wine, that ſhould not ſaue me, ſeyng many beleue that, and receiue it to their damnation, for it is not his preſence in the bread that can ſaue me, but his preſence in my hart through faith in his bloud, which hath waſhed out my ſinnes and pacified ẏ fathers wrath toward me. And agayne if I doe not beleue his bodely preſence in the bread and wyne, that ſhall not damne me, but the abſence out of my hart thorough vnbeleſe. Now if they would here obiect that though it be truth that the abſēce out of the bread could not damne vs: yet are we bounde to beleue it, becauſe of gods word which (who beleueth not, as much as in him lyeth) maketh God a lyer. And therfore of an obſtinate mynde not to beleue hys word, may be an occaſion of damnation. Obiection.

To this we may anſwere, that we beleue Gods worde, and knowledge that it is true: but in this we diſſent, whether it be true in the ſence that we take it in, or in the ſence that ye take it in. And we ſay agayne, that though ye haue (as it appeareth vnto you) the euident wordes of Chriſt, and therefore conſiſte in the barke of the letter: yet are we compelled by conferring of the ſcriptures together within the letter, to ſearche out the mynde of our Sauiour which ſpake the wordes. And we ſay thirdly, that we do it not of an obſtinate mynde: For he that defendeth a cauſe obſtinately (whether it be true or falſe) is euer to be reprehended. But we do it to ſatiſfie our cōſciēces, which are cōpelled by other places of Scripture, reaſons, and Doctours ſo to iudge of it. And euen ſo ought you to iudge of your partie, and to defende your ſentence, not of obſtinacie, but by ẏ reaſon of Scriptures, which cauſe you ſo to take it. And ſo ought nether partie to diſpiſe other, for eche ſeeketh the glory of God, and the true vnderſtāding of the Scripture. Solution. Obſtinate defendyng of any cauſe is worthy of reprehen tion. The foundation of Iohn Fruthes firſt treatiſe vppon the Sacrament.

This was the foundation of my firſt treatiſe that he hath left vnſhakē, which is a great argumēt ẏ it is very true: For els hys pregnant wit could not haue paſſed it ſo cleane ouer, but would haue aſſayled it with ſome ſophiſticall cauillation, which by hys painted poetrie he might ſo haue couered, that at the leſt he might make ẏ ignorant ſome appearance of truth, as he hath done agaynſt the reſidue of my firſt treatiſe, which neuertheleſſe is true, and ſhall ſo be proued.

And firſt, that it is none article of our fayth neceſſary to be beleued vnder

der payne of damnation, may thus bee further confirmed. The same fayth shall saue vs whiche saued the olde fathers before Christes incarnation, But they were not bounde vnder payne of damnation to beleeue this pointe: therefore it shall followe that we are not bounde therto vnder the payne of damnation. The firste part of myne argument is proued by S. Augustine ad Durdamũ. And I dare boldly say almost in an C. places. For I thinke there be no propositiõ which he doth more oftẽ inculcate thẽ this, ý the same fayth saued vs which saued our fathers. The second part is manifest, that it nedeth no probation. For how coulde they beleue ý thyng which was neuer saide nor done, and without the worde they could haue no fayth, vppon the truth of these two parties must the conclusion nedes follow. Notwithstanding, they all dyd eate Christes bodye and dranke hys bloud spiritually, although they had hym not present to their teeth. And by ý spirituall eating (which is the fayth in his body and bloud) were saued as well as we are. For as sone as our forefather Adam had transgressed Gods precept, and was fallen vnder condemnation, our moste mercyfull father of hys gracious fauour gaue hym the promise of health and comfort, whereby as many as beleued it, were saued from the thrauldome of their transgression: the worde & promise was this: I shal put enmitie betwene thée and the woman, betwene thy séede and her séede, that séede shall treade thée on the head, and thou shalt treade it on the hele. In thys promise they had knowledge that Christe should become the séede or sonne of a woman, and that he shoulde destroye the deuill with all his power, and deliuer his faythfull from their sinnes. And where he sayde that the deuyll should treade it on the hele, they vnderstode right well that the deuyll should finde the meanes by his wyles and wicked ministers to put Christ to death. And they knew that God was true, and would fulfill hys promise vnto them, and hartely longed after this séede, and so dyd both eate his body and drinke his bloud, knowledging wyth infinite thankes, that Christ should for their sinnes take ý perfect nature of mãhode vppon him, and also suffer the death. This promise was geuen to Adam, and saued as many as did beleue and were thãkfull to God for hys kyndnes, and after it was established vnto our father Abraham by the word of God, which sayde, In thy séede shall all nacions of the earth be blessed. And with hym God made a couenant that he would be his God, and do him good. And Abraham agayne promised to kéepe his preceptes and walke in his wayes. Then God gaue him the sacrament of circumcision, and called that his couenaunt, which thing notwithstanding was not the very couenaunt in déede, although it were so called. But was onely a signe, token, sacrament, or memoryall of the couenaunt that was betwene God and hym, which might expounde our matter, if men had eyes to sée. After that, God promised him a sonne whẽ his wife was past childe bearing, and he also very olde. Neuertheles, he doubted not of Gods worde. But surely beleued that he which promised it, was able to performe it. And that was recounted vnto hym for righteousnes. This Abraham did both eate his body and drinke hys bloud (through fayth) beleuing verely that Christ should take our nature, & spring out of his séede (as touching his flesh) and also that he shoulde suffer death to redéeme vs. And as Christe testifieth, he hartely desired to sée the day of Christ. And he sawe it and reioyced, he sawe it in fayth and had the day of Christ, that is to say all those thinges that shoulde chaunce hym, playnely reuelated vnto him, albeit he were dead many hũdred yeares before it were actually fulfilled and reuelated vnto ý world. And by that fayth was he saued, and yet neuer did eate his flesh with his teeth, nor neuer beleued that bread shoulde be his bodye and wyne hys bloud. And therfore sith he was also saued without that fayth, and ý same fayth shall saue vs which saued hym, I thinke that we shall also be saued if we eate him spiritually (as he dyd) although wee neuer beleue that the bread is his body. Furthermore, that mercifull Moses whiche brought the children of Israell out of Egypt into the wildernes, obtayned of God by prayers, both Manna from heauē to fede his people, and also water out of the stone to refreshe and comfort thē. This Manna and water, were euen the same thyng vnto them, that the bread and wyne is to vs. For Saint Austen sayeth: Quicunq; in manna Christum intellexerunt, eundem quem nos cibum spiritualem manducauerunt.

Manna was to the Israelites the same that the Sacramēt is to vs now.

Quicunque autem de māna solam saturitatemquè sincerunt manducabant & mortui sunt. Sic etiam eundē potū: petra enim erat christus. That is to say, as many as in that manna vnderstode Christ, did eate that same spirituall meate that we doe, but as many as sought onely to fil their bellies of that manna (the fathers of the vnfaythfull) did eate and are dead. And likewise ỳ same drinke, for the stone was Christ.

August. de vtilitate pœnitentiæ.

Here may you gather of S. Austen that the Manna was vnto them, as ỳ bread is to vs, and likewise, that the water was to them, as the wyne is to vs, whiche anone shall appeare more playnly. S. Austen sayth further, manducauit & Moses manna, māducauit & Aaron, manducauit & Phinees, manducauerunt ibi multi qui Deo placuerūt & mortui non sunt. Quare? quia visibilem cibum spiritualiter intellexerunt, spiritualiter esurierunt, spiritualiter gustauerunt, vt spiritualiter satiarentur. Omnes eandem escam spiritualem manducauerunt, & omnes eūdem potum spiritualem biberunt, spiritualem vtiq; eandem: nam corporalem alteram (quia illi manna, nos aliud) spiritualem vero eandem quam nos. Vt omnes eundem potum spiritualem biberunt aliud illi, aliud nos: sed specie visibili quod tamen hoc idem significaret virtute spirituali. Quomodo eundem potum bibebant (inquit Apostolus) de spirituali sequenti petra: petra autem erat Christus. That is to say, Moses also dyd eate Manna and Aaron and Phinees dyd eate of it, and many other dyd there eate of it, whiche pleased God and are not dead. Wherefore? Because they vnderstode the visible meate spiritually. They were spiritually an hungred, they tasted it spiritually, that they might spiritually be replenished. They dyd all eate ỳ same spirituall meate, and all dranke the spirituall drinke. Euen the same spirituall meate albeit an other bodely meate, for they dyd eate Manna, and we eate an other thyng, but they dyd eate the same spirituall, which we do. And they all dyd drinke the same spirituall drinke. They dranke one thyng and we an other: but that was in the outward apparence, which neuertheless dyd signifie the same thyng spiritually. How dranke they the same drinke? They (sayth the Apostle) dranke of ỳ spirituall stone folowyng them, and that stone was Christ. And thereunto Beda added these wordes.

Aug. super Ioan. tract. 26.

A goodly saying of S. Augustine.

Videte autem fide manente signa variata. That is to say. Beholde that the signes are altered, and yet the fayth abydeth one.

Beda super. 1. Cor. 10.

Of these places you may playnly perceiue not onely that it is no article necessary to be beleued vnder payne of damnation, seyng the old fathers neuer beleued it. And yet dyd eate Christ in fayth both before they had the Manna, & more expressly through the Manna with no lesse frute when the Manna was ceassed. And albeit the Manna was to them as the Sacrament is to vs, and they eate euen the same spirituall meate that we do, yet were they neuer so mad as to beleue that the Manna was chaunged into Christes owne naturall body. But vnderstode it spiritually that as the outward man dyd eate the materiall Manna which comforted the body, so dyd the inward man thorough fayth, eate the body of Christ beleuyng that as that Manna came down from heauen and comforted their bodyes, so should their Sauiour Christ which was promised them of God ỳ father, come downe from heauen & strength their soules in euerlastyng life, redeming them from their sinne

by

by his death and resurrection. And likewise do we eate Christ in fayth, both before we come to the Sacrament, and more expressely through ẏ Sacrament, and with no lesse fruite after we haue receaued the sacramẽt, and nẽde no more to make it his naturall body then the manna was, but might much better vnderstand it spiritually: that as the outwarde man doth eate the materiall breade which comforteth the bodie, so doth the inwarde man through fayth eate ẏ bodye of Christe, beleuyng that as the the bread is broken, so was Christes bodye broken on the crosse for our sinnes, whiche comforteth our soules vnto life euerlasting. And as ẏ fayth did saue them without beleuyng that the manna was altered into his bodie, euen so doth thys fayth saue vs although we beleue not that the substaunce of bread is turned into hys naturall bodye. For the same fayth shall saue vs which saued them. And we are bound to beleue no more vnder payne of damnation, then they were bound to beleue. They beleued in God the father almighty, maker of heauen and earth, and all that is in them. They did beleue that Christe was the sonne of God. They did beleue that he shoulde take our nature of a virgin. They beleued that he should suffer the death for our deliuerance, which thyng was signified in all the sacrifices, and besides that testified in euery Prophet, for there was verely not one Prophet but he spake of that poynt. They beleued ẏ his soule should not be left in hell, but that he should arise frõ death and reigne euerlastyng with hys father. And to be short, there is no poynt in our Crẽde, but ẏ they beleued it, as wel as we do, & those articles are onely necessary vnto saluatiõ, For them am I bound to beleue, & am damned without excuse, if I beleue them not.

There is no cause why we should accompt the Sacramẽt to be Christes naturall body, for that were to grosse an imaginatiõ.

We are not bounde to beleue vpõ payne of dãnatiõ more then our fathers beleeued.

But the other pointes contayned in scripture, although they be vndoubted verities, yet may I be ignorant without them. As be it in case ẏ I neuer heard of them, or when I heare of them, I can not vnderstand them, nor comprehẽd them, or that I feare them and vnderstãd them, and yet by the reason of an other texte misconstrue them, as the Bohemes do the wordes of Christ in the 6. chapter of John. All these I say may bee done without any ieoperdie of damnatiõ. In euery text is but onely one veritie for which it was spoken and yet some textes there be whiche of Catholicke Doctours are expounded in .ij. or .iij. sondry fashions. Therfore we beleue these articles of our Crede: in the other is no perill, so that we haue a probable reason to dissent from them. But now to returne to our purpose, if we will examine the authorities of S. Austen & Beda before alledged, we shall espy that beside the probation of this foresayd proposition, they opẽ the mistery of all our matter to them that haue eyen to sée. For S. Austen sayth that we and the old fathers do differ as touchyng ẏ bodely meate for they dyd eate Manna, and we bread, but albeit it varyed in ẏ outward appearaunce, yet neuertheless spiritually it dyd signifie one thyng. For both the Manna and bread do signifie Christ. And so both they and we do eate one spiritual meate, that is to say we both eate the thing which signifieth and representeth vnto vs the very one spirituall meate of our soules whiche is Christ. And Beda doth playnly call both the Mãna and the bread signes, saying behold that the signes are altered and yet ẏ fayth abideth one. Now if they be signes, then they do signifie, & are not the very thing it selfe which they do signifie, for ẏ signe of a thyng differeth frõ the thyng it selfe which it doth signifie and represent. As the alepole is not the ale it selfe which it doth signifie or represent. Here thou wilt obiecte agaynst me that if this faith be sufficient what nẽdeth the institutiõ of a Sacrament? I aunswere that Sacramentes are instituted for thrée causes: The first is assigned of S. Austen which sayth on this maner.

We must beleue the articles of our fayth vpon payne of damnation, but in the other, there is no perill.

In nullum autem nomen religionis, seu verum, seu falsum, coagulari homines possunt, nisi signaculorum seu Sacramentorum visibilium consortio colligantur, Aug. contra Faustum Lib. 19. cap. 11.

quorum Sacramentorum vis inenarrabiliter valet plurimum. Et ideo contempta sacrilegos facit. Impie quippe contemnitur sine qua perfici nō potest pietas. That is to say: Men can not be ioyned into any kynde of religion, whether it be true or false except they be knit in felowshyp by some visible tokens or Sacramentes, the power of which Sacramentes is of such efficacie, that can not be expressed. And therfore it maketh them that despise it to be abhorred, for it is wickednes to despise that thyng without whiche godlynes can not be brought to passe. Thus it appeareth that necessitie is ỳ first cause. For there can no congregation be severed out of the multitude of men but they must nedes haue a signe, tokē, Sacrament, or common badge, by the which they may knowe eche other. And there is no difference betwene a signe or a badge and a Sacrament, but that the Sacrament signifieth an holy thyng, and a signe or a badge doth signifie a worldly thing as S. Austen sayth, signes when they are referred to holye thynges are called Sacramentes.

There be thre causes why ỳ Sacramentes were instituted.

The first is necessity.

August. ad Marcellinū.

The second cause of the institution of Sacramentes.

The second cause of their institution is, that they may be a meane to bryng vs vnto sayth and to imprint it the deper in vs, for it doth customably the more mone a man to beleue, when he perceiueth the thyng expressed to diuerse senses at once, as by example, if I promise a mā to mete him at a day appoynted, he will somewhat trust my word: Notwithstandyng, he trusteth not so much vnto it, as if I dyd both promise hym with my word and also clap hādes with him or hold vp my finger for he cōsideth that this promise is strong and more saythfull then is the bare word, because it moueth moe senses. For the word doth but onely certifie the thing vnto a mā by the sense of hearyng, but whē with my promise immediatly after I hold vp my finger, then do I not onely certifie him by the sense of hearing: But also by his sight, hee perceiueth that that fact confirmeth my word. And in the clappyng of handes hee perceiueth both by his sight and feelyng (beside the worde) that I will fulfill my promise. And lykewise it is in this Sacrament, Christ promised them, that he would geue his body to be slayne for their sinnes. And for to establish the sayth of his promise in them, he dyd institute the Sacrament which he called his body, to the entent that ỳ very name it selfe might put them in remēbraūce what was ment by it, he brake the bread before them signifying vnto them outwardly, euen the same thyng, that he by his wordes had before protested and euē as his wordes had informed them by their hearyng, that he entended so to do, so the breaking of that bread informed their eye sight that he would fulfil his promise. Then he dyd distribute it amōg them to imprint the matter more depely in them, signifying therby that euen as that bread was deuided among them, so should his body & frute of his passion be distributed vnto as many as beleued his wordes. Finally he caused thē to eate it, that nothyng should be lackyng to confirme that necessary point of faith in thē, signifiyng therby that as verely as they felt that breade within them, so sure should they be of hys body thorough fayth. And that euen as that bread doth nourishe the body, so doth fayth in hys body breaking, nourish the soule vnto euerlasting life. This did our mercifull Sauior (which knoweth our frailtie and weakenes) to establish & strēgth their fayth in his body breaking and bloud shedyng, which is our shoteanker and last refuge without which we should all perishe.

How diligently Christ set forth ỳ Sacrament of hys body & bloud that we might by that outward signe assure our fayth, that his very true body was crucified for our sinnes.

The third cause of the institution and profit that commeth of it, is this. They that haue receiued these blessed tydinges and worde of health, do loue to publishe this felicitie vnto other men. And to geue thanks before the face of the cōgregation vnto their bounteous benefactour, and as much as in them is, to draw all people to the prayse of God with thē, which thyng, though it be partly done by the preachyng of Gods worde and frutfull exhortations, yet doth that visible token and Sacrament (if a man vn-derstand what is ment thereby) more effectuously worke in them both fayth and thankesgeuing, thē doth the bare worde: but if a man wot not what it meaneth, and sēketh health in the sacrament and outwarde signe, thē may he wel be likened vnto a fond fellow, which when he is very dry, and an honest man shew him an alepole and tell him that there is good ale inough, would goe and sucke the alepole, trusting to get drinke out of it, and so to quench his thyrste. Now a wise man will tell him that he playeth the fole, for the alepole doth but signifie that there is good ale in the house where ẏ alepole standeth, and wil tell him that he must go neare the house, and there he shall finde the drinke, and not stand sucking the alepole in vayne, for it shall not ease him, but rather make him more drie, for the alepole doth signifie good ale: yet the alepole it self is no good ale, neyther is there any good ale in the alepole. And likewise it is in all sacramentes. For if we vnderstand not what they meane, and sēke health in the outwarde signe: then we sucke the alepole and labour in vayne. But if we do vnderstand ẏ meaning of them, then shall we sēke what they signifie, and goe to the significations, and there shall we finde vndoubted health. As to our purpose in this sacrament wherof we speake, we must note what it signifieth, and there shall we finde our redemption. It signifieth that Christes body was broken vpon the crosse to redeme vs from the thraldome of the deuill, and that his blonde was shedde for vs, to washe away our sinnes. Therefore we must runne thether if we will be eased. For if we thinke to haue our sinnes forgeuen for eating of the Sacrament, or for sēing the Sacrament once a day, or for prayng vnto it: thē surely we sucke the alepole. And by thys you may perceiue what profite commeth of those sacramentes, which eyther haue no significations put vnto them, or els when their significations are lost and forgotten. For then no doubt they are not commended of God, but are rather abhominable, for when we knowe not what they meane, then sēke we health in the outwarde dēde, and so are iniurious vnto Christ and his blond. As by example, the Sacrifices of the Iewes, were well allowed & accepted of God as long as they vsed them aright, and vnderstode by thē ẏ death of Christ, the sheding of his blond, and that holy oblation offered on the crosse once for euer. But when they begun to forget this signification, and sought their health and righteousnes in the bodely worke, and in the sacrifice it selfe: then were they abhominable in the sight of God, and then he cryed out of them both by the Prophet Dauid and Esay: And likewise it is with our Sacramentes, let vs therefore sēke vp the significations, and go to the very thing which the sacrament is set to present vnto vs. And there shal we finde such fruitfull fode as shall neuer fayle vs, but comfort our soules into life euerlastyng.

The sacrament is profitable to none but to such as vnderstād the doctrine therof.

The sacrifices of the Iewes as long as they were rightly vsed, were well accepted.

Now will I in order answer to M. Mores booke, and as I finde occasion geuen me, I shall indeuoure my selfe to supply that thyng which lacked in the first treatise, and I trust I shall shewe such lyght, that all men whose eyes the Prince of this worlde hath not blynded, shall perceiue the truth of the scriptures and glory of Christ. And where as in my first treatise, the truth was set forth with all simplicitie, and nothing armed against the assault of sophisters: that haue I somewhat redressed in this boke, & haue brought bones fitte for their tēth, which if they be to busie, may chaunce to choke them.

I thought it neceſſary firſt to admoniſhe you of this matter, and now I will recite more of M. Mores boke.

In exhortation to ſtand manfully by the profeſſion of Gods worde.

More. Whereby men may ſee how gredely theſe newe named brethren writeit out, & ſecretly ſpread it abroade.

Frith. The name is of great antiquitie, although you liſte to ieſte. For they were called brethrẽ ere our Biſhops were called Lordes, and had ẏ name geuen them by Chriſt, ſaying, Math.
xxiij. all ye are brethren. And Luke ẏ xxij. Confirme they brethren. And the name was cõtinued by the Apoſtles, and is a name that nouriſheth loue & amitie. And very glad I am to heare of their gredy affection in writing out and ſpreading abroade the worde of

Now begynneth the kyngdome of heauen to ſuffer violence: Now runne the poore Publi-

Actes.24. For S. Paule, teſtifieth that the Phariſeis and Prieſtes which were counted the very Church in hys tyme dyd ſo call it, and therefore it forceth not though they, ruling in their rowmes, vſe the ſame names.

More. Which young mã I here ſay hath lately made diuers other thynges, that yet runne in hoker moker ſo cloſe amõg the brethren that there comcommeth no copies abroad.

Frith. I aunſwere, that ſurely I can not ſpynne, and I thinke no mã more hateth to be idle then I do. Wherfore in ſuch thynges as I ám able to doe, I ſhalbe diligẽt as long as God lendeth me my lyfe. And if ye thinke I be to buſie you may rid me the ſoner, for euen as the ſhéepe is in the butchers handes ready bound and loketh but euen for the grace of the butcher whẽ he ſhall ſhed his bloud: Euen ſo am I bounde at the Byſhops pleaſures, euer lokyng for the day of my death. In ſo much, that playne worde was ſent me, that the Chauncelour of Lõdon ſayd, it ſhould coſt me the beſt bloud in my body, whiche I would gladly were ſhed to morow, if ſo be, it might open the kyngs graces eyen.

Joh. Frith feared not death.

And verely I maruell that any thing can runne in hoker moker or be hyd from you. For ſith you mought haue ſuch ſtore of coppes, concernyng the thyng whiche I moſt deſired to haue ben kept ſecret, how ſhould you then lacke a coppe of thoſe thynges which I moſt would haue publiſhed? And hereof ye may be ſure, I care not though you and all the Byſhops with in England loke on all that euer I wrote, but rather would be glad that ye ſo dyd. For if there be any ſparkle of grace in your breaſtes, I truſt it ſhould bee an occaſion ſomewhat to kyndle it, that you may conſider and know your ſelues, whiche is the firſt poynt of wiſedome.

Frith wiſheth all his workes to be ſeene.

More. And would God for his mercy (ſayth M. More) that ſith there can nothing refrayne their ſtudie, from deuiſing and compaſsyng of euill and vngracious writyng, that they would and could keepe it ſo ſecretly, that neuer man ſhould ſee it, but ſuch as are ſo farre corrupted, as neuer would be cured of their cãker.

Frith. It is not poſſible for hym that hath his eyen and ſéth hys brother whiche lacketh ſight in ieoperdie of periſhing at a perillous pit, but that hee muſt come to hym and guide hym, till he be paſt that ieoperdye, & at the leſt wiſe, if he can not come to him, yet will he call and crye vnto hym to cauſe hym chooſe the better way, except his hart bee cankered with the contagion of ſuch hatered that he can reioyſe in his neighbours deſtruction. And euẽ ſo is it not poſſible for vs whiche haue receiued the knowledge of gods word, but that we muſt cry and cal to other, that they leaue the perillous pathes of their owne fooliſh phantaſies. And doe that onely to the Lord, that he cõ- Deut. 12.

maundeth them, neither addyng any thyng nor diminiſhyng. And therfore vntill we ſée ſome meanes founde, by the whiche a reaſonable reformation may be had on the one partie, and ſufficient inſtruction for the poore commõs I inſure you, I neither will nor can ceaſe to ſpeake, for the worde of God boyleth in my body, like a feruẽt fire, and will nédes haue an iſſue and breaketh out, when occaſion is geuẽ.

Note here the earneſt zeale of Frith.

But this hath bene offered you, is offered, and ſhall be offered: Graunt that the word of God, I meane ẏ tert of Scripture, may go abroad in our Engliſh toung, as other nations haue it in their tounges, and my brother William Tyndall, and I haue done, & will promiſe you to write no more. If you wil not graunt this condition, then will we be doing while we haue breath, and ſhew in few wordes that the Scripture doth in many: and ſo at the leſt ſaue ſome.

An offer made to the Clergie by Io. Frith.

More. But a lacke this will not be, for as S. Paule ſayth, the contagion of hereſie creepeth on, lyke a canker. For as the canker, corrupteth the body further and further and turneth the whole parties into the ſame deadly ſickneſ, ſo doth theſe hereſies creepe forth among good ſimple ſoules, till at the laſt it be almoſt paſt remedy.

Frith. This is a very true ſaying and maketh well agaynſt his owne purpoſe, for in déede this contagion began to ſpring euen in S. Paules tyme. In ſo much that the Galathians were in a maner wholy ſeduced from his doctrine. And he ſayd to the Theſſaloni- 2. Theſ. 2.

ſtifieth that there were all ready many Antichriſtes riſen in hys dayes.

And also Paul prophesied what shold folow after his tyme. Actes. 20. saying: take ye hede to your selues and to all the flocke, ouer whiche the holy ghost hath put you ouersears, to fede the congregation of God whiche he purchased with his owne bloud. For I know this wel, that after my departyng shall enter in greuous Wolues among you, which shall not spare the flocke. And euen of your selues shall arise men, speaking peruerse things, to draw Disciples after thē and therfore watch. &c. This canker then began to spread in the congregatiō, and dyd full sore noy the body, in so much that within .iiij. C. yeare, there were very many sectes scattered in euery cost. Notwithstandyng there were faythfull fathers that diligently subdued them with the sworde of Gods word. But surely since Siluester receiued such possessions, hath the canker so crept in ỹ Church, that it hath almost left neuer a sounde member. And as Cistercensis writeth in the 8. booke, that day that hee receiued reuenues was a voyce heard in ỹ ayre, crying ouer the court whiche sayd, this day is venime shed into ỹ church of God. Before that tyme there was no Byshop gredy to take a cure. For it was no honour and profite as it is now, but onely a carefull charge which was lyke to cost him his lyfe at one tyme or other. And therefore no man would take it, but he that bare such a loue and zeale to God and his flocke, that he could be content to shed his bloud for them. But after that it was made so honorable and profitable, they that were worst both in learnyng and lyuyng, most laboured for it. For they that were vertuous wold not entangle them selues with the vayne pride of this world, and weare thre crownes of gold, where Christ dyd weare one of thorne. And in conclusion it came so farre, that who soeuer would geue most money for it or best could flatter the Prince (which he knew wel all good men to abhorre) had the preheminence and gote the best Byshoprike, and then in stead of Gods word, they published their own commaundements, and made lawes to haue all vnder them, and made mē beleue they could not erre what soeuer they dyd or sayd, & euen as in the rowmes and stede of Moses, Aaron, Eliazer, Iosue, Caleb, and other fayth full folke, came Herode, Annas, Cayphas, Pylate and Iudas, whiche put Christ to death. So now in the stede of Christ, Peter, Paule, James and John and the faythfull folowers of Christ, we haue ỹ Pope, Cardinals, Archbyshops, Byshops, and proude Prelates with their Proctour, the malitious ministers of their masters the deuill, which notwithstandyng transforme them selues into a lykenes, as though they were the ministers of righteousnes whose end shalbe accordyng to their workes. So that the body is cankered long agone, and now are left but certaine small members, whiche God of his puissaunt power hath reserued vncorrupted & because they se that they can not be cankered as their owne flesh is, for pure anger they burne them, lest if they cōtinued there might seme some deformitie in their owne cankered carkase, by the comparyng of these whole members to their scabed body.

Teacheth in a few leaues shortly al the poyson that Wickleff, Oecolampadius, Huskyn, Tyndall and Zwynglius haue taught in all their bookes before. Cōcerning the blessed Sacrament of the aulter: not onely affirmyng it to very bread still (as Luther doth) but also (as these other beastes do) sayth it is nothing els. And after, the same Syr Thomas More saith. These dregges hath he dronken of Wickleffe, Oecolampadius, Tyndall, and Zwinglius, and so hath he all that he argueth here beside, which iiij. what maner folke they be, is metely well perceyued and knowen, and God hath in part, with hys open vengeaunce declared.

Luther is not the pricke that I run at, but the scripture of God. I do neither affirme nor deny any thyng, because Luther so sayth: but because the Scripture of God doth so conclude & deter-determine. I take not Luther for ſuch an author that I thinke hee can not erre, but I thinke verely that he both may erre and doth erre in certayne poyntes, although not in ſuch as concerne ſaluation and damnation, for in theſe (bleſſed be God) all theſe whom ye call heretickes do agrée right well. And likewiſe I do not alow this thing becauſe Wickleffe, Oecolampadius, Tyndall and Zwinglius ſo ſay, but becauſe I ſée them in that place more purely expoũde the Scripture, and that the proceſſe of the text doth more fauour their ſentence.

And where you ſay that I affyrme it to be bread ſtill as Luther doth, the ſame I ſay agayne, not becauſe Luther ſo ſayth, but becauſe I cã proue my wordes true by ſcripture, reaſon, nature, and doctors. Paule calleth it

Actes. 2. Luke calleth it bread in the Actes ſaying: they continued in the fellowſhip of the Apoſtles and in breaking of bread, and in prayer. Alſo Chriſt called the cuppe, the fruite of the vyne
Luke. 22. ſaying: I ſhall not from hence forth drinke of the fruite of the vyne, vntill I drink that new in the kingdome of my father. Furthermore, nature
Nature ſayth there is bread in the Sacrament. doth teach you that both ỹ bread and wine continue in their nature. For the bread mouleth if it be kept long, yea and wormes brẽde in it. And the pore mouſe will runne away with it, and deſire no other meate to her dinner, which are euident inough that there remayneth bread. Alſo the wine
The wyne will ware ſowre if it be kept lõg. if it were reſerued would ware ſower, as they confeſſe them ſelues, and therefore they houſell the laye people but with one kinde onely, becauſe the wine can not continue nor be reſerued, to haue ready at hand whẽ nede were. And ſurely as if there remayned no bread, it could not mould nor ware full of wormes. Euẽ ſo if there remained no wine, it could not ware ſower, and therefore it is but falſe doctrine, that our prelates ſo long haue publiſhed. Finally that there remayneth bread might be proued by the authoritie of many doctors, which call it bread and wine, as Chriſt and his Apoſtles did. And though ſome ſophiſters would wraſt their ſayings and expound them after their phantaſie, yet ſhall I alleage them one doctor (which was alſo Pope of Rome) that maketh ſo plaine with vs, that they ſhall be compelled with ſhame to hold their tongues. For Pope Gelaſius writeth on thys maner. Certe ſacramenta quæ ſumimus corporis & ſanguinis Chriſti diuine res ſunt & propterea per illa, participes facti ſumus diuinæ naturæ, & tamẽ nõ deſinit eſſe ſubſtantia vel panis & vini, ſed permanent in ſuæ proprietate naturæ. Et certe imago & ſimilitudo corporis & ſanguinis Chriſti in actione miſteriorum celebrantur. That is to ſay: Surely the ſacramentes of the body and bloud of Chriſt, are a godly thing, and therfore through them are we made partakers of the godly nature. And yet doth it not ceaſe to be the ſubſtance, or nature of bread and wine, but they continue in the propertie of their owne nature, and ſurely the image and ſimilitude of the body and bloud of Chriſt are celebrated in the acte of the myſteries. Thys I am ſure was the olde doctrine which they can not auoyde. And therefore with the Scripture, nature, and fathers, I will conclude that there remaineth the ſubſtaunce and nature of bread and wine.

The Doctors proue that bread remayneth in the Sacrament.

Gelaſius a Pope. Contra Eutych. & Neſtorium.

This is the ſaying of Gelaſius a Pope.

And where ye ſay that we affyrme it to be nothing els, I dare ſay that ye vntruely report on vs all. And here after I will ſhewe you what it is more then bread. And where ye ſay that it is métely well knowen what maner of folke they be, and that God hath in part with his open vengeance declared.

Wickleffe.

I aunſwere that maiſter Wickliffe was noted while he was liuing, to be a man not onely of moſt famous doctrine, but alſo of a very ſincere life

and

and conuerſation. Neuertheleſſe to declare your malicious mindes and vengeable hartes (as men ſay) xv. yeare after he was buryed, you toke hym vp and burnt hym, which facte declared your furye, although he felt no fire: but bleſſed be God which hath geuen ſuch tyrantes no further power, but ouer thys corruptible body. For the ſoule ye can not binde nor burne, but God may bleſſe where you curſe, and curſe where you bleſſe.

Wickleffe buried xv. yeare, and then brent.

Math. 10.

Malach. 2.

And as for Oecolampadius, whō you alſo call Huſkyn, his moſt aduerſaries haue euer commended his conuerſation, and godly life, which when God had appoynted hys tyme, gaue place vnto nature (as euery mā muſt) and dyed of a canker.

Oecolampadius.

And Tyndall I truſt liueth, well content with ſuch a poore Apoſtles life, as God gaue hys ſonne Chriſt, and hys faythfull miniſters in thys worlde, which is not ſure of ſo many mites, as ye be yearely of poundes, although I am ſure that for hys learning and iudgement in Scripture, he were more worthy to bee promoted, then all the Biſhops in England. I receaued a letter from hym, which was written ſince Chriſtmas, wherein among other matters he writeth thus. I call God to recorde agaynſt the day we ſhall appeare before our Lorde Jeſus to geue a reckoning of our doings, that I neuer altered one ſillable of Gods worde, agaynſt my conſcience, nor would doe thys day, if all that is in earth, whether it be honour, pleaſure, or riches, might be geuen me. Moreouer, I take God to recorde to my conſcience, that I deſire of God to my ſelfe in thys worlde, no more then that without which I can not kepe hys lawes. &c. Judge Chriſtē reader whether theſe words be not ſpoken of a faythfull, clere innocent hart. And as for hys behauiour is ſuch, that I am ſure no man cā reproue hym of any ſinne, howbeit no mā is innocent before God which beholdeth the hart.

Tyndall.

Tyndall declareth his innocency.

Finally Zwinglius was a man of ſuch learning and grauitie (beſide eloquence) that I thinke, no man in Chriſtendome might haue compared with hym, notwithſtanding he was ſlaine in battell in defending hys Citie and common wealth, agaynſt the aſſaulte of wicked enemies, whiche cauſe was moſt righteous. And if hys maſterſhip meane, that that was the vengeaunce of God, and declared hym to be an euill perſon becauſe he was ſlaine: I may ſay nay, and ſhew euident examples of the contrary, for ſometyme God geueth the victorye agaynſt them that haue moſt righteous cauſe, as it is euident in the boke of Judges, where all the children of Iſraell were gathered together, to punithe ỳ ſhamefull ſodomitrie of the Tribe of Beniamin, which were in number but 25. thouſand. And the Iſraelites were 400. thouſand fighting men, which came into Silo, and aſked of God who ſhould be theyr Captaine agaynſt Beniamin. And they being but 25. thouſand ſlue of the other Iſraelites 12. thouſand in one day. Then fledde the children of Iſraell vnto the Lord in Silo, & made great lamentation before hym euen vntill night: and aſked hym counſell ſaying: ſhall we go any more to fight agaynſt the tribe of Beniamin our brethren or not? God ſayd vnto them yes, goe vp and fight agaynſt them. Thē went they the next day & fought agaynſt them, and there were ſlaine agayne of the Iſraelites 18. thouſand men. Then came they backe agayne vnto the houſe of God, and ſat downe and wept before the Lord, and faſted that day vntill euen, and aſked hym agayn, whether they ſhould any more fight agaynſt theyr brethren or not. God ſayd vnto them yes, to morrow I will deliuer them into your handes. And the next day was ỳ tribe of Beniamin vtterly deſtroyed, ſauyng 600. men which hid thē ſelues in the wildernes. Here it is euident that the children of Iſraell loſte the victorye twiſe, and yet notwithſtanding had a iuſt cauſe, and fought at Gods commaundement. Beſides that, Judas Machabeus was ſlaine in a righteous cauſe, as it is manifeſt in the firſt boke of the Machabées. And therfore it can it can be no euident argument of the vengeance of God, that he was ſlaine in battell in a righteous cauſe, and therefore me thinketh that thys man is to malaparte, ſo bluntly to enter into Gods iudgement, and geue ſentence in that matter before he be called to counſell. Thus haue I ſufficiently touched hys Preface, for thoſe pointes ẏ he afterward touched more largely, haue I willingly paſſed, becauſe I ſhall touch thē earneſtly hereafter. Now letvs ſée what heproueth.

M. More. ¶ It ys a great wonder to ſee vpon how light and ſleight occaſiōs he is fallē vnto theſe abhominable hereſies. For he denieth not nor cā not ſay nay, but that our Sauiour ſayd him ſelfe, my fleſhe is verely meate & my bloud is verely drinke he denieth not alſo that Chriſt him ſelfe at his laſt Supper, takyng the bread into his bleſſed handes, after that he had bleſſed it ſayd vnto his diſciples? Take you this and eate it, this is my body, that ſhalbe geuen for you. And likewiſe gaue thē the chalice after his bleſſyng and conſecracion, and ſayd vnto them, this is the chalice of my bloud of the new teſtament, which ſhalbe ſhed out for many, do ye this in remembrance of me.

Frith. ¶ It is a great wonder to ſee how ignorannt their procour is, in the playne textes of ſcripture. For if he had any Judgmēt at all he might wel perceiue ẏ when Chriſt ſpake theſe wordes, my fleſh is verely meate and my bloud is verely drinke, he ſpake nothing of ẏ ſacramēt. For it was not inſtitute vntill his laſt ſupper. And theſe wordes were ſpokē to ẏ Iewes long before, & ment them not of ẏ carnall eatyng or drynking of his bodye or bloud, but of the ſpirituall eating, which is done by fayth and not with tothe, or bellye. Wherof S. Auſtyn ſayth vppon his goſpell of John why preparеſt thou other tothe or bellye? beleue and thou haſt eaten him. So ẏ Chriſtes wordes muſt here be vnderſtāded ſpiritually. And that he calleth hys fleſhe very meat becauſe that as meate by the eating of it & diſgeſting it in our bodye doth ſtrengthen theſe corruptible mēbres, ſo likewiſe doth Chriſtes fleſhe by the beleuing that it taketh our ſinne vpon it ſelfe & ſuffered the death to deliuer vs & ſtrengthen our immortall ſoule. And likewiſe as drinke when it is dronken, doth comfort and quicken our fraile nature. So likewiſe doth Chriſtes bloud by the drinkyng of it into the bowelles of our ſoule that it is by the beleuing and remembring that it is ſhed for our ſinnes, comfort and quicken our ſouls vnto euerlaſting lyfe. And this is the eating and drinking ẏ he ſpeaketh of in that place. And that it is ſo you may perceaue by the text following which ſayth, he that eateth my body & drinketh my bloud dwelleth in me and I in him, which is not poſſible to be vnderſtād of the ſacrament. For it is falſe to ſay that he ẏ eateth the ſacrament of his body and drinketh the ſacrament of his bloud, dwelleth in Chriſt and Chriſt in hym For ſome man receiueth it vnto his condemnation, And thus doth Saint Auſten expound it ſayinge, Hoc eſt enim Chriſtum manducare, in illo manere & illum manentem in ſe habere. This is the very eating of Chriſt to dwell in him & to haue him dwelling in vs So ẏ who ſo euer dwelleth in Chriſt (ẏ is to ſay beleueth ẏ he is ſēt of God to ſaue vs from our ſinnes) doth verely eate and drinke his body and bloud although he neuer receiued the ſacrament. This is ẏ ſpirituall eating neceſſary for all ẏ ſhal be ſaued for there is no man that cōmeth to God wout this eating of Chriſt, that is the beleuing in hym. And ſo I denye not but that Chriſt ſpeaketh theſe wordes but ſurely he ment it ſpiritually, as Saint Auſten declareth, and as the place playnely proueth.

The Papiſtes doe falſly alledge this text.

More. He must nedes confesse, that they that beleue that it is the very body and his very bloud in dede, haue the playne wordes of our sauiour him selfe vpon their side, for the ground & foundacion of their fayth.

Frith. That is very true and so haue they ý very wozdes of god, which say that a broken potsherd is Hierusalem, and that Chzist is a stone, and that Chzist is a vine and a doze. And yet yf they should beleue oz thinke that he were in dede any of these things, they were spirituall and neuertheless deceiued. Foz though he so sayd, yet I say hys wozdes were spiritually to bee vnderstanded. And where you say that I flye from the sayth of playne and open scriptures, & foz the allegozy destroy the true sence of the letter. I aūswere that some textes of Scripture are onely to be vnderstand after the letter: as when Paule sayeth, Chzist died foz our sinnes and arose agayne foz our iustification. And some textes are onely to be vnderstand spiritually oz in the way of allegozy: As when Paule sayth, Chzist was the stone, & when Chzist sayth him selfe, I am a very vyne I am the dooze, and some must be vnderstand both litterally, & spiritually: As when God sayd, out of Egipt cauled I my sonne, which although it were literally fulfilled in the childzē of Israell whē he bzought them out of Egipt with great power and wonders yet was it also ment & verified in Chzist hymselfe, his very spirituall sonne, which was cauled out of Egipt after ý death of Herod. And agayne it is very spiritually fulfilled in vs whiche thzough Chzistes bloud are deliuered frō the Egypt of sinne, & from the power of Pharao ý deuil. And I say that this text of scripture: This is my body, is onely spiritually to be vnderstand, & not litterally. And ý doth S. Austen also cōfirme which wzyteth vnto Adamantus and sayth, These sentenses of scripture, Chzistes was the stone, the bloude is the soule, and this is my body. are figuratiuelie to bee vnderstande (that is to say spiritually oz by the waye of an allegozie) and thus haue I Saint. Augustin wholly on my side, whiche thing shall yet beare after moze plainly appeare.

1.Cor.10. Iohn.15. Iohn.10. Roma. 4. Oseā.11. Math.2. The Scripture speaketh diuersly and hath diuers senses.

Now his example of his bridegromes ring I very well alow, for I take the blessed sacrament to beleft with vs for a very token and a memoriall of Christ in dede. but I say that the hole substaunce of the same token and memoriall is his owne blessed bodie. And so I say that Christ hath left vs a better token then this man would haue vs take it for, & therin he fareth like a man to whō a bridgrome had deliuered a goodly gold ryng [illegible] riche rubie therein, to deliuer his bride for a tokē. And thē he would like a false shrewe, keepe away that gold ring, & geue the bride in stede therof, a proper ring of a rishe, and tell her that the bridgrome would send her no better. Or els like one that when the bridgrome had geuē such a ryng of golde to hys bride for a token, will tell her plaine, and make her beleue that the ring were but coper or brasse, to minishe the bridgromes thanke.

where you say, that the whole substaunce of the same token and memoriall is his owne blessed bodye, that is soner sayd then proued. For S. Austen sheweth the cõtrary, as it is partly before touched, and here after shalbe declared more plainelye. ¶ where you say that we fare like a false shrew that would kepe the gold ring from ỹ bride, and geue her a ring of a rishe, or tell her that her golde ring were copper or brasse, to minish the bridegromes thanke. I aunswere that we denye not but that the ring is most fine gold, and is set with as rich Rubyes as can be gotten. For that ryng (I meane the Sacrament) is not onely a most perfite token and a memoriall of the bridgromes benefites and vnfayned fauour on his partie but it is also on the other partie Eucharistia: that is to say, a thankes geuyng, for the gracious giftes which she vndoubtedly knowledgeth her selfe to haue receiued. For as verely as that bread is broken among them, so verely was Christes body brokẽ for their sinnes. And as verely as they receiue that bread into their bellye thorough eating it, so verely do they receiue the frute of his death into their soules by beleuyng in hym. And therefore they assemble to that Supper, not for the valure of the bread, wyne or meate that is there eaten, but for the entent to geue hym thankes commonly among thẽ all, for his inestimable gwdnes. But to procẽde vnto our purpose, if a man would come vnto the bryde, and tel her that this gwdly gold ryng were her owne bridgrome, both flesh bloud and bones (as you do) thẽ I thinke if she haue any wytte, she might aunswere him, that he mocked and the more he sayd it, the lesse she might beleue him, and say that if that were her owne bridgrome, what should she then nede any remẽbraũce of hym or why should hee geue it her for a remembraunce? For a remembraunce presupposeth the thyng to be absent, and therefore if this be a remembraunce of hym, then can he not here be present.

An answere to Mores trifling.

Eucharistia

The right cause why we should come to the Table of our Lord.

Here hath here a cheke mate.

More. I maruell me therfore much, that hee is not afearde, to affirme that these wordes of Christ, of his body and of his bloud, must needes be vnderstand by waye of a similitude or an allegorye as the woordes bee of the vyne and the doore. Nowe this he wottes well, that though some wordes spoken by the mouth of Christ be to be vnderstand onely by way of a similitude or an allegory, yet foloweth it not thereupon, that euery like word of Christ in orher places was no other but an allegory, for such was the shift and cauillation that the wicked Arrians vsed which tooke frõ Christes person his omnipotent Godhead.

Frith. I graunt that the Arrians erred, for as M. More sayth, though in some place a word be taken figuratiuely, it foloweth not therfore in euery other place, it should likewise be taken. But one question must I aske his mastershyp how doth he know that there is any worde or text in Scripture that must be taken figuratiuely? that is by the way of a similitude or as hee calleth it a necessary allegory? I thinke (though some men may assigne other gwd causes and euidences) that the first knowledge is by other textes of Scripture. For if other textes be conferred vnto it, and wil not stand with the litterall sence, thẽ I thinke it must nedes be take spiritually or figuratiuely as there are infinite textes in Scripture. Now when I se that S. Thomas which felt christ his woũds and put his finger in his side, called hym his Lord and God, and that no text in scripture repugneth vnto the same, but that they may well stand together me thinketh it were foly to affirme that this worde, God, in that text should be taken figuratiuely or by way of an allegory: But now in our matter the processe of Scripture will not stand with the litterall sense, as shall hereafter appeare. And therfore necessitie compelleth vs to expounde it figuratiuely, as doth also S. Austen and other holy Doctours, as hereafter shall playnly appeare.

Why certeine places of ỹ Scripture must be vnderstand spiritually.

M. More. If euery man that can finde out a new fonde phantasie vppon a text of holy Scripture, may haue hys owne mynde taken and hys owne exposition beleued agaynst the expositions of the olde cunnynge Doctours and Saintes, thē may you surely see that no article of the christen faith, cā stand and endure lōg. And then he alledgeth S. Hierome which sayth, that if the exposition of other interpretours, and the cōsent of the common Catholicke Church, were of no more strength, but that euery man might be beleued that could bryng some textes of Scripture, for hym expounded as it pleased hym selfe, then could I (sayth this holy man) bryng a new sect also, and say by Scripture, that no mā were a true Christē mā nor a mēber of the Church, that kepeth ij. coates. And in good faith (sayth M. More) if that way were alowed, I were able my selfe to find out xv. new sectes in one fore noone.

Frith. S. Peter sayth, that the Scripture is not expounded after the appetite of any priuate person, but euē as it was geuen, by the spirite of God and not by mans will. So must it be declared by the same spirite. And therefore I will not that any man shalbe beleued, by bringyng his own mynde & phantasie. But if he wil be beleued, let him bryng either an other playne terte, which shal expounde the first, or els at the lest he must bryng such a sentēce, as will stand with the processe of the Scripture. Why was S. Hierome alowed agaynst the determination of the counsell of Malta, sith he was alone, and they a great multitude? but onely because he brought euidēt scripture, whiche at the tyme of their sentence, none of them remembred: and yet when it was brought, they could not auoyde it. And likewise except I bryng euidēt scripture which they all shal expoūd as I do, I desire not to be beleued. And where M. More sayth, that in good fayth he were able to find out xv. new sectes in one fore noone, he may thāke God that he hath such a pregnaunt wytte: But yet I trust he should not find one (if there were any peril of damnatiō therin) but that we would wt a plaine text cōfute it, which he should not be able to auoyde.

No man is to be beleued that bryngeth hys owne iudgement onely vpon any sentēce of Scripture.

More is here pretely nypped.

M. More. And ouer this the very circumstaunces of the places in the gospel in whiche our Sauiour speaketh of that Sacrament, may well make open the difference of his speche in this matter and of all those other, and that as hee spake all those but in an allegorye, so spake hee this playnly, meanyng that he spake of his very body and hys very bloud, beside all allegoryes. For when our Lord sayd, he was a very vyne, and when he said he was the dore, there was none that heard him, that any thyng marueiled therof. And why? For because they perceyued well, that he ment not that he was a materiall vyne in deede, nor a doore neither: But when he sayd that hys flesh was very meate, and his bloud very drinke, and that they should not be saued, but if they dyd eate his flesh and drinke his bloud, then were they all in such a wonder ther of, that they could not abyde. And wherefore, but because they perceyued well by hys wordes and his manner of circumstaunces, that Christ spake of his very flesh and his very bloud in dede.

Frith. It is openly knowen & confessed among all learned men that in the 6. chapter of Joh. Christ spake not one wo*r*de concerning the sacrament of his body and bloud (whiche at that tyme was not yet institute) but all that he there spake was of the spirituall eating and drinking of his body, and bloud, into our soules, which is the fayth in his body and bloud, as I haue touched before. And the circumstances of this place do in dede proue that they were fleshly minded, & vnderstode not the spirituall wordes of our sauiour Christ, and therfore wōdered & murmured Insomuch that Christ sayd vnto thē, doth this offend you? what will you say then when ye shall see the sonne of man ascending thether where he was before? Then (addeth S. Austen) you shall know that he ment not to geue his flesh to eate wt your teth: for he shall

Iohn. 6.

Note here the sayng of S. Austen.

ascende hole. And Christ addeth, it is the spirite that quickeneth, the flesshe profiteth nothing, the wordes that I speake, are spirite and lyfe: that is to say, sayth S. Austen, are spiritually to be understand. And where Christ sayth, that the flesshe profiteth nothing (meaning of his owne flesh, as S. Austen sayth) he meaneth that it profiteth not, as they understode hym ỹ is to say, it profiteth not, if it were eaten. But it doth much profit to be slayne, that thorough it and the shedding of his bloud, the wrath of God our father is pacified, and our sinnes forgeuen. And wher his mastership sayth, that the people perceiued well what he ment, and therfore he wondred so sore and could not abide, because they perceiued well by his wordes and māner of circūstances what his meaning was. I wil say as I did before, that the understod hym not. Now here he will say vnto me, if it be but your naye & my yea, thē I would thinke to be beleued as sone as you, and surely ỹ were but reason. Not withstanding (thankes be to God) I am able to bring in auctorite to Judg betwene vs both, whose iudgment I trust his mastership will admit. This auctor is S. Austen whiche sayth. Discipuli enim eius qui eum sequebantur expauerunt & exhorruerunt sermonem non intelligentes. That is to say, his his disciples which followed hym were astonied, and abhored his wordes and understode them not. And because your mastership shal not thinke that he ouershot him selfe, and spake he wist not what, we shall allege hym saying the same wordes in an other place. Cum diceret. Nisi quis manducauerit carnem. &c illi (non intelligentes) dixerunt ad inuicem, Durus est hic sermo, quis potest eum audire? That is, when Christ sayd, except a man eate my flesh and drinke my bloud, he shal haue no lyfe in him, they (because they understode him not) sayd to ech other, this is an hard saying, who can heare him? Thus I trust you will geue place (although not to me) yet at the least vnto S. Austen, and receiue the truth which is so plainely proued. And where his mastership allegeth this text for the sacrament, that except they did eate his flesh and drinke his bloude the could not be saued, it semeth that he is fallen into the error of Pope innocent, which likewise understanding this text vpon the sacrament (as M. More doth) caused yong children and infantes to receiue the sacrament, as though they had all bene damned which died and had not receiued it. And of this carnall minde were many mo Bushoppes a great while (as are now the bohemes) whom he after dispraysseth, and yet expoundeth the text as they doo, but afterward they loked more spiritually vpon the matter and confessed their ignorance (as I trust M. More will) but now will I shew you S. Austens minde vppon this text which shall helpe for the exposition of all this matter. S. Austen in the third boke De Doctrina Christiana the 16. chapiter teaching how we shall know the tropes, figures, allegories & phrases, of the scripture sayth. Si autem flagitium aut facinus iubere videntur, figuratiua locutio est. Nisi māducaueritis (inquit) carnē filij hominis et biberitis eius sanguinem, non habebitis uitam in vobis. Facinus vel flagitium videtur iubere: Figura est ergo precipiēs passionis dominicæ esse commicandum, et suauiter atque vtiliter in memoria recondendum quod pro nobis caro eius crucifixa & vulnerata sit. That is to say, when soeuer the scripture or Christ, semeth to commaund any foule or wicked thing, then must that text be taken figuratiuely (that as it is a phrase, allegorie and manner of speaking, and must be understand spiritually and not after the letter) Except (sayth Christ) ye eate the flesh of the sonne of man and drinke his bloud ye shall haue no life in you. He semeth (sayth S. Austen) to commaūde a foule & a wicked thing. It is therfore a figure, commaunding vs to be partakers of his passion, and sweetlye and profitablye to print in our mynde that his flesshe was crucified and wounded for vs. This truth (thankes be to God) doth S. Austen declare vnto vs, which thing beside

The Jewes vnderstode Christ carnally and not spiritually as he meant.

M. More fallen into the errour of pope Innocent.

Aug. Lib. 3. de doctrina Christiana.

Here S. Augustine sheweth plainly that Christes wordes were a figuratiue speche the opening of this text against M. Mores mynde, doth plainely shew what he thought in the wordes of christes supper. For sith he called it a foule & a wicked thing, to eate his flesshe, then may you sone perceiue, that he thought it was as foule & as wicked a thing to eate his body, seing his body is flesh and then consequently it shall follow, ỳ eyther this worde eate (where Christ sayd take this and eate it) must be taken spiritually, or els that this saying of Christ, this is my bodie, must be figuratiuely spokē, but this worde eate is taken after the letter (for they did in dēde eate the bred) therfore it must nēdes followe, that this sentence (this is my body) must bee figuratiuely spoken Or els is S. Austen not to be approued in this place, which thing our Byshops I thinke, will not say nay.

Besides that S. Austen sayth: Quando loquebatur dominus noster Iesus Christus de corpore suo, nisi (inquit) quis manducauerit carnem meam & biberit sanguinem meum, non habebit in se vitam. Caro enim mea vere est cibus, & sanguis meus vere est potus, intellectus spiritualis credentem saluum facit, quia litera occidit spiritus est qui viuificat. That is to say: When our Lord Jesus Christ spake of hys body, except (quod he) a man eate my flesshe and drinke my bloud, he shall haue no life in hym self, for my flesh is very meat, and my bloud is very drinke. The spirituall vnderstandyng saueth hym that beleueth, for the letter killeth, but the spirite quickneth. Here may you playnly perceaue, that thys texte must onely be taken spiritually. For he sayth, that to take it after the letter, it kylleth and profiteth nothyng at all, and therfore I wonder that we haue bene led so long in thys grosse errour.

Augustinus in sermone ad infantes

Thys saying doth ỳ famous clarke Origine confirme, saying. Agnosce quod figuræ sunt quæ in voluminibus Domini scriptæ sunt: & ideo tanquam spirituales & non tanquam carnales, examinate & intelligite quæ dicuntur. Si enim secūdum literam sequaris hoc ipsum quod dictum est, Nisi manducaueritis carnem. &c. occidit hæc litera. That is to say. Marke ỳ they are figures which are written in the Scripture of God, and therefore examine them as spirituall men and not as carnall, and vnderstand those thinges that are spoken. For if thou followe after the letter, thys thyng that is spoken: except ye eate the flesshe of the sonne of man and drinke hys bloud, you can haue no life in you, thys letter kylleth. Alas deare brethren, why should any man be offended with thys doctrine, sith it is approued so plainly, by such auncient and holy fathers?

Origi. in leuit. ho. 7.

Christes wordes are spirituall and not carnall.

Againe S. Austen sayth: Qui manducat carnem meam & bibit meum sanguinem in me manet & ego in illo. Hoc est ergo manducare illam escam & illum bibere potum, in Christo manere & illum manentem in se habere, ac per hoc qui nō manet in Christo & in quo non manet Christus proculdubio non manducat eius carnem nec bibit sanguinem, etiam si tantæ rei sacramentum ad iudicium sibi māducet & bibit. That is to say. He that eateth my flesh & drynketh my bloud, abydeth in me, and I in hym. Thys is therfore the eatyng of that meate, and drinkyng of that bloud, to abyde in Christ, and haue hym abyding in vs. And therefore he that abydeth not in Christ, and in whom Christ abydeth not, without doubt he eateth not hys flesh, nor drinketh not hys bloud, although he eate and drinke the sacrament of so great a thyng vnto hys damnation. And euen ỳ same wordes hath Bede vppon the Corinthians. 1. Cor. 10. Thys one place, is sufficient for to proue my purpose though he sayd not one word more. For here he doth playnly determine, that he which abydeth not in Christ, that is to say, he ỳ is wicked or vnfaythfull, doth not eate hys flesh nor drinke hys bloud, although he eate and drinke the Sacrament of so great a thyng. And so must it nēdes follow, that the Sacrament is not the very naturall body of Christ. For then the vnfaythfull should eate hys flesh, seing he eateth the sacrament of hys body. But that doth S. Austen denye: wherfore it must nēdes followe, that it is but onely onely a token of a remembrance, and a signe of hys body breakyng, and a representation of hys passion, that we might kéepe hys facte in memory, and geue him thankes for his tender loue and kindenes, which when we were hys enemyes toke vpon hym to suffer most vyle death, to reconcile vs vnto hys father, and make vs hys frendes. Thys saying hath S. Austen in an other place also, where he writeth on thys maner: Qui non in me manet, & in quo ego non maneo, non se dicat aut existimet manducare corpus meum, aut bibere sanguinẽ meum. Non itaque manent in Christo, qui non sunt eius membra: non sunt autem membra Christi, qui se faciunt mẽbra meretricis. That is to say: He that abydeth not in me, and in whom I abyde not, let hym not say or thynke that he eateth my body or drinketh my bloud: They abyde not in Christ which are not his members. And they are not hys mẽbers which make them selues the mẽbers of an harlot. And these are also the very wordes of Bede. Here it is playne proued agayne by the authoritie of S. Austen and Bede, that the wicked and vnfaythfull (which are not the members of Christ) doe not eate hys body nor drinke hys bloud, and yet they do eate the sacrament as well as the other. Wherefore you must néedes graunt, that the Sacrament is not ỹ naturall body of Christ but a figure, tokẽ, or memoriall therof. Now good Christen people count not thys new learning which is firmed by such olde Doctors and faythfull fathers.

The sacrament is a figure, token, and a memoriall of the breaking of Christes body and of hys bloud.

Now were this inough for a Christen man that loued no contention. But because there are so many sophisters in ỹ world which care not what they say, so they holde not their peace. I must néedes set some bulwarke by thys holy Doctor to helpe to defend hym, for els they will shortly ouerrunne hym (as they do me) and make hym an hereticke to. Therefore I will alleage hys master S. Ambrose. Saint Ambrose sayth: Non iste panis est qui vadit in corpus, sed ille panis vitæ æternæ qui animæ nostræ substantiam fulcit. That is: It is not thys bread that goeth into the bodye, but that bread of euerlasting life whiche vpholdeth the substance of our soule. Furthermore the great clerke Prosper confirmeth the same saying. Qui discordat a Christo nec carnem Christi manducat, nec sanguinem bibit, etiamsi tantæ rei sacramentum ad iudicium suæ præsumptionis quotidie indifferenter accipiat. That is: He that discordeth from Christ, doth neyther eate hys flesshe nor drinke hys bloud, although he receaue indifferẽtly euery day the sacrament of so great a thing vnto the condemnation of hys presumption. And these are also the very wordes of Bede vpon the xj. Chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians.

Now you may see, that it is not S. Austens minde onely, but also the saying of many moe. And therefore I truste you will be good vnto hym. ¶ The mynde and exposition of the old Doctours vppon the wordes of Christes maundey.

More. AND where M. More sayth, that if Christe had not ment after the plaine literal sẽce, that both the hearers at that tyme, and the expositours since, and all Christẽ people beside this xv. c. yeare would not haue taken onely the litterall sence beyng so straunge and maruelous that it might seme impossible, & decline from the letter for allegories in all such other thynges beyng (as hee sayth) and as in deede they be, so many farre in nomber mo.

Frith. As touchyng ỹ hearers they were deceiued and vnderstode him not (I meane as many as toke his wordes fleshly as you do.) And they had their aunswere of Christ (when they murmured) that his wordes were spirite and lyfe: that is (as S. Austen sayth) spiritually to bee vnderstand and not fleshly, as is before declared. And as for the expositours. I thinke he hath not one of the old fathers for him, but certaine new felowes: as Dominic. S. Thomas, Occam, and such other whiche haue made the Pope a God. And as I haue shewed. S. Austen maketh full for vs, and so do all the old fathers, as Oecolãpadius hath well declared in his boke, Quid veteres senserint de Sacramẽto eucharistiæ. And some of their sayinges I shall alledge anone. And where you say that all Christen people haue so beleued this 1500. yeares, that is very false. For there is no doubt, but that the people thought as holy S. Austen and other faithful fathers taught them. Which as I said, make with vs. Notwithstãding in dede, sith our Prelates haue bene made Lordes and haue set by their lawes and decrées contrary to the prerogatiue of all Princes, & lyke most sutle traytours, haue made all mẽ beleue that they may make lawes and bynde mens consciences, to obey them: and that their lawes are Gods lawes blindyng ỳ peoples eyes with two or three textes wrongfully wrested, to aduaunce their pride, where they ought to obey Kyngs and Princes, and be subiect to their lawes, as Christ and his Apostles were euẽ vnto ỳ death. Sith that tyme I say they haue made men beleue what they list and made articles of the faith at their pleasure. One article must be ỳ they be the Church, and can not erre: And this is the grounde of all their doctrine. But the truth of this article is nowe sufficiently knowen. For if Quéene Katherine be kyng Henries wife, then they do erre, and if she be not, then they haue erred, to speake no more cruelly: It is now become an article of our fayth ỳ the Pope of Rome must be ỳ head of ỳ Church & the Vicare of Christ: & that by Gods law. It is an article of our fayth that what soeuer hee byndeth in earth, is bounde in heauen, in so much that if he curse wrongfully, yet ye must be feared, and infinite such other which are not in our Crede, but blessed bee God that hath geuen some light into our Princes hart. For he hath lately put foorth a boke called the glasse of truth, whiche proueth many of these articles very swithe phantasies and that euen by their owne Doctours, & so I trust you shalbe proued in this poynt of the Sacrament for though it be an article of our fayth it is no article of our Crede in ỳ xij. articles wher of are sufficient for our saluatiõ. And therefore we may thinke that you lye without all ieoperdye of damnation.

More hath no olde author to maintaine hys quarelling Papistry.

To beleue the articles contayned in our crede is sufficient for our saluation.

Neuertheless seing his mastership saith that all make for him, and I say cleane contrarie, that all the olde fathers make against him, or at the lest wise not with him, It were necessary that one of vs should proue his purpose. But indeede in this poynt he would loke to haue the vauntage of me. For he thinketh that men will soner beleue hym which is a great man then me which am but a poore man, and that therfore I had more nede to proue my part true, then he to proue his. Well I am content and therfore geue eare (deare reader) and Judge betwéene vs.

Frith alleggeth authorities to proue hys doctrine true.

First I wil begin with Tertulian, because he is of most antiquitie. Tertulian speakyng of Christ, sayth: Nec panem reprobauit quo ipsum corpus suum representat. That is to say. Christ him selfe did not reproue or discommend bread whereby he doth represent hys very body. For the vnderstandyng of thys place, you must knowe that there was an hereticke called Marcion, which dyd reproue creatures, and said that all maner of creatures were euill. Thys thyng doth Tertulian improue by the Sacrament and sayth: Christ dyd not reproue or discõmend bread whereby he doth represent hys body: as though he shoulde saye, if Christ had counted the bread euill, then woulde he not haue left it for a Sacrament to represent hys body, meaning that it is a sacrament, signe, token and memoriall of hys body, and not the body it selfe. And that thys is hys minde, doth playnly appeare in hys fourth boke, where hee sayth: Christus acceptum panem & distributũ discipulis, Tertul. lib. 2. contra Marcionẽ.

Articles of our fayth made by the Pope.

discipulis, corpus suum illud fecit: hoc est corpus meum dicendo, id est, figura corporis mei figura autem non fuisset, nisi veritatis esset corpus. Ceterum vacuare res quod est phantasma, figuram capere non posset. That is to say: Christ taking bread and distributing vnto hys disciples made it hys body, saying: thys is my body, that is to say, a figure of my bodye, but thys bread coulde not haue bene a figure of it, except Christ had had a true bodye. For a vaine thyng or a phantasie can take no figure. For the vnderstãding of thys place, you must marke that thys hereticke Marcion, agaynst whom thys author writeth, dyd hold opinion that Christ had no naturall body, but only a phantasticall body, and thys opinion doth thys Doctor improue by the sacramẽt of ẏ altar, saying: the sacrament is a figure of hys body: ergo, Christ had a true body, and not a phãtasticall bodie: For a vaine thing or phantasie cã take no figure, Lo, here doth this olde father which was long before S. Austen: or S. Hierome, expound these wordes of Christ This is my body: that is to say, a figure of my body therfore you are to blame to call it new learning. Now because they shall not of temerarious presumption reiecte this olde father, I shall establishe his wordes by S. Austẽ which commendeth Christes meruelous pacience for suffering so long ẏ traitor Judas, as though he had bene a good man, and yet was not ignorant of his wicked thoughtes. Adhibuit (inquit) ad conuiuium in quo corporis & sanguinis sui figuram discipulis commendauit ac tradidit. That is to say he admitted hym (sayth S. Austẽ) vnto the maundye wherein he did betake and deliuer vnto the disciples ẏ figure of his body and bloud, Here doth this holy father S. Austen call it a figure of his body. And I am sure there is no man so childishe, but that he knoweth that the figure of a thing is not the thing it selfe. As by example the figure of Christ is not Christ hym selfe, the figure of S. Peter is not S. Peter him selfe. And yet we do neuertheleſſe cõmonly call those figures by the name of the thing that they do represent. As I may say when I see ẏ figure of S. Peter, this is S. Peter to whom Christ deliuered ẏ keyes of the kingdome of heauen. And yet he were a foole that would thinke that figure to be S. Peter him selfe: for it is only a representatiõ of him. Besides that S. Austen sayth, Non hoc corpus quod videtis estis manducaturi, nec bibituri illum sanguinem quem effusuri sunt qui me crucifigent. Sacramentũ aliquod vobis commendaui, spiritualiter intellectum viuificat vos. That is to say, you shall not eate this body that you see, nor drinke that bloud which they that crucifie me shall shed out. I haue geuen a certayne sacrament vnto you if it be spiritually vnderstãd it quickeneth you: What thinges can bee more playnly spoken?

This is my body, that is to say, a figure of my body.

Auguſt. super Pſal. 98.

Furthermore S. Austen sayth. *Sepe ita loquimur vt pascha appropinquãte crastinam vel perendinam Dominipassionem dicamus: cum ille ante tam multos annos passus sit, nec omnino nisi semel illa passio facta sit. Nempe ipso die dominico dicimus hodie Dominus resurrexit, cum ex quo surrexit tot anni transierunt. Quare nemo tam ineptus est, vt nos ita loquentes arguat esse mentitos, quia istos dies secundum illorum quibus hec gesta sunt similitudinem nuncupamus: vt dicatur ipse dies qui non sit ipse, sed reuolutione temporum similis eius: & dicatur illo die fieri propter Sacramenti celebrationem, quod nõ illo die, sed iam olim factũ est. Nonne semel immolatus est Christus in seipso? & tamen in Sacramento nõ solum per annuas paschæ solennitates, sed omni die pro populis immolatur: nec vtiq; mentitur qui interrogatus, responderit eũ immolari. Si enim Sacramenta quãdam similitudinẽ earũ rerũ quarũ sunt Sacramenta non haberent, omnino Sacramẽta non essent. Ex hac autem similitudine pleruq; etiam ipsarũ rerũ nomina accipiunt. Christ deliuered to his disciples the figure of hys body.

ter fidei Sacramentum, et conuertere se ad Deum propter conuersionis Sacramentum. Quia & ipsa responsio pertinet ad celebrationem Sacramenti. Sicut de ipso Baptismo apostolus consepulti (inquit) sumus Christo per Baptismum in mortem. Non ait sepulturam significamus, sed prorsus ait, consepulti sumus. Sacramentū ergo tantæ rei non nisi eiusdem rei vocabulo nuncupauit. That is to say: We often vse to say, when Easter draweth nye, that to morow or the nert day is the Lordes passion, and yet it is many yeares sith he suffered, and that passiō was neuer done but once. And vppon that Monday we say, this day the Lorde dyd rise agayne, and yet it is many yeares since hee rose. Now is there no man so folish to reproue vs as lyers for so saying, because we name these dayes after the similitude of those in whiche these thynges were done so that it is called the same day, whiche is not the very same, but by the reuolution of tyme, like it. And it is named to be done the same day through the celebration of the Sacrament (through kéepyng the memoriall of the thyng once done) whiche is not done that day, but was done lōg agone. Was not Christ once crucified in his owne person: and yet in a mysterye (whiche is the remembraunce of his very passion) he is crucified for the people not onely euery feast of Easter, but euery day: neither doth he lye which (when he is asked) aunswereth that he is crucified: for if the Sacramentes, had not certayne similitudes of those thynges whereof they are Sacramentes, then should they be no Sacraments at all. And for this similitude for the most part they take the names of the very thynges, and therefore as after a certaine maner the Sacrament of Christes body is Christes body, and the Sacrament of Christes bloud is Christes bloud, so the Sacrament of fayth is faith. For it is no other thing to beleue then to haue fayth, and therfore when a mā aunswereth that the infant beleueth which hath not the effect of fayth, he aūswereth that it hath fayth for the Sacramēt of fayth: And that it turneth it selfe to God, for the Sacrament of conuertion. For the aunswere it selfe perteineth vnto the ministryng of the Sacrament. As the Apostle writeth of Baptisme: we are buried (sayth he) with Christ through Baptisme vnto death. He sayth not we signifie burying, but vtterly sayth we are buryed. He called therfore the Sacrament of so great a thyng euen with the name of ỹ very thing it selfe. &c. If a man would auoyde cōtention and loke soberly on those wordes of S. Austen, hee shall sone perceiue the mystery of this matter. For euen as the nert good Friday shalbe called the day of Christes passion: & yet he shall not suffer death agayne vpon that day for hee dyed but once and is now immortall: euen so is the Sacramēt called Christes body. And as that day is not the very day that he dyed on, but onely a remembraūce thereof: so the Sacrament is not his very naturall body, but onely a remembraunce of his body breakyng, & bloud sheddyng. And likewise, as the nert Easter day shalbe called the day of his resurrection, not that it is the very same day that Christ dyd rise in, but a remembraunce of the same: euen so the Sacrament is called his body: not that it is his body in dæde, but onely a remēbraūce of the same. And furthermore, euē as the Priest doth offer hym, that is to say crucifie hym at Masse, euē so is the Sacrament his body. But the Masse doth but onely represent his passion. And so doth the Sacrament represent his body. And yet though the Masse doth but represent his crucifying, we may truly say he is crucified, euen so though the Sacramēt do but signifie or represent his body, yet may we truly say that it is his body. Why so: verely (sayth he) for the Sacramentes haue a certaine similitude of those thinges wherof they are Sacraments. And for this similitude for the most part, they take the names of the very thynges. Blessed be God whiche hath so clearely discussed this matter by this saythfull father. Notwithstandyng hæ doth yet expresse it more playnly saying: after a certaine

maner

The sacrament is the memoriall of Christes death.

The sacrament of Christes body and bloud, after a maner, is Christes body and bloud.

Good Friday next is called the day that Christ suffered hys passion, and yet it is not so, for that good Friday is past lōg sithens.

Frith writeth of the Masse according to the cōmon opinio that was at that time.

After a certaine maner the Sacrament of Christes bodye is Christes body.

maner, the Sacramēt of Christes body is Christes body. Behold deare brethren he sayth after a certaine maner the Sacrament is Christes body. And by that you may sone know that he neuer ment that it should be his very naturall body in deede, but onely a token and memoriall to kepe in memorie the death of his body, and so to norishe our fayth. Besides that his similitude which he after alledgeth of Baptisme, doth wholy expound this matter, for (sayth he) ỳ Apostle sayth not we signifie burying: but he sayth, we are buryed (and yet in deede the Baptisme doth but signifie it.) And thereupon S. Austen addeth, that he called the Sacrament of so great a thyng euen with the name of the very thyng it selfe. And lykewise it is in our Sacrament. Finally to be short I will passe ouer many places which I haue gathered out of his holy father, and will touch but this one more. S. Austen sayth. Non enim Dominus dubitauit dicere, Hoc est corpus meum, cum daret signum corporis sui. Et in eodem capite exponit. Sic est enim sanguis anima, quomodo petra erat Christus, nec tamen petra (ait) significabat Christum, sed ait petra erat Christus. That is to say. The Lord doubted not to say, this is my body, when he gaue a signe of his body. And after in the same chapiter he expoundeth it. For truly so the bloud is soule, as Christ was ỳ stone. And yet the Apostle sayth not, the stone dyd signifie Christ, but he sayth the stone was Christ.

Augusti. contra Adamantum. cap. 12

Christe gaue to his Disciples the signe of his body.

Here. S. Austen sayth playnely that Christ called the signe of his body, his body, and in this chapter doth cōpare these three textes of scripture, this is my body, the bloud is the soule, and Christ was the stone: and declareth them to be one phrase and to be expounded after one fashion. Now is there no man so mad, as to say, that Christ was a naturall stone (except he be a naturall foole) whose iudgment we nede not greatly to regard therfore we may well conclude that the sacrament is not his naturall body, but is cauled his body, for a similitude that it hath wherein it signifieth & representeth his body. And that the sacrament of so great a thing is called euen with the name of the very thing it selfe, as S. Austen sayd immediately before.

This were proufe inough to conclude that all ỳ olde fathers did holde the same opiniō, for who would once surmise (seing we haue S. Austen so playne for vs which is the chiefest among them all) who would once surmise I say, that he dissented in this great matter from the other sayntful fathers, or they from him? neuertheless I dare not let him stand post alone, lest ye dispise him. And therfore I will shew you ỳ minde of certaine other also: and first of his maister S. Ambrose.

S. Ambrose wrighting vpon the Epistle of Paule to the Corrinthians in the xi. chapter sayth. Quia enim morte Domini liberati sumus huius rei memoris in edendo & potando, carnem & sanguinem que pro nobis oblata sunt significamus. That is to say, because we be deliuered by the death of the Lord being mindfull of this thinge, meaning of the sacrament, we signifie the flesshe and bloud which were offered for vs. Here doth S. Ambrose say inough if mē were not sophisters, but would be content with reason. For he sayth that in eating and drinking the sacrament of Christes body, we signifie or represent the flesh and bloud of our Sauiour Iesus. Not withstanding because you are so slippery, we shall bynde you a lytle better by this mans wordes.

Ambrosi: super illud mortem domini annūcia.

S. Ambrose sayth. Sed forte dices speciem sanguinis non video. Sed habet similitudinis Sicut enim mortis similitudinem sumpsisti, ita etiam similitudinem precioſi sanguinis bibis. That is to say But peraduenture thou wilt say. I se no appearaunce of bloud, but it hath a similitude. For euen as thou hast taken the similitude of death, euen so thou drinkest the similitude of the precious bloud. Here may you see by ỳ conferring of these two sacrmentes, What S. Ambrose iudged of it For he sayth euen as thou hast taken a similitude of his death in the sacramēt of baptisme, so dost thou drink a similitude of his precious bloud in the sacrament of the altar. And yet as S. Austen sayd before, the Apostle sayth not we signifie burning, but sayth, we are buried. And likewise here Christ sayd not this signifieth my body, but this is my body, calling the sacrament, signe, token and memoriall of so great a thing, euen with ỹ name of the very thing it selfe, thus doth S. Ambrose choke our sophisters. Neuertheless I will alleage one place more out of S. Ambrose, where he saith. Dicit sacerdos, fac nobis inquit hanc oblationẽ scriptã rationabilẽ, quod est figura corporis Domini nostri Iesu Christi. That is, ỹ Priest sayth make vs this oblation acceptable. &c. For it is a figure of the body of our Lord Iesu Christ. Here he cauleth it plainly a figure of Christes body, which thing you can not auoyde. Therfore geue prayse vnto God & let his truth spreade which is so plainely testified, by these holy fathers. Now let vs see what S. Hieronie sayth.

Ambrosi. Libro. 4. de Sacramen. Cap. 5.

The Sacrament is a figure of Christes body.

S. Hierome writyng vpon Ecclesiaste, sayth on thys maner: Caro Domini verus cibus est, & sanguis eius verus potus est, hoc solum habemus in praesenti saeculo bonũ, si vescamur carne eius cruoreq; potemur, non solum in mysterio, sed etiam in scripturarum lectione, verus enim cibus & potus, qui ex verbo dei sumitur scientia scripturarum est. That is to say. The flesh of the Lord is very meate, & hys bloud is very drinke. This is onely the pleasure or profite that we haue in thys worlde, that we may eate hys flesh and drinke hys bloud, not onely in a mysterye, but also in the readyng of Scriptures. For the very meate and drink, which is taken out of Gods worde, is the knowledge of Scriptures. Here may ye see Saint Hieromes minde in few wordes. For first he sayth, that we eate hys flesh and drinke hys bloud in a mysterye, which is the sacrament of hys remembraunce and memoriall of hys passion. And after he addeth that we eate hys flesh and drinke hys bloud in the reading and knowledge of Scriptures, and calleth that very meate and very drinke. And yet I am sure ye are not so grosse, as to thinke that the letters which you read are turned into naturall flesh and bloud. And likewise it is not necessary that the bread shoulde be turned into hys body, no more then ỹ letters in scripture are turned into hys flesh. And neuertheless through fayth we may as well eate hys body in receauing of the sacrament, as eate hys flesh in reading of the letters of the Scripture. Besides that S. Hierome calleth the vnderstanding of the Scripture very meate and very drinke: which you must nedes vnderstand in a mystery and spirituall sense, for it is neither materiall meate nor drinke that is receaued with the mouth and teeth, but it is spirituall meate and drinke, and is so called for a similitude & propertie: because that as meate and drink comfort the body and outward man, so doth the readyng and knowledge of Scripture comfort the soule and inward man. And likewise it is of Christes body, which is called very meate and very drinke, which you must nedes vnderstand in a mysterye or spirituall sense (as S. Hierome called it) for hys body is no materiall meate nor drinke that is receaued with the mouth or teeth, but it is spirituall meate and drinke, and so called for a similitude and propertie, because that as meate and drinke comforteth the body, so doth the fayth in hys body breaking and bloudsheding, refreshe the soule vnto lyfe euerlastyng. We vse it customably in our dayly speach to say, when a childe setteth all hys mynde and delight on sport & playe: It is meate and drinke to thys childe to playe. And also we say by a mã that loueth well hawking and hunting: it is meate and drinke to this man to hawke & hunt. Where no man doubteth, but it is a figuratiue speach. And therefore I wonder that they are so blinde in thys one poynt, of Christes body: and can not also take the wordes figuratiuely, as these olde Doctors dyd. Agayne S. Hierome sayth. Postq; mysticum pascha fuerat impletum & agni carnes cum Apostolis

Hieroni. super eccle. Cap. 3.

We eate the very flesh of Christ & drinke hys bloud in a mystery.

The vnderstandyng of the Scripture is very meate & very drinke

Christes body is no materiall meate or drinke.

Hieronimus super. Math. 26.

Apostolis comederat, assumit panem qui comfortat cor hominis, & ad verum paschæ transgreditur sacramentum, vt quomodo in præfiguratione eius Melchisedech summi Dei sacerdos, vinum & panem offerens fecerat, ipse quoque viritatem corporis & sanguinis repræsentaret. That is to say. After the mystical Easter Lambe fulfilled, and that Christ had eaten the Lambes flesshe with the Apostles, he toke bread which comforteth the hart of man, and passeth to the true sacrament of the Easter Lãbe: that as Melchisedech brought forth bread and wyne figuryng hym, so might he likewyse represent the truth of hys body and bloud. Here doth S. Hierome speake after the maner that Tertullian dyd before: that Christ with bread and wyne dyd represent the truth of hys body. For except he had had a true body, he coulde not leaue a figure of it, nor represent it vnto vs. For a vayne thyng or phãtasie can haue no figure, nor can not be represented: as by example, how should a man make a figure of hys dreame or represent it vnto our memorye? But Christ hath left vs a figure and representation of hys bodye in bread and wyne: therefore it followeth that he had a true bodye. And that this was S. Hieromes mynde it doth manifestly appeare by ỹ wordes of Beda, which doth more copiously set out thys saying of Hierome. For he writeth on thys maner: Finitis paschæ veteris solennijs quæ in commemorationem antique de Ægypto liberationis agebantur, transit ad nouum quod in suæ redemptionis memoriam Ecclesia frequentare desiderat, vt videlicet pro carne agni vel sanguine, suæ carnis sanguinisq; sacramentum in panis ac vini figura substituens, ipsum se esse monstraret cui iurauit Dominus & non pœnitebit eum: Tu es sacerdos in æternum secundum ordinem Melchisedech. Frangit autẽ ipse panem quem porrigit, vt ostendat corporis sui fractionem nõ sine sua sponte futuram. &c. Et paulò post. Similiter & calicem postquam cœnauit dedit eis. Quia ergo panis carnem confirmat, vinum vero sanguinem operatur in carne, hic ad corpus Christi mystice, illud refertur ad sanguinem. That is to say. After the solemnitie of the olde Easter Lambe was finished (which was obserued in the remembraunce of the olde deliueraunce out of Egypt) he goeth vnto the new which the Church gladly obserueth in the remembraunce of hys redemption, that he in the stead of the flesshe and bloud of the Lambe, might institute and ordayne the Sacrament of hys flesshe and bloud in the figure of bread and wyne, and so declare hym selfe to be the same vnto whom the Lord sware and will not repent, thou art a perpetuall Priest after the order of Melchisedech. And he hym selfe brake the bread which hee gaue, to shewe that the breakyng of hys body should not be done without hys owen will. &c. And a little after. And lykewyse he gaue them the cuppe after he had supped. And because bread doth confirme or strength the flesshe, and wyne worketh bloude in the flesshe, therefore is the bread mystically referred vnto the bodye of Christ, and the wyne referred vnto hys bloud.

where there is no true body there can be no figure of the same.

Beda super Luke. 22.

Bread and wyne is mistically referred to the body & bloud of Christ.

Here may you note, first that as the Lambe was a remembraunce of theyr deliueraunce out of Egypt (and yet the Lambe deliuered them not) so is the Sacrament a remembrance of our redemption (and yet the Sacrament redæmed vs not). Besides that he sayth, that Christ in the stead of the flesshe and bloud of the Lambe, dyd institute the Sacrament of hys flesh and bloud in figure of bread and wyne. Marke well, he sayth not that in the stead of Lambes flesshe & bloud he dyd institute hys owne flesshe and bloud, but sayth that he dyd institute the Sacrament of hys flesshe & bloud. What thyng is a Sacrament: verely it is the signe of an holy thyng, and there is no differẽce betwene a signe and a Sacrament, but that the signe is referred vnto a worldly thyng, and a Sacrament vnto a spirituall or holy thyng: as S. Austen sayth: Signa (cum ad res diuinas pertinẽt) sacramenta appellantur: That is to say: Signes when they pertain vnto godly things are called sacramentes. Therefore when Beda sayth, that they did institute ¶ Sacrament what it is.

Ad Marcellum.

tute

tute the sacrament of hys flesshe and bloud in the figure of bread & wyne it is as much to say (by S. Austens definition) as that he dyd institute the figure of hys holy flesshe and bloud in the figure of bread and wyne, that is to say, that bread and wyne shoulde be the figure and signe representyng hys holy flesshe and bloud vnto vs, for a perpetuall remembrance. And afterwarde hee declareth the propertie for which the bread is called the body and the wyne the bloud: sayng hée speaketh not so darkely as I now do, but plainly saith, that the bread is mystically referred vnto the bodye of Christ: because that as bread doth strength the flesshe, so Christes bodye whiche is figured by the bread doth strength ẏ soule through fayth in hys death. And so doth he clerely proue my purpose.

Bread and wyne representent vnto vs the flesh and bloud of Christ.

Chrisostō. super. Math. 26.

Now let vs sée what Chrisostome sayth which shall describe vs the faith of the ould gretyās and (I doubt not) he had not lost the true fayth, how so euer the world go now a dayes. Chrisostome sayth in this manner. Si enim mortuus Iesus non est, cuius signum et simbolum hoc sacrificium est? vides quantū ei studiū fuerit vt semper memoria teneamus pro nobis ipsū mortuū fuisse That is to say, for if Iesus haue not died, whose memoriall and signe is ẏ sacrifice? Thou séest what diligence he gaue that we should continuallye kéepe in memory that he died for vs. Here you may sée that Chrisostome calleth the Sacramēt simbolū & signū: that is to say, a memoriall & signe of Christe, and that it was institute to kéepe his death in perpetuall remembraunce. But of one thing thou must beware or els thou art deceiued, he calleth it also a sacrifice, and there thou must wisely vnderstād hym. For if it were the sacrifice of Christes body, thē must Christes body be slayne there agayne, which thing God forbyd. And therfore thou must vnderstand him when he calleth it a sacrifice, that he meaneth it to be a remēbraunce of that holy sacrifice where Christes body was offered on ẏ crosse once for all: For he can be sacrifised no more, seing he is immortall. Notwithstanding our prelates will heare note me of presumption, that I dare bee so bolde to expound his minde on this fashiō: For in déede the take him otherwise, and thinke that it is a very sacrifice. And therfore I will bring one other text, where Chrisostome shall expound him selfe. Chrisostome sayth: Nonne per singulos dies offerrimus? offerrimus quidem, sed ad recordationem mortis eius facientes &c et paulo post. Non aliud sacrificium (sicut pontifex) sed id ipsum semper facimus: magis autem recordationem sacrificij operamur. That is to say, do we not dayly offer or do sacrifice? yes surely, But we do it for the remembraunce of his death, for this sacrifice is an example of that we offer, not an other sacrifice as the Byshoppe (in the olde lawe) dyd, but euer the same: yea rather a remembraunce of the sacrifice, first he sayth that they dayly do sacrifice, but it is in remembraunce of christes death, then hee sayth that the sacrifice is an example of that: Thyrdly he sayth that they offer not an other sacrifice (that is to say an ore or a goate as the Byshops of the old law,) but euer the same, Marke this poynt: for though it séeme at ẏ first sight to make with thē yet doth it make so directlye against them, that they shall neuer be able to auoyde it. Chrisostome sayth they do not offer an other sacrifice as the Byshops dyd, but euer the same. They offer other breade and wyne this day then they did yesterday: they shal say an other Masse to morow thē they dyd this day. Now if this bread and wyne, or the Masse be a sacrifice, then do they offer an other sacrifice, as well as the Byshops of the ould lawe. For this sacrifice did signifie ẏ Christ should come & shed his bloud, as well as the bread, wine & Masse do represent that he hath done it in dede. And therfore if it be a sacrifice, thē do they offer any other sacrifice, representing his passiō, as well as ẏ Bishop of ẏ ould law, But ẏ doth Chrisostome denye, and sayeth that they offer euery day the same. What same? verely euen the same that was done and sacrifised Sacrifice.

Christes body a sacrifice offered on the crosse once for all.

Chrisost. ad Hebre. Home. 17.

The Sacrifice that we offer in bread and wyne is the remembraunce of Christes death.

crificed when Christ shed his bloud, In this sacrifice is Christ bound and buffeted and led from Anna to Cayphas: he is brought to Pilate & condemned: he is scourged and crowned with thorne and nayled on the crosse and his hart opened with a speare, & so shedeth his bloud, for our redemption. Why Chrisostome, and do you the selfe same sacrifice euery day? yea verely. The why doth S. Paule say that Christ is risen from death, and dieth no more, if he dye no more, how do you dayly crucifie hym? Forsoth Paule sayth truth. For we do not actually indede, but onely in a mistery And yet we say, that we do sacrifice hym, and that this is his sacrifice, for the celebration of the sacrament and memory of ỹ passion which we kepe. And for this cause it hath the name of the thing that it doth represent & signifie. And therefore I expounde my mynde by a rethorical correction and say, magis recordationem sacrificij, that is to say, yea rather the remembraunce of the sacrifice. Graunt mercies (good Chrisostome:) now do I perceaueỹ pith of this matter: euen as the masse is the very death and passion of christ so is it a sacrifice. Now it doth but only represent the very death and passion of Christ, therefore it doth follow that the Masse in very dede doth but onely represent a sacrifice. And yet notwithstãdyng many tymes it is called a sacrifice of holy Doctours, and hath the name of ỹ very same thyng that it doth represent & signifie. And euen so we may say of this sacramẽt, that as the Masse is the very sacrifice and passion of Christ, so is the Sacrament his very body & sacrifice that is offered. Now the Masse doth but only represẽt & signifie the passiõ: so the Sacrament doth but onely represent and signifie the body and very sacrifice once offered for euer. Notwithstãdyng many tymes the Masse is called a sacrifice of holy Doctours: and so the Sacrament is called the body and a sacrifice. And hath the name of the very same thyng that it doth represent and signifie.

Roma. 6.

As S. Austen declareth afore ad Bonifacium.

The masse is called a sacrifice, cause it representeth the death & passion of Christ that was sacrificed on the Crosse.

Furthermore Chrisostome sayth. Ipse quoq; bibit ex eo, ne auditis verbis illis dicerent: quid igitur sanguinem bibimus & carnem comedimus? ac ideo perturbarentur. Nam & quando prius de his verba fecit multi solummodo propter verba scandalum passi sunt. Ne igitur tunc id quoq; accideret, primus ipse hoc fecit, vt tranquillo animo ad cõmunicationem misteriorum induceret. That is to say: he also dranke of it, lest whẽ they heard his woordes, they should say, why do we thẽ drinke bloud and eate flesh? and so should be troubled. For when hẽ spake before of those thyngs many of them were offended with his woordes. And because that should not now also chaunce, he hym selfe dranke first of it, that he might cause them to come without feare to the partaking of those misteries: here Chrisostome noteth ỹ Christ dranke of it, to draw them from the grosse vnderstãdyng of his woordes, and by his drinkyng to testifie vnto them that it was not his natural bloud nor his naturall flesh in dede, but onely memorials and representations of his body and bloud. And therfore he called thẽ misteries: that is to say sacramentes. For in this place a Sacrament and a mistery is all one thyng. Notwithstãdyng sometyme this word mistery is more commõ and large in signifying then this worde Sacrament. And I haue shewed you before, that a Sacrament is the signe of an holy thyng it selfe, that it representeth: albeit some tyme it beare the name of the very thyng it selfe, as the Image of S. Peter is not S. Peter him selfe and yet it beareth his name.

Math. 26.

Christ by drinkyng of the cup, dyd shewe the mistery and that it was no naturall nor carnall bloud.

Chrisostome sayth. Caro non prodest quicq̃: hoc est secundum spiritum verba mea audienda sunt. Qui secundum carnem audit, nihil lucratur, nihil vtilitatis accipit. Et paulò post. Quid est autẽ carnaliter intelligere? simpliciter vt res dicuntur, neq; aliud quippiam excogitare. Misteria omnia interioribus oculis considerãda sunt, hoc est spiritualiter. That is to say. The flesh profiteth nothing: that is, my woordes must be vnderstãd after the spirit. He that vnderstãdeth them after ỹ flesh wynneth nothyng, nor taketh any profit. And a litle after

All misteryes must be considered spiritually.

What meaneth this, to understand after the flesh or carnally? verely to take the thynges simply as they are spoken, and to thinke no other thyng. All misteries or Sacramentes must be considered with the inward eyes, that is to say, spiritually.

And after he expoundeth him selfe on this maner. Interiores autem oculi vt panem viderint, creaturas transuolant, & non de illo pane a pistore cocto cogitãt: sed de eo qui dixit se panẽ vitæ, qui per misticum panẽ significatur. That is to say. The inward eyes as sone as they se the bread, they passe ouer the creatures, & thinke not of that bread which is baken of the baker, but of hym that called him selfe the bread of lyfe which is signified by the misticall or sacramentall bread. Would you haue hym say any more? hee telleth you playne, that Christ which is the very bread of lyfe, is signified by this sacramentall bread. And that is the thyng whiche our Bysshops so fleshly denye now a dayes, which thyng yet you may se the old fathers conclude with one assent. Notwithstãdyng yet I will alledge mo old Doctours, so that from hence forward they may be ashamed to call it new learnyng.

The plaine saying of Chrisostome.

Fulgentius. 3. Lib. de fide.

Fulgentius sayth. In illis enim carnalibus (tempore legis) victimis, significatio fuit carnis Christi, quam pro peccatis nostris, & ipse sine peccato fuerat oblaturus, & sanguinis quem erat effusurus in remissionem peccatorum nostrorum. In isto autem sacrificio gratiarum actio atq; commemoratio est carnis Christi quam pro nobis obtulit, & sanguinis quem pro nobis idem Deus effudit. That is to say. In these carnall sacrifices (in the time of the law) was a signification of the flesh of christ which he without sinne, should offer for our sinnes, & of the bloud which he should shed out in remission of our sinnes. But in this sacrifice is a thãkes geuyng & remembraunce of the flesh of Christ whiche hee offered for vs, and of the bloud which the same God shed out for vs. First note that hè calleth it a sacrifice which notwithstãdyng is but a remẽbraũce of that sacrifice offered on the crosse once for all, as it is proued before out of Chrisostome. Then hè playnly calleth it a thankes geuyng, & remembraunce of Christes flesh and bloud: and so concludeth with vs. Nevertheless because Sophisters wold sone thinke to auoyde this place, I will alledge one other saying of the same author, whiche they shall neuer be able to auoyde.

The Sacrament of Christes body is a thankes geuyng.

Fulgentius saith, as Haymo testifieth. Hic calix nouum Testamentũ est: id est, hic calix quem vobis trado, nouum Testamentum significat. That is to say This cup or chalice is the new Testament: That is, this cup or chalice which I deliuer you doth signifie the new Testamẽt. In this place he doth playnly shew his mynde, whiche can not be auoyded. For euen as the cup is the new Testament, so is the bread the body. Now the cup doth but signifie the new Testament, and therefore I may conclude that the breade doth but signifie the body.

Fulgentius.

This cup is the new Testamẽt, is as much as this cup signifieth the new testament.

Eusebius sayth. Quia corpus assũptum ablaturus erat ex oculis nostris & sideribus allaturus, necessarium erat vt nobis in hac die sacramentum corporis & sanguinis consecraret, vt colleretur iugiter per misterium quod semel offerabatur in precium. That is ta say, Because he would take away out of our eyes the body that he toke and cary it into heauen, It was necessary that in this time he should consecrate to vs the sacrament of his body and bloud that that which was once offerd for the price of our redemption, should continually be honored through the mistery.

Eusebius.

Consecrat.

To consecrate a thing, is to aply it vnto an holy vse. Here you may see ỹ he calleth it the sacrament of his body and bloud, which body is caried vp in the heauen: And also he calleth it a mistery whiche is inough for them that will see.

Also Druthmarius, expoundeth these wordes this is my body on this manner: Hoc est corpus meum in misterio. That is to say: this is my body in a mistery. I thinke you know what a mistery meaneth, Christ is crucified euery day in a mistery: that is to say euery day his death is repreſeted by the the sacramentes of remembraunce. The Passe is Christes passion in a misterye: that is to say: the Passe doth representhis passion and kéepeth it in our memory. The bred is Christes body in a misterye: that is to say, it representeth his body that was broken for vs, and kéepeth it in our remembraunce

You haue heard all ready the mind of the doctours how the sacrament is Christes body. And now I shall shew you how the sacrament is our body, which doth not a litell helpe to the vnderstanding of these wordes which are in controuersie. The sacrament of the aulter is our body as well as it is Christes body. And euen as it is our body, so is it Christes. But there is no man that can say that it is our naturall bodie in déede, but onely a figure, signe, memoriall or representation of our body. Wherfore it must also followe, that it is but onlye a figure, signe, memoriall or representation of Christes body. The first part of this argumēt may thus be proued S. Austen writyng in a sermon sayth on this manner. Corpus ergo Christi si vultis intelligere, apostolum audite dicētem, Vos estis corpus Christi & mēbra. 1. Cor. 12. Si ergo estis corpus Christi et membra, misterium vestrumque in mēsa Domini positum est, misterium Domini accipitis, ad id quod estis, Amen respondetis, & respondendo subscribitis. That is to say: If you will vnderstand the body of Christ, heare ỳ apostle which sayth, ye are the body of Christ and members. 1 Cor. 12. therfore if ye be the body of Christ & members, your misterie is put vpon the Lordes table ye receiue the misterie of the Lord, vnto ỳ you are, you aunswere Amen And in aunswering subscribe vnto it. Here may you sée that the sacrament is also our body, and yet is not our naturall body, but onely our body in a misterie, that is to say, a figure, signe, memorial or representation of our body, for as the bread is made of many graines or cornes, so we (though we be many) are one bread & one body. And for this propertie and similitude it is cauled our body and beareth the name of the very thing which it doth represent and signifie.

The Sacrament how it is our body.

Augustinus in sermone adinfantes.

Agayne S. Austen sayth. Quia Christus passus est pro nobis, commendauit nobis in isto sacramento corpus et sanguinem suum, quod etiam fecit & nos ipsos. Nam et nos ipsius corpus facti sumus, & per misericordiam ipsius quod accipimus nos sumus. Et postea dicit. Iā in nomine Christi tanquam ad calicem Domini veniſtis, ibi vos estis in mensa & ibi vos estis in calice. That is, because Christ hath suffered for vs, he hath betaken vnto vs in this sacrament his bodie and bloud which he hath also made euen our selues. For we also are made his body, and by his mercy we are euen the same thing that we receiue. And after he sayth, now in ỳ name of Christ ye are come, as a man would say, to the chalice of the Lord, there are ye vpon the table and there are ye in ỳ chalice. Here you may sée, that the sacrament is our body. And yet it is not our naturall body, but onely in a misterye as it is before sayd.

Aug. in sermo. de sacra feria pascha.

Here you may see that ỳ Sacrament is our body.

Furthermore S. Austen sayth. Hūc itaque cibum & potum societatem vult intellegi corporis & membrorum suorum quod est sancta ecclesia in prædestinatis et vocatis, et iustificatis, et glorificatis sanctis & fidelibus eius. Huius rei sacramētum alicubi quotidie, alicubi certis inter vallis dierū in dominico preparatur, & de mensa Domini sumitur, quibusdā ad vitam, quibusdam ad exitium. Res vero ipsa cuius est omni homini ad vitam nulli ad exitium, quicūque eius particeps fuerit. That is to say, he will that this meat and drinke should be vnderstād to be the felowship of his body & mēbers, which is the holy Church in the predestinate, and called and iustified and glorified his saintes & faythfull, The sacrament of this thing is prepared in some place dayly, & in some place at certaine appoynted dayes, as on ỳ Sonday And it is receiued from the table of the Lord, to some vnto life, and to some vnto destruction, but the thing it selfe whose sacrament this is, is receiued of all men vnto life and of no man to destruction, who so euer is partaker of it. Here doth S. Austen Auguſt. de sacra feria pascha.

S. Austen calleth it by the name of Sacramēt meanyng the figure, signe or token of Christes body &c.

Auſten firſt ſay, that thys ſacrament is the fellowſhip of hys bodye and members which are we. And yet it is not our naturall bodye, as is before ſayd. And then he ſayth, that the Sacrament of thys thyng is receaued of ſome vnto life and ſaluation, and of ſome vnto death and damnation, for both faythfull and vnfaythfull may receiue the ſacrament. And after he ſayth, that the thing it ſelfe whoſe ſacrament it is, is receiued of all men vnto lyfe, and of no man vnto deſtruction, who ſo euer is partaker of it. And of this ſaying it muſt nedes follow, that onely the faythfull eate Chriſtes body, and the vnfaithfull eate not: For he is receiued of no mã vnto deſtruction. And of this it muſt alſo follow that the ſacrament is not Chriſtes body in dæde, but onely in a myſterye, for if the ſacrament were his naturall bodye, then ſhould it follow, that ỳ vnfaithfull ſhould receiue his bodye, which is contrarye to the minde of S. Auſten, and againſt all truth. Thus haue we ſufficiently proued the firſt parte of our argument, that the ſacrament is our body, as well as it is Chriſtes. And now will I proue the ſecond part more plainely although it be inough declared all ready, to them that haue eares, that euen as it is our bodye ſo is it Chriſtes.

The wicked and vnfaythfull do not receaue the body of Chriſt and yet they receaue the Sacramẽt to their dãnation.

Fyrſt yon ſhall vnderſtand that in the wyne whiche is called Chriſtes bloud, is admired water, which doth ſignifie the people that are redemed with hys bloud: ſo that ỳ head which is Chriſt, is not without hys bodye which is the faythfull people, nor the body without hys head. Nowe if the wyne when it is conſecrated, be turned bodely into Chriſtes bloud, then is it alſo neceſſarye that the water which is admixed be bodely turned into the bloud of the faythfull people. For where as is one conſecration muſt follow one operatiõ. And where as is lyke reaſon, there muſt followe lyke myſtery. But whatſoeuer is ſignified by the water as concerning the faythfull people, is taken ſpiritually. Therefore whatſoeuer is ſpoken of the bloud in the wine, muſt alſo nedes be taken ſpiritually. Thys reaſon is not myne, but it is made by one Bartram vppon a 700. yeares ſince, when thys matter was firſt in diſputation. Whereupon at the inſtance of great Charles the Emperor he made a boke profeſſing euen the ſame thyng that I do, and proueth by the olde Doctors & faythfull fathers, that the Sacrament is Chriſtes body in a myſtery, that is to ſay, a ſigne, figure or memorial of hys body which was broken for vs, and not hys naturall body. And therefore that doctrine is new which otherwyſe teacheth, & not mine, which is not myne, but the doctrine of Chriſt and of the olde fathers of Chriſtes Church, till Antichriſt began to ſit and reigne in the temple of God.

Bartram.

The Sacrament is Chriſtes body in a myſtery.

Beſides that Cyprian ſayth, that the people is annexed in the Sacrament through the mixture of water. Therefore I maruell me much that they are ſo contentious and will not ſée, that as the water is the people, ſo the wyne is Chriſtes bloud, that is to ſay, in a myſtery, becauſe it repreſenteth Chriſtes bloud, as ỳ water doth the people.

Cyprianus ad cecilũ.

As water is the people, ſo wine is Chriſtes bloud.

Furthermore Euſebius ſayth: Dũ in ſacramentis vino aqua miſcetur, Chriſto fidelis populus incorporatur & iungitur, & quandam ei copula perfecta charitatis vnitur. That is to ſay. Whiles in the Sacrament water is admixte with the wyne, the faythfull people is incorporate and ioyned with Chriſt, and is made one with hym, with a certayn knot of perfite charitie. Now where he ſayth, that we are ioyned and incorporate with Chriſt, what fondneſſe were it to contend, ſith we are there onely in a myſtery, and not naturally: to contend I ſay with ſuch pertinacitie that hys naturall bodye muſt be there: and not rather that he is ioyned with vs, as we are ioyned with hym and both in a myſtery, by the knot of perfite charitie.

Euſebius.

Why ỳ mixture of water & wine, ỳ faythfull people are incorporate with Chriſt.

of Gods word in euery other place and seeke an allegorie, and forsake the playne common sense. For he confesseth that he would not so do saue for necessitie: because (as he sayth) that the cómon literall sense is impossible. For the thing he saith that is ment therby cā not be true: That is to witte, that the very body of Christ can be in the sacrament, because the sacrament is in many diuers places at once, and was at the Maundy: that is to witte, in the handes of Christ and euery of his Apostles mouthes. And at that time it was not glorified. And then he sayth that Christes body not being glorified, could no more be in two places at once then his owne can. And yet he goeth after further, and sayth no more it can whē it is glorified too. And that he proueth by the saying of Saint Austen, whose wordes be, that the bodye with which Christ arose, must be in one place. &c.

Frith. Hetherto hath M. More reasoned reasonably: but now he beginneth to decline from the dignitie of diuinitie into the dirtie dregges of vayne sophistrye. For where I say that I must of necessitie sēke an allegorie because the literall sense is impossible, and cā not be true, meaning that it can not stand with the processe of Scripture, but that other textes doe of necessitie constrayne me to construe it spiritually: There catcheth he thys worde (can) and thys worde (impossible) and would make men beleue that I ment, it coulde not bee true because reason can not reach it, but thinketh it impossible. And there he triūpheth (before the victory) and would know what article of our fayth I coulde assigne, in which reason shall not driue awaye the strength of my prowfe, and make me leaue ỳ literall sense wherin my prowfe shoulde stand, and send me to sēke an allegorye that might stand with reason, and driue away ỳ fayth. But now deare brethren, sith I speak not of the impossibilitie of reason, but of the impossibilitie to stand with other textes of Scripture, ye may sēe ỳ thys royall reasō is not worth a rush. Thē would he fayne know the place where S. Austen so sayth, which thing although it were harde for me to tell, sith I haue not hys bookes to looke for it, yet I thanke God my memorye is not so bad, but I cā shew hym where he shall finde it. And because I thinke that hee is more accustomed to the Popes lawes then to Saint Austens workes (sith hee is become the Prelates proctour and patrone) I say he shall not fayle but find it in hys lawes de consecratione. And where as hee would wrest the words of S. Austen, which sayth that the bodye in which Christ arose, must nēedes bee in one place: saying that he might meane, not that hys body myght not be in diuers places at once, but that it muste be in one place, that is to say, in some one place or other, he speaketh (sayth M. More) nothyng of the sacrament, nor sayth not hys body with which he rose must nēedes be in one place, that it can by no possibilitie be in any moe. Thys seemeth to some a godly glose, and yet it shall proue but a vayne euasion. For if a man woulde saye that the kings graces body must be in one place, and then an other woulde expound ỳ notwithstādyng hys wordes hys graces body might be in two places at once: I thinke mē myght some iudge that he delighted to delaye, and myght say, what nēde hee to determine, that he must be in one place, except he thought in deede, ỳ he myght be in no moe but onely one. And though men myght so argue on other mens words, yet of S. Austens words thys must nēdes follow, for he bringeth them in (as God would) by a contrary Antitheſis saying: Corpus in quo resurrexit in vno loco esse oportet, veritas autem eius vbiq; diffusa est. That is to say. Hys body wherein he rose, must be in one place, but hys truth is dispersed in all places. Where he plainly concludeth by the cōtrary Antitheſis, that as hys truth is dispersed in all places, so must hys body nēdes be in one place onely. As by example, if a man shoulde say: The kyng hys graces bodye must needes be in one place, but hys power is throughout hys realme. Where no mã doubteth, but that in saying one place, he meaneth one place onely. And therefore though in some place, ẏ worde must, doth not signifie such a necessitie as excludeth all possibilitie, yet in thys place it doth so signifie, as the contrary Antithesis doth evidently expresse.

And where ye say, that he speaketh nothing of the sacrament, I would ye should sticke still to that saying. For thys is playne, that he speaketh of his naturall body, and therefore if hee speake not of ẏ sacrament, then haue you concluded that the sacrament is not hys naturall body: the contrary whereof you would haue mẽ beleue. Thus haue I shewed evidence, both where he shall finde the wordes of S. Austen, and also that I haue rightly alleaged them.

Notwithstandyng sith he maketh so much of hys paynted sheth, I shall alleage hym more authoritye that Christes naturall body is in one place onely. Which thyng proued, doth vterly conclude ẏ the Sacramẽt is not his naturall body, but only a memoriall and a representation of the same. And first let vs see S. Austens mynde.

August. ad Dardanũ. S. Austen writyng vnto Dardanus doth playnly proue that the naturall body of Christ must nedes be in one place only, and also ẏ his soule can bee but in one place at once. The occasiõ of his Epistle is this: Dardanus dyd write vnto S. Austen for the expositiõ of those wordes that Christ spake vnto the theefe saying: This day shalt thou be wt me in Paradise: and will not how he should vnderstãd it, whether Christ mẽt that the theefe should be in Paradise with Christes soule, or with his body, or with his Godhead: Thereupon S. Austen writeth that as touchyng Christes body, that day it was in the sepulchre. And saith that it was not Paradise, although it were in a gardẽ that he was buryed. For Christ (he sayth) ment of a place of ioy: And that was not (sayth S. Austen) in hys sepulchre: And as for Christes soule, it was that day in hel, and no man will say, that Paradise was there. Wherefore (sayth S. Austen) the text must nedes bee vnderstand, that Christ spake it of his Godhead. Now marke this Argument of S. Austen, and ye shall see my purpose playnly proued. For seing he expoundeth this text vpõ Christes Godhead, because his manhode as touching the body, was in the graue, and as touchyng his soule, was in hell: you may soone perceiue, that S. Austen thought that whilest his body was in ẏ graue, it was not in Paradise to: & because his soule was in hell, it could not be in paradise also. And therfore he verifieth the text vppon his diuinitie. For if he had thought that Christes body or soule might haue bene in diuerse places at once, hee would not haue sayd, that the text must nedes be vnderstand of his diuinitie, but it might full well, yea & much better haue ben vnderstand of his manhode. Marke well this place which doth determine the doubt of this matter. Notwithstandyng the faythfull father leaueth not the matter on this fashion, but also taketh away such fonde imaginations as would cause men to surmise, that Christes body should be in moe places at once then one. For he saith Cauendum est ne ita diuinitatem astruamus hominis, vt veritatẽ auferamus corporis. Non est autem consequens vt quod in Deo est, ita sit vbiq;. Nam & de nobis veracissime Scriptura dicit, quod in illo viuimus, mouemur & sumus. Nec tamẽ sicut ille, vbiq; sumus, sed aliter homo ille in Deo, quoniã & aliter Deus in illo homine, proprio quodam & singulari modo. Una enim persona Deus & homo est, & vtrumq; est vnus Christus Iesus, vbiq; per id quod Deus est, in cœlo autem per id quod homo. That is to say we must beware that we doe not so affirme the diuinitie of the man, that we take away the truth of his body. For it foloweth not that the thyng whiche is in God should be in euery place as God is. For the Scripture doth truly testifie on vs, that we lyue, moue and be in hym. And yet are we not in euery place as he is. Howbeit, that man is otherwise in God, and God otherwise in that man by a certaine

How S. Austen laboureth to proue that Christes body might not be in mo places at once then in one.

What Christ ment by thys worde Paradise.

taine peculiar and singular way: For God and mā is one person, and both of them one Christ Jesu whiche is in euery place in that he is God, and in heauen, in that he is mā. Here S. Austen doth say, that if we should graūt Christ to be in all places as touchyng his manhode, we should take awaye the truth of his body. For though his manhode be in God, and God in hys manhode, yet it foloweth not, that it should bee in euery place, as God is. And after hee concludeth that as touchyng hys Godhead hee is in euery place, and as touchyng his manhode hee is in heauen. What nēde he to make these woordes and Antitheſis, but because hee thought verely that though hys Godhead were in euery place, yet his manhode was in heauen onely.

If we affirme that the body of Christ is in many places at one instant, thē we should take away the truth of his body.

But yet this holy Doctour goeth further (so that they may be ashamed of their party) and sayth. Secundum hominem namque in terra erat, non in cœlo (vbi nunc est) quando dicebat, nemo ascendit in cœlū nisi qui descendit de cœlo, filius hominis qui est in cœlo. That is to say, as touching his manhod he was in the earth and not in heauen (where he now is) when he sayd, no man ascendeth into heauen but he ꝑ descended from heauen, the sonne of man which is in heauē. Now I trust you will be content and let the truth ꝑed. For I am sure it is not possible for you to auoyde it for he sayeth, that as touching his manhode he was in the earth and not in heauen, when he spake those woordes: & so ꝓued that he was not in mo places at once then onely one place. For els yf S. Austen had thought ꝑ he could haue bene in mo places at once then one with his body, then might he not haue sayd, that he was in earth and not in heauen. For then a man might sone haue deluded hym & haue sayde Austen you can not tell, for he may be in euery place. But they that so thinke after S. Austens mynde, do take away ꝑ truth of his naturall body, and make it a very phantasticall body: from the which heresie God deliuer his saythfull. Besides this S. Austen doth saye. Christum Dominum nostrum vnigenitum DEI filium equalē patri, eundemque hominis filium, quo maior est pater, & vbique totum presentem esse non dubites tanquam Deum, & in eodem templo DEI esse verum DEVM, & in aliena parte cœli propter corporis modum. That is to say, doubt not but that Christ our Lord the onely begotten sonne of God equall to the Father and the same being the sonne of man wherin the father is greater, is hole ꝓsent in all places as touching hys Godhed and dwelleth in the same temple of God, as God, and in some place of heauen for the conditiō of his very body. Here is it euident by S. Austens woordes that as touching his godhed he is in all places, and as touching his manhode he is onlye in heauen, yea and not that onely, but that he being in heauen as touching the measure, nature, condicion, and qualitye of his naturall body, is only in one certaine place in heauen, and not in many places at once. Thus much is ꝓued out of S. Austen.

Christ as touching his Godhead is in all places.

Thys truth is not onely ꝓued by S. Austens authoritie, but also by ꝑ noble clerke Fulgentius which writeth on this maner. Unus idemq; homo localis ex homine, qui est Deus immensus ex patre, vnus idemq; secundum humanam substātiam absens cœlo cum esset in terra, & derelinquens terram, cum ascendisset in cœlum. Secundum diuinam vero immensamq; substantiam, nec cœlū dimittens cum de cœlo descendit, nec terram deserens, cum ad cœlum ascendit: Quod ipsius Domini certissimo sermone potest cognosci, qui vt localem ostenderet suam humanitatem, dicit Discipulis suis: Ascendo ad patrem meum & patrem vestrum, Deum meum & Deum vestrum, De Lazaro quoq; cum dixisset, Lazarus mortuus est, adiunxit dicens, & gaudeo propter vos (vt credatis) quoniā non erā ibi immensitatem vero suæ diuinitatis ostendens Discipulis dicit: Ecce ego vobiscum sum vsque ad consummationem sæculi. Quomodo autem ascendit in cœlum nisi quia localis & verus est homo, aut quomodo adest fidelibus suis, nisi quia idē immensus & verus Deus est. That is to say. The same one man is locall (that is to say, conteined in one place) as touchyng his manhode, which is also God vnmeasurable from the father: the same one man as touchyng the substaunce of his manhode, was absent from heauen, when hee was in earth, and forsakyng the earth, when he ascended into heauen, but as touchyng his godly & vnmeasurable substaunce neither forsoke heauen whē he descended from heauē, nor forsoke the earth, when he ascēded vnto heauen. Which may be knowen by the most sure word of the Lord which to shew his humanitie to be locall (that is to say, contained in one place onely) dyd say vnto his Disciples. I ascēd vnto my father and your father, my God and your God, of Lazarus also when hee sayd, Lazarus is dead, hee said further, I am glad for your sakes (that you may beleue) for that I was not there. And agayne, shewyng the vnmeasurablenesse of his Godhead, he sayd vnto his Disciples, behold I am with you vnto the worldes ende, how dyd he ascendē into heauen, but because he is locall and a very man? Or how is he present vnto his faythfull, but because he is vnmeasurable & very God? Here may you conclude by the authority of this Doctour also, that Christes body is onely in one place at once. For he saith, that Christ as touchyng his manhod is locall: that is to say, conteined in one place onely. And that hee proueth by the Scripture euen of Christes owne wordes. Now if this be true (as my conscience doth testifie, how so euer other men shall Judge) then must it nēdes folow that his naturall body can not be in the Sacrament. And the authoritie, I am sure no man can auoyde, it is so playne.

Christ ascended into heauen, because he is locall and a very man.

More. Now as for his natural reasōs be not worthy the reasonyng. For first that the body of Christ vnglorified could no more be in ij. places at once then his owne can, because he is a naturall body, as he is. I will not examine no cōparison betwen there ij. bodyes: but if Christ wold tell me that he would eche of both their bodyes to be in fiftene places at once, I would beleue hym, and would neuer aske hym whether he would first glorifie them or not. But I am sure glorified or vnglorified, if he sayd it, hee is able to do it. For the matter is not impossible to God.

Truth it is, that if Christ so sayd & in so saying so mēt, there is no doubt, but he were able so to do. But that he in dēde so grossely ment ye shall neuer proue. And in dēde if he had so meant that hys owne body naturall should haue continued in the Sacrament which is the meate of the soule through fayth, and not of the body by eatyng it, and may as well be eaten through faith although it remayne in heauen, as if it were here present to our mouthes: if I say he had so ment, thē wold he neuer haue geuē vs such Scriptures as he dyd. For I say, that this grosse imagination may not stād with the processe of the Scripture whiche is receiued as it shall appeare by certaine textes. Frith.

1. First where our Sauiour sayth: ỹ flesh profiteth nothyng. The waight of those wordes doth compell vs to vnderstād our matter spiritually, for by this short sentence we are no lesse plucked backe frō the carnall eatyng, thē was Nichodemus that he should not once dreame of the carnall regeneratiō, when Christ sayd vnto hym: that what soeuer was of ỹ flesh was flesh. For this is a playne conclusion, that when Christ sayd, the flesh profiteth nothyng, hee ment it euen of hys own flesh that it could not profite (as they vnderstode hym) to be eatē with the teeth. Albeit it doth much profite to bee slayne for our redemption and eaten thorough fayth. Whiche thyng we may do, although his natural flesh be not in ỹ sacrament. For I may as well beleue in hym (though he be in heauen) as if he were in earth and in the Sacrament, & before myne eyes. And that Christ spake these wordes of his owne body, it is playne by S. Austens wordes writyng vppon the same place: And therefore he sayth, that they must be vnderstand spiritually, and addeth: if thou vnderstand them

The flesh profiteth nothing.

The flesh of Christ profiteth much if it be eaten with fayth.

August. tract. super 6. Ioan.

them spiritually, they are spirite and lyfe. And though thou vnderstād thē carnally, yet neuertheles they are spirite and lyfe: But vnto thē they are not spirite and lyfe, which vnderstandest not spiritually, those things that I haue spoken.

Also Athanasius sayth. Spiritus est qui viuificat, caro nō prodest quicq̄, verba quæ ego locutus sum, spiritus sunt & vita. Nam & hoc loco vtrumquè de seipso dicit carnem & spiritum, & spiritū ab eo quod est secundum carnem distinxit, vt non solum visibile, sed etiam inuisibile quod in ipso erat credentes discant, quod & ea quæ dicit nō sunt carnalia, sed spiritualia. Quod enim comedētibus sufficisset corpus, vt totius mundi alimonia fiat? Sed ea propter meminit ascensus filij hominis in cœlum vt illos a corporali cogitatione auelleret, & post hac discant carnem dictam cibum cœlestem superne veniētem & spiritualem alimoniam quā ipse det, nā quæ locutus sum (inquit) vobis spiritus sunt & vita. That is to say, it is the spirite that quickeneth, the flesche profiteth nothyng: the wordes whiche I speake vnto you, are spirite & lyfe. For in this place also hee meaneth both of his owne flesche and his owne spirite, & he deuided the spirite from the flesh: that they might know through fayth not onely ỳ visible part but also ỳ visible part ỳ was in hym, & also that the wordes which he spake were not carnall, but spirituall. For what body shold haue suffised to haue ben the meate of all ỳ worlde? And euē therfore dyd he make mention of the Ascension of the sonne of man into heauē, that he might withdraw them frō the bodley imagination, that they might hereafter learne, that the flesh was called heauenly meate which cōmeth from aboue and spiritual meate whiche hee would geue. For (sayth Christ) the wordes that I haue spokē vnto you, are spirite and lyfe. Here you may see that Christ spake it of his owne flesche, and ment playnly that it dyd nothyng profite, as infidelles dyd vnderstād hym. For els it geueth life, as it is receiued of the faythfull in a mysterie. For as Bartram sayth, in this mysterie of the body and bloud, is a spiritual operation which geueth lyfe. Without the whiche operation those mysteries do nothyng profite, for surely (sayth hee) they may fede the body, but the soule they can not fede.

Athanasius 3. lib. qui dix. Verb.

Bartram.

The bread and wyne in the Sacrament why they are called mysteries.

2. Besides that the Scripture sayth, that, that entreth in by ỳ mouth doth not defile a man, for as Christ sayth, it is cast forth into the draught. And by the same reason it followeth that it doth not sanctifie or make a man holy. But the Sacrament entreth in by the mouth: therfore it doth folow that (of it selfe) it doth not sāctifie or make holy, & of this text should folow two inconueniences, if the Sacrament were the naturall body of Christ. First it should folow that the body of Christ should not sanctifie the faythfull because it entreth in by ỳ mouth. And agayne it should folow, that the body of Christ should be cast out into the draught, whiche thyng is abominable. Wherefore it must nedes folow, that the Sacrament can not be hys naturall body.

If the Sacrament of the body of Christ, were his naturall body, thē note what inconueniences must folow

3. Furthermore Christ would not suffer that deuoute woman which of loue sought hym at hys sepulture, to touch hys naturall body, because she lacked a poynt of fayth, and dyd not count hym to be equall with hys father. And much more it shall follow that the wicked which haue no fayth nor loue towardes hym, shall not be suffered to eate hys flesche with theyr teeth, and swallowe it into their vncleane bodyes: for that were much more then to touch hym. And yet notwithstandyng they receaue and eate the Sacrament. Wherupon it should follow, if the sacrament were hys naturall body, that they should in deede eate hys body: which thyng may be counted a blasphemye agaynst God. Moreouer Christ sayth, he that eateth my flesche & drinketh my bloud, dwelleth in me and I in hym. Now we know right well that the wicked doe eate the Sacrament, and yet neither dwell in Christ, nor Christ in them. Wherefore it must followe that the Sacrament is not the very flesche of Christ. And surely I can not excuse

The wicked may not nor can not eate the body of Christ.

The wicked eate the Sacramēt, but yet dwell not in Christ.

them of blasphemye, which so direcly contrary Christes wordes.

How can you auoyde these tertes which Christ speaketh vnto hys disciples saying: yet a little while am I with you, and then I depart to hym that sent me. And agayne: It is expedient for you that I depart. For except that I departe, that comforter shall not come vnto you. And agayn he sayth: I forsake the world and go to my father. And to be short he saith: Poore men ye shall euer haue with you, but me shall you not euer haue. Now we know right well that hys Godhead is in all places, and that as touchyng hys Godhead hee forsoke not the world, when he ascended vnto his father. Wherfore it must nedes follow that he forsoke it as touching hys flesshe and manhode. And thereto agreeth the expositions of S. Austen and Fulgentius before alleaged, yea and al other old faithful fathers. Now if he haue forsaken the world as touching the presence of hys naturall flesshe and manhode (as all Doctors define) then ment he not that hys naturall flesshe shoulde be present in the Sacrament, to bee eaten with our teeth: And therfore though Christ so tell you, yet must you take hym as hee meaneth, or els you be begyled. For if ye thinke that God both maye and will fulfill and verifye all thynges according to the letter as he speaketh them, I may call you an obedient mā, as S. Bernard doth hys Monk Adam. And may say (as he doth) that if that be the right way, so simply to receaue all thyng, we may put out the terte of Scripture which warneth vs to be wise as Serpentes. For the text following is sufficient, which biddeth vs to be simple as Doues.

Iohn. 6.

Math. 26.
Mark. 14.
Iohn. 12.

Why doth your maistership graunt a necessary allegorye, whē Paul sayth, Christ is a stone, or whē Christ sayth that he is a dore? The scripture sayth hee is both twaine, and syth God so sayth, he is able so to make it. And therfore by your reason we shall nede none allegorye in all scripture, and then he that is most simple and foolish, may be counted most faythfull. And so shall we nede no faythfull fathers to expoūd the tert, but it shall be most merite, to beleue the letter. Thys I denye not, but that God coulde haue done it if he had so intended, when he spake the wordes: But now ỳ scripture standyng as it doth, I thinke he can not doe it. As by example: I thinke that God by the bloud of hys sonne Christ myght haue saued all men, both faythfull and vnfaythfull, if he had so intended, and that it had so pleased hym. But now the Scriptures standyng as they do, I say hee can not doe it, and that it is impossible for hym. For then he might make hys sonne a lyer which sayth: He that beleueth not is damned. And againe: He that beleueth not shall not see life, but the wrath of God abydeth vpon hym. And euen as it is impossible to stand with the processe of Scripture, (wherin God hath declared his will) that the vnfaythfull shoulde be saued although God might haue done it at the first if he had so would. Likewise it is impossible, the Scriptures standing as they do, that the naturall body of Christ shoulde be present to our teeth in the Sacrament. And as for our fayth, it nedeth not to haue hym present in the bread. For I may as wel eate him and drinke him through fayth, that is to say, beleue in hym, as though he were as present in the Sacrament, as he was hanging on the Crosse.

God may do all thing but yet so as he cānot denye hys truth, neither restore virginitie. &c. Iohn. 3.

The naturall body of Christ is not present to our teeth in the Sacrament.

1. And because you say, that my naturall reasons be not worth the reasoning. I will alledge you some moe, to see what you can say to them. First euery sacrament is the signe of an holy thyng: but the sacrament of the altar is a sacrament (as all faythfull mē confesse) ergo it must follow that the sacrament of the altar is the signe of an holy thyng. Now if it be the signe of an holy thyng, then it is not the holy thyng it selfe which it doth signifie and represent. Why shoulde we then feare, to call that bread a figure, that is to say, a sacrament of that holy body of our Lord and Sauiour.

Argumēts to proue that Christes naturall body is not in the Sacramēt of his body and bloud.

2. Besides that I woulde know of what necessitie or profite hys flesshe must must be present in the sacrament. For the presence of hys flesshe can no more profite vs, then doth the remẽbrance of hys body, but thys remembraunce may as well be done by the sacramẽt, as though hys bodye were present, And therefore sith God and nature make nought in vayne, it followeth cõsequently, ẏ his naturall flesh is not there, but onely a memoriall therof.

3. Furthermore the end and finall cause of a thyng is euer better then those thynges which are prouided for the end (as the house is better then the lyme, stone, and timber, which are prouided for the house) but the ende and finall cause of the sacrament is the remembraunce of Christes body: and thereupon it must followe that if the sacrament be hys naturall bodye, that the remembraunce of Christes body should be better then hys body it selfe. Which thyng is to be abhorred of all faythfull men.

4. It were fondnes to sayne that the soule did otherwise eate then do the Angels in heauen, and their meate is only the Ioy and delectation that they haue of God and of his glory, and euen so doth the soule which is here vpon the earth eate through fayth the body of Christ which is in heauen. For it deliteth and reioyceth whiles it vnderstandeth through fayth, that Christ hath taken our sinnes vpon him, and pacified the fathers wrath. Neyther it is necessarie that for that purpose, this cause, that his flesh should be present. For a man may as well loue and reioyce in the thing, which is from him & not present, as though it were present by hym of that manner.

The ioyfull eatyng of Christ, is by fayth.

5. Moreouer the bread is Christes body, euen as ẏ breaking of ẏ bread is the death of his body. Now the breaking of bread at the maundy is not the very death of Christes body, but onely a representatiõ of the same (al be it the minde through fayth doth spiritually behold his very death) & euen likewise that naturall bread is not the very body of our Lord, but only a sacrament, signe, memoriall, or representation of this same, albeit through the monition therof ẏ mynde through fayth, doth spiritually behold the very body: And surely therof if a man be faythfull, the spirite of God worketh in his hart very swẽtely at his communion.

6. Finally, it was not lawfull to eate or drinke the blond not onely of man but also of a brute beaste, and the Apostels them selues moued by ẏ rule of Charitie, did institute ẏ mẽ should abstayne from blond, somewhat fauoring the infirmitie of ẏ Iewes. Now if the Apostels had taught (as ye do) that in the sacrament his very flesshe and blond is eaten and dronke with the teth and mouth of faythfull and vnfaythfull, what could haue bene a greater occasion to haue excluded the Iewes from Christes fayth euen at once? Thinke you that Apostles would not haue bene to scrupulous to haue dronkẽ his very blond: seing it was so playne agaynst Moses lawe if they had vnderstand hym so grossely as ye do? Peter had a cloth sent downe from heauen, in which were all manner of beastes forbidden by ẏ law, and was commaunded to slay & eate them. And he aunswered, God forbid for I neuer eate any vncleane thing, meaning therby that he neuer eate any thing forbidden by the law. Wherof it must nedes follow that either he neuer receiued the sacramẽt (whiche is playne false) or elles that hee more spiritually vnderstode the wordes of Christes maundic, then ye fallye sayne. For it was plainely forbidden by the law, to eate or drinke any maner of blond. And I know but one reason that they haue which they count insoluble: how be it by Godes grace we shall sone auoyde it. There reason is this, Paule sayth, he that eateth and drinketh this sacrament vnworthely, shall be gilty of the body and blond of the Lord. Now say they, how should they be gilty of the Lords body and blond which receiue it vnworthely: except it were the very body and blond of the Lord?

The Apostles did ordeine that we should abstaine frõ blond, meanning all natural blond.

Actes. 10.

The wyne in the Sacrament is no naturall blond.

Obiection.

This argument I say, is very weake and slender. For I can shew many examples by the which it may Solution.

be dissolued for he that despiseth the kinges seale or letters offendeth agaynst his owne person, and yet the letter or seale is not his owne person. He that violently plucketh downe his graces armes or breaketh his broade seale with a furious minde or violence, committeth treason against his owne person. And yet his armes and broad seale are not his owne person. He that clippeth the kings coyne committeth treason against ỳ kynges person and the common wealth, and yet the mony is neither his graces person nor the common wealth. And therfore your argumēt is but weake and slender For euen as a man doth offende against the princes person by dispising his armes, seale or letters, So doth a man offend agaynst Christes body and bloud, by abusing the sacrament of his body and bloud, although he be not there present, as ỳ kinges person is not present in his armes, seale or letters.

To pull downe violently the kynges armes is treason agaynst hys owne person, and yet the armes are not the kinges person.

Besides that S. Paule saith that euery man which prayeth or prophecieth with couered hed shameth his hed and his hed is Christ: shall we therfore Imagin that Christ is naturallye in euery mans hed? as your argument cōcludeth For soth that were a prety phantasie. Finally S. Austen sayth ỳ he doth no lesse sinne which negligently heareth ỳ worde of God then doth the other whiche vnworthely receiueth ỳ sacrament of Christes body & bloud. Now if this be true, then is your reason not worth a rishe For Christes naturall body is not in ỳ word which is preached, as all men knowe. And yet he sinneth no lesse that negligently heareth it, then doth he, that vnworthely receiueth the sacrament. And thus yon see their insoluble argument easely dissolued.

To be negligent in the hearyng of the word of God is a great offēce

M.More. ¶But now must this yong man consider againe that him selfe confesseth, that the cause for which him selfe sayth that Christ in so saying did so meane, is because that if he should haue ment so, it was impossible to God to bring his meaning about: that is to say, that Christes body might be in two places at once. And therfore but if he proue that thing impossible for God to doe, els he confesseth that God not onely sayd it but also mēt it in dede. And yet ouer this, if Christ had neuer sayd it, yet doubted I nothing, hut he is able to doe it, or els were there sum what that he could not doe: And then were God not almighty.

Frith. Here M. More would myre me wō his sophestrie, and with wiles would winne his spores. For as he before did discant on these wordes, can and impossible, and would haue made men beleue that I ment it could not be, because it could not be by reason and that I ment impossible because reason could not reache it. So now he disputeth with lyke maner of sophistication cōcluding that I confesse that it is impossible and can not be, because that if God should haue ment it was impossible for God to bring his meaning about. Deare brethren this babelyng is sufficiently discused all ready. For I ment not that it was impossible For God to bring it about If he had so ment, but I meant that it is impossible to stand with the processe of the scripture which we haue receyued. And I saye more ouer, that though it was possible for God to haue done it (if it had pleased hym) yet now the scripture thus standing, it is impossible for him to do it for then he must make his sonne a lyar. And I say, that if he had so ment the letter standeth, that he would then haue geuen vs other scripture, and would not haue sayd that he must depart to him that sent him, with other textes as are before rehearsed.

M. More is a quarelyng lyar and a bler.

And where M. More sayth that if there were sumwhat ỳ he could not doe, than were God not almighty. I say it is a shame for our prelates that they haue gotten such an ignorant procture to defend them. And I am sure that they them selues could haue sayd much better: for els how should they instructe other and leade them in the right way? if they them selues were so rude and vnlearned, should they not know what this meaneth ỳ

M. More an ignorant proctor, for the Clergy.

Frith.

God

God is almightie which is a peece of the first article of our Crede, then how should there ship haue haue any sure slight? More thinketh that God is cauled almighty, because he can do all things. And then indede it should follow that he were not almightye for all thinges he can not do, he can not saue the vnfaythfull, he can not restore virginitie once violate, sayth S. Thomas. and also (as I remember) S. Hierome writyng of virginitie vnto Paule and Eustochium: he can not sinne sayth Dunce: he can not deny hym selfe sayth S. Paule. Now if this mans leraning were alowed thē might not God be almightye, because there is somewhat ỳ he can not doe: but they that are acustomed with scripture, do know that he is called almightye, not because he can doe all things: but because there is no superiour power aboue hym, but that he may doe all that he wyll: and all that his pleasure is to doe that may be bring to passe, and no power is able to resist hym, but he hath no pleasure nor will to make hys sonne a lyer nor to make hys scripture false, and in dede he may not doe it. And yet notwithstanding he abideth almighty, for hee may doe all that hee will.

God is almighty, and yet cannot doe all thynges.

1. Timo. 2.

God is said to bee almighty because there is no superiour power aboue hym, and he can do all that he will.

M. More. Then M. More touching the reason of repugnaunce sayth, that many thynges may seme repugnaunt both to him and me which thinges [illegible] teth how to make them stād together well inough, and addeth such blynd reasons of repugnaūce as induce many men into a great errour: some ascribyng all thyng vnto destiny without any power of mās frewill at all, and some geuing all to mans owne will, and no foresight at all to the prouidence of God, and all becausse the poore blynd reason of man can not see so farre, as to perceiue how Gods prescience and mans frewill can stand together, but seeme clearely to be repugnaunt.

[illegible] frith. As for hys digression of mans frēwill I will not greatly wrastle with hym. But thys one thyng I may say, that if the sonne of God deliuer vs, then are we very frē. And where the spirite of God is, there is frēdome: I meane not freedome to doe what you will, but freedome from sinne, that we may bee the seruauntes of righteousnes. But if we haue not the spirite of Christ, then will I say with S. Austen, that our freewill is wretched, and cā do nought but sinne. And as touching such textes of repugnancy, if they be so diffuse that mans reason, (which is the light of hys vnderstanding) can not attayne to set them together, then were you best to make them none articles of our fayth. For I thinke as many as are necessary vnto our saluation, are contayned in the Crede which I thinke euery man beleueth. I beseech you lay no bigger burthen vpō vs then those faythfull fathers dyd which thought that sufficient. And then I am sure, we should haue fewer heretikes. For I neuer heard of hereticke that euer helde agaynst any article of our crede, but all that ye defame, by thys name, are onely put to death, because they say that we are not bound to beleue euery poynt that the lawes and tyrannye of the clergie allowe & maintayne. Which thyng how true it is (blessed be God) is meetely well knowen already. For els had I and many moe bene dead ere thys day.

John 8. 2. Cor. 3.

Roma. 6.

Aug. de spiritu & litera.

The articles in our Creede are as many as are necessary for our saluation.

M. More. I wot well that many good folke haue vsed in this matter many fruit full examples, as of one face beholden in diuers glasses, and in euery peece of one glasse broken into twentie: and of one word cōming whole to an hūdreth eares at once: and the sight of one little eye present and beholding an whole great countrey at once, with a thousand such maruells moe, such as those that see them dayly done (and therfore maruell not at them) shall yet neuer be able, no not thys younge man him selfe, to geue such á reason by what meane they maye bee done, but that he may haue such repugnancy layd agaynst it, that he shall be fayne in conclusion (for the chiefe and moste euident reason) to saye, that the cause of all those thynges is because God that hath so caused them to bee done, is almighty of hym selfe, and may doe what hym lyst.

Frith. As touching the examples that M. More doth here alledge, I may sone make aũswere. For they that are like our matter, make cleane agaynste hym, and the other can not make for hym. The glasse I graunt is a good example, for euen as the glasse doth represent the very face of man so doth this Sacrament represent the very body and bloud of Christ. And like as euery pẽce of the glasse doth represẽt that one face, so doth euery pẽce of that Sacramẽt represent that one body of Christ. But euery mã knoweth right well that though ẏ glasse represent my face, yet the substaunce of the glasse is not my very face, neither is my very face in the glasse. And euen so though the Sacrament doe represent the body of Christ, yet the substaunce of the Sacrament is not hys very body, no more then the glasse is my face, neither is his very body in ẏ Sacrament, no more then my very face is in the glasse and thus this exãple maketh well for vs. And for that one word comming whole to an hundreth eares, I say that worde is but a sounde and a qualitie and not a substaunce, and therfore it is nothyng to our purpose, and can not be likened to Christs body which is a substaũce. And as concernyng the sight of the litle eye, I say that though the eye discry and sẽ an whole countrey, yet is not that whole coũtrey in the eye: but as the countrey is knowen by ẏ sight of eye (though the countrey be not in it), so is the death of Christ and hys bodye breakyng and bloude shedyng knowen by the Sacrament, though his naturall body be not in it. And thus his exãples make nothyng with hym, but rather much agaynst hym. And where hee sayth that the young man hym selfe can geue hym no reaso, by what meane they may be done: I may say vnto hys mastershyp, that whẽ I was seuen yeare yonger then I am this day, I would haue bene ashamed if I could not haue geuen an euident reason at the Austens in Oxford before ẏ whole Vniuersitie. And albeit I now vouchsafe, not to spend labour and paper about Aristotles doctrine, yet haue I so much touched hys examples, that he may be wery of them.

The glasse that representeth the face, is not the face.

The body of Christ is no more in the Sacrament then my face is in the glasse

Christes death and body breakyng, is knowen by the Sacrament & yet it is not the naturall body of Christ.

M. More. Also I can not see why it shoulde be more repugnaunt that one body may be by the power of God in two places at once, then that two bodyes may bee together in one place at once. And that poynte I thinke this young mã denieth not.

Frith. The beyng of our body in two places at once is against nature, & Scripture cã not alow it. But that two bodyes should bee in one place seemeth more reasonable. For I haue good experience that though my body cã not be in two places at once (both in the Tower and where I would haue it beside) yet blessed be God in this one place, I am not without cõpany. But if M. More meane that in one proper and seueral place, may be two bodies at once, that I will deny, till he haue laysure to proue it. And yet at the length I am sure, his proue shall not be worth a pudyng pricke. For I am sure it must bee, Ratione porositatis vt in igne & ferro: nam penetrationem dimensionum nunq̃ probabit. And then he is as neare as he was before.

Frith speaketh merely.

M. More. Now his last reason with whiche he proueth it impossible for the body of Christ to bee in two places at once, is this: you cã (sayth he) shew no reason why he should be in many places at once & not in all. But in all places he can not be. Wherefore we must conclude that he can not be in many places at once. This is a maruelous concluded argument. I am sure that euery childe may soone see that this consequẽt cã neuer folow vpon these two premisses of this antecedent.

Frith. When I made this reason & compiled my treatise I had no regard to the cauillations of sutle Sophisters: for I thought no Sophisters should haue medled with that meate. But neuertheless sith nowe I perceiue that they principally are pouryng on it, sækyng some pray to set their teeth a woorke. In this boke I haue somewhat prouided for them, and haue brought such hard bones, that if they be to busie, may chaunce to choke thē. And yet is not the Argument so feble as he sayneth. For the first part (if he lyst to consider the sense and mynde, and bee not to curious) where I say that they can shew no reason why hee should bee in many places and not in all, is thus to be vnderstand of wyse men, that the very reason and cause, that he shold be in many places, must be, because ẏ body is so annexed with the Godhead, that it is in euery place as the Godhead is. This I say must be the cause and reason of his beyng in many places. And neither you nor no man els can iustly assigne any other. Now of this maior or first proposition thus vnderstand, doth the cōclusion folowe directly. For if this should be ẏ cause (as they must nedes graunt). And this cause proued false by Scripture: then must they nædes graunt that the thyng whiche so folowеth of this cause, must nædes be false. And so is my purpose proued, & they concluded. As by example, the Astronomers say: that the naturall course of the Sunne is frō the weast to the East. Now if a mā should aske them what is then the cause that we sée hym dayly take the cōtrary course, from the East to the Weast agaynst hys nature, they aunswere. Because the hyghest sphere (whose course is from the East to the Weast) with his swift mouyng doth violently drawe the inferior spheres with hym. This is the cause that they alleage, and no man can assigne any other. And now sith I cā proue this sense false by scripture. And S. Austen (for Scripture sayth that ẏ sphere is saltened Hebr. viij. chap. And S. Austen expoundyng that text improueth the Astronomers whiche affirme that it moueth, sith I say, this cause is proued false by scripture, they must nædes graūt that the thyng whiche folowеth of this cause must nædes be false. And so we may conclude against them all, that the naturall course of the Sunne is not frō the Weast to the East (as the Astronomers say). But contrary from the East to the West. And lykewise sith the cause that Christes body should be in many places, is assigned of learned men to be, because hys body is so annexed with the Godhead (which is in euery place) that it is also in all places with it, & no man can assigne any other. And that this cause is proued false by Scripture, for when the women sought Christ at his graue, an aungell gaue the aunswere that hée was not there. But if his body had bene in euery place, then the aungell lyed. Also Christ sayd vnto his Disciples of Lazarus which died at Bethania. Lazarus is dead. And I am glad for your sakes (that you may beleue) because I was not there. Now if hys body were in euery place as is the Godhead, then Christ sayd not truly, when he said he was not there. Therfore sith (as I sayd) this is the cause assigned, & yet proued false by Scripture, they must nædes graūt, that the thyng whiche folowеth of this cause, must also nædes be false. And so we may cōclude against thē all, ẏ Christs body is in one place onely. And now you may sée how my consequent folowеth the premisses.

that

Astronomers say that the naturall course of the Sunne is from the west to the East.

A conclusiō against the Astronomers.

Mark. 14.

Luke. 16.

Iohn. 11.

Christes body is in one place onely.

For he can no further conclude, but that we can shewe no reason why he should be in many places at once. What had he wonne by that? might he then conclude therupon, that he could not be in many places at once? As though it were not possible for God to make his body in two places at once, but if we were able to tell how, and why, and wherby, and shewe the reason. M. More.

How far I can conclude is shewed immediatly before. For though of the bare wordes as ye toke them, it was hard to conclude any thyng, yet haue I now declared them, and so farre cōcluded, that you cā not auoyde them. And where he sayth, that though they can shew no reason, yet I had wonne nought by it: I thinke he woulde be angrye if I should so aunswere. But surely they are in good case, for it is Frith.

what soeuer the Papistes say, that must stand for reason.

inough for them to say, thus it is, and nede neuer to shew any cause or reason why they so say. For they are the Church and can not erre: so that if they teach contrary thynges, yet all is good inough. And whē they see that no mā can make the Scriptures to agrée with their doctrine, then they say, that their doctrine is true inough, but no man can vnderstand the Scripture. And though the scripture seme neuer so repugnant both to them and to vs, yet God seeth well inough (say they) how to set them together, and it is possible for God to make it agree though they cā not tell how. But this doctrine hath longe inough deceaued vs: For men haue seene to long with your spectacles, yet now (thankes be to God) they begin to see with their owne eyes. And as touching how thys matter was possible to God, and how it is not possible, is sufficiently declared before to al that liste to loke.

M. More. Howbeit as for me (though I be not bounden to it) I am content yet to proue, that God may make the body of Christ to be in all places at once. And because this yong má coupleth that proposition with the other: so will I doe to. And I proue therefore that God cā make his body be both in many places at once, and in all places at once, by that that he is almightie, and therefore can do all thing.

Frith. Now is the good man in hys olde dreame agayne, & thinketh that God is called almightie, because he can do all thinges. And then in dede it should followe that he were not almightye. For all thynges he can not do, he can not saue the vnfaithfull, he can not restore virginitie once violated, hee can not sinne, he can not denye him selfe. Now if thys mans learning were allowed, then myght not God be called almighty, because there is somewhat that he can not doe. But they that are accustomed with scripture, do know that he is called almighty, not because he can not do all thynges, but because there is no superiour power aboue hym, but that he may doe all that hee will, and all that hys pleasure is may be bring to passe. But he hath no will, pleasure nor power to make hys sōne a lyer, and to make hys Scripture false, and yet notwithstandyng he abydeth almighty and may do what he will. And euen as it is impossible to stand with the processe of the Scriptures (wherin God hath declared his will) that the vnfaythfull shoulde bee saued (although at ỳ first God might haue done it, if he had so would) likewise it is impossible (the Scriptures standing as they do) that the naturall body of Christ shoulde bee present to our teeth in the Sacrament. And as for our fayth it needeth not to haue hym present in the bread: For I may as well eate him & drink him, through fayth (that is to say, beleeue in hym) though he continue still in heauen, as though he were as present in the Sacrament, as he was hangyng on the crosse. But yet hys mastership hath left one thyng vnproued, and that is euen the pith of hys purpose. For though hee had proued (as hee hath not) that God by hys almightynes myght make Christes body in many places, and in all places, and in the Sacrament, yet he forgotte to proue that God hath so done. And therfore albeit I dyd graunt hym (as I will not) that he myght so do, yet thereof it doth not followe, that he hath so done in déede. For God may do many thynges which he doth not. And therefore hys argumēt doth not proue hys purpose. Now if he do but thinke that God hath so done, I am well pleased and will not put hym to the payne to proue it. For anone ye shall see hym so intangled in briers, that he shall not witte where to become.

More saith that God may do all thyngs, but he doth not proue that he hath so done.

More harpeth vppon a false string.

But yet thys young man goeth about to proue the poynt by scripture. For except we graūt him that point to be true, he sayth that els we make the angell a lyer that sayd, he is not here, and also that els we make as though Christes body in his ascension did not goe vp in the cloud into heauen from earth, but onely hid him self in the cloud, and playeth bo peepe, & taried beneath still. Here in the end he forgetteth M. More.

him ſelfe ſo foule, that when he was a young ſophiſter, he would I dare ſay, haue bene full ſore aſhamed ſo to haue ouerſeene him ſelfe at Oxford at a peruiſe. For ye wotte well that thing which he ſayth, & which he muſt therfore proue, is that the body of Chriſt can not be in euery place at once by no meane that God could make. And the textes that he bringeth in for the proofe, ſay no further but that he was not in all places at once.

Frith. There are two thinges diſputed betwene M. More and me: the one is, whether God can make the body of Chriſt in many places, and in the Sacrament. And thereto hys maſterſhip ſayth ye: For God is almightye and may do all things. And I ſay nay, and affirme that God is not called almightie becauſe he may do all things, but becauſe he may do all that he will, and I ſay that he will not make hys ſonne a lyer, nor hys ſcripture falſe, and that he can not do it and yet abydeth almightye. The other thyng is thys, whether he haue done it or not. For albeit I did graunt hym that it were poſſible, yet is he neuer ẏ nere, except the other cā proue that he hath done it in deede, or els thinke that God hath ſo done. For as I ſayd God can doe many thinges which he doth not. And ẏ controuerſie of thys doubt is reſolued by the Angell and Scripture, which (as M. More graunteth hym ſelfe) proueth that he was not in all places at once. And thereof it followeth, that God hath not done it, although it be poſſible. And ſo is hys maſterſhip at a poynt. For if I ſhould graūt it neuer ſo poſſible, yet if ſcripture proue that it be not ſo in deede, then is he neuer the neare hys purpoſe, but much the further from it. And thys is cuē it that I ſayd before: that it was not poſſible to ſtand with the proceſſe of the Scripture which we haue receaued. And now hys maſterſhip hath graunted it hym ſelfe, which you may be ſure he would not haue done if hee coulde otherwyſe auoyde it. And here you may ſee how ſore I haue ouerſeene my ſelfe.

Two thinges diſputed betwen More and Frith.

God forbid that any man ſhould be the more prone & ready to beleue this yong man in this greate matter, becauſe he ſayth in the beginning that he will bring all men to a concord & a quietnes of conſcience. for he bringeth men to the worſt kinde of quietnes that may be deuiſed when he telleth vs as he doth, that euery man in this matter, may without perell beleue which way he liſt, Euery man may in euery matter without any counſell, ſone ſet hym ſelf at reſt, if he liſt to take that way and to beleue as he liſt him ſelfe, & care not how. But and if that way had bene ſure S. Paule would neuer haue ſhewed that many were in perill of ſicknes and death to, For lacke of diſcerning reuerently the body of our Lord in that ſacrament when they came to receiue hym. More.

Frith. When Chriſt ſhould depart this world and go to his Father he gaue his deſciples a commaundement that they ſhould loue ech other, ſaying by this ſhall all men knowe, that ye are my diſciples, if you loue ech other, as I haue loued you. This rule of charitie wolde I not haue broken, which notwithſtanding is often in Ieopardie among faythfull folke, for this ſacrament of vnitie, This thing conſidered, I thought neceſſarie, to aduertiſe both parties to ſaue this rule of charitie, and proued in ẏ firſt chapter of my treatiſe, that it was no article of the fayth neceſſary to be beleued vnder payne of damnatiō and therfore that they were to blame that would be contencious for the matter. For ſith it is no article of the fayth, that may lawfully diſſent without all Ieoperdye: & nēde not to breake the rule of charitye, but rather to receiue the other like pore brethren. As by example, Some thinke that the mariage betwēne our moſt redoubted prince & Quēne Katerine is lawfull & may ſtand with ẏ lawes of God: & ſome thinke that it is vnlawfull and ought to be diſanulled. now if we ſhould for this matter breake the rule of charitie, and euery man hate his neighbour that would not thinke as he doth, then were we greatly to blame and in ieoperdie of condemnation. This I say I proued in ỳ first chapter against which More maketh no busines, and improueth it not, whereby you may soone gather that it is very true. For els sith his mastership so laboureth in these other pointes, he would not haue left ỳ vntouched, you may be sure. This is the concorde that I woulde bring them vnto. And as touching quietnes of conscience, I haue knowne manye that haue sore bene combred with it And among all, A certaine maister of arte which died in Oxford confessed vpon his death bed, that he had wept lying in his bed an hundreth nyghtes within one yeares space, because he coulde not beleue it. Now if he had knowne it had bene no necessarye article, what comfort & quietnes should it haue bene vnto hym. Furthermore euery man can not so quiet him selfe, as M. More Imagineth. For there are many that thinke them selues no small soles, which when they haue receiued some folish superstition, eyther by their owne Imagination, or by beleuing their gossepes gospel and olde wines tales by and by thinke the contrary to be deadly sinne, and vtterly forbidden by Christes Gospell. As by example, I know an house of Religion, wherein is a person that thinketh it deadly sinne, to go ouer a strawe if it lye a crosse. And if their be on the pauement any paynted picture or any Image grauen on a dead mans graue, he will not tread vpon it, although he should goe a forelong about. What is this but bayne superstition wherewith the conscience is combred and corrupted? May not this be weded out with the word of God, shewing hym that it is none article of the fayth so to thinke, & then to tell hym that it is not forbidden by the scripture, and that it is no sinne? Now albeit his conscience be so cankerd that the rust will not be rubbed out: yet with Gods grace, some other whom he hath enfecte with the same may come agayne to Gods word and be cured full well, which shoulde neuer haue bene able to quiet thẽselues And likewise there are some which beleue as your superstitious hartes haue informed them, and these can not quiet thẽselues, because they beleue ỳ you haue fet your doctrine out of scripture: But when it is proued to them, and they them selues perceiue that scripture sayth not so, then can they not be content to thinke the contrary, and iudge it no sinne at all. And as touching S. Paule, suerely ye take hym wrong, for I will shew you what processe he taketh, and how he is to be vnderstode, but because it is not possible to finishe it in fewe words, I shall deferre it vnto ỳ bokes ende, and then I shall declare hym at large.

That the ſacrament is the naturall body, is none article of our fayth neceſſary to be beleued vpon payne of damnation.

Superstition.

More. And what a facion is this, to say that we may beleue if we list, that there is the very body of our Lord in dede, and then to tell vs for a truth, that such a fayth is impossible to be true: For God him selfe can neuer bring it about, to make his body be there.

Frith. Yf a man take the bare wordes of Christ, and of simplicitie be deceiued, and thinke that his very body be in ỳ sacrament present to their teeth that eate it, I dare not say that he sinneth therein, but will referre the matter vnto Gods iudgement, and yet without doubt, I dare say he is deceaued. As by example: If a man (deceaued by the literall sense) would think that men should preach to fishes (as Saint Fraunces did) because Christ bad his disciples goe preach to all creatures, yet would not I thinke ỳ he sinned therein, but will referre hym vnto Gods Iudgment. But yet I wene euery woman that hath any wit, will say that he was deceiued.

A man may iudge of error: but God onely must be iudge of condemnation.

Frith is no hasty iudge.

More. I am very sure that the olde holy doctours which beleued Christes body and bloud to be there, and so taught other to beleue, as by there bookes playnly doth apere, if they had thought eyther that it could not be there or that it was not ther in dede, they would not for all the good

good in this world haue written as they haue done. For would those holy men (wene you) haue taught that men be bound to beleue, that the very body and bloud of Christ is there, if thē selues thought they were not bound there to? woulde they make men honoure and worship that thing as the very body & bloud of Christ which them selues thought were not it? this geare is to childish to speake.

Frith. This the old Doctours and faythfull fathers so taught or thought as ye fayne of them, is very false. For S. Austen as I haue shewed, maketh wholly for vs. Besides that, there is none of the old fathers but they call it a Sacrament, a misteric, and misticall meate, whiche is not eaten with teth or bely, but with eares & fayth. And touchyng the honour and worshyp done vnto it, I say it is playne Idolatry. And I say, that he falsely reporteth on the old holy doctours. For they neuer taught men to worship it, neither cā he alledge one place in any of them all which would haue men to worshyp the Sacrament. Peraduenture he may alledge me certaine new fellowes for his purpose, as Dunce, Dorbell, Durand & such drafte which by their doctrine haue drenched the world with damnable Idolatrie. But I speake of the old holy fathers & Doctors as S. Austē, Ambrose, Hierom, Cyprian, Cirille, Chrisostome, Fulgentius, and such other: these I say, do not teach mē to worshyp it, and by that I dare abide. Of this point I am so sure, that I will vse it for a contrary argument, that his naturall body is not there present. For if the holy fathers before named had taken this text after the letter and not onely spiritually, then in there woorkes they would haue taught men to worshyp it, but they neuer taught men to worshyp this Sacrament, therfore it followeth they toke not the text after the letter, but onely spiritually. Now do I prouoke you to sēke a proofe of your purpose. Neuertheless I will not deny, but ý these holy Doctors in diuers places, do call it his body, as Christ and Paule do, & so do we likewise, and say also that his very body is there eaten. But yet we meane, that it is eaten with fayth (that is to say by beleuing ý his body was brokē for vs) and haue his body more in memory at this maundy then the meate that we there eate. And therfore it hath the name of his body, because the name it selfe should put vs in remembraunce of his body, and that his body is there chiefly eaten, euen more (through fayth) then the meate with the mouth. And so are they also to be vnderstand. Note. ☞

To honor and worshyp the sacrament is plaine idolatry.

The olde holy fathers haue not taught to worshyp the sacrament.

More. Yet one great pleasure he doth vs, in that he putteth vs all at libertie, that we may without perill of damnatiō beleue as we did before: that is to witte, that in the blessed Sacrament the whole substance of the bread and the wine is transmuted & chaunged into the very body and bloud of Christ. For if we may without perill of damnation beleue thus, as him selfe graunteth that we may, then graunteth hee that we may also without perill of damnation beleue that him selfe lieth, where hee sayth, the truth of that beleefe is impossible.

Frith. The beleuing of thys poynt, is of it self not damnable, as it is not damnable to thinke that Christ is a very stone or a vine, because the litterall sense so sayth: or if you beleue that you ought to preach to fishes and goe Christen them an other while, as ye do belles. And I insure you, if there were no worse mischiefe that ensued of thys beleefe, then it is in it selfe, I would neuer haue spoken agaynst it. But now there followeth vppon it damnable idolatry. For through the beleefe that thys body is there, mē fall downe and worshyp it. And thinking to please God, do damnably sinne agaynst hym. Thys I say, is the cause that I so earnestly write agaynst it, to auoyde the idolatry that is committed through it. Part of the Germanes do thinke that his naturall body is present in the Sacrament and take the woordes fleshly, as Martine taught them. But none of them worshyp it

Martin Luther sayth ý the natural body of Christ is present in ý sacramēt, but he wold not haue it worshipped for ỳ Martine forbyddeth both in hys wordes and workes, and so blessed be god they anoyde that ieoperdy which thyng if you will also graunt and publish but this one proposition, that it ought not to bee worshypped, I promise you I will neuer write agaynst it. For then is the ieoperdy taken away, and then I am cõtent that your maistership thinke I lye. But in the meane seasõ I must thinke that ye fill the world with damnable Idolatry. And thus haue you also aũswere vnto ỳ conclusion which you alledge out of the kynges graces booke. For I say in your way is no hurt, as lõg as you do but onely beleue the bare wordes of the text (as S. Fraunces dyd, whẽ he preached to fishes. But if through the occasion of those wordes, ye fall into the worshypping of it, then I say that in your way is vndoubted damnation. And so is there great ieoperdy in your way, & none at all in ours. For though he were there in dæde, yet doe not we sinne if we worshyp it not, for we are not commaunded to worshyp the Sacrament. But if he be not there, then do you commit damnable Idolatry.

¶ The consecration of the Sacrament.

More. NOwe as for an other quietnes of euery mãs conscience this young man biddeth euery mã be bold, whether the blessed Sacrament be consecrate or vnconsecrate (for though he most especially speaketh of the wyne, yet he speaketh it of both) & byddeth vs not care, but take it for all that vnblessed as it is because the Priest (hee sayth) can not deceiue vs nor take from vs the profit of Christes institution, whether hee alter the woordes or leaue them all vnsayd. Is not this a wonderful doctrine of this young man? We wotte well all, that the Priest can not hurt vs by his ouersight or malice, if there be no fault vpon our owne partie, for that perfection that lacketh on the Priestes part, the great mercy of God as we trust of his owne goodnes supplyeth. And therfore as holy Chrisostome sayth, no man can take harme but of him selfe. But now if we see the thyng disordered our owne selfe by the Priest and Christes institution broken, if we then wittyngly receiue it vnblessed & vnconsecrated, & care not whether Christes institutiõ be kept and obserued or no, but rekon that it is as good without it as with it, then make we our selues partakers of the fault and leese the profit of the Sacramẽt, and receiue it with damnation: not for the Priestes fault, but for our owne.

Frith. I had thought that no Turke wold haue wrested a mans woordes so vnfaythfully, for hee leaueth out all the pith of my matter, for my wordes are these. I will shew you a meanes how ye shall euer receiue it accordyng to Christes institution, although the Priest would withdraw it from you. First ye næde to haue no respect vnto the Priests wordes which ministreth it. For if ye remember for what intẽt Christ dyd institute this Sacrament, and know that it was to put vs in remembraunce of hys body breakyng & bloud shedding, that we might geue hym thankes for it and bee as sure of it through fayth accordyng to his promises, as we are sure of the bread by eatyng of it: if as I say, ye remember this thyng (for which intent onely the Priest speaketh those wordes) then if the Priest leaue out those wordes or part therof, he can not hurt you. For you haue all ready the effect and final purpose for ỳ which he should speake them. And agayne if he should wholy alter them, yet he cã not deceiue you. For then ye be sure that he is a lyer, and though you sée the Priest bryng you the wyne consecrated yet neuer sticke at that. For as surely shall it certifie your conscience and outward senses though he consecrate it not (so thou consecrate it thy selfe: that is to say, so thou know what is ment therby and geue hym thankes) as though hee made a thousand blessynges ouer it.

I meane how we may receaue ỳ sacrament according to Christes institution, though the minister be negligent.

The worthy receauer of the sacrament may consecrate the same to him selfe.

it. And so I say that it is euer cõsecrated in hys hart that beleueth, though the Priest consecrate it not. And contrarywise if they consecrate it neuer so much, and thy consecration be not bye, it helpeth thée not a rishe. For except thou know what is meant therby, and beleue, geuyng thankes for hys body breakyng & bloudshedyng, it can not profite thée.

M.More. Now where you say, that if we see the thyng disordered by the Priest, and Christes institution broken, and wyttingly receiue it, we make our selues partakers of the cryme.

Frith. I aunswer that if the reformation thereof laye in our handes, then sayd you truth, but sith it is written to priuate persons which may not reforme this matter, and that the reformation therof resteth onely in ẏ hand of your Prince and Parlament (for ẏ errour consisteth not in the misordering of the matter by one Priest only but rather of the doctrine of them all sauing such as God hath lightened) to these priuate persons I say ẏ your doctrine should soner be the occasion of an insurrection which we labour to eschew, then any quieting of them by Christes doctrine. And therefore sith there is an other waye to wood (sauing all vpright) we will auoyde that perylous path. But when ye sée Christes institution broken and the one kinde left out vnto the laye people, why are ye partaker thereof.

M.More. Howbeit as for his beleife that taketh it no better but for bare bread & wine, it maketh him litell matter consecrated or not, sauing that the better it is consecrated the more it is euer noyous to him that receiueth it, hauing his conscience combred with such an execrable heresie, by which well appeareth that he putteth no difference betwene the body of our Lord in the blessed sacrament, and the comon bread that he eateth at his dinner, But rather he estemeth it lesse, for the one yet I thinke or he begyn, if he lack a priest, he will blesse it him selfe, the other hee careth not as he sayth, whether it be blessed or no.

Frith. What I reacon it more thẽ bread and wine I will shew you here after in declaring the minde of S. Paule vppon this sacrament, & that in the conclusion of this boke. And in the meane season I will say no more but that he belyeth me. And as for their blessinges & consecration profit not me, except I consecrate it my selfe with fayth in Christes bloud, & with geuing him prayse & thankes for his inestimable goodnes, which when I was his enemy recõciled me vnto his father by his own death: This consecration, must I set by, if I will haue any profit of his death which ẏ sacrament representeth vnto me. And if I my selfe do thus consecrate it, then shal I be sure of ẏ fruite of his death. And I say agayne, that as ẏ Priestes doe now vse to consecrate it, it helpeth not the poore comens of a rishe. For their consecracion should stand in preaching vnto them the death of Christ, which hath deliuered thẽ out of the Egipt of sinne & from ẏ fiery fornace of Pharao the deuill. And as for their wagging of their fingers ouer it, and saying, hy. or hy. wordes in latten, helpeth them nothing at all for how can they beleue by ẏ meanes of his wordes when they know not what he sayth? And as touching the common bread that I eate at my dynner, whether I haue a Priest or not, I blesse it with my hart (and not with my fingers) and hartly gene God thankes for it. For if I haue an hundreth Priestes to blesse it, yet am not I excused therby. For except I blesse it my selfe, it profiteth me no more then if it were vnblessed. And if I blesse it my selfe, then I care not what the Priest prate. For as long as I vnderstand him not it profiteth me nothing, but in good fayth I wene the bishops and their proctour wote not what a blessing meaneth. Therefore deare brethren hearken to me. To blesse God, is to gene him prayse and thankes for his benefites: To blesse a king or a prince is to thanke him for his kindnes, and to pray to God for him that he may long raigne to the laude of God & wealth of his comens. To bielle a mans neighbour is to pray for him and to do him good. To bielle my breade or meate, is to geue God thankes for it To bielle my selfe, is to geue God thankes for his benefites that I haue receiued of him, & to pray God that of his infinite goodnes he will increase those giftes that he hath geuen me & finishe his worke which he hath begone in me, vnto his laud and prayse and as touching this fleshe, to fulfill his will in it, and not to spare it but scurge, cut and burne it, onely that it may be to his honour & glory. This is the forme of blessing, and not to wag two fingers ouer them. But alacke, of this blessing our Byshops be ignorant.

Blessyng what it is.

M.More. But as for those that are good and faythfull folke, and haue any grace or any sparcle of reason in their heades, will (I verely thinke) neuer to be so farre ouerseene, as in this article (the truth wherof God hath him selfe testified by as many open miracles as euer he testified any one) to beleue thys younge mā vpō his barren reasons against the fayth and reason both of all old holy writers and all good Christen people this xv. C. yeares.

Frith. As for the miracles, I maruell not at them, neither may they make me the soner to beleue it, for Christ told vs before that such delusions shoulde come, ý if it were possible, ý very elect should be deceaued by them. And S. Paule exhorteth vs to beware of such signes and wonders: And therefore I do as Moses teacheth me when I heare of such a wonder, then straight I loke on the doctrine that is annexed with it. If it teach me to referre all the honor to God and not to creatures, and teach me nothyng but that will stand with Gods worde, then will I say, that it is of God. But if it teach me such thynges as will not stand with hys word, then will I determine that it is done by the deuill, to delude the people with damnable idolatrye. When Paule and Barnabas preached at Listra and had done a miracle among them, the people ranne and would haue done sacrifice vnto them. But the Apostles ranne among them and tare their clothes, crying vnto them, syrs what do you? we are euen corruptible men as ye are, and preach vnto you, that you should leaue thys vayne superstition, and worship the liuing God, which made heauen, earth, the sea, and all that is in them. &c. Here the Apostles refused such honour & worship. And therefore I am sure they would not suffer their images to haue it. Now when I see a miracle done at any image, and perceaue that it bringeth men to the worshipping of it self, contrary to the facte and doctrine of the Apostles, which would not receaue it them selues, I must nedes conclude, that it is but a delusion done by the deuill to deceaue vs and to bryng the wrath of God vppon vs. Euen so I say of the sacrament, sith the miracles that are done by it, do make mē thinke otherwise then Scripture will, and cause men to worship it: I doubt not but they are done by the deuill, to delude the people. Thou wilt peraduenture say that God will not suffer hym to abuse the sacrament of hys body and bloud. Yes verely, God will suffer it, and doth suffer it, to see whether we will be faythfull and abide by hys worde or not. And maruell not therof, for God suffered hym to take vp the very naturall body of hys sonne Christ and set him on a pinnacle of the temple. And after he toke hym vp agayne, and lead hym to an exceding mountaine. And therfore thinke not but that he hath more power ouer the Sacrament then he had ouer Christes owne body. And therfore whē they tell me, loe here is Christ, loe there is Christ (as Christ prophecied) loe he is at thys altar, loe he is at that, I will not beleue them.

not followe that the sacrament should be the very naturall body of Christ. For we haue euident storyes that certayne persons haue bene delinered from bodely diseases through the Sacrament of baptisme. And yet ẏ water is not the holy Ghost, nor the very thyng it selfe whereof it is a sacrament. The shadow of Peter hath healed many, and yet was not that shadow Peters owne person. We read also that napkins and handkerchers were carryed from Paule vnto them that were sicke & possessed with vncleane spirites, and they receaued theyr health. And yet it were neuertheless madnesse, to thinke ẏ Paules body had bene actually or naturally in those thynges. And therefore thys is but a very weake reason, to iudge by the miracles ẏ presence of Christes body. And surely you might be ashamed to make so slender reasons. For God may worke miracles through many thinges which are not hys naturall body. And as touchyng the olde Doctors, whom you fayne to make with you, and the truth of your opinion which you say hath bene beleued of all good Christen people this xb. C. yeares, is sufficiētly declared before, and proued to be but a poynt of your olde Poctrie.

¶D. Barnes did graciously escape M. Mores hands.

M. More.

AND also Frier Barnes albeit (that as ye wote well) he is in many other thinges a brother of this yong mans secte, yet in this, he sore abhorreth his heresie, or els he lyeth him selfe. For at his last being here he wrote a letter to me, wherin he writeth that I laye that heresie wrōgfully to hys charge. And shew eth him selfe so sore greued therewith, that he sayth, he will in my reproch make a booke against me: wherin he will professe and protest his fayth concerning this blessed sacrament. But in the meane season it well contenteth me, that Frier Barnes being a man of more age & of more ripe discretion, and a Doctor of diuinitie, and in those thinges better learned then this young man is, abhorreth this yongmans heresie in this poynt, as well as he liketh him in many other.

Frith.

The more your mastershyppe prayseth Doctour Barnes, the worse men may like your matter. For in many poyntes he doth condemne your damnable doctrine, as in hys booke appeareth. And therfore if such credence must be geuen to hym, then much the lesse will be geuen to you. But peraduēture you wil say, ẏ he is to bee beleued in this point, although he erre in other. Where vnto I aunswere that if you will consent vnto him I would be well apayd and will promise you to wright no more in that matter. For in this we both agrée, that it ought not to be worshiped (yea and blessed be God all the other whom you call heretickes) And so both of vs do anoyde Idolatry which you with so great daunger do daylye commit. And therfore if you alowe his learning then am I content that you dissent from me. For let it not be worshiped, and thinke as you will: for then is the perill past. And sith we agrée in this poynt, doubt not but we shall sone agrée in the residue and admitte eche other for faythfull brothers. And your mastership sayeth, that he wrot you a letter protesting that you lay ẏ heresie wrongfully to his charge I thinke it was more wisdom for him twise to haue written to you, then once to haue come and tell you of it. For it was plainely told hym, ẏ you had conspired his death, and that not withstanding his safe conduyte, you were minded to haue murthered him: and for that cause he was compelled both being here, to kéepe him selfe secreatly, and also priuely to departe the realme.

Q. The Sacrament may not be worshypped.

The Papistes say that no promise nor couenaunt is to be kept with an hereticke.

And blessed be God, you haue sufficienly published your purpose in your aunswere against W. Tyndall, Where you say, that you might lawfully haue burnte hym. Here mē may sée how perciable you are addict to our prelates. And how prone ye were to fulfill their pleasures contrary to our Princes prerogatiue royall. And thankes bee to GOD whiche gaue you such grace in the sight of our soueraigne, that he shortly withdrewe your power. For els it is to be feared, that you would further haue proceded agaynst his graces prerogatiue which thyng whether it be treason or not let other men define. But this I dare say, that it is Printed and published to our Princes great dishonour: For what learned man may in tyme to come, trust to hys graces safeconduite, or come at his graces instaũce or request, sith not onely the spiritually (whiche of their profession resiste hys prerogatiue) but also a laye man promoted to such preheminence by hys graces goodnes, dare presume so to depresse hys prerogatiue, and not onely to say, but also to publishe it in Print: that notwithstanding his graces safe conduite, they might lawfully haue burnt hym.

More a Popish and a malicious tyraunt.

But here he would say vnto me as he doth in his booke, that hee had forfayted his safeconduite, and therby was fallen into his enemyes handes. Whereunto I aunswere, that this your saying is but a bayne glose: For I my selfe dyd read the safeconduite that came vnto hym, which had but onely this one condition annexed vnto it, that if he came before the feast of Christmasse then next insueing, he should haue frée libertie to departe at his pleasure. And this condition I know was fulfilled, how should hee then forfayte his safeconduite? But M. More hath learned of his masters our Prelates (whose proctour he is) to depresse our Princes prerogatiue that men ought not to kéepe any promise with heretickes. And so his safe conduite could not saue hym. As though the Kynges grace might not admitte any man to go and come frély into his graces realme, but that he must haue leaue of our Prelates. For els they might lay heresie agaynst the person, and so slay hym cõtrary to the Kyngs safeconduite, which thyng all wise men do know, to be preiudiciall to his graces prerogatiue royall. And

The condition conteined in Barnes safe cõduite.

No promise nor licence made to heretickes by the kyng, without the consent of our Prelates is to be kept and obserued.

yet I am sure that of all ỹ tyme of hys beyng here, you cã not accuse hym of one cryme, albeit (vnto your shame) you say that hee had forfaited his safe conduite. These wordes had ben very extreme and worthy to haue beneloked vpon, although they had bene written by some presumptuous Prelate. But that a lay man so hygbly promoted by his Prince, should speake them, and also cause them openlye to be published among his graces commons, to reiect the estimation of hys royall power, doth in my mynde deserue correction. Notwithstandyng, I leaue the iudgement and determination vnto the discretion of his graces honorable counsell.

And as for that holy prayer that this deuote young man as a newe Christ, teacheth to make at the receiuyng of this blessed Sacrament, all his congregation: I wõuld not geue the paryng of a peare for hys prayer, though it were better then it is, pullyng away the true fayth therefro, as he doth. Howbeit hys prayer there is so deuised and penned and paynted with laysure and study, that I trust euery good Christen woman maketh a much better prayer at the tyme of her housell, by faythfull affection and by Gods good inspiration sodenly. Frith is an vnmete master to teach vs what we should pray at the receiuyng of the blessed Sacrament, when he wil not knowledge it as it is, but take Christes blessed body for nothyng but bare bread, and so litle esteme the receiuyng of the blessed Sacrament, that he forceth litle whether it be blessed or not.

M. More.

Where he discõmendeth my prayer & sayth that I am an vnmẽete master to teach men to pray, seing I take away the true faith from it, and sayth that euery woman can make a better when she receiueth the Sacrament. I would to God that euery woman were so well learned that they could teach vs both. And surely I intended not to prescribe to all men that prayer onely but hoped to helpe the ignoraunt, that they might either speake those wordes, or els (takyng occasion at them) to say some other to ỹ laude and prayse of God. And as for your fayth (which you call the true fayth) must I nedes improue. For it will not stand with the true text of Scripture as it playnly appeareth. But to the fayth in Christes bloud I exhorte all men, and teach them to eate hys body with fayth (and not with teeth) which is by hauyng hys death in continual remembraunce, and digestyng it into the bowels of theyr soule. And because you so sore improue my prayer, to conclude my aunswere agaynst you, I will write agayne. And let all men Iudge betweene vs.

Christes body is to be eaten with fayth & not with the teeth.

A prayer made by Iohn Frith to be sayd before the receauyng of the Communion.

Blessed be thou most deare & mercyfull father whiche of thy tender fauour and benignity (notwithstãding our greuous enormities committed agaynst thée,) vouchsauedst to sende thyne owne and onely deare sonne, to suffer most vyle death for our redemption. Blessed be thou Christ Iesu our Lord and Sauiour, whiche of thyne aboundaunt pitie consideryng our miserable estate, willingly tookest vppon thée to haue thy most innocent body broken and bloud shed, to purge vs and wash vs which are laden with iniquitie. And to certifie vs thereof, hast left vs not onely thy word which may instructe our hartes, but also a visible token, to certifie euen our outward sẽses of this great benefite, that we should not doubt, but that the body and fruite of thy passion are ours (through faith) as surely as the bread, whiche by our senses we know that we haue with in vs. Blessed be also that spirite of veritie whiche is sent frõ God our father through our Sauiour Christ Iesu, to lightẽ our darke ignorance, & leade vs through fayth into the knowledge of hym whiche is all veritie. Strength we beseech thée our frayle nature and increase our fayth: that we may prayse God our most mercyfull father and Christ hys sonne our Sauiour and redemer.

A godly & good prayer.

Amen.

The Paschall lambe and our sacrament are here compared togither.

The Paschall lambe and our sacrament cõpared togither.

NOw we shall shortly expresse the pith of our matter and howe the figure of the Paschall lambe which is in all pointes so lyke, that the offeryng of the Paschall lambe did signifie the offering of Christes body is playne by Paul which sayth, Christ our paschall lambe is offered vp for vs. When the chyldren of Israell were very sad and heuye for their sore oppression vnder the power of Pharao (for the more myracles were shewed, ỹ worse were they handeled). God sent vnto them by Moyses, ỹ euery housholde should kill a lambe to be a sacrifice vnto God and that they should eate him, with their staues in their handes, their loynes girded & shoes on their fete euẽ as mẽ ỹ were going an hasty Iorney. This lambe must they eate hastely and make a mery maundye. Now because they should not say, that they could not bee mery, for their oppression, and what could the lambe helpe them: he added glad tydynges vnto it and sayd, this is the passing by of the Lord. Which this night shall passe by you and slay all ỹ first begotten, with in the Land of Egipt, & shall deliuer you out of your bondage, and bring you into ỹ land that hée hath promised vnto yourfathers. Marke the processe and conueyaunce of this matter, for euen likewise it is in our sacrament. The Apostels were sad and heauie, partlye cõsidering ỹ bondage of sinne wherwith they were oppressed & partly because hee told them that he must departe frõ them in whõ they did put all their hope of their deliueraunce. While they were in this heauynes, Christ thought to cõfort thẽ & to geue them the seale of their deliueraunce, and toke in his hande bread, blessed & brake it, and gaue it to his disciples saying: this is my body which shalbe geuen for you. For this night shall ỹ power of Pharao ỹ dwell be distroyed, and to morow shall you be deliue-red from Egypt ẏ place of ſinne, and ſhall take your iourney towardes the heauenly manſion which is prepared of God for all that loue him. Now cõpare them togeather.

The compariſon of the Paſchall lambe with Chriſtes Supper.

1 The paſchall lãbe was inſtituted & eaten the night before the children of Iſraell were indeede deliuered from Egipt, Likewiſe was the ſacrament inſtituted and eatẽ ẏ night before we were deliuered from our ſinnes.

2 The paſcall lambe was a very lambe in deede And ſo is the ſacrament very bread in deede.

3 The paſcall lambe was cauled the paſſing by of ẏ Lord which deſtroyed the power of Pharao and deliuered thẽ. The ſacrament is called the body of ẏ Lord whiche deſtroyed ẏ power of the deuill and deliuered vs.

4 ¶ As many as did eate the paſcall lambe in fayth, were very mery and gaue God greate thankes. For they were ſure the next day to be deliuered out of Egipt, as many did eate his ſacrament in fayth, were mery & gaue God great thãkes, for they were ſure the next day to be deliuered frõ there ſinne,

5. They that did not eate the paſcall lambe in fayth, could not be merye. For they were not ſo ſure of deliueraunce from the power of Pharao. They ẏ did not eate this Sacrament in fayth, could not be mery: For they were not ſure of deliueraunce from the power of the deuill.

6. They that beleued the worde of the Lord did more eate the paſſing by of the Lord which ſhould deliuer thẽ, then they did the lambe. They that did beleeue the word of the Lord did more eate ẏ body of the Lord, which ſhould be geuen for their deliuerance then they did the bread. For ẏ thing doth a man moſte eate ẏ he moſt hath in memory & moſt reuolueth in mynd as appeareth by Chriſt, John. 4. I haue meate to eate ẏ ye know not.

7. They that beleeued not ẏ next day to be deliuered from Egipt, did not eate ẏ paſſing by of ẏ Lord, although they did eate the lambe. They ẏ beleued not the nert day to be deliuered from ſinne, dyd not eate the body of the Lorde, although they eate the breade.

8. The children of Iſraell were but once deliuered from Egypt, notwithſtanding they did euery yeare eate ẏ lambe, to kẽpe that facte in perpetuall remembraunce. Euen ſo Chriſt bought and redemed vs but once for all and was offered and ſacrificed but once for all though ẏ ſacrament therof be daylye broken amonge vs to kẽpe that benefite in continuall memorye.

9. As many as dyd eate ẏ Paſchall Lambe in fayth, and beleeue Gods worde as touching their deliueraunce from Egypt, were as ſure of their deliueraunce through fayth, as they were ſure of the Lambe by eating it. As many as doe eate this ſacrament in fayth, and beleeue Gods worde as touching their deliueraũce frõ ſinne, are as ſure of their deliueraunce through fayth, as they are ſure of the bread by eating it.

10. As many as did eate of that Paſchall Lambe did magnifie theyr God, teſtifying that he onely was the God almighty, and they his people ſticking to hym, to be deliuered by his power from all daunger. As many as do eate of thys ſacrament doe magnifie their God, teſtifying that he only is the God almighty, and they his people ſticking by him to be deliuered by hys power from all danger.

11. When the Iſraelites were deliuered frõ Egypt, they eate neuertheleſſe the Paſchall Lambe which was ſtill called the paſſing by (becauſe it was ẏ remẽbraunce of the paſſing by of ẏ Lord) and hartely reioyced, offering hym ſacrifice, & acknowledgyng w infinite thãkes, that they were the fellowſhip of thẽ that had ſuch a mercifull God. Now Chriſtes electe are deliuered frõ ſinne, they eate neuertheleſſe the ſacramẽt which is ſtill called hys body that once dyed for their deliueraunce, and hartely reioyce, offering to hym the ſacrifice of prayſe, & knowledging with infinite thãkes, that they are of the fellowſhip of thẽ that haue ſuch a mercifull God.

12. The Paſchall Lãbe after their deliue-

deliueraunce it was yearely eaten, brought as much myrth and ioye vnto them that did eate it in fayth, as it did to their fathers which felt Pharao hys fury, and were not yet deliuered. For they knew right well that except God of his mercy and wonderful power had so deliuered them, they shoulde also them selues haue been bond in the land of Egypt and vnder that wicked prince Pharao, of which bondage they greatly reioyced to bee rid already, and thanked God highly because they found thē selues in that plenteous land which God prouided for them. The sacrament which after our deliueraunce is yearely and dayly eaten, bringeth as much myrth and ioye vnto vs that eate it in fayth, as it did to the Apostles which were not yet deliuered. For we know right well that except God of hys mercye & through ẏ bloud of hys sonne, had so deliuered vs, we shoulde also our selues haue been bonde in Egypt the place of sinne, vnder ẏ wicked prince the deuill, of which bōdage we greatly reioyce to be rid already, & thanke God highly because we finde our selues in ẏ state of grace, & haue receaued through faith the first fruites and a taste of the spirite which testifyeth vnto vs ẏ we are the childrē of God.

The maiesty of remēbraunce that Paule receaued of the Lord, & deliuered to the Corinthians.

¶ Thys Maundy of remēbraunce was it that Paule receaued of the Lorde and deliuered to the Corinthians in the xi. chapter. For though he borrowe one propertie and similitude of the sacrament in the x. chapter, that in my minde maketh neither with vs nor against vs, albeit some thinke that it maketh whole for the exposition of Christes wordes, this is my body. But in my minde they are deceaued. For ẏ occasion that Paule spake of it in the x. chapter was thys. The Corinthians had knowledge that all meates were indifferent, and whether it were offered to an Idole or not, that the meate was not the worse, and they might lawfully eate of it, whether it were solde thē in the Shambles, or set before them when they dyned and supped in an vnfaithfull mans house, asking no questions:

1. Cor. 10.

except some man did tell them that it was offered to an Idoll, and then they should not eate of it for offendyng his conscience that so tolde them (albeit they were els frée and the thing indifferent) thys knowledge because it was not annexed with charitie was the occasion of great offending. For by reason thereof they satte downe among the Gentiles at their feastes, where they eate in the honor of their Idols, and so did not onely wound the conscience of their weake brethrē, but also committed Idolatry in dēde: And therfore S. Paule said vnto thē: My deare beloued flée from worshipping of Idols, I speake vnto them which haue discretiō. Judge ye what I say. Is not ẏ cup of blessing which we blesse, the fellowship of the bloud of Christ? Is not the bread which we breake the fellowship of the bodye of Christ? For we though we be many, are yet one bread and one body, in as much as we are partakers of one bread. Christ did call him selfe bread, and the bread his bodye: And here Paule calleth vs bread, and the bread our body. Now may you not take Paule that he in thys place should directly expound Christes minde. And that the very exposition of Christes wordes, when he sayd, this is my body, should be that it was the fellowship of hys body (as some say which seeking the key in this place of Paule locke them selues so faste in, that they can finde no way out): For Christ spake those wordes of his owne body which should be geuen for vs, but the fellowship of Christes body (or congregation) was not geuē for vs. And so he ment not as Paule here sayth, but ment his owne bodye. For as Paule calleth the bread our body for a certaine propertie, euen so doth Christ call it his body for certaine other properties. In that ẏ bread was broken, it was Christes owne body, signifying that as that bread was broken, so should hys body be broken for vs. In that it was distributed vnto hys disciples it was hys owne bodye, signifying that as berely as ẏ bread was distributed vnto them, so berely

God hath ordeyned all meates to be indifferent.

Paule.

Christ called hym selfe bread, and Paule calleth vs bread.

How the wordes of S. Paule are to bee vnderstād.

should the death of his body and fruit of his passion bee distributed to all faythfull folke. In that the bread strengtheneth our bodyes it is hys own body, signifying that as our bodyes are strengthened and comforted by bread, so are our soules by ẏ fayth in hys body breaking: And likewyse of the wine in that it was so distributed, and so comforteth vs and maketh vs mery. Furthermore the bread and wine haue an other propertie, for the which it is called our body. For in that the bread is made one bread of many graines or cornes, it is our body, signifying that we though we bee many, are made one bread, that is to say, one body: And in that the wine is made one wine of many grapes, it is our bodye, signifying that though we are many, yet in Christ & through Christ we are made one body & members to eche other. But in thys thyng Paule and Christ agrée. For as Paul calleth the bread our body and vs the bread because of thys propertie, that it is made one of many: euen so doth Christ call it hys body because of the properties before rehearsed. Furthermore in thys they agrée, that as Paules wordes muſt be taken spiritually (for I thinke there is no man so mad, as to iudge that the breade is our body in deede, although in that propertie it representeth our body): euen so muſt Christes wordes be vnderstand spiritually, that in those properties it representeth his very body. Now when we come together to receaue thys bread, then by the receauing of it in the congregation, we doe openly testifie that we all (which receaue it) are one body, professing one God, one fayth, and one baptisme, and that the body of Christ was broken and his bloud shed for remission of our sinnes. Now sith we so do, we may not company nor sit in the congregation or fellowship of them that offer vnto Idols and eate before thē. For as Paule sayth: ye cā not drinke the cup of the Lorde, and the cup of the deuils: ye can not be partakers of the table of the Lord and of the table of the deuills. I would not that you should haue fellowship with deuills. The heathen which offered vnto Idolls were the fellowship of deuils, not because they eate the deuills body or dranke the deuils bloud, but because they beleued & put their confidence in the Idoll or deuill as in their God, and all that were of that fayth had their ceremonies, and gaue hartye thākes to their God with that feaſt which they kept. They came to one place and brought their meate before the Idoll and offered it: and with their offering gaue vnto the deuill godly honour. And then they sat down and eate the offering together geuing prayse and thankes vnto their God, and were one body and one fellowship of ẏ deuill which they testify by eating of that offering before that idole. Now doth S. Paule reprehend the Corinthians for bearyng the gentiles companye in eating before the Idole. For they know that the meate was like other meate. And therefore thought them selues frée to eate it or leaue it. But they perceiued not that that congregregation was the fellowship of deuiles which were there gathered (not for the meat sake) but for to thanke and prayse the Idole there God in whō they had their confidēce. And all that there assembled and dyd there eate, and did openly testifie, ẏ they al were one body, professing one fayth in their God that Idole, So Paule rebuked them, for because ẏ by there eating (in that place and fellowship) they testefied openly, that they were of the deuils body and reioyſed in the Idole their God in whō they had fayth and confidence. And therfore sayth Paule, that they cā not both drinke the cup of the Lord testifying hym to be their God in whom onely they haue truſt and affiaunce, & the cup of the deuill testifyng ẏ Idole to bée their God and refuge.

Here you may note that the meate and the eatyng of it in this place & fellowshyp is more thenẏ cōmon meate and eatyng in other places. For elles they myght lawfully haue dronkē the deuils cup with them the one day, & the cup of the Lord the next day with his hys Disciples. What was it more, verely it was meate which by the eatyng of it in that place and felowship, dyd testifie openly vnto all men, that he was their God whose cuppe they dranke, and before whom they eate in that felowshyp: and so in their eating they praysed and honored the idole. And therfore they that had their trust in the lyuing God and in the bloud of his sonne Christ, might not eate with them. And lykewise it is the in sacrament, the bread and the eatyng of it in the place and felowshyp where it is receiued, is more then common bread. What is it more? Verely it is bread which by ẏ eatyng of it in that place and felowshyp, doth testifie openly vnto all men, that he is our very God whose cup we drinke and before whom we eate in that felowshyp, & that we put all our affiaūce in hym and in the bloud of hys sonne Christ Jesu, geuyng God all honour & infinite thankes for his great loue wherwith he loued vs, as it is testified, in the bloud of hys sonne, whiche was shed for our sinnes. So that in this place and felowshyp may no mā eate nor drinke with vs, but he that is of our fayth and knowledgeth the same God that we doe. As by example, if a mā were well beloued among hys neyghbours (albeit he haue some enemyes) and were long absent from hys frendes in a straunge countrey: when he were come home, his neighbours that loued hym would greatly reioyse and peraduenture would bye a Capon or an other pēce of meate to gene hym his welcom home, and get them to some honest mans house or to a Tauerne; and make good cheare together, to testifie openly that he is welcome home, & that they all which are at ẏ banket reioyse of his cōming home. Now I say, that this banket is more then an other meale, for at this banket hys enemies may be loth to come, because they can not reioyse at his comming home, and therfore can not make good chere among thē, testifiing that he is welcome home: but rather abhorreth the meate and drinke ẏ is there eaten because their hart doth not fauour the person for whose sake it is prepared. Notwithstanding if a capons legge were reserued for one of his enemies and afterward geuen him when the banket were done, he might lawfully eate it. For then it were but bare meate such as he eateth at home. And likewise ẏ enemies of Christ which beleeue not that they haue remission of sinnes through his bloudsheding, can not reioyce of his body breaking. And therfore can make good chere among thē, but if any be reserued after the maundy, he may lawfully eate it for is but bread. And his louers that are there presēt do rather come thether to gene him his welcome home then for the meate, and they more eate his welcome home then the meate. But if anye of his enemies fortune to be there they eate onely the meat, and not his welcome home. For they reioyce not at his comming home. Likewise the faythfull that are there present, do rather come thether to reioyce in ẏ faith of his body breaking, thē in breaking or eating of the bread or meate. But if any of the vnfaythfull fortune to be there they eate onely the bread, and not his body breaking. For they reioyce not at his bodie breaking. Here peraduenture some will suppose that I were cōtrary to my self. For before I sayd, ẏ it was more then meate ẏ was eaten at ẏ gentiles feast & more then meate ẏ was eaten at my neighbors welcome home, & more thē bread that is eaten at the receiuyng of the sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ. And now I say, that if a mās enemye be there, he eateth onely the meate and not ẏ welcome home. And lykewise the vnfaythfull eateth onely breade and not the body and bloud of Christ. How may these wordes stand together? I aunswere, that they eate but ouely bread or meate ẏ profiteth them, but indeede they eate more to their hinderaunce, & euen their owne damnation. For they that did eate in ẏ fellowship of ẏ gentiles, did but onlye eate the meate to there profite but in eating they? meate their facte dyd openly testifye that they honoured ẏ Idole for their God (although their

Besides that, he that enuyeth hys neighbour and commeth to that banket, eateth but onely ẏ meate that profiteth hym: notwithstandyng in hys owne hart, he eateth the rancor & malice of his mynde, to his great greuaũce, when he seth them so reioyse. And of hys owne companions which are also these mans enemyes, he doth purchase hym selfe hatred, because with his fact hee testifieth that hee loueth him, although his hart be otherwise, and of God shalbe condemned.

1. Iohn 3. For hee that hateth his brother, is a murtherer. Furthermore, he that is

This I am compelled to doe, to stop the chatering mouthes of Sophisters, albeit to them that be sober, it had been inough to haue sayd, they eate onely bread, & not the body broken &c. For they right well vnderstand it by the contrary Antithese, & know that I meant not by that (onely) that he should eate the bread & nothyng els but onely bread: but that I meant by this worde (onely) that hee should eate the bread without the body. And so lykewise in other exãples. Thus haue we sufficiently declared Paules mynde in the. 10. Chapter.

1. Cor. 11. In the xj. chapter Paule maketh much mencion of the maundye & describeth it to ẏ vttermost. Frst he saith when ye come together in one place, a man can not eate the Lords supper. For euery man beginneth afore to eate his owne supper, and one is hungry and an other is dronken. Haue ye not houses to eate and drinke in? or els despise ye the congregation of God and shame them that haue not what shall I saye vnto you? shall I prayse you? In this I prayse you not. Paule did instruct according to Christes mynde, ẏ the Corinthians should come togither to eate the Lordes supper. Whiche lyeth not so much in the carnall eatyng as in the spiritual: and is greatly desired to be eaten, not by the hunger of the body, but by the hũger of the faithfull hart, which is gredy to publishe the prayse of the Lord and geue hym harty thankes, & moue other to the same that of many, praise might be geuen vnto our most mercyful father for the loue which he shewed vs in the blood of his owne most deare sonne Christ Iesu. Wherewith we are washed from our sinnes and surely sealed vnto euerlastyng lyfe. With such hũger dyd Christ eate the Paschall lambe, saying to hys Disciples: I haue inwardly desired to eate this Easter lãbe with you before that I suffer. Christes inward desire was not to fill hys belly with his disciples, but hee had a spirituall hũger: both to prayse his father with them, for theyr bodely deliueraũce out of the land of Egypt: and specially to alter the Paschall lambe and memory of the carnall deliueraunce, into the maundy of myrth and thãkesgeuyng for our spirituall deliueraunce out of the bondage of sinne. In so much that when Christ knewe that it was his fathers will and pleasure, that he should suffer for our sinnes (wherin his honor, glory and prayse should be published) then was it a pleasure vnto hym, to declare vnto his Disciples that great benefite, vnto his fathers prayse and glory: & so did institute that we should come together and breake the bread in the remẽbraunce of his body breakyng and blood shedyng: and that we shuld eate it together reioysing with ech other & declaryng hys benefites.

The true eating of the Sacrament is the spirituall eating of the same.

Luke. 22.

Now were the Corinthians fallen from this hunger, and came not together to the intent that Gods prayse should bee published by them in the middest of the congregatiõ, but came to fede their flesh and to make carnal cheare. In so much that ẏ rich would haue meate and drinke inough, and take such aboundaunce ẏ they would be dronke (and so made it their owne supper & not the Lordes, as Paule saith, and did eate onely the bread & meate, and not the body breaking, as I haue before said, & the poore which had not (that is to say that had no meate to eate) were ashamed and hungry, and so could not reioyse and prayse the Lord: by the reason that the delicate fare of the riche was an occasion for the poore to lament their pouertie and thus the rich dyd neither prayse God them selues, nor suffered the poore to doe it, but were an occasion to hynder them.

They should haue brought their meate and drinke and haue deuided it with their poore brethren, that they might haue been mery together, and so to haue geuen them occasion to be mery and reioyse in the Lorde with thankes geuyng. But they had neither lust to prayse God nor to comfort their neighbour. Their fayth was feble and their charitie cold, and had no regard but to fill their body and fede their flesh: And so despised ỳ poore cõgregation of God whom they should haue honoured for ỳ spirite that was in them & fauour that God had shewed indifferently vnto them in ỳ blood of hys sonne Christ. When Paule perceiued that they were thus fleshly mynded and had no mynde vnto that spirituall maundy which chiefly shuld ther bee aduertised, hee repraoueth thẽ sore, rehearsing ỳ wordes of Christ.

That which I gaue vnto you I receiued of the Lord. For the Lord Iesus the same night in the which hee was betrayed, tooke bread and thanked and brake it and said: take ye and eate ye, this is my bodye which is broken for you, this do ye in the remembraunce of me. After the same maner hee tooke the cup when supper was done saying, this cuppe is the new Testament in my bloud, this doe ye as ofte as ye drinke it in the remembraunce of me. For as oft as ye shall eate this bread & drinke of this cup, ye shall shew the Lordes death, til he come.

As though hee should say, ye Corinthians are much to blame whiche at this Supper seeke the fede of your flesh. For it was institute of Christ, not for the intent to norishe the belly, but to strẽghten the hart and soule in God. And by this you may know that Christ so meant. For he calleth it hys body which is geuen for you, so that the name it selfe might testifie vnto you, that in this supper you should more eate his body whiche is geuen for you (by digesting that into the bowels of your soule) then the bread which by the breakyng, and the distributyng of it, doth represent his body breakyng and the distributyng therof vnto all that are faythful. And that hée so meaneth is euident by the wordes folowyng, which say, this do in the remembrance of mee: and likewyse of the cuppe. And finally concludyng of both, Paule sayth, as often as ye shall eate this bread & drinke of this cuppe (in this place and felowshyp) ye shall shew ỳ Lordes death vntill hée come, prayeing the Lord for the death of his sonne and exhortyng other to doe the same, reioyeing in hym with infinite thãkes. And therfore ye are to blame whiche seeke onely to fede the belly with that thyng which was onely institute to fede the soule. And therupon it foloweth.

Wherfore who soeuer doth eate of this bread and drinke of this cup vnworthely, is gilty of the body and bloud of the Lorde. He eateth this bread vnworthely, which regardeth not the purpose for the which Christ ordinstitute it, which cõmeth not to it with spirituall hũger, to eate through fayth his very body, which the bread representeth by the breaking and distributing of it: which commeth not with a mery hart, geuing God harty thankes for their deliueraunce from sinne: Which doe not much more eate in their hart ỳ death of his body, then they doe the bread with their mouth. Now sith the Corinthyans did onlye seeke their belly and flesh, and forgat Gods honour and prayse (for which it was instituted, ỳ thãkes should be geuen by the remembrance of his body breaking for vs) they eate it to Gods dishonour & to their neighboures hinderaunce, & to their owne why Christ did institute the Sacrament.

The sacrament was ordained to feede our soules, and not our bodyes.

The worthy and vnworthy eating of Christes body.

condemnation, & so for lacke of fayth were giltye of Christes body which (by fayth) they should there chiefely haue eaten to their soules health. And therefore it followeth.

* Let a man therfore examyne him selfe and so let him eate of the bread, and drinke of the cuppe.

what it is to proue & examine a mans owne selfe.

This prouing or examinyng of a mans selfe is first to thinke with him selfe with what lust and desire he cõmeth vnto the maundy & will eate that bread: whether he be sure that he is the child of God and in the faith of Christ: And whether his cõscience do beard him witnesse that Christes body was broken for him: And whether the lust ỹ he hath to prayse God and thanke hym with a faythfull hart in the middes of the brethren, do driue hym thether warde. Or els whether he do it for ỹ meates sake or to kepe the custome: for then were it better that he were away. For he that eateth or drinketh vnworthely, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation, because he maketh no differẽce of the Lordes body. That is, as it is sayd before, he that regardeth not the purpose for which it was instituted, & putteth no difference betwene his eating and other eating (for other eating doth onely serue the bellye) but this eating was instituted and ordayned, to serue the soule and inward man. And therfore he that abuseth it to the flesh, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation, And he commeth vnworthelye to the maundye where the sacrament of Christes body is eaten: ye where the body of the Lord is eaten: not carnally with the teth and bellye but spiritually with the hart and faith Vpon this followeth the text that M. More allegeth and wresteth for his purpose.

For this cause many are weake & sicke among you, and many sleepe. yf we had truely Judged our selues, we should not haue beene Judged when we are Judged of the Lorde, we are chastened because we should not be damned with the world. Wherfore my brethren, whẽ ye come togither to eate, tary one for an other. Yf a man hunger, let him eate at home, that ye come not togither vnto condemnation.

The meaning of S. Paules former wordes.

For this cause (that is) for lacke of good examinyng of our selues (as is before touched) many are weake and sicke in the fayth, and many a sleepe, and haue lost their fayth in Christes bloud, for lacke of remembraunce of his body breaking & bloud shedding: yea & not that onely but many were weake and sicke euen striken with bodelye diseases for abusing ỹ sacrament of his body, eating the bread with their teth and not his body with their hart and minde and peraduenture some slayne for it, by the stroke of God, which if they had truely iudged and examined thẽ selues for what intent they came thither and why it was instituted, should not haue beene so iudged and chastened of the Lorde. For the Lorde doth chasten to bring vs vnto repentaunce and to mortifie our rebellious mẽbers, that we may remember hym. Here ye may shortly perceyue the mynde of Paule.

An Epitome and short rehearsall of all this booke, shewing in what poyntes Frith dissenteth from our Prelates.

An Epitome of this whole booke.

Now to be short, in these three poyntes Frith dissenteth frõ our Prelates, and from M. More which taketh vpon hym to be their proctor.

The opinio of the Prelates.

1. Our Prelates beleeue that in the Sacrament remaineth no bread, but that it is turned into the naturall body of Christ both flesche, blond, and bones. Frith sayth that it is no article of our Crede: and therefore let them beleeue it that will. And he thinketh that there remayneth bread still, and that he proueth three maner of wayes. First by ỹ scripture of Paule, whiche calleth it bread, saying: the bread which we breake, is it not the fellowship of the body of Christ? For we we though we bee many, are yet one body and one bread, as many as are partakers of one bread. And againe he ſayth: as often as ye eate of thys bread or drinke of thys cup, you ſhall ſhew the Lordes death vntil he come. Also Luke calleth it bread, ſaying in the Actes: they continued in the fellowſhip of the Apoſtles, and in the breaking of the bread & prayer. Also Chriſt called the cup the fruite of a vyne, ſaying: I ſhall not from hence forward drinke of the fruite of the vyne, vntill I drinke that new in the kingdome of my father.

1. Cor. 11.

Actes. 2.

Math. 26. Marke. 14. Luke. 22.

Nature teacheth that there is both bread and wyne in the Sacrament.

Furthermore nature doth teache you that both the bread and wine cõtinue in their nature. For the bread mouldeth if it be kept long, yea and wormes brede in it: and the pore mouſe will runne away with it and eate it, which are euidence inough that there remayneth bread. Alſo the wine if it were reſerued, would ware ſower, as they confeſſe them ſelues, and therefore they houſell the lay people but with one kinde onely, becauſe the wine can not continue nor be reſerued to haue ready at hand when nede were. And ſurely as if there remayned no bread, it could not mould nor ware full of wormes: euen ſo if there remayned no wine, it could not ware ſower. And therefore it is but falſe doctrine that our prelates ſo lõg haue taught and publiſhed.

The olde Doctours proue that there is bread in the Sacrament.

Finally ẏ there remayneth bread, might be proued by the authoritie of many Doctors which call it bread and wine, euen as Chriſt and hys Apoſtles did. And though ſome ſophiſters would wreſt their ſaying, and expoũd them after their owne phantaſie, yet ſhall I alleage thẽ one Doctor which was Pope, that maketh ſo playne with vs, that they ſhall neuer bee able to auoyde them.

Gelaſius in concilio Ro.

For Pope Gelaſius writeth on thys maner: Certe ſacramenta quæ ſumimus corporis & ſanguinis Chriſti, diuinæ res ſunt, propter quod & per eadem diuinæ efficimur conſortes naturæ. Et tamen non deſinit eſſe ſubſtantia vel natura panis & vini, ſed permanet in ſua proprietate naturæ. Et certe imago & ſimilitudo corporis & ſanguinis Chriſti in actione myſteriorum celebrantur. That is to ſay. Surely the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Chriſt which we receaue, are a godly thing, and therefore through them are we made partakers of the godly nature. And yet doth it not ceaſe to bee the ſubſtance or nature of bread and wine, but they continue in the propertie of their owne nature. And ſurely the image and ſimilitude of the body and bloud are celebrated in the acte of the myſteryes. Thys I am ſure, that no man can auoyde it, nor ſo wreſt it, but that all men ſhall ſone eſpye hys folly, and therefore I may conclude that there remayneth the ſubſtaunce and nature of bread and wine.

The ſecond poynt wherin Frith diſſenteth from our Prelates and their Proctor.

The fayth of the Prelates.

The Prelates beleeue that hys very fleſhe is preſent to the teeth of them that eate the ſacrament, and that the wicked eate hys very body.

The opinio of Iohn Frith.

Frith ſayth that it is no article of our Crede, and therefore hee reckoneth that hee is in no ieoperdy though hee beleeue it not. And hee thinketh that his fleſhe is not preſent vnto the teeth of them that receaue the Sacrament. For hys fleſh is onely in one place at once: And ẏ hee proueth both by ẏ authoritie of S. Auſten ad Dardanum, and alſo by the authoritie of Fulgentius ad Thraſuuandum lib. 20. as before appeareth in ẏ booke. And Frith ſayth that the wicked eate not hys very fleſhe, although they receaue the ſacrament: And that hee proueth by the Scripture, Doctors, and good reaſon grounded vpon the ſcriptures.

The Scripture is this: hee that eateth Chriſtes body hath euerlaſting life, but the wicked hath not euerlaſting life, ergo then the wicked eate not his body. Agayne the Scripture ſayth: hee that eateth Chriſtes fleſhe and drinketh hys bloud, abydeth in Chriſt and Chriſt in hym, but ẏ wicked abyde not in Chriſt, nor Chriſt in him, ergo the wicked eate not hys fleſhe nor drinke hys bloud.

Auguſt. in ſerm. de ſacra fe. paſſcha. Thys may alſo bée confirmed by good authoritie. For S. Auſten ſayth: hée that abydeth not in Chriſt, and in whom Chriſt abydeth not, without doubt hée eateth not hys fleſhe, nor drinketh hys bloud, although hée eate and drinke the ſacrament of ſo great a thing vnto hys damnation.

Beda. And euen the ſame wordes hath Beda vpon the x. chapter of the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians.

Aug. de Ciuitate Dei in libro. 21. Cap. 25. Agayne S. Auſten ſayth: hée that abydeth not in me, and in whom I abyde not, let hym not ſay nor thinke, that hée eateth my body or drinketh my bloud. And euē the ſame wordes hath Beda vpon the vi. chapter of the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians. And euen ỹ ſame ſentēce hath Ambroſe, and Proſper, and Beda vpon the xi. chapter of the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians.

Finally thys may bée proued by good reaſon grounded vpon the ſcripture. Chriſt would not ſuffer Mary (though ſhée loued hym well) to touch hym, becauſe ſhée lacked one poynt of fayth, and dyd not beléeue that hée was equall with his father. And therfore by reaſon it muſt follow, that hée will not ſuffer the wicked (which neither haue good faith nor loue towards hym) both to touch hym and eate him into their vncleane bodyes.

The wicked eate not Chriſtes body.

Now ſith thys is proued true, that the wicked eate not hys body, it muſt alſo thereof nédes followe, that the ſacrament is not hys naturall bodye. For they doe eate the ſacrament as all mē know. Beſides that the faythfull doe not eate Chriſtes body with their téeth. And therefore it muſt followe that the wicked doe not eate it with their téeth. The antecedent or firſt part of the reaſon is proued by the wordes of Chriſt, which ſayth, Iohn. 6. that the fleſh profiteth nothyng at all, meaning that it doth not profite as they vnderſtode hym, that is to ſay, it profiteth nothyng to bée eaten carnally with their téeth and belly, as they vnderſtode hym. For els it profiteth much to bée eaten ſpiritually, that is to ſay, to beléeue that through hys body breakyng & bloud ſhedding our ſinnes are purged. And thus doth Origene, S. Auſten, Beda, Chryſoſtome, and Athanaſius expound it, as appeareth in the booke before. And therfore Frith ſayth that onely fayth-full men eate hys body, not with their téeth and mouth, but with their fayth and hart, that digeſt it into ỹ bowells of their ſoules through beléeuing that it was broken on the croſſe, to waſhe away their ſinnes. And the wicked eate not hys body but onely the bread and their damnation, becauſe they eate hym not ſpiritually, that is, becauſe they beléeue not in hys bodye breaking and bloud ſhedding.

Onely the faythfull do eate Chriſtes body and drinke his bloud.

✻ The third point wherin Frith diſſenteth from our prelates and their proctoure.

The fayth of the Prelates. 3. The Prelates beléeue that men ought to worſhip the ſacramēt. But Frith ſayth nay, and affirmeth that it is Idolatry to worſhip it. And hée ſayth that Chriſt and his Apoſtles taught vs not ſo to doe: neither did the holy fathers ſo teach vs. And Frith ſayth, that the authors of thys worſhipping are the children of perdition which haue ouerwhelmed this world with ſinne. Neuertheleſſe we muſt receaue it reuerently, becauſe of the doctrine that it bringeth vs. For it preacheth Chriſtes death vnto vs, and deſcribeth it before our eyes, euen as a faythfull preacher by the worde doth inſtill it into vs by our eares and hearing. And that it ſupplyeth the roome of a preacher is euident by the wordes of S. Auſten which ſayth. Paulus quamuis portaret farcinam corporis quod aggrauat animā, potuit tamen ſignificando predicare Dominum Ieſum Chriſtum, aliter per linguam ſuam, aliter per epiſtolam, aliter per ſacramentum corporis Chriſti. That is to ſay, though Paule did bere the burthen of the body which doth honorate the ſoule, yet was he able in ſignifyng to preach ỹ lord Jeſus Chriſt, one way by his tonge, and an other way by an epiſtle, & an other way by the ſacrament of Chriſtes body. &c.

The opinio of Frith.

For

For as the people by vnderstanding the signification of the wordes which he spake did heare the glorious Gospell of God, and as by the reading of his pistle they vnderstode his minde and receiued the word of the soules health, so by the ministration of the sacrament they might see with their eye the thing which they heard & read and so haue their sences occupied about the mistery, that they might the more earnestly print it in their minde. As by example: The Prophet Hieremie being in Hierusalem in the tyme of Sedechias king of the Iewes, prophesyed and preached vnto them, ỹ they should be take̅ prisoners of Nabugodonesar the king of Babilon, & the Iewes were angry with him and woulde not beleeue his wordes. And therfore he made a chayne or fetters of wood and put them about his neke and prophesied agayne and preached that they should be taken prisoners & led captiue into Babilon. And as his wordes did certifie their eares ỹ they should be subdued, so the chayne dyd represent their captiuitie euen before their eye. Whiche thyng did more vehemently worke in them then the bare wordes could doe, and euen so it is in the Sacrament. For likewise as the woordes dyd instill into our eares, that his body was geuen for vs, and his blood shed for the remission of our sinnes, euen so did the ministration of the sacrament expresse ỹ same thing vnto our sight, and doth more effectuously moue, then the bare wordes might doe and make vs more attent vnto the thing, that we may wholye geue thankes vnto God and prayse him for his bounteous benefites. And therfore seyng it is a preacher, expressing vnto our sight ỹ same thing that ỹ wordes doe to our eares represēt you must receyue it with reuerence & sober behauiour, aduertising ỹ thing, that it representeth vnto you. And euen ỹ same honour is dew vnto it which is geuen vnto the scripture that is the word of God. For vnto ỹ must a man deuoutlye geue eare and reuerently take the booke in hys hande: yea and if he kisse ỹ booke for the doctrines sake that he learneth thereout, he is to be cōmended, Nevertheless if he should goe sence hys booke, men might well thinke that he were very childishe. But if he should knéele downe and pray to this booke then he dyd commyt playne Idolatrye Consider deare bretheren what I say and auoyde this Ieoperdye. which thing auoyded, I care not as touching the presence of his body, though you beléeue that hys naturall flesh be there in déede (and not onely in a misterye as I haue taught) For when ỹ Ieoperdye is past, he were a fole that would bee contētious for a thing as long as there cōmeth no hurt therbye.

Ier. 37.

The ministration of the Sacrament doth liuely expresse the death and passion of Christ.

The Germanes which beléeue the presence of his body, do not worshyp it, but playnly teach the contrary and in that poynt (thankes be to God) all they whom you call heretickes, do agrée fullwell. Onely auoyde this Idolatry and I desire no more.

¶ The conclusion of this treatise.

NOwe deare brethren I beséech you for the mercy ỹ ye loke for in Christ Iesu, that you accepte this worke with a single eye and no contentious hart. For necessitie hath compelled me to write it. because I was informed both of my Lord of Winchester and other credible persōs, that I had by the meanes of my first treatise offended many men. Which thing may well be true: For it was to slender, to instruct all them which haue since seene it, albeit it were sufficient for their vse to whō it was first deliuered. And therfore I thought it not onely expedient, but also necessary, to instruct them further in the truth, that they might sée plaine euidence of that thyng wherein they were offended.

By this worke you shal espye their blasphemyes & the venemous toūges where with they slaunder not onelye them that publish the truth, but euen the truth it selfe. They shame not to say ẏ we affirme it to bee onely bread and nothing els. And we say not so: but we say, that beside the substaunce of bread, it is ẏ sacrament of Christes body and bloud. As ẏ Jupe hanging before the tauerne doore is more then bare Jupe. For beside the substaunce of Jupe, it is a signe, and signifieth that there is wine to bee sold. And this sacrament signifieth vnto vs and poynteth out before our eyes that as verely as that bread is broken, so verely was Christes body broken for our sinnes: and as that bread is distributed vnto vs, so is his body & fruite of hys passion distributed vnto all his faythfull. And as the bread comforteth the body, so doth ẏ fayth in Christes death comfort our soules. And as surely as we haue that bread and eate it with our mouth and teeth, & know by our senses that we haue it within vs, & are partakers therof: no more nede we to doubte of hys body and bloude, but that thorough fayth, wee are as sure of them, as we are sure of that bread. As it is sufficiently declared in my booke.

The Sament beside the substaunce of of bread is Christes body and bloud.

They dishonour the Sacramẽt that geue it that honour that is due vnto God.

Agayne you may perceyue how wickedly they report on vs which affirme that we dishonour it whiche gene it the right honour that it ought to haue. And you doe playnly dishonour it, whiche geue vnto it the honor that is onely due vnto God. We geue it the same honour that we geue vnto the holy Scripture and word of God, because it expresseth vnto our senses the death of our Sauiour, and doth more deepely Print it within vs. And therefore we call it an holy Sacrament, as we call Gods word, holy Scripture. And we receiue this Sacrament with great reuerence, euen as we reuerently read or heare preached the holy word of God which cõteineth the health of our soules. And we graunt that his body is present with the bread as it is with the word, and with both it is verely receiued & eaten through faith. But if we should knæle downe and pray vnto the holy Scripture, men might coũt vs fooles, & might lawfully say, that we doe not honour the scripture by that meanes, but rather dishonour it. For the right honour of a thyng is, to vse it for that intent that it was instituted of God. And hee that abuseth it to any other purpose, doth in dæde dishonour it. And lykewise it is in the Sacrament which was instituted to kæpe in memory the death of Christ, which if we doe any otherwise honour, then we doe the holy Scripture (vnto ẏ which we may in no wise make our prayers) I say that then we should vtterly dishonour it. Auoyde therfore this poynt of Idolatry, and all is safe.

Frith here sheweth what hee thinketh of the Sacrament.

Finally we say that they speake well & faythfully whiche say that they goe to the body and receiue the body of Christ, and that they speake blasphemously and wickedly whiche say that they onely receiue bread or the signe of hys body for in so saying they declare their infidelitie. For the faythful will reckon that hee is euill reported of, and reputed for a traytour and an other Judas, if mẽ should say of hym that hee dyd onely receiue the Sacrament, and not also the thyng whiche the Sacrament doth signifie. For albeit hee onely eateth the bread and sacrament with hys mouth and teeth: yet with hys hart and fayth inwardly, hee eateth the very thyng it selfe which the Sacramẽt outwardly doth represent.

And of this, spryng the maner of speakynges that the olde fathers doe sometyme vse, which at the first sight mought seeme contrary to our senses. But if they bee well pondered, it may soone bee seene, how they should be taken. For many times when they speake of the Sacramẽt and outward eating, they apply vnto ẏ Sacrament and outward eatyng the fruite & conditions of the inward eatyng & thyng it selfe, because that in a faythful man they are so ioyntly ioyned that the one is neuer without the other. As by example, Mary is named the mother of God, and yet she is not the mother of hys Godhead by the which part onely he is called God, but because she is his mother, as touching his mãhode, & the Godhead is so annexed with the mãhode that they both, make but one per-person, therfore is she called the mother of God, whiche in deede if it be wisely weyed, shalbe founde to be a abused speach. And yet neuertheleſſe it may very well be vsed, if men vnderstand what is ment thereby, but if thorough the vse of this speach, men shoulde fall into such an errour that woulde affirme our Ladye to be in deede the mother of his Godhead, the necessitie should compell vs to make a distinction betweene the nature of his Godhead and the nature of hys manhode, and so to expoũde the matter vnto them, and bryng them home agayne into the right vnderstanding. As we are now constrayned to doe in this Sacrament, because you misconstrue the sayinges of the Scripture & Doctours. Which notwithstandyng (if a man vnderstand them) say very well.

And many such maner of speaches are contayned in the Scripture: As where Christ sayth. Joh. 3. There shall noman ascend into heauen, but he that discendeth from heauen, the sonne of man which is in heauen. This text doth say that the sonne of man was then in heauen, when he spake these wordes vnto Nicodemus here on earth: which thing, all wise men cõsent to be vnderstanded, propter vnitatem persone: That is to say, for the vnitie of the person. For albeit his godhed was in euery place at that time, yet was not his manhode (by the which he was called the sonne of man) in heauen at that time. And yet Christ sayde that it was in heauen for the vnitie of his person. For his Godhed was in heauen, and because the Godhed and manhode made but one person, therefore it was ascribed vnto ỹ manhode, which was onely verified vppon the Godhed, as S. Augustine ad Dardanum doth diligently declare.

August.

Of Baptisme.

And likewise in the sacrament of Baptisme, because the inwarde worke king of the holy ghost is euer annexed in the faithfull, vnto the outwarde ceremony: therefore sometime the fruite of the inwarde Baptisme is ascribed vnto the outward worke. And so the scripture vseth to speake of the outward baptisme as though it were the inwarde: that is to say, the spirite of God. And therfore S. Paul saith, that we are buried with Christ thorough baptisme. And yet as S. Augustine expoundeth it, ỹ outward Baptisme doth but signifie this buriall. And agayne Paule sayth, as many as are baptised haue put Christ vppõ them. And yet in deede our outward baptisme doth but signifie, that we haue put Christ vppon vs. But by the inwarde baptisme (which is the water of life and spirite of God) we haue in deede put him vpon vs & liue in him, and he in vs. Which notwithstanding is very false for all the outwarde baptisme, in them that receiue it not in fayth. And vnto them it is but a bare signe, whereof they get no profite, but damnation.

Augustinus ad Bonifacium.

And here you may euidently perceiue how it is sometyme in scripture ascribed vnto the inwarde worke and ceremony, which is onely true in the outwarde veritie. And this place shall expounde all the olde doctoures which seeme contrary to our sentẽce. And therefore marke it well.

Thus haue you my mynde farther vppon the Sacrament of the bodye and blood of Christ. Wherein, if you recken that I haue beene to long in repeating one thing so often, I shall pray you of pardon. But surely, me thought I coulde not be shorter. For the worlde is such now a dayes, that some woulde heare and can not, and some doe heare and will not. And therfore I am compelled so oftẽ to repeate that thing which a wise man woulde vnderstand with halfe the wordes.

¶ Praye Christen reader that the worde of God may encrease, and that God may bee glorified thorough my bondes. Amen.

The Articles wherfore Iohn Frith dyed, whiche hee wrote in Newgate the .23. day of Iune, the yeare of our Lord. 1533.

I Doubt not deare bretheren, but that it doth, some deale vexe you, to see the one part haue all the wordes, and freely to speake what they liste, and the other to bee put to silence, and not to bee heard indifferently. But referre your matters to God, whiche shortly shall iudge after an other fashiō. But in the meane reason, I shall rehearse vnto you the articles for which I am condemned.

They examined me but of two articles which are these.

The first article. FIrste whether I thought, there were no Purgatory to purge the soule after this present lyfe. And I sayd, that I thought there was none. For man is made but of two partes, the body and the soule. And the body is purged by ỹ crosse of Christ, which bee layeth vpon euery child that bee receaueth: as affliction, worldly oppression, persecution, imprisonment &c. and death finisheth sinne. And ỹ soule is purged by the word of God, which we receaue thorough fayth, vnto the health & saluatiō both of body & soule.

Now and if I did know any third part wherof we are made, I would also gladly graunt the third Purgatory: but seyng, I know none such, I must deny the Popes Purgatory. Nevertheles, I count neither part a necessary article of our faith, necessarely to bee beleeued vnder payne of damnation, whether there bee such a purgatory or not.

The second article. The second article was this, whether that I thought, that the Sacrament of the auiter was the body of Christ. And I sayd yea, ỹ I thought that it was both Christes body, and also our bodye, as S. Paule sayth. 1. Cor. 10. chapter.

In that it is made one bread of many graynes it is our body signifying that we though we bee many, are yet one body: and likewise of the wyne in that it is made one wyne, of many grapes.

And agayne in that it is broken, it is Christes body, signifying that his body should bee broken, that is to say suffer death, to redeme vs from our iniquities.

In that it was distributed, it was Christes body, signifying that as verely, as that Sacrament is distributed vnto vs, so verely is Christes body, & the frute of his passiō distributed vnto all faithfull men.

In that it is receaued, it is Christes body signifying that as verely, as outward man receaueth the Sacrament with his teeth, and mouth, so verely doth the inward man, through fayth, receaue Christes body & frute of his passion, and is as sure of it, as of the bread that bee eateth.

An other question. Well sayd they, do you not thinke, that his very naturall body, both flesh and bloud is really contained vnder the Sacramēt, and there actually present, beside all similitudes. No said I, I do not so thinke.

An answere. Notwithstandyng I would not that any should counte that I make my saying (whiche is the negatiue) any article of the fayth For euen as I saye that you ought not to make any necessary article of ỹ fayth of your part (which is ỹ affirmatiue.) So I say agayne, that we make none necessarye article of the fayth of our parte, but leaue it indifferent for all men to iudge therein, as God shall open his hart, and no side to condemne or despise the other, but to nourish in all thynges brotherly loue, & to beare others infirmities.

S. Augustines text. The text of S. Augustine which they there alleged agaynst mee, was this: that in ỹ Sacramēt Christ was borne in his owne handes. Whereunto I sayd, ỹ S. Augustine doth full well expound him selfe. For in an other place hee sayeth Ferebatur tanq̄ in manibus suis. That is, hee was borne after a certeine maner, in his owne handes. And by that hee sayth after a certeine maner maner, ye may ſone perceaue what hée meaneth. Howbeit if S. Auguſtin had not thus expounded himſelfe, yet hée ſayth ad Bonifacium, that ẏ Sacrament of a thyng, hath a ſimilitude or propertie of the thyng whiche it ſignifieth. And for that cauſe it hath many tymes, ẏ name of ẏ very thyng which it ſignifieth. And ſo hée ſayth ẏ he bare himſelf, becauſe hée bare ẏ Sacramẽt of his body & bloud which did ſo earneſtly expreſſe him ſelfe, that nothyng might more doe it. If you read ẏ place of S. Auguſtine ad Bonifacium, which I alleage in my laſt booke, ye ſhall ſone ſée them aunſwered.

Chriſoſtomus.

An other place they alleaged out of Chriſoſtome, which at the firſt bluſh ſéemeth to make well for them. But if it bée well wayed, it maketh much leſſe for them then they wéene. The wordes are theſe.

Chriſoſtomes wordes.

Doeſt thou ſee bread and wine? doe they depart from thee into the draught as other meates doe? God forbid for as in waxe when it commeth to the fier, nothing of the ſubſtaunce remayneth nor aboũdeth: ſo lykewiſe thinke that the myſteries are cõſumed by the ſubſtaunce of the body.

These wordes I expounded, by the wordes of the ſame Doctour S. Chriſoſtome, whiche in an other Homilie ſayth on this maner. The inwarde eyes as ſoone as they ſee the bread, they flye ouer all creatures and thinke not of the bread that is baken of the baker, but of the bread of euerlaſtyng life, whiche is ſignified by the myſticall bread.

Now conferre theſe places togither and you ſhall perceaue, that the laſt expoũdeth the firſt clearely. Firſt hée ſayth, wilt thou ſée bread & wyne, I aunſwere by the ſecond, nay. For the inward eyes as ſone as they ſée ẏ bread, thinke not of it, but of ẏ thyng it ſelf ẏ is ſignified therby. And ſo hée ſeeth it & ſeeth it not. He ſeeth it with his outward and carnall eyen, but his inward eyen ſeeth it not. That is to ſay, regarde not the bread or thinke not on it. Euen as we commonly ſay, when we play a game negligẽtly (by my truth I ſée not what I doe) meanyng that our myndes, is not vppon that thing which we ſée with our outward eyen. And lykewiſe we may aũſwere the nert part, where he ſayth.

Doe they depart from thée into the draught (as other meates doe? Nay forſooth ſayd I, for other meates doe onely come to nouriſh ẏ body, & to depart into the draught. But this meate ẏ I here receaue, is ſpirituall meate receaued with fayth & noriſheth vs euerlaſtyngly, both body & ſoule, & neuer entreth into the draught. And euẽ as before the outwarde eyen doe ſée the bread & yet the outward eyen doe not regarde that or thinke vpõ it. So likewiſe the outward man digeſteth the bread, & caſteth it into the draught. And yet the inward man doth not regarde that nor thinke vppon it. But thinketh on the thyng it ſelfe that is ſignified, by that bread.

The expoſition of S. Chriſoſto. text.

And therfore ſayd Chriſoſtome euen a litle before the wordes whiche they here alleaged, lift vp your minde & hartes (ſayd hée) whereby hée moniſheth vs, to loke vppon and conſider thoſe heauenly thinges, which are repreſented and ſignified by the bread and wyne, & not to marke the bread and wyne in it ſelfe.

The true meaning of Chriſoſtomes wordes.

Here they will ſay vnto me, that it is not Chriſoſtomes mynde (for by his example hée playnly ſhewith that there remaneth no bread nor wyne) that I deny. For the example in this place, proueth no more but ẏ ye ſhall not think on ẏ bread & wine, no more then if they were not there, but onely on that thyng whiche is ſignified by them. And that ye may euidently perceiue by the wordes folowyng where hée ſaith, thinke that the miſteries are cõſumed by the ſubſtance of the body.

Solution.

Nowe whether Chriſoſtome thought that there remained bread or no, both wayes ſhall our purpoſe bée proued. Firſt if hée thought there remained ſtill bread and wyne, then we haue our purpoſe. Now if he thought that the bread & wyne remayned not, but were chaũged, then are the bread and wyne neither myſteries nor Sacramentes of the body and bloud of Chriſt. For that that is not, can neither bee mystery nor Sacrament.

Conclusion. Finally if hee speake of ỹ outward appearaunce of bread: then we know that that remaineth still ℮ is not consumed by the substaunce of the body. And therfore hee must needes bee understanded as I take him.

I thinke many men wonder how I can dye in this article, seyng that it is no necessary article of our fayth, for I graunt that neyther parte is an article necessary to bee beleeued vnder payne of damnation, but leaue it as a thyng indifferent, to thynke therein as God shall instill in euery mans mynde, and that neyther parte condemne other for this matter, but receiue eche other in brotherly loue, reseruing eche others infirmitie to god.

Beholde the cause of mi deathe. The cause of my death is thys, because I can not in conscience, abiure and sweare, that our Prelates opinion of the sacrament, (that is, that the substaunce of bread and wine is verely chaunged into the flesshe and bloud of our sauiour Iesus Christ) is an vndoubted article of the fayth, necessary to bee beleeued vnder payne of damnation.

Note. Now though thisopinion were in deede true (which thing they can neither proue true by scripture nor doctours) yet coulde I not in conscience graunt that it shoulde bee an article of the fayth necessary to bee beleeued. ℮. For there are many verities, which yet may bee no such articles of our fayth. It is true that I lay in yrons when I wrote this: howbeit I would not haue you to receaue thys truth for an article of our fayth. For you may thinke the contrary without all ieopardy of damnation.

℄ The cause why I can not beleeue their opinion of transmutation is this.

Three causes. 1 First, because I thinke verely that it is false, and can neither bee proued by scripture, nor faythfull doctours, if they bee well pondered.

2 The second cause is thys, because I will not bynde the congregation of Christ (by mine example) to admitte any necessarye Article beside oure Creede, and specially none such as can not bee proued true by Scripture. And I say that the Church, as they caule it, can not compell vs to receaue any such articles to bee of necessitie vnder payne of damnation.

3 The thirde cause is, because I dare not bee so presumptuous in entering into Gods iudgement, as to make the prelates in this pointe a necessary article of our fayth. For then I should damnably condemne all the Germanes ℮ Almaines with, infinite moe, which in deede doe not beleeue nor thinke that the substaūce of bread and wine is chaunged into the substaūce of Christes naturall body. And surely I can not bee so foolishe hardy, as to condemne such an infinite number for our prelates pleasures.

Thus all the Germaynes and Almaynes, both of Luthers side and also of Oecolampadius, doe wholy approue my matter. And surely I thinke there is no man that hath a pure conscience, but hee will thinke that I dye righteously. For that this transubstantiation should bee a necessary article of the faith, I thinke no man can say it with a good conscience, although it were true in deede.

The death and burning of the most constant Martyrs in Christ,

D. Rob. Barnes, Tho. Garret, and W. Hierome, in Smithfielde. an. 1541.

¶ A briefe discourse of the lyfe and doinges of Robert Barnes Doctour in Diuinitie, a blessed seruaunt and Martyr of Christ, summarely extracted out of the booke of Monumentes.

THe first bringing vp of the sayd Rob. Barnes from a childe, was in the vniuersitie of Cambridge, and was made a Nouice in ỳ house of ỳ Fryer Augustines there. And beyng very apt vnto learning, did so profite, that by the helpe of his frendes, he was remoued from thẽce to the vniuersitie of Louayne in Brabant, where he remained certayne yeares, and greatly profited in the study of the tongues, and there proceeded Doctour of Diuinitie. And then from thence returned agayne into England, and so to the vniuersitie of Cãbridge, where he was made Prior and Maister of the house of Augustines, wherein he was first brought vp. And at that tyme the knowledge of good letters was scarcely entred into the vniuersitie, all thynges being full of rudenes & barbarietie, sauing in very fewe, which were priuye and secrete: whereupon Barnes hauing some fæling of better learning, and had red better actours, begã in his house to reade Terence, Cicero, and Plautus, so that what with his industry, paynes and labours, and with the helpe of Thomas Parnell his scholer, whom he brought from Louaine nayne with him, reading Copia verborum et rerum, he caused the house shortly to florishe with good letters, & made a great parte of ỳ house learned, which before were drowned in barbarous rudenes, as M. Cambridge. M. Felde, M. Colman, M. Burley, M. Couerdale, with diuers other of the vniuersitie, that soiourned there for learnings sake.

Doct. Barnes an abolisher of barbarisme, a founder of learning, and a light of the trueth.

After these foundations layde, then did he read openly Paules Epistles, and put by Duns and Dorbell, and yet he was a questionary himself: and onely because he would haue Christ there taught and his holy word, he turned their vnsauery problemes, and fruitles disputations, to other better matter of the holy Scripture, and thereby in short space he made diuers good deuynes. The same order of disputation which he kept in his house, he obserued likewise in the vniuersitie abroad, when he should dispute with any man in the common schooles. And the first man that aunswered M. Barnes in the Scriptures was M. Stafford for his forme to be Bacheler of Diuinitie, which disputation was merueilous in the sight of the great blynde Doctours, and very ioyfull to the godly spirited.

Thus Barnes, what with his reading, disputation, and preachyng, became famous and mightie in the Scriptures, preaching euer agaynst Byshops and hipocrites, and yet did not see his inward and outwarde Idolatry, which he both taught and maintayned, vntill that good Maister Bilney with other conuerted him vnto Christ.

The first Sermō that euer he preached of this trueth, was ỳ Sonday before Christmas day at S. Edwardes Church longyng to Trinitie halle in Cambridge by ỳ Peasemarket: whose theame was the Epistle of the same Sonday, Gaudete in domino semper. &c. And so postilled the whole Epistle, folowing the Scripture and Luthers postill. And for that Sermō, he was immediately accused of heresie by vj. Felowes of ỳ Kinges hall. Then the godly learned in Christ, both of Pembroke hall, S. Johns, Peter house, Quænes colledge, ỳ kings colledge, Gunwell hall, & Benet colledge, shewed thēselues, and flocked togither in open sight, both in ỳ Schooles, & at open Sermōs, at S. Maries, at S. Austens, and at other disputations: and then they conferred continually togither.

The house that they resorted most commonly vnto, was the white Horse, which for despite of them, to bring Gods worde into cōtempt, was named Germany. This house specially was chosen, because of them of S. Johns. The Kings colledge, and ỳ Quænes colledge, came in on the backside. At this tyme much trouble began to ensue.

And first the aduersaries of D. Barnes accused him in the Regents house before the Vicechauncelour, where as his Articles were presented with hym and receaued, hē promising to make aunswere at the next conuocation, and so it was done. Then Doctour Notoris, a ranke enemy to Christ, moued D. Barnes to recant, but he refused so to doe, as appeareth in his booke made to K. Henry the viij. And this tragedy continued in Cambridge, in preaching one agaynst an other in trying out of Gods trueth, vntill within vj. dayes of Shroftyde. Then was sent downe a Sergeaunt at Armes called Gibson, who sodainely arested Doctour Barnes openly in the conuocation house, to make all other afrayde: and priuely they had determined to make search for Luthers bookes, and all the Germaynes workes sodainely. But good Doctour Forman of the Quēnes colledge, sent worde incontinently therof to the chambers of those that were suspected, which were in number xxx. persons. But God be praysed, they were conueyed by that tyme that the Sergeaunt of Armes, the Vichchauncelour and the proctours were at euery mans chamber, goyng directly to the place where ỳ bookes lay, whereby it was perceaued that there were some priuy spyes amōg that small company. The next day in the morning the Sergeaunt of Armes caried Barnes with him, and brought him to London before Cardinall Wolsey, where after long waiting, he by the reason of Doctour Gardiner Secretary to ỳ Cardinal (of whose familiar acquaintance, Doctour Barnes had bēene before) and M. Foxe maister of the wardes, at the last he spake with the Cardinall in his chamber of estate, and there before him knæled on his knees. Then sayd the Cardinall vnto them, is this Doct. Barnes your man that is accused of heresie? They aunswered, yea and it please your grace, and we trust you shall finde him reformable, for he is both wise and well learned.

Then sayd the Cardinall, what maister Doctour, had you not a sufficient scope in the Scriptures to teach the people, but that my golden shoes, my pillers, my Pollexares, my golden cusheons, and my crosses did so sore offende you, that you must make vs Ridiculum Caput amongest the people? We were that day iolily laughed to scorne. Verely it was a Sermon more fitter to be preached on a stage, then in a pulpit: For at the last you sayd I did weare a payre of red gloues (I shoulde say bloudy gloues quoth you) that I should not be colde in the middest of my Ceremonies. Then Barnes answered, I spake nothing but the trueth out of the scriptures, according to my cõscience, and according to the olde Doctours: and then he deliuered him vj. sheetes of paper written, to confirme and corroborate his sayinges.

The Cardinall receaued them, smilyng on him, and saying: wee perceaue that you intend to stand to your Articles, and to shew your learning: yea sayd Barnes that I doe intende by Gods grace and your Lordships fauour. Then sayde the Cardinall vnto Barnes, such as you are beare vs little fauour and the Catholique Church. I will aske you a question: whether doe you thinke it more necessary that I shoulde haue all thys royaltie, because I represent the kynges maiesties person in all the high courtes of this Realme, to the terrour and képing downe of all rebellions, treasons, traytours, and all the wicked and corrupt members of the common wealth, or to be as simple as you woulde haue vs, and to sell all these aforesayde thinges, and to géeue it to the poore, which shortly would pisse it against the walles, & to pull away this maiestie of a princely dignitie, which is a terrour to all the wicked, and to follow your counsaile in this behalfe? Barnes aunswered, I thinke it necessary to be solde and géeuen to the poore, for this is not comely for your caulyng, nor the kinges maiestie is not maintained by your pompe and pollares, but by God, who sayth, per me Reges regnant. Kynges and theyr maiesties raigne and stand by mée.

Then sayd the Cardinall, loe maister Doctours, here is the learned and wise man that you tolde mée of. Then they knéeled downe and sayd: we desire your grace to bée good vnto hym, for hée will be reformable. Then sayd he, stand you vp, for your sakes and the vniuersitie, we will be good vnto hym. And then sayd the Cardinall to Barnes, how say you M. Doctour, doe you not know that I am Legatus de latere, and that I am hable to dispẽce in all matters concerning religion within this Reaime, as much as the Pope may? He sayd, I know it to be so. Will you then be ruled by vs, and we will doe all thinges for your honestie, and for the honestie of the vniuersitie. He aunswered. I thãke your grace for your good wil, I will sticke to ẏ holy Scripture, & to Gods boke according to the simple talent that God hath lent me. Then sayd the Cardinall, aunswere well I woulde aduise thée, for thou shalt haue thy learning tried to the vttermost, and thou shalt haue the lawe.

Then D. Barnes requyred hym that he might haue iustice with equitie, but forthwyth he should haue gone to the tower, but that Gardiner and Foxe became his sureties for that night. And in the morning he came agayne to Yorke place to Gardiner & Foxe, and forthwith he was cõmitted to ẏ Sergeaunt at Armes, to bryng him into the Chapter house at Westminster, before the Bishoppes and the Abbot of Westminster cauled Islip.

So sone as the Sergeaunt had presented Barnes, the sayd Bishoppes and Abbot, did first sweare him, and layd Articles vnto hym, who aunswered in like maner as before he had aunswered to the Cardinall, and he offred vnto them his boke of probations: who asked him, whether he had an other for hym selfe, and he sayd yea, & shewed it vnto them, and they toke them both from him, saying that they should haue no laysure at that present to dispute with hym: But demaunded of him, whether he woulde subscribe to his Articles or not? And he subscribed willingly. Then was he committed to the Fléte, and the Warden of the Fléte commaunded that no man shoulde speake with hym.

On the Saterday folowing, he was agayne brought before them into the Chapter house at Westminster, where he remayned almost the whole day, and late in the euening they cauled him before them, and demaunded of him, whether he woulde abiure or burne? He was then in a great agonye, and thought rather to burne then abiure.

But

But then was he sent agayne to haue the counsaile of Gardiner and Foxe, and they perswaded him rather to abiure then to burne, because they sayde he should doe more good in tyme to come, & with diuers other perswasions that were mightie in the sight of reason and flesshe. Upon that knéelyng vpon his knées, he consented to abiure, and the abiuration put into his hand, he abiured as it was there written, and then he subscribed it with his owne hand, and yet they would scarcely receiue him into the bosome of the Church, as they termed it. Then they put him to an othe, and charged him to execute doe and fulfill all that they commaunded him, and he promised so to doe.

Then they commaunded the warden of the fléete to carye him with v. other of the stilliard that then were in like trouble with him vnto the fléete from whence they came, and to kéepe them close prisoners, and in the morning to prouide v. Faggots for Doctour Barnes and iiij. stilliard men, the which was readely done the next day by vij. of the clocke in the morning. At which tyme the knight Marshall with all his Billes, and gleues, & all the Tipstaues he could make was cõmaunded to bring them frõ the Fléete vnto Paules Church, and in like maner to bring them from thence to the fléete againe. And in the morning they were all ready by their houre appointed in Paules Church aforesayd, the which Church was then so full that no man might get in. The Cardinall had a skaffolde made for him in the toppe of the steyers before the Quyer doore, wherin he him selfe with xxvj. Abbottes, mitred Priors and Bishoppes, and he in his whole Pompe mitred (which Barnes had spoken against) sat there inthronized, his Chapleynes and spirituall Doctours in gownes of Dammaske and Satten, and he himselfe in Purple, euen like a bloudy Antechrist. And on the top of the stayers also, there was erected a new pulpit for the Bishop of Rochester, whose name was fisher to preach against Luther and Barnes, and great basketes full of Bookes standing before thẽ with in the rayles, which after the ende of the Sermon, a great fyer being first made before the Rode of Northen, were commaunded to be there brent, and the aforesayd heretikes after the sermon to goe thrise about the fyer, and to cast in their fagottes.

Now while the Sermond was a doing, Doctour Barnes and the Stilliard men were commaunded to kneele downe, and to aske God forgeuenes, ỳ Catholike Church and the Cardinalles grace. And after that he was commaunded at the ende of the Sermon to declare, that he was more charitabler handled then he deserued, or was worthy (his heresies were so horrible and so detestable) and once againe knéeled downe on his knees, desiring the people of forgeuenes, and to pray for him. And the Cardinall departed vnder a canapye with all his mitred men with him vntill he came to the West doore of Paules, and there he tooke his Mule, and the mitred men came backe againe.

Then Barnes and the other sayd poore men, being commaunded to come downe frõ the stage (whereon the swéepers vse to stand whẽ they swéepe the Church) the Bishops sat them downe againe, and commannded the knight Marshall and the warden of the Fleete with their cõpany to cary them about the fyer, and so were they brought to the Bishops, and there for absolution knéeled downe. At which tyme Rochester declared to the people, how many dayes of pardon and forgeuenes of synnes they had for being at that Sermond, and there did assoyle Doctour Barnes with the other, and shewed ỳ people that they were receaued into the Church againe.

These thinges being done, the warden of the Fleete, and the knight Marshall were commaunded to cary them againe vnto the Fleete, and charged ỳ they should haue the libertie of the fleete as other prisoners had, and that their frendes might resort vnto them, and there to remayne vntill the Lord Cardinalles pleasure were knowen.

After that Barnes had contynued in ỳ Fleete by the space of halfe a yeare, at lẽgth being deliuered he was committed to be free prisoner at the Augustine friers in London. Whẽ those Caterpillers and blouddy beastes had vndermined him, they complayned agayne to their Lord Cardinall. Whereupõ he was remoued to the Austen fryers of Northampton, there to be burned. Yet he him selfe vnderstanding nothing therof, but supposing still that he should there remayne and contynue in free prison. At the last one M. Horne who had brought him vp, and was his speciall frende, hauing intelligence of the writt that should shortly be sent downe to burne him, gaue him coũsell to fayne him selfe desperate, and that he should write a letter to the Cardinall, & leaue it on his table where he lay, and a paper by, to declare whether he was gone to drowne him selfe, and to leaue his clothes in the same place: & there an other letter to be left to the Maior of the towne to search for him in the water, because he had a letter written in parchment about his necke closed in ware for the Cardinall, which would teach all men to beware by him. Upon this they were by . dayes in searching for him, but he was conueied to London in a poore mans apparell, and taried not there, but toke shipping and went to Antwarp, and so into Germany to Luther, and there fell to study vntill he had made aunswere to all the Byshops of the Realme, and had made a booke intituled Acta Romanorum Pontificum, and an other booke with a supplication to King Henry the viij.

Incontinently it was tolde the Cardinall that he was drowned, and he sayd, Pereat memoria eius cum sonitu. But this did light vpon him selfe shortly after, which wretchedly dyed at Leycester.

In the meane tyme D. Barnes was made strong in Christ, and got fauour both of the learned in Christ, and of forreine Princes in Germany, and was great with Luther, Melancton, Pomeran, Iustus Ionas, Hegendorphinus and Æpinus, and with the Duke of Saxon, and king of Denmarke: which king of Denmarke in ỳ time of More and Stokesley sent him with the Lubeckes, as an Embassadour to King Hẽry the eight. And during the time he remayned here, he lay with the Lubeckes Chauncelour at the Stiliard.

Syr Thomas More being then Chauncelour would fayne haue entrapped him, but the king would not let him, for Cromwell was his great and deare frende. And ere he went the Lubeckes and he disputed with the Bishops of this Realme in defence of the trueth. And so he departed agayne without restreynt with the Lubeckes.

After this he went agayne to Whittembergh to the Duke of Saxon and to Luther and there remayned to set forth his workes in Print that he had begonne. And from thence shortly after he returned agayne into England in the tyme of Quẽne Anne Boleyn and continued a faythfull preacher in this Citie of London all the time that she remained Quẽne. And was well enterteyned and promoted.

Stephen Gardyner the author of mischiefe and decay of religion in England.

After this by the meane of the Lord Cromwell he was sent Ambassadour from K. Hẽry the viij. to the Duke of Cleue, for the mariage of ỳ Lady Anne of Cleue betwẽne the king and her, and was well excepted in that Ambassade, and in all his doinges, vntill the tyme that Stephen Gardiner came out of Fraunce: But after he came, neither Religion prospered, nor the Quẽnes maiestie, nor Cromwell, nor the preachers, who after the mariage of the Lady. Anne of Cleue, neuer ceased vntill he had grafted the mariage in an other stocke, by the occasion whereof he began his bloudy broyle.

For not long after the dissolution of ỳ sayd mariage betwẽne king Hẽry ỳ viij. and ỳ Lady Anne of Cleue, ỳ sayd Doctour Barnes with two of his brethrẽ felow preachers, named Iherome and Garret, were apprehended and caried before the kynges maiestie to Hampton court, and there were examined: where the kynges maiestie sẽking the meanes of Barnes safetie to bring Winchester and him agrẽd, at Winchesters request graunted him leaue to goe home with the Byshop to conferre with hym, and so he did. But as it happened, they not agrẽing, Gardiner & his comparteners sought by all subtile meanes how to entangle and intrappe them into farther daunger, which not long after was brought to passe. For by certayne complayntes made to the king of them, they were enioyned to preach iij. Sermõs the next Easter folowing at the Spittle beside London. At the which Sermons besides other reporters which were thither sent. Stephen Gardiner Byshop of Winchester was there present, sitting wyth the Maior, either to beare recorde of their recantation, or els as the Pharisey came to Christ, to trippe them in their talke, if they had spoken any thing awry.

When the aforesayd thrẽ had preached their Sermons, among whom Barnes preaching the first Sermõ, and hẽ seeing Stephen Gardiner there present, humbly desired him in the face of all the audience to forgeue him, and that if he forgaue hym to holde vp his hand, and the sayd Gardiner thereupõ helde vp his finger. Yet notwithstãding by the meanes of ỹ said reporters, they all iij. immediatly after they had preached, were sent for to Hampton court, and from thence caryed to the Tower by Syr Iohn Gostwyke, and there they remayned vntill the xxx. day of July next folowing. Thẽ ensued procesſe against them by the kynges counsaile in the Parliament, to the which Gardiner confessed himselfe to be priuy among the rest. Whereupon all the aforesayd three Saintes and true Martyrs, the xxx. day of July (not comming to any aũswere, nor yet knowing any cause of their cõdemnation, without any publique hearing) were drawen on herdelles from the Tower to Smithfield, where they preparing them selues to the fier, had there at the stake diuerse & sondry exhortations, amongest whome Doctour Barnes first beganne with this protestation folowing.

I am come hither to be burned as an heretike, and you shall heare my beliefe whereby you shall perceaue what erronious opinions I holde. God I take to record I neuer (to my knowledge) taught any erronious doctrine, but onely those thinges which the Scripture leade me vnto, and that in my sermens I neuer mainteyned any errour, neither moued, nor gaue occasiõ of any insurrection. Although I haue bẽne slaundered to preache that our lady was but a Saffron bagge, which I vtterly protest before God that I neuer ment it nor preached it: But all my study and diligence hath beene vtterly to confound and confute all men of that doctrine: as are the Anabaptistes, which denie that our Sauiour Christ tooke any flesshe of the blessed virgine Mary, which sectes I detest and abhorre. And in deede in this place there hath beene burned some of them, whom I neuer fauoured nor mainteyned, but with all diligence I did studie euermore to set forth the glory of God, the obedience to our soueraigne Lord the King, and the true and sincere religion of Christ. And now harken to my fayth.

I beleeue in the holy and blessed Trinitie, three persons and one God, that created and made all the world. And that this blessed Trinitie sent downe the second person Iesu Christ into the wombe of the most blessed & purest virgin Mary. And heare beare me record that I doe vtterlye condemne that abhominable and detestable opinion of ỹ Anabaptistes, which say that Christ toke no flesshe of the blessed virgine. For I beleeue that without the consent of mans will or power, he was conceaued by the holy ghost, and toke flesshe of her, and that he suffered hunger, thirst, colde, and other passions of our body (sinne except) according to the saying of S. Peter, he was made in all things like to his brethren (except sinne)

And I doe beleeue that he liued here among vs: and after he had preached and taught his fathers will, he suffered the most cruell and bitter death for me and all mankinde.

And I doe beleeue that this his death, and passion was the sufficient price and ransõe for the sinne of all the world. And I beleeue that through his death he ouercame the deuill, sinne, death, and hell, and that there is none other satisfaction vnto the father, but this his death and passion onely: and that no worke of man did deserue any thing of God, but onely his passion as touching our iustification. For I knowledge the best worke that euer I did is vnpure and vnperfect. And here withall he cast abroad his handes and desired God to forgeue him his trespasces. For although perchaũce (said he) you know nothing by me, yet I doe confesse that my thoughtes and cogitations be innumerable. Wherefore (said he) I beseech the o Lorde, not to enter into iudgmẽt with me. According to the saying of the Prophet Dauid. Non intres in iuditium cum seruo tuo domine. And in an other place. Si iniquitates obseruaueris domine quis sustinebit. Lord if thou straightly marke our inniquitie who is able to abide thy iudgment. Wherefore I trust in no good worke that euer I did, but onely in ỹ death of Christ, & I doe not doubt but through him to inherite ỹ kingdome of heauen. Take me not here that I speake against good workes, for they are to bee done, and verely they that doe them not, shall neuer come to the kingdome of God. We must doe them because they are commaũded vs of God to shewe and set forth our profession, not to deserue or merite, for that is onely the death of Christ.

I beleeue that there is a holy Church & a cõpany of all them that doe professe Christ: & that all that haue suffered and confessed his name, be Sayntes, and that all they doe laude and prayse God in heauen, more then I or any mannes tongue can expresse, and that alwayes I haue spoken reuerently of Saintes, and prayed them asmuch as scripture willed me to doe: And that our Lady (I say) shée was a vergyn immaculate and vndefiled: and that shée is the most pureste virgin that euer God created, and a vessell of God elected, of whome Jesus Christ should be borne. Then the shrieke somwhat stayeing him and hastening him to make an ende, he turned him to the people and desired all men to forgeue him: and if he had said any euell at any tyme vnaduisedly, wherby he had offended any man, or geuen any occasion of euell that they would forgene it him, and amende that euell they toke of him: and to beare witnes that he detested and abhorred all euill opinions and doctrines against the word of God: and that he dyed in the fayth of Jesus Christ, by whom he doubted not but to be saued. And with those wordes he desired them all to pray for him, and then turned him about, and put of his clothes, and made him ready to the fyre, where patiently he suffered the bitter and cruell Martirdome and death. And the lyke dyd the other his companiõs that suffered with him. Which was in the yeare of our Lorde. 1541.

¶ Grace and peace from God the father of our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt be with your moſt noble and excellent grace for euer. Amen.

The complaynt of Doctour Barnes made to K. Henry the viij. agaynſt the Lordly Byſhops & Prelates of Englād.

IN moſt hūble wiſe cōplaineth vnto your grace your continuall oratour Robert Barnes, of the intollerable iniuries, wronges, and oppreſſions wherwith certaine Byſhops of your realme vexe and haue vexed, contrary vnto the worde of God, and their owne lawes, and doctors, not onely me, but alſo all true preachers & profeſſors of the ſame, in condemning them for heretickes, as they did me: whiche thing they were not able to proue by the Scripture of God, nor yet ſhall, if it would pleaſe your grace indifferently (according to the office wherein God hath ſet you) to heare the ſmall as well as the great, and to ſuſtaine your poore Orator agaynſt their violence and ſtrength.

God I take to recorde that I am right ſory to make thys complaint vnto your grace againſt them, if I could coniecture any other meane to cauſe them to redreſſe their intollerable oppreſſions, wherewith they dayly oppreſſe your poore and true ſubiectes, ſo ſore and ſo violently, that without doubt (if your grace ſée not ſhortly a remedy) God muſt néedes puniſhe. For I doe not beléeue that euer hée will ſuffer long ſo great tyranny againſt his worde, and ſo violent oppreſſion of true Chriſten mē, as they doe now vſe, and that in the name of Chriſt and hys holy Church. For verely wée doe not read in any memoryes, that our fathers haue left vs, that euer the people were vnder ſo great tyranny, as now your poore ſubiectes bée vnto thē. Now it is ſo farre come, that what ſoeuer hée bée, hye or lowe, poore or riche, wiſe or foliſhe, that ſpeaketh agaynſt them and their vicious liuing, hée is either made a traytor vnto your grace, or an hereticke agaynſt holy Church, as though they were Kings, or Gods. This may your moſt excellent grace perfectlye know, if you call to remembraunce thoſe good men that they haue had to doe with. Is it not a maruelous court that they haue? wherein there was neuer man accuſed of hereſie, were hée learned or not learned, but they found him guilty? Is not that a maruelous court ỳ neuer hath innocentes? What court within your realme may ſay thys againe? And if any mā ſpeak of Gods law and right conſcience, agaynſt thys damnable tyranny, little will they ſtick to make him an hereticke. And if that will not helpe (to colour and maintaine their oppreſſion) then adde they treaſon againſt your grace, though hée bée neuer ſo true a ſubiect, and all vnlikly to make any reſiſtaunce, or to thinke any euill vnto your grace.

The tyrannous gouernment of the Byſhops of England.

In the Byſhops court no man can be founde Innocent.

Now if it pleaſe your grace, let vs conſider to what ende this vncharitable and vnrighteous accuſation of the Byſhops, yea rather of ỳ diuell is inuented.

Firſt, if there bée any men ỳ preach diſpute, or put forth in writing any thing not towching thē, though it bée neuer ſo blaſphemous againſt God, ỳ bloud of Chriſt, and his holy worde, they will not once be moued therewith, the examples thereof are ſo playne ỳ it néedeth no proufe. Your grace may ſée what blaſphemous rubrikes they allow againſt ỳ bloud of Chriſt, what ſhamefull & abhominable pardōs they tollerate & admyt, what diſputations they doe mayntaine to proue ỳ Pope a God & no man, hauing theſe wordes, That the Pope is neyther

What ſoeuer is not agaynſt the Clergye, thoughe the ſame be neuer ſo wicked, yet finde they no fault therewith.

In Vi. Cap. Quo. in Verbo Papa. Dist. xl. Ca. Si Papa.

God nor man. And whether ỳ Pope can sinne or not? & that no man can condemne the Pope though hē bring innumerable soules to hell by his occasion. Agayne let vs consider, that if any mā but once speake agaynst their cloked ipocrisie, or against neuer so litle a thing ỳ longeth to them by the which their abhominations shoulde be disclosed. And we shall euydently perceaue that their can no scripture, no place, no maisterships, nor excuse in the worlde saue, but hē must eyther to open shame, or cruell death. So that is playne that their cruelnes serueth to no other ende, but as they should saye, yt that any man wyll take in hād to preache the verety, and the true Gospel of their Maister Christ purely wherby those winnings should be deminyshed, wherwith we mayntayne our honour, our dignity, our worldly promotion, our delicious lyuing, our gorgious apparel, our sūptuous palaces, our lordships, briefly all things that we vse to our pastime & pleasure should bē manifest to all mē, ỳ we not only get these thinges by false fayned holynes in deceyuing and robbing the people of their goodes, but also ỳ dyspendyng of them to bē abhominable, and contrary to the ordynance and worde of God. Now rather then this should come to passe, we had leuer gather our strēgth togither & oppresse by vyolēce as many as wil hold wt this learning, bē he King, Duke, Lorde, Baron, knight, man, womā, or childe. So that by there practise it is euident to all that will sē: that it is they that goe about to make insurrection to ỳ mayntayning of their worldly pompe, and pride, and not the true preacher, for hē entendeth to mayntayne nothing, but to bring to light the most glorious & heauenly word of God, which by them hath bēne darkened and kept vnder, and that with suffering persecution, as the nature of the worde is) and not with persecuting, for he maketh no stryuyng (yf hē be the true preacher of God) nor fighting for this worlde, but suffereth the children of the worlde to enioye these worldly thinges. Not withstanding they are not ashamed thus falsly to laye it to the preachers charge, and all because they would make your grace to mayntayne their maliciousnes. So that vnder the pretence of treason, they myght execute the tyranny of their harts. For who is hē that would bee a traytour, or mayntaine a traytour, agaynst your most excellent and noble grace? I thinke no mā yea & I know surely that no man can doe it, without the great displeasure of the eternall God. For S. Paule cōmaundeth straightly vnto all christians, to bee obedient in all thinges, on this manner: Let euery man submyt himselfe to the auctoryte of the higher power. For whosoeuer resisteth the power, resisteth ỳ ordinaunce of God, And they that resist, shall receiue to them selues damnation. Also S. Peter confirmeth this saying: Submit your selues vnto all manner of ordinaunce of mā for ỳ Lords sake, whether it be vnto the king, as vnto their chiefe head, eyther vnto Dukes as vnto them that are sent of hym for the punishment of euell doers, but to the prayse of them ỳ doe well. wherfore if euery man had the scriptures, (as I would to god they had) to iudge euery mans doctrine, then were it out of question, that the preachers therof, eyther would or could make, or cause to bē made any insurrection against there Prince: seeyng the selfe same scriptures straytely commaundeth all subiectes to bē obedient vnto their Princes, as Paule witnesseth, saying: warne them (sayth hē) that they submit them selues to Prynces and to powers, & to obey the officers.

Roma. 13.

1. Pet. 2.

Now how cā they that preach and exhort all men to thys doctrine cause any insurrection, or disobedience against their prince. But let vs goe further, and consider the preachers, which onely haue preached the word of God, and marke if euer they were occasion of disobedience or rebellion agaynst princes.

First call to mind ỳ old Prophets, and with a single eye iudge if any of thē eyther priuely or apertly sturred vp the people agaynst their Princes.

Luke

whosoeuer speake agaynst or preache agaynst any of their abuses and abhominations, hee must nedes bee caught and moste shamefully and cruelly hādled and tormented.

No power nor potentate maye hinder the gayne and profites of the Clergy

As ỳ false preacher is a persecuter, so the true preacher is a sufferer.

The scriptures in the common toung teach all obediēce to the rulers, and is not the moner of sedition.

The Gospell of Christ is not ỳ cause of insurrection.

No Prophet that euer styrred vp the people agaynst the Prince.

Christ submitted him selfe to the higher powers.

Loke on Christ, if he submitted not hym self to ỹ hye powers: Payde he not tribute for all he was free, and caused Peter likewyse to pay: Suffered not he with all pacience the punishmentes of the princes: yea death most cruell, although they did hym open wrong, and could finde him gilty in no cause.

The Apostles obeyed the Princes.

Loke also of the Apostles (which both taught and wrote the doctrine of Christ, and in their liuing followed hys steppes) and if euer they sturred by any occasion the people agaynst their princes, yea if they them selues obeyed not to all princes, although the most part of them were tyrauntes and infidels.

All true preachers teach obedience to the Prince.

Consider likewyse those Doctors, which purely and sincerely hath hãdled the worde of God, either in preaching, or writing, if euer by theyr meanes any insurrection or disobedience rise among the people agaynst their princes: But you shall rather finde, that they haue bẽn ready to lay downe their owne heades, to suffer with all pacience, whatsoeuer tyranny any power would minister vnto them, geuing all people example to doe the same.

Now to conclude, if neither the Scriptures, neither the practise of the preachers thereof teacheth, or affyrmeth that ỹ people may disobey their princes, or their ordinaũces, but contrarywyse teacheth all obedience to bẽ done vnto them, it is playne that those Byshops or rather Papistes, doe falsely accuse those true preachers and subiectes: which thyng woulde appeare in euery mans sight, if by their violence, the word of God were not kept vnder.

Now is this ỹ doctrine that I doe preach and teach, and none other, as concerning thys matter, God I take to recorde, and all my bookes & writinges that euer I wrote or made. And onely I allow and fauour them, whiche furthereth thys doctrine of Christ, and of thys I am sure myne aduersaries, or rather aduersaryes to Christes doctrine, must beare mẽ witnesse.

But now as wẽ haue briefly touched the doctrine that the true preachers preach to the people, both by worde, writing, and practise of them: So let vs somewhat touch ỹ doctrine and practise of the Pope, and the Papisticall Bishops, and then let euery man sẽke out ỹ heretickes, and traytors to their princes.

First, where the preachers onely of the worde of God, preacheth and teacheth all men to obey their princes and their ordinaunces, according to the wordes of S. Peter. There the Pope and the Papisticall Bishops, contrary vnto the minde and facte of Saint Peter, expounded S. Peters wordes saying: that S. Peter meaned not hym selfe, nor his successors, but hys subiectes. And by this false interpretatiõ excludeth him selfe with hys, frõ all obedience to princes. And yet not so content, but craftely drawing all other subiectes from the obedience of their princes, sayth to them also, that ỹ wordes of S. Peter were not spoken as a cõmaundement, but as a counsell.

In 6. Lib. 1. titulo. 33. de maiori obedientia cap. Solite.

The Pope falsifyth the Scriptures.

And by this crafte, if any prince espye hys falsehode, and of conscience goe about to reproue him, then by his false preachers, and maintainers of hym, be lightly withdraweth ỹ hartes of the commons from their prince, affirming the cõmaundement of God to bẽ but a counsell, and at the least wyse his authoritie to bẽ sufficient to dispence with all ỹ cõmaundementes of God. And thus (the people being ignoraunt, because they lacke ỹ word of God to iudge euery doctrine by) they delude their wittes.

The Papistes teach disobedience to Princes.

And if any man that perceaueth their crafte, of very loue that he hath to God and hys commaundementes, exhorteth the people to iudge the doctrine of those Papistes by the worde of God: Anone they lay heresie vnto hys charge, laying for thẽ there Gods lawe, saying: No man may iudge the Pope, no mã also may gẽue sentence aboue hys iudgement, but he shall iudge all men vpon earth.

Item, though the Pope were so euill, that he lead innumerable me by great heapes to hell, yet shall no man reprouve him therefore.

The shame lesse doings of the Papistes. Now after that they had spoken in the consciences of men, with these & such like abhommable doctrines, and had excluded me holy scriptures, as an vnlawfull thing to haue in their mother tonge, lest they should espye their discatfulnes: Then as me past shame, being both without feare of God and man, spared not to put in execution these abhominable doctrines insomuch that they deposed openly Princes, and Emperours, yea and assoyled all their subiectes from the obedience of them, the commaundement of God not regarded. But that my wordes should the better appeare to all men, I shall recite some of their practises, both out of Anticrist crownycles, and out of their owne lawe.

15. quest. 6. Alius item. Zacharias did depose the king of Fraunce, not all onely for his iniquitie, but also because he was vnprofitable for so greate a power, and set in his stede Pipinum the Emperours father, and did assoyle all Fraunce of their othe and alleagyaunce that they had made vnto the olde king. The which thing, the holy church of Rome doth oftimes, by hir auctorite. &c.

Now would to God your grace earnestly would loke on this lawe, or at the least, to suffer and geue the worde of God into ỹ handes of your subiectes to compare the obedience, that these men both preache and practice, to it. But fayne would I know of them all, who hath deposed any king syth Christes passion, saue they onelye? who will be kinges felowes, yea and controulers, saue they only? Is not this a subtle craft of Antychrist, to warne other men of heretykes, and of traytours, and in the meane season, while men stand loking for traytours, commeth he in and playeth the parte of an open traytour saue onely he colloureth his name, and calleth himselfe a true Bysshop, & is ready to accuse other me of treason, that he might escape hymselfe, but he is sure, that he wil neuer accuse none of them that speake against the auctorite of Princes. But if a man doe beginne but to open his mouth, for to declare that hee hath no temporall power, then rageth he, and cryeth out, treason, treason. But let vs returne to their lawe, & se how they can proue it by Gods worde, and how it standeth with true subiection. Is this resonable, that the Pope, and they (being by Gods lawe, but subiectes) shall depose a king? what example have they of our master Christ or if any of his Apostles? what scripture haue they to helpe them? How dare they be so bolde, as to depose a king, which is ordayned of God, yea and by his holy worde, hauing no example, nor scripture for them? We they aboue God & his blessed worde? But they will say, that the king was a wicked man, Fayne would the crownicles geue contrary witnesse, how ỹ he was a very good man, and right simple. And because he was simple, Therefore Pipinus, which had all ỹ rule vnder him, thought him self better worthy to rule then the king, so wrote by a Bysshop, and by his chaplayne vnto the Pope, & desireth hym to geue sentēce, whether he was better worthy to be king, that had all the paynes and labours, or he that had no labour & could doe nothing? Now the Pope, to make Pipinum his frend and trusting by that meanes to haue helpe of hym agaynſt the Emperour, with whō hē had then bēne at variance, gaue ſētēce with him, & depoſed the other, and made hym a Monke: & that this falſhod ſhould not bē perceiued they fained that ỹ king had bēne a Mōke afore, called Samuell. This can I proue by good cronicles. Now let your noble grace conſider, if it were right, not only to depoſe ſuche a king, but alſo to make him a Mōke. Thus haue they done wᵗ other noble kinges, And no doubt, but that ſame or worſe, will they attempt to doe vnto your grace, if you diſpleaſe them, and at the leaſt they will doe their vttermoſte. Let all the hole rable of thē tell your grace, when a true preacher of Chriſtes Goſpell dyd ſuch a dēde? There is no officer that hath nēde to bē afrayde of Chriſtes Goſpell, nor yet of the preachers thereof. But of theſe preuye traytours, can no man bē to ware. But let vs graunt them, that ỹ kyng was a wicked man. The Scripture commaundeth vs, to obey to wicked Princes, and geueth vs none auctorite to depoſe them, as their owne gloſe teſtifyeth vpon this text: Subdeti eſtote. Who was more wicked then Herode? & yet S. John ſuffered death vnder hym, who was wyckedder thē Pilate? And yet Chriſt did not put hym downe, But was crucified vnder hym. Bꝛæſlye, which of all ỹ Princes were good in the Apoſtles dayes? & yet they depoſed none. So that Gods worde and their owne learnynge, and the practiſe of our Maiſter Chriſte, and his holy Apoſtels, are openly agaynſt them. Moreouer their owne gloſe ſayth, that he was not depoſed, becauſe he was vnſufficient, but becauſe hē was wanton and lecherous with wōmen. O my Lordes, if you bee not afrayde of the vengeaūce of God, at the leaſt take a litle ſhame of the worlde vnto you, that haue ſo long tyme with ſo great tyranny defended theſe lawes, that bē ſo openly agaynſt Gods ordinaunce, agaynſt Gods worde, and agaynſt the common ordinaunce and cōſent of all the world. And this haue you done, to the great iniury of noble Princes, to the intollerable ſubduyng of all noble bloud, to the oppreſſion of their true ſubiectes, to the deſtruction of all common wealthes, and finally to the euerlaſtyng damnation of many a Chriſtened ſoule. Tell me by your fayth, doe you beléeue that there is a liuyng God, that is mighty to punith his enemies? If you beléeue it, ſay vnto me, can you deuiſe for to auoyde hys vengeaunce, which bē ſo openly contrary to hys worde? What aunſwere thinke you to make to hym? Thinke you that hē will ſuffer your worde to be heard, and let his godly worde bē deſpiſed? Thinke you, that it will bē ſufficient for you to ſay, that they bē the lawes of holy Churche? Thinke you that hee will bee thus taught of you? Then were it tyme to plucke hym downe, and ſet you vp. Nay my Lordes hē is no childe, nor you ſhall finde it no childes game, thus to triſle and playe with hys holy worde, and hys bleſſed ordinaūce, yea and that to the deſpiſing of the maker both of heauen and earth. Say what ye will, ye are not able by no learnyng, to defende this matter, neither afore God, nor yet afore our noble Prince, nor afore anyman of learnyng, that will bee true to his prince. For whiche way ſoeuer you turne you, our maiſter Chriſt, & all his bleſſed Apoſtles bee agaynſt you, & will openly accuſe you, that you bē cōtrary to their worde, and to they' dēde. Aunſwere you to them, aunſwere not to me. If I hold my peace, they will ſpeake. For it will helpe you but litle, to crye after your old maner, hereſie, hereſie, a traytour, a traytour: for now you crye agaynſt your ſelues, & of thoſe thynges. Chriſt and his Apoſtles doe accuſe you. Doe you thinke it will the ordinaunce of God, that you ſhal depoſe a kyng, bycauſe hē lyueth in aduoultry, or is a lecherous man? If you thinke it a lawfull cauſe, why doe you not preach it openly? why doe you not lay it to kynges charge? Why ſuffer you them to bē kynges, that lyue in aduoultry? Why doe you not put your lawes in execution? You ſay they bē the lawes of holy church, we ought not to depoſe a king though he be wicked.

1. Pet. 2.

Chriſt and his Apoſtles are the ouerthrowers of the Popes doctrine.

and therby may you depose Princes. But if you wil put them in execution, then were it much better, to bee a Bishop, or a Priest, thē to be a Kyng, or a Duke. For you may lyue in whoredome, or in any other vngracious lyuyng, yea and that to the destruction of many mens soules, and yet no mā so hardy to reproue you, as your own law doth openly commaunde in these wordes. If the Pope doe draw with hym innumerable people on a heape to the deuill of hell, there to be punished for euer, yet shal no mortall man presume to reproue hys sinnes, for hee must iudge all men, and may bee iudged of no man. &c. Lykewise haue you an other law in your Decretals, that no lay mā may reproue a Priest. &c. How thinke you by these lawes, if they bee not of the deuill, tell me what is of the deuil? You wil both reproue, yea and also depose Princes, but you will neither bee deposed, nor yet reproued of any mortall man. What thinke you your selues? Gods? But and ye will depose Kynges for fornication, how would you handle kyng Dauid? and kyng Salomon? would you depose them bycause of aduoutry? So doe you more then the Prophet Nathan durst doe. Briefly will ye bee content that the kyng shall depose you for fornication, then shall we shortly bee ryddе of the most part of you.

But let vs come to Herode, that kept his brothers wife, would you depose hym therefore? Then doe you more then S. Iohn durst doe. For hee durst no more doe, but reproue hys vice, and dare you depose hym? But let vs go forth with your law. What authoritie had ỹ Pope & you to set Pipinum in that rowme, and not rather to let the kyngdome chose thē a king? Our master Christ sayd, hys kyngdome was not of this world. But you will bee aboue kinges in this world, & not all onely depose them, but also set in new at your pleasure. Moreouer by what authoritie did the Pope dispence with the Realme of their othe? Your law sayth, that the holy church of Rome is wont so to doe. I pray you of whom hath she learned this same wont? who hath geuen her this authoritie? Can shee discharge vs of our obedience that we owe to our Princes? Is not this of the law of God? Standeth it not also with ỹ law of nature? Yea doe not Turkes & infidels faythfully obey to their princes? Is not the Princes power of God? & will you depose this power? or can you dispēce with this lawe? S. Peter learneth you, ỹ you are more bound to obeye God and his lawe, then man. but you litle regarde S. Peters saying. wherfore what say you to your owne lawe? whose wordes bee these? we must keepe vnto Princes and powers fayth and reuerence. &c. My Lordes here you not fidem and oportet. & how come you with your dispensation, for our othe, and say, Non oportet, that we are not bound to be obedient to our princes, if you dispence with vs. How cā you dispence with vs of our othe, seing it is against Gods lawe? Here may men see, what teachers you haue bene, and also bee toward God and his holy Apostles, and towarde your noble Princes. And ỹ this thing may bee clearely knowne, I shall resyte an other practyse of yours.

The Pope will dispēce with ỹ othe of obedicace that subiectes make to their prince.

23. q. 5. Regū officium.

Our Chronicles make mention, that in the time of Edward the iij. Pope Urban dyd depose Perse King of Spaine, because hee was a vicious liuer, and set in hys stede one Henry a bastarde. How thinke you, standeth thys facte with Christes doctrine? which of vs all that preach the Gospell, hath gone about to doe princes such a villanye? you doe the deede, and laye the blame to vs. Doe you not remember, how that in the dayes of Henry the iiij, a captayne of your Church, called Richard Scroupe, Archbishop of Yorke, dyd gather an hoste of men, & waged battell against hys kyng? but God the defender of hys ruler, gaue the king the victorye, which caused ỹ traytor to bee beheaded. And then your forefathers with their deuilishe crafte, made the people beleeue by their false Chronicle, that at euery stroke that was geuē at the Bishops necke, the kyng receaued an other of God in his neck. And where as the king was afterward stricken with a sickness, you made him and all hys subiectes beléeue ỳ it was Gods punishmẽt, because hee had killed the Byshop. And not thus content, but you fayned after hys death, that hée dyd miracles. Is not thys toe much, both to bée traytors to your king: and also to faine God to bée displeased with your king, for punishing of treason: finally to make hym a saint, and also that God had done miracles to the defending of hys treason: How is it possible to inuent a more pestilent doctrine then thys is: Here is Gods ruler despised, and hereby is open treason maintained: Thinke you that God will shewe miracles to fortifie these thynges: But no doubt the prouerbe is true, such lippes such lectuse, such saintes such miracles.

Kynge John was cruelly handled of the Clergy.

Here were many thinges to bée sayd, but I will passe it ouer. I am sure you doe remember how obediently you droue King John out of his kingdome: And the very originall of the strife was, because there were iiij. Bishops of England at variaunce with the kinges grace, and because hée required a dymie of the pyed Mõkes of England, for to maintaine hys warre agaynst the Irishe men, but they would géeue hym none. Wherfore after ỳ king had sped well in Ireland, hée reuenged him of ỳ Monkes, and toke of euery place a certayne. For ỳ which thing your forefathers, maintainers of your deuilishe doctrine, wrote vnto their God ỳ Pope, and caused him first to excommunicate the kyng, and afterward to interdicte the land, & gaue it to the French kinges sonne, which was maintayned through your fathers, and your naturall king compelled to flée into Wales, and there to tarye till ỳ time that hée was content to make agrément with your holy Idoll the Pope. The cõditions of ỳ agrœment were, that hée should first géeue xl. M. marke to the iiij. Bishops, and make restitution to the pyed Monkes agayne, and also should géeue to Pandolphus the Popes Legate, a great summe of money. Finally, hée should bée bound to géeue yearely to the Pope of Rome a certayne great summe of money, and hée and all hys successors shoulde receaue the land of the Pope, and holde it in fée ferme, and vnto thys your fathers set their hãdes & seales, binding them selues to compell the king to kéepe thys contracte. But yet you were not so content, but afterward you found the meanes that this good kyng was poysoned by a traytorous Monke of Swinested, because he should say, that hée would make a halfepeny loafe worth xx. shillinges if hée liued a yeare. For the whiche word your holy Monke was moued, and went and confessed hym selfe to the Abbot, how that he would poyson the king for thys, and the one deuill, as good as the other, the holy traytor absolued the holy murtherer before the déede was done, and for thys holy murtherer is there founded v. masses for euer.

Kynge John poysoned.

Abhominable hypocrisie.

This is the blessed obedience of your holy Church. How would you cry: how would you yaulpe, if wée had handled a gentlemans dogge on this fashion: but you can call vs poore men traytors, and in the meane season, you bring both king & kingdome into seruitude and bondage: What is treason: if this bée no treason: to bring so honourable a kinge, and hys lande into such bondage, and compell hym to receiue his naturall and frée kingdome, of such a byllayne, and lymme of ỳ deuell. What can bée said or thought to defend this matter: you haue not all onely done wrong to the kinge, but vnto the yongest childe ỳ lyeth in the cradell, ỳ which by your meanes is bonde. And thinke it not sufficient, to say that it is not your déede: for first you are the children of these fathers, and you haue alwayes alowed this acte. This hath béene blased, blowen, preached, and cryed out, and all your bookes full of this matter, and many a true mans bloud hath béene shed for speaking agaynst thys. And yet was there neuer none of you, ỳ did euer preach against this damnable facte: but with full consent with full agrément, both in worde, déede, and in writyng, you haue alowed this treason. Therfore I take you for the auctors, as well as your forefathers. I would not speake how dampnable it is, to institute masses, for a willing traytor, and murtherer: there was neuer no learninge that could allow this. But there is no remedy, hée that dyes agaynst his king, and for the maintayning of your treason must néedes bée a saynt, if masses, blessinges, and myracles wil helpe, for all these bée at your commaundement to geue where you list. So that we pore men must bée accused of insurrection and treason, and we must bere al the blame, we must bée driuen out of ỳ realme, we must bée burned for it, and as God knoweth, there is no people vnder heauen, that more abhorreth, and with earnester hart resisteth, & more diligenly doth preach agaynst disobedience, then we doe. Yea I dare say boldely, let all your bookes bée serched, that were written this. 500. years, & all they shall not declare the auctorite of a prince, and the true obedience towarde hym, as one of our litle bookes shall doe, that bée condemned by you for heresy, and all this will not helpe vs. But as for you, you may preach, you may wryte you may doe, you maye sweare, against your Princes, and also assoyle all other men of their obedience towardes their princes. You may compell princes to bée sworne to you, and yet are you children of obedience, and good christen men. And if ye dye for this doctrine, then is there no remedy but you must bée saintes, and rather then fayle, ye shall doe myracles. To proue this, I will tell you of a holy saynt of yours, of whom your legend and cronicles maketh mencyon, hys name, as ye call him is S. Germayne. So it chaunced ỳ in the tyme of king Wortiger he came into England, into a place where the king lay, & desired for hym & his company lodging. The king because hée kept no cõmõ Inne, would not receiue hym. So hée departed very angerly, and went to the kinges Neteherdes house, and there desired lodginge, and meate, and drinke for hym and his companye. The Neteherde was contẽt to lodge him, but hée sayd hée had no meate for hym, sauyng a yong calfe, that stode suckyng of the damme by the cribbe. The byshop commaunded the calfe to bée slayne, and to bée dressed, & brought afore hym, and hée and his company eate it vp, and after commaunded the bones of the calfe to bée gathered togither and put in the calues skinne agayne, and to bée layde in the cribbe by the damme, and by and by ỳ calfe starte vp aliue agayne. The nert day the byshop went to king Wortiger, & reprowed him merueilous straightly, because hée would not lodge hym, and sayde that hée was vnworthey to bée kyng, and therefore deposed hym, & made his Neteherde kyng in hys stede. Of the which Neteherde as ỳ cronicles maketh mention, came afterward many kings. This is writen by one called Petrus de natalibus, the which writeth the liues of all saintes I thinke no man will binde mée to proue this thing a lye, but yet it must bée preached, & taught in your church it must bée writtẽ in holy saints liues, & hée must bée a saynt that did it, and why? because hée deposed a king, and set in a Neteherde. These shamefull and abhominable thinges doe you prayse, and alowe: and in the meane season, condemne vs for heretickes, and for traytours. And if we chaunce (moued by the abhompnablenes of your doctrine) to geue you but one euyll worde, then all the world reketh vs vncharitable. But as for my parte, I take God to recorde, afore whome I shall bée saued or damned, that though you haue done mée shamefull wronge, and intollerable violẽce, yet with your owne persons am I neuer displeased nor angry: but agaynst that horrible deuyll ỳ dwelleth in you, that is the causer, & auctor and mayntayner of such abhominable doctrine, that is against God and his blessed worde, agaynst hym (I say) is my quarell, and agaynst hym doe I striue, this is the truth, let men take my wordes as they will. Is it not abhominable, hominable, thinke you, so shamfully to depose princes? so to rebuke them so to handle them? to compell them to bee sworne to you? and to holde their lands of you? & to bee your ministers? to the greate dishonour of the liuyng God, and blaspheming of his blessed worde, and to the great dispight of all noble potentates? Ye remember the facte that is declared in your lawe of the noble Emperour Friderike, and that wretch Innocent the fourth: the thing was this. The Pope by ỹ reasō of certayne complaintes, made by the Emperours enemyes, cited the Emperour to appeare at Rome, and because the Emperour would not appeare, he cursed hym with booke, bell, and candell, and afterwarde deposed hym, and commaunded the electours to chose an other. This is the cause of your lawe briefely. But your text declareth certayne artycles agaynst the Emperour, which bee these. The first that hee had sworne to keepe peace with ỹ church of Rome, which oth hee brake, sayth ỹ Pope. The second that hee had done sacrilege, in takyng 22. Gallyes laden with holy spiritual prelates the which would haue gone to ỹ councell, gathered agaynst the Emperour in Lugdune. The third, because ỹ Emperour was accused of certaine articles of heresye, the which bee not set out. The fourth, because that hee had not payed the annuall pencyon for the kingdome of Sicill (Sicill the which the Pope calleth the spirituall patrimony of S. Peter) in the space of ir. yeares. For these same thinges dyd hee depose ỹ Emperour and prynate hym of all hys dignity, and alloyleth all hys subiectes of their othe and obedience, and commaundeth euery man not to obey hym, but all men ỹ eyther gaue hym councell, helpe, or fauour, to bee excommunicate & cursed. This is your facte, this is your deede, this is your doctrine, in this learning you bee promoted doctours, & vnto this learnyng you are sworne, these bookes bee read openly in your vnyuersities. Marke now, which of vs twayne bee traytours. Cyther you that doe depose Emperours, & kings for such trifles, yea and also make a lawe thereof, and swere vnto it, and compell all other to swere vnto it: or els we, that speake agaynst it, & say ỹ you doe wronge both to God, to his blessed ordynaunce, and to all noble potentates. For Fyrste, ye ought to bee vnder them, and not they vnder you, & more can you not doe but reproue by Gods worde their vnlawfull factes, but to depose them though they bee infydelles, and heretickes, haue you none authoritye. Ye se howe our master Christ, and all hys blessed Apostles did vse them selues towarde vnbeleeuyng Princes, they neither deposed them, nor yet caused them to bee sworne vnto them. What a matter is it to depose an Emperour, bicause hee layeth handes of a carnall Cardinall? Is not Paule and Peter, as holy as all the College of you? And yet for laying handes of them was no mā deposed. What and if hee keepe no peace: is that a sufficiēt cause to depose hym? your owne law testifieth otherwise. The holy church of God hath no sworde, but the spirituall sword, with the whiche she doth not kill, but quicken. Lykewise in an other place, blessed S. Ambrose sayth, willyngly will I neuer forsake you, but if I bee cōpelled I may not resist, I may sorow, I may weepe, I may wayle. Agaynst weapons, agaynst souldiers, agaynst the Gothans, my teares are my weapons. For such thynges bee the defence of a Priest, otherwise ought I not, nor may not resist. &c. Blessed S. Ambrose durst not depose the Emperour, neither for laying hand of him, nor yet for heresie, neither for defendyng the liberties of holy Church. But S. Ambrose was a simple sole, & knew not what the liberties of the Church ment, nor yet what the holy spirituall fleshe of Cardinals is worth, and therfore hee could do nothing, but weepe & wayle. But & if hee had beene halfe so wise, as I read of a certaine Bishop of Salisbury was, hee had done more in this matter.

There is no such enemy to a true man as is a theefe.

The hauty mynde and lothe courage of a Bysshop.

In the tyme of kyng Richard the second, it chaūced a baker of London

to

to beare horsebread in a basket, and there came a seruaunt of the Byshop of Salisbury, and toke by violence a loafe frō hym. The baker asked why hee dyd so, & hee made hym none answere, but brake his head, & the poore felow cryed for helpe against this violence, whereby the people were moued in the strete to come out, & kepe the kinges peace, so that the Byshops seruaunt was compelled to flye into a house: Neuertheless the people moued at this great violence, caused the Constable to come for to take hym, & to bryng him to prison, but anone the Maior and the Shriues came and pacified the multitude, and so departed, & did the Byshops seruaunt no more hurt. Notwithstandyng the Byshop of Salisbury, and the Archbyshop of Yorke were so moued with the Citie, for makyng an asaute to the Bishops house, that they made such a cōplaynt to the kynges grace, that hee put the Maior, and both the Shriues out, and set in a Knight called Syr Edward, to rule ỹ Citie, and all this was done for a horseloafe. What shall a mā say to the patience of these spiritual men? They doe open violence, they breake the kynges peace, they robbe men of their gwdes, yea & that in the kynges chamber, and also in the kynges hygh strete, to the great disdayne of iustice, to the rebuke of the kyng, and to the great displeasure of his subiectes, and yet they can packe the matter so, that they bee white sonnes, and other men must suffer for it. I can beleeue none otherwise, but that they haue witched the worlde, that men could neither heare nor see. For if this bee not a shamefull fact, I can not tell what is shamefull. It had becommed them a great deale better, to haue punished their seruaūt in example of all other. But that was neuer the wont of the spirituall Churche, and yet they will accuse all other men of insurrection, but I dare say there was no rebellion in this Realme this v. C. yeares, if the kyng had displeased them, but they were at the begynnyng of it. We doe read in the time of kyng Henry the second, that hee required of his spirituall Byshops, that none of them should departe out of ỹ land, but they should finde hym sureties, that they should purchase nothyng, to the hurt of the kyngs person, & his Realme. But the spirite of the spirituall fathers would not agree to it, but rather founde the meanes, that Pope Alexander the thyrd (the whiche was an vsurper of the sea of Rome) condemned this article for heresie, and afterward one of the Bishops (but agaynst his will) dyed for this, and such lyke articles mo, and you declared him a stynkyng martyr, but of this holy martyr, I wil speake more an other time. If this bee obedience to Princes, to intende and purpose to betray them, and their Realmes, then are ye the best obedient children that euer were. But if makyng of dissention, debate, and strife, & settyng men togither by the eares, applyng men of their othe towarde their Princes, may be cause of insurrection, and treason: then are ye the master of all maskers, and the best conueyers of all iugglers. What true Englishe hart would thinke, but that the kynges request was both godly & lawfull? what learnyng is able to defende the contrary? Standeth it not with our fidelity that we owe toward our Prince? yea with the truth that we owe to our father and mother? to our brethren and sisterne? and to all our coūtrey men? Doth not our othe made to our Prince, bynde vs to it? & yet you will not agree to it: but all your bookes must rather bee fulfilled with contrary doctrine, and all men must bee cōdēned for heretickes, that speaketh agaynst thē. Beleeue me, if I were your mortall enemy (as you reken me to bee, and as you haue well deserued, that I should bee) I could so set out this matter, that all mē should spytte at you: but I will vse my selfe charitable toward you, and if the matter had not beene so haynously, and so violently hādled of you, I would not haue geuen you one ill worde. But now let no man require of me, that I should (vnto such an abhominable & detestable deuill, as hath brought in this wicked and shamefull learnyng

I am glad of your welfare, and proſperity, your Lordſhip doth rule very graciouſly, and all men prayſeth you. I doubte not but God ſhall proſper you. I ſay, let no man require this of me: for I am, and will bee ſo taken, for his mortall enemy, wherſoeuer I doe finde hym, whether hee bee Lord, or Byſhop, ſauing peraduenture, if I ſpye hym dwelling in a Byſhoppe, I wyll not hādle him with ſo rough wordes, for the weaknes of certayne men, as I would, if I founde him in an other place. It were not vncharitable, if I recited here by name the innocent bloud, that you haue ſhed in my time, for the ſpeaking againſt your vnlawfull doctrine. Alas what fault coulde ye finde in good mayſter Bylney, whō ye haue caſt away ſo violently? I dare ſay, there is not one among you (that knew hym, but muſt commende and prayſe his vertuous lyuinge. And though you had founde him with a litle faulte (the which I thinke, and hee were now aliue, ſhould be no faulte) alas would you caſt away ſo cruelly, ſo good a man? and ſo true a mā? both to God, and to his kyng? But I will returne agayne to my purpoſe, and ſhewe an other example, how you haue learned, and taught to ſet kings and kingdomes togither by ẏ eares, for the maintenance of your dignities and doctrines.

Pope Urban the vj. which was choſē in the yeare of our Lord 1378. by ſedition, & violence of Romaines, which would haue no Cardinall of Fraunce, becauſe they woulde the Pope ſhoulde bee reſident in Rome. This Urban (I ſay) deuiſing how to mayntaine his ſecte and part agaynſt his aduerſary, which was called Clement, of whoſe ſide ẏ kyng of Fraūce helde, ſent to the kyng of England, Ed. the 3. (the which as than was not well content with the Frenche kyng) certayne Bulles contaynyng cleane remiſſion a pœna & a culpa, for all them that would wage battayle againſt the kyng of Fraunce, & againſt them that were of Clementes ſide. And becauſe the kyng and his Lords ſhoulde bee the willinger to take battayle on them, hee ſent a commaundement to the Byſhops, to rayſe of the ſpiritualtie a tare, for to pay the ſouldiours wyth. Moreouer becauſe the Duke of Lancaſter had a tytle to the kyngdome of Caſtell, the which helde of Clementes ſide: therefore ẏ Pope graunted, that part of this money ſhould alſo bee deliuered to hym, if hee would wage battayle agaynſt ẏ kyng of Caſtell, promyſing hym alſo, that hee would ſtyre the kyng of Portyngale (which than had alſo baryaunce with the ſayde kyng of Caſtell) to warre agaynſt the ſayd kyng, and to the mayntaynyng of his warre, hee would graūt ẏ kyng of Portyngale a demy of his ſpiritualty thorow all his Realme. How much was gathered in Portyngale, our ſtories maketh no menſion: but in London, and in the dioceſe was gathered a tūne of golde, and in the whole realme of England was gathered xvb. C. M. frankes, whiche makes in Engliſhe money. CC. lxxvj. M vij. C. lxxvj. l. And becauſe this money was gathered of ẏ ſpiritualitie, and by their diligence therefore the Pope ordayned Henry Spenſer the Byſhop of Norwych to bee the chiefe captayne of this warre: but or euer the Pope coulde bringe this matter to paſſe, he ſent to ẏ king, to his Lordes, and to his Byſhoppes xx. Bulles: So that at the laſt, thys foreſayd Byſhop of Norwyche was ſent forth with a greate number of men, in the wages of the Church, And the Duke of Lankeſter likewiſe agaynſt the kyng of Caſtell. Their oth was geuen them, to fight agaynſt no man, nor countrey that helde with Pope Urban. And our chronicle ſaith, that Pope Urban would haue made peace betwene the Frēch king, and ours at the laſt. How thinke you? is not this a prety practiſe, to ſet men together by the eares? and than to make them beleeue, that he woulde make a peace? Fyrſt we muſt haue cleane remiſſion to fight, and thā wee shall bee curssed as blacke as a potte, if wee will make no peace, And why? becausse the Pope hath hys purpose.

Is not this a godly packyng of spirituall men? Is not here godly obedience taught toward Princes? Bee not mens soules well fed wyth thys doctrine? Bee not these good fathers, that thus watcheth nyght and daye, for ỳ cure and charge, that they haue of mens soules? Marke how charitable, and liberall that the holy Fathers bee, in distributing of Christes merites? Euery man that fighteth in his cause, shall haue cleane remission a pena, & a culpa, and must needes bee the childe of saluation. Let Christ say and doe what hee can, for the holye Church hath so determined. And that no man shoulde doubt of it, there bee iiii. Bulles graunted, and that vnder leade. And the Church of Rome can not erre, for the spirituall lawe sayth: what the sea of Rome doth approue, that must needes bee allowed: and that, that she reproueth must bee of no strength. Likewise in an other place: So must the decrees of the sea of Rome bee accepted, as though they were spoken by the godly voyce of Peter hymselfe.

Dist. xix. Si. Ro. & enim vero & nul. dist. & ca. Sic omnes.

Agaynst these thinges dare I not speake, for I would fayne bee taken for a Christen man: but yet I muste bee so bolde to speake one worde, the truth is, the deuill himselfe hath blowen out these presumptuous voyces. And yet mẽ must set both life, & soule on these wordes. For there bee iiii. Bulles of leade, to confirme the matter. And that is a weightye thynge. But when kyng John, our naturall prince, shoulde haue had of the pyed Mõkes, for the defẽce of this realme, but a small summe of money. Than was there neuer a Bull to gette, nor yet one Bysshop in Englãd, to preach on his side: But now CC. M. pound gathered in one Lent, and a greate deale more, & for the maintainaũce of ỳ pope his holy flesh. Was not this a marueilous subiectiõ: that we should suffer our selues so lightly to bee moued, to geue, not onely so greate a sũme of money: but also to send forth, in the defence of such a wicked person, our naturall brethren, kinsmen, and countreymen? I dare say of my conscience, that in fiue hũdred yeares, there was not such a summe of money so lightly graunted, (were the cause neuer so great) vnto our right naturall, and lege Lord. Ye I doe beleeue, that if the kynges grace at this same day, should desire of ỳ spiritualitye, but halfe of this summe, I dare say they wold neuer graũt him with their good will, nor there shoulde not bee found one Diuine in England, of the holy Popes Churche, that could and would proue by good Diuinitie, that the kyng might take it, and the spiritualitie were bounde to geue it.

How ready the spiritualtie is to helpe the Pope.

Alas, what shall I say: beleeue me, I doe want wordes, to ỳ settyng out of this matter: where is naturall affectiõ? where is naturall loue? where is fidelitie? where is truth of hart, that men ought to haue, and to beare toward their naturall Prince? toward their natiue countrey? toward their fathers and mothers? toward their wiues and childrẽ? yea toward their liues? God of his infinite goodnesse hath geuen vs a noble Prince, to the maintaynyng and defence of all these thynges, and toward hym we haue litle or none affection. But vnto this idole of Rome, are we ready to geue both body, and goodes, and the more we geue, the better we are content. Was not this a merueilous powerynge to this Realme? to sende out so many thousandes? and to receiue nothyng agayne? but deceitfull Bulles? and shẽpes skynnes? and a litle pece of leade? yea and worst of all, to make men beleeue, that their saluation dyd hange on it? I dare say boldly, that if we poore men (which bee now condẽned for heretickes, and also for traytours against our kyng) had not been, the Realme of England had not stãd in so good a condition as it is, for men had beene bounde still in their conscience, for to obey this wretched idole. Who durst haue kept ỳ innumerable summe of money, within the realme, ỳ yearely was sucked out, by this adder, if our godly learnyng had not instructed their conscience? Let all the Liberaries bee sought in Englād, and there shall not be one booke writtē in. iiij. C. yeares, and (admitted by the Church of Rome, and by our spiritualtie) founde, that doth teach this obedience, and fidelitie toward Princes, and deliuereth our Realme, from the bondage of this wicked Sathan the pope, or els that is able to satisfie, and to quicte any mans conscience within this Realme: and yet I dare say, hee is not in Englād, that cā reproue our learnyng, by the doctrine of our master Christ, or els of his holy Apostles. Yea mē haue studyed, and deuised how they might bryng our mighty Prince, and his noble Realme, vnder ỹ fete of this deuill. There could bee nothyng handled so secretly within this Realme, but if it were, either pleasaunt, or profitable to the Pope to know, then were all the Bishops in England sworne, to reuelate that matter to him. This may bee wel proued, by their shamefull, & trayterous oth, that they contrary to Gods law, mans law, and order of nature) haue made to this false man, the Pope. The wordes of their othe, written in their owne law, be these.

In Si. lib. ij. tit. de iure iurando c. Ego Episcopus.

The othe of the Bishops made to the pope.

I Bishop. N. frō this houre forth, shalbe faithfull to S. Peter, to the holy Church of Rome, and to my Lord the Pope, to his successours, lawfully entryng into the Popedome. I shall not consent in counsell, nor in deede, that hee shoulde lose either lyfe, or lymme, or that hee should bee taken in any euill trap. His councell, that shall bee shewed vnto me, either by hym selfe, or els by his letters, or by his Legates, I shall open to no man, to hys hurt, or damage. I shall helpe to defend & maintaine the Papacie of the Church of Rome, the rules of the holy fathers (sauyng myne order) agaynst all men liuyng. I shall come to the Councell, when soeuer I bee called, onles I bee lawfully let. The Popes Legate I shall honorably entreate, both goyng, and commyng, & in his necessities, I shall helpe him. I shall visite yearely, either by myne owne proper person, or els by some sure messenger, the sea of Rome, onles I bee dispensed with. So helpe me God, and this holy Euangelist.

There hath beene wonderous packing vsed, and hath cost many a thousand mens liues, ere that the spiritualitie brought it to passe, that all they should bee sworne to the Pope, & owe none obedience to any man, but to him onely. This matter hath beene wonderous craftely conueyed, for at the beginnyng the Bishops were not sworne so straitely vnto the Pope, as now. For I doe read in the tyme of Gregory the thyrd, which was in the yeare of our Lord. vij. C. lix. how their othe was no more, but to sweare for to kepe the fayth of holy Church, and to abide in the vnity of the same, and not to consent for any mans pleasure to the contrary, to promise also to seeke the profites of the Church of Rome. And if any Byshops did lyue agaynst the olde statutes of holy fathers, with him they should haue no conuersation, but rather forbidde it, if they coulde, or els trewly to shewe the Pope of it. This othe cōtinued a great many of yeares, tyll that a mortall hatred sprang betwene the Emperour, and the Pope, for confirming of Byshops, than as many Byshops as were confirmed of the Pope, did sweare the othe, that I haue first written. For this othe, that Gregory maketh mention of, was not sufficient: because that by it, the Byshops were not bounde to betray their Princes, nor to reuelate their counselles to the Pope. The which thing ỹ pope must nedes know, or els hee coulde not bring to passe his purpose, that is to say, he coulde not bee Lord ouer the worlde, and cause Emperours, and kynges, to fetch their confirmation of him, and to kneele downe, and kisse his feete. The which when hee had brought to passe, hee proceeded farther, adding more thinges in the Byshops othe, to the maintayning of his worldly honour and dignitie, as it shall afterward appeare. But first wee wyll examine this othe, how it standeth with Gods worde, and with the true obedience to our prince. I pray you tell me out of what Scripture, or els out of what example of our mayſter Chriſt & his holy Apoſtles, you haue take this doctrine, to learne to ſwere to Saint Peter: or els to the Church of Rome: or els to the Pope: What nede you to ſweare to Saint Peter: ye cā neither doe hym good by your fidelitie, nor yet hurt by your falſhode. Othes be taken, that he that the othe is made vnto, might be ſure of the true helpe, and ſuccour of hym that ſweareth, agaynſt all men that could hurte hym.

Isidorus in Decretis Gregorij minorisc. In nomine.

The Pope chaungeth the bishops oth, as oftē as it maketh for his profite.

Firste kynges hee brought ỹ violence vnder the Popes foote, & then Byshops bee sworne to maintaine it.

Now Saint Peter hath none enymies, and though he had, yet is not he afeard of them, neyther can you helpe hym, nor deliuer hym, if he had nede. But the verytie is, that good S. Peter muſt here ſtand in the fore front, to make men afrayde with, and to make men beleue that you are his frendes: but God knoweth, that you neyther fauour his perſon, learnyng nor lyuyng For if S. Peters perſon were here with his nette on his necke, I thinke you would bid hym walke beggar, if you called him not heretik. Why doe you not ſweare to folowe hys lyuing: and to preach and teach his doctrine: but that maketh nothing for your purpoſe. Therefore you ſwerre all onely to S. Peters name. But wherein wyll you be faythfull to S. Peter: to mayntane his worldly honours: dignities: or riches: you know well, he ſayth, that he hath forſaken all theſe thinges for Chriſtes ſake: & And for theſe thinges, I thinke he will require none othe of you. Wherfore if you will nedes be faythfull, & ſworne vnto S. Peter, it muſte be in mayntayning, and in defending ſpirituall thynges, as preaching of Chriſtes Goſpell purely, and ſincerely, mynyſtring truelye after the inſtitution of our maſter Chriſt, ỹ bleſſed ſacramentes of holy church, and in vertuous lyuyng, geuing example to the holy church of Criſte. But now if this be your othe, truely you are periured, & worthy to weare papers, for you doe reken your ſelues to hye, and to honorable, to goe aboute ſuch ſimple thinges, as theſe be. And therfore you haue applyed your ſelues, to other greater matters, as to chriſtening of belles, to halowing of churches, to bleſſing of candels, to conſecrating of holy oyle, to halowing of chaleſles, veſtementes, and aulters, and to geuing 40. dayes of pardon, to them that receiueth your bleſſings in the ſtreate, and to ſome that viſyte holy ſaintes, & ſuch like greate matters, which partayneth nothing to your othe. Wherfore I doe recken, ỹ after the true forme of your othe, we haue but few byſhops, but ỹ he periured or abiured (call it as you will) both againſt God, agaynſt S. Peter, and againſt their prince. It folowеth And to the holy church of Rome what nedeth this: what good can you doe to ỹ holy church of Rome. Or what profyte is it to her, that you ſweare: where is any requeſt of her in holy ſcripture that you ſhoulde ſweare: Thinke you that ſhe will compell you by your othe to be true to her: then muſt ſhee nedes ſue you of periurie if you breake your othe. But marke how ỹ church of Rome is ſet in your othe. as the better perſon, before the Pope. wherefore it muſt nedes folowe, that ỹ Pope is vnder ỹ church, and leſſe then the church, and no hed of the church, except you will make hym a third perſon, that neither pertayneth to S. Peter nor yet to holy Churche: but is a thyng of him ſelfe, and as your law ſayth: neither God, nor man, but middle betweene them both, that is as much to ſay, after my learnyng, as the deuill hym ſelfe.

The holy workes of Byſhops.

In Prohe. Gi. ca. Quoni. in verbo Papa.

But what meaneth it, that you ſweare onely to the holy Churche of Rome: will you be traytours to the holy Church of Conſtātinople: or els to the holy Churche of England: Or doe you thinke other Churches not holy: tell vs what you meane: for it ſemeth a marueilous thyng, and alſo a ſpeciall thyng, that you make ſuch an othe all onely to the holy Church of Rome, naming none other church. Why are you not rather ſworne to keepe: and to feede: to norith: and to be true to your owne Church: of the

which you haue taken cure & charge
1.Pe..5. As S. Peter commaundeth you: See that you fede Christes flocke, which is among you. For of these you haue taken your name, lyuyng, and dignitie. You are called Bysshop of Winchester, of London, and of Lyncolne, And of these you are fed, but these bee forgotten in your othe, and these you litle regarde, but to mayntayne the holy Churche of Rome, that geueth you neuer a peny, but robbeth all other Churches, you must bee straitly sworne. And why? Antichrist must haue a cloke for his treason. For now if hee bee a traytour, hee is to bee excused, why? for hee is sworne to it. But shall I tell you what I doe take out of it? The truth is, that you sweare, to betray, to kil, and slay all members of all other Churches, sauyng those, that liueth after the whoredome, and mischief, that is vsed in Rome. For if you should bee bounde to seeke out in Rome, Christened men, and those that doth liue after the liuyng of holy church, I thinke you should finde but few. Yea and vnto those, you would thinke scorne to bee sworne, Ergo, it must folow, that you are sworne to the worst sort of Rome, and that your holy Churche of Rome is taken for such a sorte, as liueth agaynst God, agaynst his blessed worde, agaynst the liuyng of holy Apostles, agaynst the cõditiõs of our holy mother ỹ church. I could say, in all whoredome, in all oppression, in all Sodomytrie, in all murther, in all põpe, & pride, summa summarum, in all maner of mischief, what toung cã tell, or hart can thinke. But I will not say so, for men would reken me vncharitable, and to vehement. Neuertheless all the worlde knoweth, that you doe recken your selfe, by the vertue of your oth, boũde to no men: but vnto such, as in very deede, liueth after this vngracious maner: and yet will you bee faithfull, and true vnto them agaynst all men. Yea I dare say, if that their conscience had not cõdemned them of such mischief, they would neuer haue desired this assistence of you, or els haue thought it necessary to haue required an othe of you. But the veritie is, they bee naught, and haue neede of mayntainers in their mischief. And also suspect you, not to bee true, except you made an othe to them, yea and scarsly then, onles that you in very deede, at tyme and place conuenient, doe betray your Princes, for that is ỹ cause of your othe, and other profite hath not the kyng by it. I will bee reported by all practise that euer came out of your othe.

Bysshop Fisher otherwise called B. of Rochester. answered that hee was sworn to ỹ Pope, and therefore hee woulde not sweare to ỹ kinges supremacye.

A true description of the leudnes of the Bysshops of Rome.

It foloweth, And to my Lord the Pope. I would gladly learne, where the Pope hath got the dignitie of a Lord. This thyng is litle regarded of my Lordes the Bysshops, to bryng in such a worldly dignitie, yea they will say, it is but a trifle, and mocke men for speaking agaynst it. But the truth is, if they durst as much now, as in times past, they would burne for this litle trifle, the best Lord in England. For I dare say, it hath cost many a mans lyfe, or euer they brought the Pope to Lordshyp. Blessed S. Peter (whose successour the Pope boasteth him selfe to bee) knew nothing of this Lordshyp, for hee sayth vnto hys felowes, they shall not exercise no Lordshyp ouer the congregation. And likewise S. Paule durst not take vppon him to commaunde, as a Lord, collections to bee made for powre men, but mekely desires thẽ without any Lordshyp. Also in an other place: Let no man iudge vs, but as the Ministers of Christ. Blessed S. Paule rekeneth him selfe but a minister, & a seruaunt: And yet ỹ day hath beene, that he was so good, as my Lord the Pope. Our master Christ, that came to teach both Peter, and Paule, learned his Disciples not to vse thẽ selues as Lordes, but as seruauntes. And marke the occasion that hee had.

Math.20.

There bee two newe Disciples brought vnto him, and the old (beyng not yet perfite) thought scorne, that these two should sit aboue all other, ỹ one of the right hand, and the other of the left hãd: But our master Christ reproueth this proude stomacke of theirs, very straitely, saying: How ỹ Princes & rulers of the infidels hath power ouer their subiectes, but so shal not ye. For hée that will bée greatest amõg you, shal bée least. Here our master Christ learneth none hypocrisie, that they shold bée called lest in name, and bée greatest in very déede: but hée will that this doctrine shalbée expressed in their déedes. My Lord the pope, calleth him selfe in wordes, the seruaunt of all seruauntes: but in very déede hée wil bée Lord ouer all Lords. Yea and my Lordes Byshops, will bée sworne to hym, as vnto a Lord, & they wil reken them selues periured, if they burne not all them, that will take the Pope but for a seruaunt. Is not this a marueilous hypocrisie? to bée called seruaunt of all seruauntes: and yet desire for to bée taken as Lord and Kyng ouer all Kynges? Yea and vnto this bée our Byshops sworne, because they wil bée obedient to their Princes. But and their consciences were rypped, you should finde no mã sit there as a Kyng, but my lorell the Pope. And we powre men must bée cõdemned, for reprouyng of this. And why? Verely because my Lords haue sworne to hym, agaynst their Prince, and all his true subiectes.

Seruus seruorum.

The Pope is a monstrous hypocrite.

But howe standeth it with your othe toward your Prince, for to bée sworne to the Pope? which is not all onely an other Lorde: but also contrary, yea and as the worlde now is the greatest mortall ennemy, that our Prince hath. For I dare say, that if this wretched Clemẽt could drowne our noble Prince with one worde, it shoulde not bée longe vndone, sine Clementia. The common sayinge went in Hamburgh, that this caytyfe hath not al onely excõmunicated our noble prince, but also geuen away the kingdome to an other. And this facte must you defende, for you are sworne to ỳ Pope. Yea I dare say, if you had conuenient occasion, you would declare your fidelitie. I doe Iudge after your factes, that you haue done to kinges in tymes past, whensoeuer that you had power & might to bring to passe ỳ which you haue conceiued agaynst your Prince. If you thinke I iudge a mysse, or els doe you wrong. let me bée put to my proofe, and you shall sée, what an heape of holy factes ỳ I will bring you out of your own chronicles and bookes, for the which you will bée lauded, and praysed hyely, that you haue so faythfully stucke vnto this dãnable Idole of Rome. Yea I dare say it had bene hereße within this two yeares, to haue written, or sayd thus much agaynst the lymme of the deuyll on our princes side. This all ỳ worlde can testefye, wherefore I thinke you will put me to no tryall. But to your othe. Howe doth it stand with your allegyance toward your prince, to bee sworne to the Pope? your owne lawe sayth, that a lege man can make none othe of fydelytye, to none other man, but to his owne kinge.

What good minde Clement the Pope bare vnto kyng Henry the viij.

In. 6. lib 2. de sentent. et re iudicata. ca. passoralis in verbo homag.

Moreouer you doe remẽber your othe made vnto your prince, wherein you doe renounce all clauses, wordes and sentences, made vnto the Pope, which may bée hurtfull or preiudiciall to his highnes. How agreeth these thothes? you may set them togither as well as you cã: but I know no waies to auoyde your periury. For the very truth is, that the kinges grace, and his councell, considering your othe made to the Pope, to bée periudiciall to his regall power, causeth you, in your othe afterwarde made vnto him to reuoke those thinges that you haue afore swornе to ỳ Pope, & to declare, that his grace & his counsell did reckon your othe made to ỳ pope to bée a gainst him, therfore he maketh you to reuoke it by name, naming the same othe, & also the same Pope. So that you may clearely perceiue, how that our prince doth suspect you, for your othe making. And in very déede, the popes meaning & yours was none other: but for to betray ỳ king and his realme. And therfore as sone as there was any variance, betwéene ỳ king & ỳ pope, thẽ were you first of all, assoyled of your allegyance dew vnto our king, and that absolucion, was blasen and blowen, preached, and taught, throughout all the world, & all dores and postes must bée decked with papers and bulles, for your discharge. But for to helpe your Prince, you could neuer bée discharged of your he-retical, & trayterous othe made vnto the Pope, agaynst your Prince. Here neither Peter nor Paule can helpe, nor there is no key ỳ can open that locke.

O Lord God how haue we beene blynded thus trayterously to handle our naturall Prince? But how this Caterpiller is come to bée a Lorde, and hath brought kinges vnder hys fæte, I will speake (God willyng) after this in a peculiar treatyse. It foloweth, and to his successours, lawfully and regularly entryng in. After what lawe? I reade in your owne bookes of law, after which me thinketh there bée very few byshops made wherein I finde among all other good thinges, that hée shoulde bée chaste of lyuyng, mécke, gentle to speake to, merciful, wel learned in ỳ new & olde testamẽt, and ỳ we shoulde not forbyd marryage, nor should blame the eating of flesshe, and should also beléeue, that all maner of synnes, as well actuall, as original, bée clerely forgeuẽ in baptysme. How many of these things the Popes holines is indewed with all, and how many hée alloweth, his owne bookes, and déedes wil testifie. Wherfore I recken that your othe doth not meane this lawe, nor yet ỳ lawe that blessed S. Paule writeth of. For then I recken, that by the vertue of your othe, you haue not béene bound to one Pope this 400. yeares, so that it must folowe, that you haue other lawes, then blessed S. Paule speaketh of, or the councell of Charthaginence to chose your Pope by: the which as farre as men can recken, by common experience, and practice, bée these, Di. 23. Qui episcopus ex consilio. 4. Cartha.

1. Timo. 3. Tit. 1.

Who is lawfull to be Pope.

In primis, Hée that shall bée able to bée Pope, must bée a bẽgeable tyraũt, neuer kéepeing peace, but all wayes warryng for the defence (as yée call it) of S. Peters patrimonye. To sufer no Prince to dwell in rest by hym but to snatch his possessions, to the vnholy Church of Rome. To set princes together by the eares, tyll they bée both weary, and then to take ỳ matter in his hande, and neuer to make an ende, tyll both partyes hath geuen some possessiõs to his holy fatherhed: to assoyle the soules, that hath bene slayne through his packyng. And hée that dare moste boldelye, and with least shame, depose Princes, without a cause, hée is best able to bée pope. He that can by any trayne, craft, or subtyltye, bring vnder hym any byshop, or any spirituall person, or inuent any newe clausein their othe, hée is to bée alowed afore other. Moreouer, hée ỳ kéepeth fewest women, and hath most of them, that you wote of, hée is holyest, & apte to bée head of your church. And hée ỳ can most tyranously burne mẽ for preaching of ỳ Gospel, and hée hym selfe to take no labours therein. Item to burne priestes ỳ mary wiues and hée hym selfe, to liue in all mischefe, & whordome: yea in such abhominablenes, as no man may with honestye speake (you knowe what I meane) this man I say, hath a good testimony, afore his spiritualty, that hée is a lawfull man to that office.

The popes wickednes described at large.

Furthermore, hée that is a whores sonne, as our holy father is now, and can finde the meanes, that .12. men will forswere them selfe, that hée is lawfully borne, as this holy Clement dyd. This is a fitte father, for such children. Finally, hée ỳ can geue most mony, and bye ỳ greatest part of cardinales of hys syde, hée is best worthy to bée called Pope, & to sit on Peters stole. For it can not bée vnknowen to you, how ỳ Thomas Woulcy, an holy piller of your Church, woulde haue béene Pope, whẽ this Clement was chosen, and did offer for it a resonable peny: But Clement dasshed hym out of consayte with .20000. li. more then hée offered, and so hée was iudged best worthy, and entered in lawfully, and regularly, and vnto him our bishops bée sworne, and obedient. And why because they will haue such a head, as they bée members: for how coulde els their kingdome stand? For if one should bée chosen, after the rule of blessed S. Paule, or els after the lyuynge of these newe heretykes, which bée simple and poore, and care not for no dignityes, nor will neuer swere, nor fyght, and would rather mary a wyfe of their owne, then take other mens, and alwayes studying, & preaching Gods worde, seking onely the honour of God, and the profyt of his neighbour, and will bee subiect and obedient in all thinges (desiring none exception) to his prince. This man I say, shoulde bee vnlawfull, & not eligible, for hee were able to destroy ỳ whole kingdome of ỳ papistes and not worthy to receiue an othe of my Lordes ỳ byshops, which will not gladly be periured for such a mās sake. For he were able to destroy ỳ whole church of Rome, vnto the which our Byshops haue beene before sworne. It folowеth in your othe, I shall not consent in counsell or in deede, that they shoulde lose eyther lyfe or member, or that they shoulde bee taken or trapped, by any euill meane. What neede you to sweare thus vnto the Pope? doth not the order of charitie binde you thus to vse your selfe towarde all men? that is to say, neither to hurt them, nor to harme them, neither to intrappe them, nor betraye them. But all men must bee betrayde and with crafte and subtiltie vndone, for the mayntenaunce of thys one wretched person. The truth is, that neuer man spake against this popet, but you destroyde him, and betrayde him. But this popet hath blaspheмed and betrayde all potestates, and yet you were neuer against hym. And why? because you be sworne to hym. And you will kepe your othe, bee it right or wrong.

Charitie byndeth all men to thinke well one of another.

But in your last othe, which hath beene newely made, is added thys clause. That no man should lay violent handes vpon them in any wyse, or any wrong shoulde bee done vnto them by any maner of colour. This part is newly brought in, since the fleshe of the Pope hath beene so holy, that no man might touch it but harlottes. Christen men must patiently suffer iniuries and wrōges, but your head will forsweare that point, and mayntaine himselfe through your power against all men. How neare that this is the Apostles liuing, all Christen men can well iudge. It folowеth in your othe. Their counsell that shal bee shewed vnto mee, either by theyr letters, or by their messengers, I shal open to no man to their hurte or damage. Let Princes beware, whan the pope sendeth coūselles vnto you, for the meaning is to betraye them. For all the worlde knoweth that the pope and you doth litle regarde, what the beggars of the worlde doth handle: But what Emperours, kyngs, and Dukes doth handle, that must you let, and destroye. For that is the Popes counsell. And you may shewe it to no man, No not to your kyng. And why? because you are sworne to the pope.

The fleshe of the pope is now much more holy, then in tyme past it hath beene.

But what say you to your othe made vnto your prince? wherein you sweare, that you shall be faithfull and true, and beare vnto him aboue all creatures, loue, and fauour, to lyue and to dye with hym, and to open vnto him all maner of counselles, that may bee hurtful vnto his grace. Now is it well knowne, that the pope hath done and dayly doth handle such coūselles, as bee against our princes honour, and conseruation. And yet you may neyther tell it to your prince, nor let it. And why? because you be sworn to the pope, and forsworne to your prince. Tell me when any thyng was opened vnto our prince, by you, that the pope had handeled in counsell agaynst our prince. Of this thing I will take recorde of his noble grace, whether I say true or false. And yet must I bee accused of treason. And why? because you are sworne to the pope, And I am true to the kyng. It folowеth. I shall helpe to defend and mayntaine the papistry of Rome, against all men, sauing myne order. And in your new othe, now in oure dayes made, is added. The regalles of Saint Peter. What and in all mē bee contained your prince? you must nedes defend him. And why? because ye bee sworne to the pope, & forsworn to your prince. For your othe to your prince, is to defend him with all your wit & reason against all men. Now must you forsake one of them, And your practise hath beene allwayes to forsake your prince, and sticke to the pope.

The Pope doth practise counsailes against the honourable state of Princes.

pope. For of your othe made to your prince, you haue bene oftentimes assoiled. And as your lawe sayth, the Church of Rome is wont so do doe. But of your othe made vnto ỳ pope, there is no absolution, neither in heauen nor earth. Neither was it euer redde, heard, nor sene, that there could bee any dispensation for it.

xv. quest. vi. c. Alius.

Here is specially to bee noted the practise of Prelates. For such are the doynges of the holy father of Rome that for the rebellion against princes, hee woulde geue absolution but for matter agaynst his popedome, there was neuer absolution might bee obteyned.

Let mee bee reported by all ỳ bookes that euer were written, and by all the bulles that euer were graunted, and by all the experience that euer was vsed. And if I bee found false, let mee bee blamed. And yet I am sure many mẽ will recken, that I speake vncharitably. But I would faine learne of all ỳ charitable mẽ in England, with what other English wordes I coulde declare this intollerable or subtile treason, thus long & shamefully vsed against my prince, which is necessary to bee knowne. And I am compelled by violẽce to declare both my confession and learning in this cause. For mẽ hath not bene ashamed to report, that I would (which am but a wretch and poore simple worme, and not hable to kill a Catte, though I woulde doe my vttermost) to make insurrection against my noble and mighty prince, whom (as God knoweth) I doe both honour, worship, loue, and fauour, to the vttermost power of my hart, and am not satisfied, because it is no more. This I speake afore God. Let him bee mercifull vnto mee as it is true. And if I were not so true in mine hart, it were not possible for mee so earnestly to write agaynst thẽ, whome I doe recken to handle vnfaythfully, and vntruely wyth theyr prince, yea against both Gods lawe, and mans lawe. The very truth is, I can suffer, (through Gods grace) all maner of wronges, iniuries, and sclaunders: but to bee called an hereticke agaynst God, or a traytour against my prince, he lieth not, but I will say, hee lieth. And will bee able so to proue him, if I may bee reported by my workes or deedes, by my conuersation or liuing, or by any thinge that euer I did.

But vnto my purpose: the Bysheppes doth sweare one othe to the pope, and an other contrary to their prince. And yet they will bee take for good and faithfull children. And I poore man must bee condemned, and all my workes for heresy, and no mã to reade them vnder the payne of treason. And why? because I write against their periurie towarde their prince. But how commeth S. Peter by these regalles, that you are sworne to defende? seing that he was neuer no kyng, but a fisher? All the worlde knoweth, that regalia belongeth to kinges, and to like power of kynges. Why are you not rather sworne to defend Peters net, and his fisherie? the which thinges hee both hadand vsed, & neuer regalles. But these thinges will not maintayne the holy Church of Rome, and therefore ye sweare not to maintayne them. But what meane you by that sentence: Sauing mine order? why say you not, sauing my kinges pleasure? Your glose sayth, you may not defend these thinges with weapons. But oh Lord God, what vnshamefulnesse is this & thus to delude with wordes all the whole worlde? Men knoweth, that when the Pope hath nede of your helpe, there is no men soner in armes then you are, if you call armes harneys, bylles, & glaues, swordes, and gunnes, and such other thyngs. Doe you not remember how sone the Bysshop of Norwiche, Henry Spenser, was in armes to defende pope Vrbane? It were but foly to recite examples.

The popes Regales.

Peter was acquaynted with hys nettes, but not with Regalles.

In Verbo. salua ordine.

In the yeare of our Lord. 1164. was there a controuersie betwẽn the kynges grace, & the Bysshops of England, for certaine prerogatiues belõgyng to the kyng. Wherfore the king required an othe, and a confirmation of the Bysshops, as concernyng those Articles and prerogatiues. But aunswere was made of the Bishops, that those prerogatiues, cum omnibus prauitatibus in regio scripto contentis, were of none effect, nor strength, bicause they did forbyd to appele to the Court of Rome, onles the king gaue licence. And bicause that no Bysshop might goe at the Popes callyng out of the Realme, without the kynges assent. And bicause that Clerkes should bée conuented in criminall causes afore a temporall iudge. And bicause the kyng would heare matters, as cõcernyng tythes & other spirituall causes. And bicause that it was agaynst the sea of Rome, and the dignitie of the same, that a Byshop should bée conuẽted afore ỳ kyng. Briefly, they would not bée vnder the kyng, but this addition should bée set vnto it, Saluo honore Dei, & Ecclesie Romane, & ordine nostro, that is, we will bée vnder your grace, sauyng the honour of God, of the Churche of Rome, and of our order. The cause why they dyd except these thynges, was this, as they them selues graunt: For kynges receiued their authorities, and power of the church, but the Church receiueth her authoritie of Christ onely, wherefore they conclude, that the kyng can not commaunde ouer the Byshops, nor absolue any of them, nor to iudge of tythes, nor of Churches, neither yet to forbyd Byshoppes, the handlyng of any spirituall cause.

(The Prelates can not abyde to vse obedience to their prince.

(We haue beene leade by blynde guydes.

Is not here a marueilous blyndnesse and obstinacie agaynste theyr Prince? They will make it agaynst Gods honour, to obey their king, and are not ashamed to say in the kynges face, that his power is of them. But I pray you whether was kynges before Byshops? or Byshops before kynges? You shal finde, that God had long admitted kynges, or any Bishop (as you take hym) was thought of. Doth not the holy ghost commaũde, that we should honour kynges? Also in an other place. Let all men bée vnder the high powers, for the power is of God, and hée that resisteth the power, resisteth Gods ordinaunce. Here blessed S. Paule sayth, that kynges power is of God, & not of Byshops. Furthermore, what reason is it to defende the Popes prerogatiue agaynst your Princes? Is not your Prince nearer, and more naturall vnto you, then this wretch the Pope? But here is a thyng, ỳ maketh me to marueile. When you sweare to the Pope (Sauyng your order.) Is as much to say, as you shall not vse no weapons: but els you shall bée ready and obedient in all thynges. But when you shall sweare to your kyng, then (Sauyng your order) is as much to say, as you haue authoritie to confirme kynges, and to bée their felowes, and neither to bée obedient vnto them, nor yet to aunswere to any Iustice before them. but clearely to bée exempted, and they not to medle with you, excepte they will geue you some worldly promotion. If I would vse my selfe as vnchataribye agaynst you, as you haue handled me, doubtles I could make some thyng of this, that shold displease you. How would you cry? and how would you handle me poore wretch, if you had halfe so much agaynst me, as this is? But I will let you passe, God hath preserued mée hitherto of his infinite mercy agaynst your insaciable malice, and no doubt but hée shall doe the same still. I will returne to your othe.

(The kings power is immediatly of God.

Roma. 13.

(He that defendeth the Pope agaynst hys soueraigne Lorde or Lady is a vnnaturall subiect.

(Sauyng of order hath two significations.

It foloweth. I shall come to the Synode when I am called, vnles I shall bée lawfully let. But why doe you not sweare to compell the Pope to call a Councell? seyng that it hath béene so often, and so instantly required of him, by many and noble Princes of Christendome, yea, seyng that all Christendome doth require with great sightes, an order to bée taken, & set in the highest articles of our faith? But vnto this you are not sworne. And why? bicause it is agaynst your holy popet of Rome. For if there were a generall Councell, both hée, & you do know, that there must néedes folow, both ouer him & you a streight reformation. Therfore after my coũsell say, that you can not come, for you bée lawfully let. It foloweth I shal honourably entreate the popes Legate, both going and comming, and in his necessitie I shal helpe him. I pray you sée, and prouide well, that hée goe not a begging, as Peter did. And sée also that he neither preach nor teach, but pyll and poull, with all mischiefe, and vnshamefastnes. And why? because you are sworne this to maintayne.

(The Pope will hold a Councell where and whẽ it pleaseth hym.

It

It foloweth. I shall visite yearely my selfe, or by some other messenger, the pope of Rome, vnles I bee dispenced with of them. I pray you what pertaineth this to the office of a Byshop, yearely to visite Rome? Christ and the most of his Apostles, were neuer at Rome, and yet they were meetely good Christen men. But I reade in the traditions of the Turke, that certayne of them must yearly visite their Mahomet. From whom I thinke, you haue taken this custome. Your owne law saith, that vnto this clause must these bishops all only bee bounde, that bee immediatly vnderneth the Pope. Now are not you such, for you sweare in your othe to the kyng, that you will immediatly take your Byshopprick of him, and holde it all onely of his grace. Wherefore then doe you here sweare against your owne lawe? And also against your othe made to your prince?

In. Vi. lib. i. de maioritate & obedientia Dilecti filij, De iure iurando. ca. Ego in Verbo singulis Moreouer, you know that there was an olde custome, in the dayes of kyng Henry the second, that no Byshop shoulde goe out of the Realme, without the kinges licence. Are you not bound to keepe this custome: but answere, that the Pope hath dispensed with you, and that you are not bounde to keepe any obedience towarde the actes that your prince maketh. Moreouer, I meruaile sore, that you be all so straitly sworne of so long tyme, and neuer one of you that euer went in my dayes to Rome to discharge his othe. And why? because you are dispensed with. But were it not as good to leaue it out of your othe at the first, seeing you entende not to keepe it, as afterwarde to dispence with you for it? No forsothe, for than the Pope coulde not bynde you to come to Rome at hys pleasure, and betraye your kyng, & all his counselles. But in your othe that is newly made, & that you haue sworne lacke, is added. That if the pope bee on this side ỹ mountaines, you shall visite him euery yeare. But if hee bee beyond the moũtaines, then euery three yeares. One that knew not your practise and the circumstaũces of your factes ỹ hath beene done, would litle suspect this additiõ. But the very truth is, there is a mischieuous and abhominable treason in it agaynst Princes. For if it chaunced the Emperour, or els any temporall Prince neare vnto Rome, to fall at variaunce with the Pope, then dyd ỹ Pope straight runne into Fraunce, that is to say, on this side the mountaines, where you must visite hym yearely. And why? Bicause your god is in distresse, and hath conceiued a deadly hatered agaynst a Prince, and can not bring it to passe without your helpe and counsell. Wherefore you must come yearely. And also hee must know, through your betraying, how your Prince is mynded, and whether hee bee addicted to his contrary parte or not. If hee bee, then must you betraye his counsell, and that yearely. And why? bicause the pope is on this side the mountaines. But and if hee bee in Rome, and hath all Princes neckes vnder hys girdell, then is it sufficient that you come euery third yeare. For you cã at ones commyng, deuise as much treason, as Princes shall auoyde in fiue yeares.

A deuilish practise of Prelates.

The Prelates will obeye the Pope, but not the Prince.

But what belongeth this vnto a Bishop? that the Pope is on this side the moũtaines, or beyonde. If ye bee bounde by Gods law, yearely to visite the Pope, then must you visite him, where soeuer hee bee, though hee were either with God, or the deuill, And if you bee not bounde by Gods law, what a presumption is it of him to bynde you? Yea what an ouersight is it of you, to let your selfe thus to bee bounde? And what a wickednes is it of you so straitely to keepe this othe? to the which you are not boũde by Scripture, against your obedience made to your Prince, whiche is commaunded by Gods word? But I pray you what example hath either hee or you of blessed S. Peter, to bynde by the vertue of an othe, the other Apostles yearely to visite him at Rome. All the world may perceiue, that this othe is inuented of insaciable couetousnes, that the Pope and you haue toward honours and dignities. And that is well declared by these wordes, that foloweth in your othe. The possessions of my Church, I shal not sell, geue, lay to morgage, or make any feoffement, or by any other meanes alienate the same, without the counsell of ỹ pope. But I pray you tell me one thing, why doe you not sweare, that you shall neither bye, nor yet receiue any possessions to your church, nor you shall neither pill, nor poull, nor shaue, to encrease the possessions of your Church. But the truth is, all is fish that commeth to the nette with you. And if it come ones within your cloukes, it neuer cõmeth out agayne, thoughe the kyng and his Realme should stand in neuer so great nede. But to receiue all his lande, you are alwayes ready, and it is not agaynst your othe.

The Byshoppes sweare to visite the Pope yerely.

I do not say thus, bicause I would ye should sell, or alienate the possessions of the Churche, but bicause I see that there is nothyng maintained by them, but all onely your mischeuous pompe and your pride. Your owne law commaundeth, that the fourth part of the spirituall goodes, should bee distributed among powre men. And for that cause they bee called, Bona pauperum, but how litle their part is, all the world can testifie. Wherfore doe you sweare, not to alienate your goodes, without the popes licence? The pope gaue them not to you, but the kyng & his subiectes. How commeth hee now to bee so neare of your counsell in alienating them? and the king is thrust out, the whiche hath deserued best to bee of your counsell. But doe you not remember your own law? the which doth forbid that the pope in any wise, or for any necessitie, should alienate the goodes of the Church, except it bee old houses, whiche can not bee kept without great charges. This is your owne law, and agaynst this will you sweare? Then must you needes bee periured, for if you alienate your goodes with the Popes licence, then is this Decree agaynst you and curseth you. Wherfore then put you this in your othe, seyng you can not alienate your goodes with his consent, nor yet without it?

It foloweth in your new othe, decrees, ordinaunces, sentences, disposions, reseruations, prouisions, and commaundementes apostolike, with all my power I will obserue, & shall and cause other men to obserue them. These things were added, when this Idole was brought so highe, that no man durste wynche agaynst hym. and when hee might saye, and doe what he would. And as your lawe commaundeth, no man so hardye to aske hym why hee doth so. Then began decrees, ordinances, depocyions, dispoſycyons, reseruations, prouysions with like shamefulnes for to spring. and there is no remedy, but they must contynue? And why? Because you are sworne to keepe them your selfe, and to compel other men also to keepe them. And out of the keepinge of this part of your othe, springeth out an other sentence that foloweth, which is this. All heretykes, sysmatikes, and rebelles, towardes our sayd Lorde ỹ Pope, to my power I shall persecute and withstand.

In Vi. tit. iiỹ. ca. ad Apost. in verbo continetur.

This is the cause that hath made vs powre men so great heretykes. For it can neuer bee proued, that euer we spake agaynst God, or our king, and yet bee we heretikes. And why? For soth because the Bysshops are sworne to the Popes decrees, the which condemneth all them for heretikes, that speaketh againſt his holynes, though hee bee as holy as my horse. For hee sayth hym selfe in his lawe, that hee nedeth not to bee holy hym selfe, but it is sufficient, that hee sytteth in an holy seat. These be his wordes: who doubteth but hee is holy, ỹ which is exalted to so great a dignitie? In whõ though good workes of his owne merites be wantinge yet are those good workes sufficyent, the which were done by his predecessours. Upon the which texte their glose sayth, that if it bee openly knowen, that the Pope bee an aduoulterer, or a murderer, yet ought hee not to bee accused. &c.

This is the clause that maintayneth the Popes pompe and glory. And this is that ỹ to geueth him liberte say and doe what hee list.

cause my lords ỹ byshops are swore to persecute vs. But neuertheles, I trust to Gods grace, and the kinges, that my Lordes the Byshops, wyll not bee so hard, in this poynt of their othe, as they haue beene. And whye? Because mẽ may nowe come to their aunswere. Surely, there bee many clauses in his last othe added, that bee cleare iniury vnto princes, & against Gods lawe, and mans lawe. And yet our Byshops will swere them, yea & that, which is worst of all, they will accuse other men of treason & rebellió, And there is no mã swore to treason, nor rebellion, but they onely.

The writers petitiõ of the kynges grace.

Wherfore most gracious prince with all mekenes and lowlynes that is due to soe noble a prince, and also that doth becõme a true subiecte to doe, I lowly and mekely require and desire your grace, to Iudge betweene the Byshops and me, whiche of vs is trewest and faythfullest to God and to your grace. I speake all onelye of those that hath and also would nowe (if they durste) defende the Pope, and his lawes. Agaynst them I make this supplication, and agaynst them haue I declared the learning and doctrine, that I haue both taught and wrytten. And as for my factes, & dedes, what I haue done agaynst God and your grace, I require them to say their vttermost, that they can proue, or elles by your gracious fauour, I am here presente and offer my selfe to proue thẽ lyars, And that vnder any maner of payne, that your grace shal assigne. And agaynst them I haue declared the learnyng and doctrine of their Churche, and also brought examples of their factes and dedes, with the whiche they haue put their doctrine in exercise. Nowe if they bee greeued, or thinke thẽ selues wrongfully handled of mee, then I require no more of your grace, but indifferẽtly and graciously, to here both them and me, the which thing, no doubt as your grace doth knowe our heauẽly father doth require of you. who preserue your highnes in all honor & dignite.

Amen.

The cause of my condemnation.

Anno. 1525. die. 14. Decembris.

MOste gracious Prince, ỹ your grace shoulde knowe what cause of heresye the Byshops had agaynst me, for ỹ which, they so vncharitablye, and so cruelly hath cast me away. Therefore haue I set out ỹ articles ỹ were layde agaynst me. And as they were layd agaynst me, as I will bee reported by their owne actes and bookes. The which articles doubtles were vncharitably, & falsly gathered agaynst me, in a sermon ỹ I made in Cãbridge, in S. Edwardes Churrh. Wherfore I will beseech your grace, with all mekenes, & lowlynes, to bee my gracious Lord, & Prince. And not to suffer me thus shamefully, & cruelly, agaynst all law, & conscience, vtterly to bee vndone, & cast away. But of your most highe goodnes to suffer me to come to mine aunswere, and then, if I can not iustifie my cause I will be at your gracious commaundement, to bee punished after right, and conscience.

The first Article.

IF thou beleeue, that thou art more boũd to serue God to morow which is Christmas day, or of easter day, or of whitsonday, for an holynes that is in one day more then in an other, then art thou no faythfull christean man, but superstitious, And S. Paule is Galat. 5. against thee, saying: You doe obserue dayes, yeares, monthes, and tydes. For vnto a faythfull christean man, euery day ought to bee Christmas day Easter day, and whitsonday. The which thinge the fathers considering that thou diddest not obserue, yea, & that thou wouldest neuer obserue, if it were lefte to thy iudgmẽt, because thou art geuen so much to worldly businesses, For that cause they haue assigned thee certaine dayes to come to the certayn dayes to come to ỳ church to pray togither, to heare the worde of God togither, and to receaue the blessed sacramẽt togither. What faulte fynde you in this article? becauſe I say, that one daye is not holyer then an other? I pray you what is ỳ cauſe or what nature is in one day, that is not in an other, wherby that it ſhould bee holyer then the other? Becauſe (you will ſay) that we halowe the remembraunce of Chriſtes birthe and of Chriſtes reſurrection in one day, and not in an other. This thing I ſay muſt you doe euery daye, for Chriſte is euery day borne, euery day ryſen, euery day aſcended vp. And this muſt you beleeue euery day ſtedfaſtly. This muſt you ſanctifie in your hartes dayly, and not one day.

There is not one day of it ſelfe higher or better then an other.

¶ Now vary we but in this thing. You ſay that we are bound to ſanctifie but one Chriſtmas day in the yeare, and that is ſuperſticiouſnes, & hereſy ſay I, not that I condemne your one day, but that you ſet it to one daye all onely, that we are bound to do euery daye. Briefely, my Lord of Rocheſter alowed this article, ſaying: he would not condemne it for hereſy, for an C. li. (this was a great ſũme of money) but it was foliſhely ſayde (quod hee) to preach this afore the butchers of Cambryge, As who ſay, they were all butchers, that were at the ſermon And not ỳ moſt parte of ỳ vniuerſity. But the byſhop of Bathe aſked me, whether we might labour on the holy dayes or not, ſeeing it is written, Thou ſhalt obſerue thy holy day. I aunſwered that Chriſten men were not bounde to abſtayne from bodely labour by that commaundement, for it was ſo geuen to the Iewes. And if we were bound to abſtayne from bodely labour by that commaundement then was the kinges grace, and all his councell, my Lorde Cardinall, and all his counſell, in the waye of damnation, For they cauſe men to carye their ſtuffe on the holy day, what daye ſoeuer it bee, whan they will remoue. At this reaſon all my Lordes were aſtonied, and wiſt not what to ſay: they were loth to cõdemne my Lord Cardinals grace, ſeing he was ſo holy a prelate of Chriſtes church, and that facte they coulde not deneye. Wherfore at ỳ laſt, my Lorde of Rocheſter remembred hym ſelfe, and obiected in this maner. A goodly reaſon, I will make you a like reaſon, The byſhop of Wincheſter ſuffered ỳ ſtues, Ergo the ſtues bee lawfull. At this reaſon I meruayled much. For I perceyued, that it was as lawfull for our noble Prince to carye ſtuffe on the holy day (which is not agaynſt ỳ worde of god) as it is for an harlot of ỳ ſtues to line in open whordome, which is againſt the worde of God. And yet my Lords the byſhops of their greate charitie, & and of their innumerable ſpirituall treaſure ſuffereth agaynſt their conſcience both to bee done.

The Byſhop of Rochesters great and deepe iudgement.

That would they not doe, if it were agaynſt gods cõmaundement.

Briefely it were to longe to recite all the vncharitable maner that they dyd vſe with me. And yet earneſtly I muſt bee condemned poore man for an heretyke. But I will recyte the ſaying of doctours for me, ỳ men may ſee how ſhamefully I haue erred. Saynt Hierome ſayth, Therfore bee certine dayes aſſigned, that we ſhould come togither, not that, that daye, in the whiche we come togither is holyer then an other, but all dayes bee like, and equall. And Chriſt is not alonely crucified in Paraſceden, and riſen onlye on the ſonday, but the day of reſurrection is alwayes, and alwayes may we eate of our Lordes fleſhe. &c. Here S. Hierome ſayth ỳ ſelfe words ỳ I ſpake, And of theſe wordes was I moued to ſpeake, as God doth knowe. Alſo S. Auguſtine ſayth, we muſt obſerue the ſabboth day, not ỳ we ſhould recken our ſelfe not to labour, but that all thinge that we doe worke well, muſte haue an intention to the euerlaſting reſt. Wherfore we muſt obſerue the holy day, not by corporall idlenes, and vnto the letter, but ſpiritually muſt we reſt from vyces, and concupiſences, wherfore among all the ten commaundementes, that of the ſabboth daye is alonely commaunded to bee figuratiuely obſerued &c. ted at his time. So likewise the obseruation of the sabboth day is declared to bée for a tyme, for we must kéepe ỳ sabboth day, not alonely the seuenth day, but at all tymes, as Esay sayth &c. But here my Lorde of Rochester sayde, fyrste, that I vnderstode not Tertulian, secõdarily, that hée was an heretike. But I passe ouer myne aũswere, for this is but a Lordly worde, and hée could none otherwise saue his honour, but yet stãdeth my scripture fast. And S. Hierome, and S. Augustine, & also their owne law, whose wordes be these: It is come vnto me, that certaine men, which bée of an euill spirite, haue sowen certaine euill thinges among you, and contrary to the holy faith, so that they doe forbid, that men should worke on the Sabboth day. The whiche men, what other thyng shall we call them, but the preachers of Antichrist, the which Antichrist shall make the Sabboth day, and the Sonday bée kept from all maner of worke. &c. This law clearely declareth you to bée Antichristes, this is more then I sayd. I haue great marueile, that the Bysshop of Bathe, beyng so mighty a Lord in condemning of heretickes, was not learned in this law, seyng it is his owne facultie.

The second article.

NOw dare no mã preach ỳ truth, and the very Gospell of God, & in especiall they that bée fæble, and fearefull. But I trust, yea and I pray to God, that it may shortly come, that false and manifest errours may bée plainely shewed. There bée certaine men like conditioned to dogges, if there bée any man, that is not theyr countryman, or that they loue not, or know not, say any thing agaynst them, then cry they, an hereticke, an heretycke, ad ignem, ad ignem. These bée the dogges that feare true preachers. What heresie finde you in this article? I doe thinke that you doe fele my prayer to bée hearde. For doubtles there bée many shamefull errours now manifestly opened, that at those dayes had bëne heresie to haue touched them.

The thyrd article.

WEe make nowe a dayes many Martyrs, I trust wée shall haue many moe shortly. For the viritie coulde neuer bée preached playnely, but persecution did follow. Here did my Lord of Bathe inquire of mée, if I reckoned them for martyrs, that were burnte at Bruselles, I answered, that I knewe not their cause, wherefore they died, but I reckoned as many men to bée martyrs, as were persecuted, and dyed for the worde of God, but hée saide, hée woulde make mée to frye for this. How thinke you by this holy prelate? was not this a charitable argument to refell myne aunswere with? But this was the strongest argument, that euer they vsed. And paraduenture I may sée the day, that this argument may bée made against them.

The iiij. article.

THese lawes, these lawyers, these Iusticiares, that say, that a man may lawfully aske his owne good afore a Iudge, and contende in iudgement, haue destroyed all patience, deuotion, and faith in Christen people. On this article hangeth also ỳ nexte.

God forgeue them that layd this to me.

The fifth article.

THis pleading in iudgement, is manifestly against the Gospell. Luk. 12. Homo quis constituit iudicẽ. And contrary to S. Paule, Iam omnino delictum est &c.

Myne aduersaries most vncharitably layde these two articles against mée, as though I had condempned the lawemaker, lawe, and execution thereof, whan I onely spake agaynst the vncharitablenes of some mẽ, which rather séeke vengeaunce of their brethren, than any right or helpe of the lawe. Nor I speake not against all lawyers, or against any for pleading iustly, after the forme of the lawe: but onely against those which taught men, that they were bounde to prosecute the vttermost of the lawe, vnder the paine of deadly sinne, were the man neuer so poore, and vnlike to pay the debte. Against these two persons spake I, and against none other. For it is not, nor neuer was mine intent, to forbid suing at the lawe, for I doe know very well, that maiestratus is of God. Ergo, it must nédes followe that all lawes, hauing probable reasons of nature, made to conserue a common wealth, muſt alſo bée allowed of God, for lawes bée a parte of the power that is inſtituted of God.

Is it lawfull for a Christen man to demaunde his debt by the order of the law. So is it not lawfull to vexe and sue vncharitably those in whõ there is such necessitie as they can not make payment, but rather shall perish and dye in prison, whiche thyng is agaynst charitie & therfore it is sinfull.

Moreouer, S. Paule doth appeale to the Emperour, which is alſo pars litis. And that hée coulde not doe, if ſuing were ſimpliciter, forbidden. Alſo good lawes bée Gods gifts. Wherfore it muſt néedes followe, that wée may lawfully vſe them. But as men may miſuſe cunning, and beautie, ſo may mẽ alſo miſuſe the excellent gift of the lawes, not that lawes bée euill, but becauſe wée vſe them not to the intent that they were ordayned for. No man doubteth, but in vſing of all Gods creatures, there muſt bée an epykya, that is, a meane, a meaſure, and an order, ſo that no man may therby deſtroy his neighbour againſt the order of charitie, which is a guide and a ruler in vſing of all creatures. As for men to make a rumour in a whole countrey, for a trifle, or els for a mã to ſue his neighbour, which is not able by no meanes to paye hys debte, and ſo vtterly to vndoe hym, and to take none ende with him, but after the extremitie of the lawe: I ſay that this maner of ſutes doe not become Chriſten men. Vbi tranſgreditur equitatis, et charitatis limites. And that all men may clearely perceiue, that theſe onely were both my wordes and intent. I ſhall rehearſe the occaſion, that moued mée to ſpeake of the lawyers, and ſuters. The cauſe was thys.

There was a poore man dead, and had made an other poore man his executour, and bequethed in his will to a Churche in Cambridge a kettell, worth. ij. s. iiij. d. the which kettel was afterwarde required by the Churche Warden. But this executour beyng a poore man, and not able to geue this bequeſt at that tyme, therefore hée deſired the Church Warden of longer reſpite, but hée could not be heard, for the Church Warden would haue the vttermoſt of the law, and ſued him before the Commiſſary, and at the laſt, condemned him vnto priſon, where hée lay, and neither was able to pay his dette, nor to helpe his wife, & children. Now, bicauſe I might doe ſomthing with ỹ Church Warden, therefore the poore mans wife came wéeping, and waylyng to me, deſiring me in the way of charitie to ſpeake to the Church Wardẽ, for to bée good to her poore husband, wherby I was moued to ſend for this my frend, his name is called Ihon Drake, a mã well knowẽ in Cambridge, vnto whom I ſpake in this maner.

Extreme law is extreme iuſtice.

Countreyman, I am very ſorye to heare of your vncharitable demeanour. Here hath béene wõmee a poore woman weepyng, and waylyng, and crying out, howe you haue vndone her, her poore husband, and her miſerable children, for all they haue not one bitte of bread, towardes their foode, neither is ſhée able to labour. Wherefore I marueile ſore at you, that you wil bée ſo extreme vnto poore men, whom God viſited with pouertie, to proue your charity. What mercy will you haue at Chriſtes hand? the whiche is ſo extreme vnto your poore neighbour? whom hée hath bought with his precious bloud. Vnto this hée made me aunſwere on this maner, how that thyng pertained not to hym, but vnto the Church, wherfore hée ſayd, that all Doctours of law did ſay, that they muſt ſue therefore, vnder the payne of deadly ſinne. And if it were wrong, why did they learne ſo? Now, I had many wordes with hym betwéene him, and me, as concernyng this maner.

The euill counſell of the Doctours of law.

But the nert day, when I preached, by the reaſon that the ſelfe ſame mã ſtoode afore me in ỹ Church, was I brought to remembraunce of the caſe, that hée, and I had commoned of. And bicauſe I had not clearely cõuerted hym, therfore I recited the caſe in a parable, that no man knew what I meant, but hée, & I. And of this thyng was I moued (as God knoweth) to ſpeake of ſuters, the whiche I thinke in this caſe, no Chriſten man can allow. And therefore I ſay in myne Article, theſe lawyers. Now is there vtterly ſinne among you (ſayth Paule) bicauſe you goe to law one with an other, why rather ſuffer you not wrõg? 1. Cor. 6.

why

why rather ſuffer ye not your ſelues to bée robbed? Alſo our maſter ſayth, Math. 5. If any man will ſue at the lawe, and take thy coate from thée, let him haue thy cloke alſo. Way not I ſay theſe wordes? wherefore were they written by the holy ghoſt? but that they ſhould bée learned? Here our maſter Chriſt, and S. Paule ſpeaketh againſt ſuters, no man can denye it, the text is ſo cleare. Now, what ſuyng can bée vnlawfull? if this bée not vnlawfull, againſt the which I did ſpeake? Here is a poore man, wife, and children deſtroyed, and no charitable wayes taken with the poore man, whereby hée might make reſtitution. And my learning ſaith: That Summum ius ſumma iniuria eſt. Wherefore I will bée iudged by all Chriſten men, if I ought not in this caſe to géeue my frende counſell, not for to ſue. Or whether I bée worthy to bée condemned for an hereticke, becauſe I counſell my frende and brother, rather to ſuffer wrong, than for to vndoe a whole houſholde for a naughtie leude kettel. But let vs ſée, how the holy doctours that hath written ouer theſe places of ſcripture, doth erpounde them.

I doe not condemne ſuing, but in a caſe.

Firſt, Athanaſius, on this text of Saint Paule, that I bring: There is vtterly ſinne amoug you, that is to ſay, It is to your condemnation, and to your ignominie, that you doe exerciſe iudicials among you. Wherefore doe you not rather ſuffer wronge? Alſo ſaint Hierome, It is ſinne vnto you that you doe againſt the cōmaūdemēt of Chriſt, that you haue iudgementes among you, the which ought alwayes to kéepe peace, yea, though it were with the loſſe of your temporall goods. Wherefore doe you not rather ſuffer wronge? Where as ye ought by the commaundement of the Goſpell, and by the example of the Lorde, patiently to ſuffer, there doe you the contrary, not all onely not ſuffer, but you doe wrong vnto them, that doe no wronge. &c. Marke how S. Hierome calleth it a precepte, and a commaundement, and no counſell, and alſo calleth it ſinne to doe againſt this cōmaundement. Likewiſe Haymo ſaith: It is offence and ſinne in you, that you haue iudicials. For accuſation engendreth ſtrife, ſtrife engendreth diſcorde, diſcorde engendreth hatred. And leaſt paraduenture they woulde ſay, this is no ſinne, to require mine owne: Therefore ſayth the Apoſtle: Truely it is ſinne vnto you, for you doe againſt the cōmaundement of the Lord, the which ſayth: He that taketh away thy good, aſke it not againe. Wherefore doe you not rather ſuffer loſſe? that ye might fulfill the commaundement of the Lord. &c. Marke how hée calleth it the commaundement of God? and it is ſinne to aſke our owne with contention? Now, what haue I ſayde in mine article, that holy ſcripture, and alſo holy Doctours do not ſay?

Luke. 6.

If it bee a counſell, than can ye not condemne it for hereſie.

But after this came a Doctour of lawe (whom I knew not) and ſayde, that their lawe had condemned thys opiniō, and declared thoſe ſcriptures to bée but counſels. But I denyed that, and ſayd, I knew no ſuch lawe. And ſodainely Doctour Steuen, now Byſhop of Wincheſter, ſhewed mée their lawe, whoſe wordes bée theſe: Illud euangelij, ſi quis abſtulerit. &c. non eſt precipientis ſed exhortantis. Now let euery Chriſten man iudge, whether that theſe wordes of their lawe bée of ſufficient auctoritie, to refell the holy wordes of Scripture or no? But than came doctour Wolmā, and hée brought this texte. If thy brother doe offende thée, than tell the Church. What is that (ſayd hée) tell the Church? to whom I aunſwered, that this place made not for his purpoſe, aleaging Saint Auguſtine for mée. For it ſpeaketh of the crymes, that ſhould bée reproued by the congregation, and not of the correction of the temporall ſworde. It alſo foloweth, If hée heare not ỹ church, coūte hym as an heathē, and as a publican. This is the vttermoſt payne, that our S. Chriſt aſſigneth there, ỹ which is no payne of the temporall lawe. But at this aunſwere, was hée ſore moued and ſayd: if I did abide by it, I ſhould be burnt. This was a ſharp ſentence, of ſo greate a man as hée is. Apppel-

Wherefore I can not ſee how they can condemne this article, for hereſye, yea, and I dare ſaye for them, that they recken it none hereſy, nor they did not condēne mee for this article.

The ſixte article.

I Wyll neuer beleeue, nor yet I can neuer beleeue, that one man may be by the lawe of God a byſhop of 2. or 3. cyties, yea of an whole coūtrey, for it is contrarye to S. Tit. 1.

The Cardinall and Doctour Barnes reaſoned togither.

But therefore was I an heretick.

I was brought afore my Lorde Cardinall into his galary, and there hee reade all myne articles, tyll hee came to this, and there hee ſtopped, & ſayde, that this touched hym, and therefore hee aſked me, if I thought it wronge, that one byſhop ſhoulde haue ſo many cityes vnderneath hym, vnto whom I anſwered, that I could no farther goe, then to S. Paules terte, which ſet in euery citye a byſhop. Then aſked hee mee, if I thought it now vnright (ſeeing the ordinaunce of the church) that one byſhop ſhould haue ſo many cities? I aunſwered, ỳ I knew none ordinaunce of ỳ church (as concerning this thinge) but S. Paules ſayinge onelye. Neuertheles I did ſee a contrary cuſtome and practiſe in the world, but I know not the originall thereof. Then ſayde hee, ỳ in the Apoſtles tyme, there were dyuers cities, ſome 7. myle, ſome vj. myle long, and ouer them was there ſet but one byſhop, & of their ſubbards alſo. So likewiſe now, a byſhop hath but one citye to his cathedrall churche and the country about, is as ſubbards vnto it. He thought this was farre fetched, but I durſt not denye it, becauſe it was ſo greate auctorite, and of ſo holy a father, and of ſo greate a deuine. But this dare I ſay, that his holynes could neuer proue it by ſcripture, nor yet by any auctorite of doctours, nor yet by any practiſe of the Apoſtles, and yet it muſt bee true, becauſe a piller of the church hath ſpoken it. But let vs ſee what ỳ doctours ſay to myne article. Athanaſius doth declare this tert of the Apoſtle, I haue left thee behinde. &c. Hee woulde not commit vnto one byſhop a whole ylde but hee did inioyne, that euery cytye ſhoulde haue his proper paſtor, ſuppoſing, ỳ by this meanes they ſhoulde more diligently ouer ſee the people, & and alſo that ỳ labour ſhould bee more eaſye to beare. &c. Alſo Chriſoſtome on that ſame terte. Hee would not ỳ a whole countrey ſhoulde bee permitted vnto one man, but hee enioyned vnto euery mā his cure, by ỳ meanes hee knew, that the labour ſhoulde bee more eaſye, and the ſubiectes ſhould bee with more diligēce gouerned, if the teachers were not diſtract with ỳ gouerning of many churches, but had cure, and charge of one church onely. &c. Me thinketh theſe bee plaine wordes, and able to moue a man to ſpeak aſmuche as I did. But graunte, that you may haue all theſe cities, yet can you make it none hereſy. For my lord Cardinall graunted, that it was but agaynſt hym, and againſt you, which bee no Gods. But I poore man muſt bee an heretike, there is no remedy, you will haue it ſo. And who is able to ſay nay? Not all ſcripture, nor yet God hymſelfe.

If I ſayned ſuch a thynge I ſhoulde bee an heretick.

The vij. article.

IT can not bee proued by ſcripture, that a man of the churcho ſhoulde haue ſo greate temporall poſſeſſions. But they will ſay, if they had not ſo great poſſeſſions, they could not kepe ſo many ſeruantes, ſo many dogges, ſo many horſes, as 40. or 50. & maintayne ſo great pompe, and pride, and liue ſo deliciouſly, what hereſye fynde you in this? Is it hereſye to ſpeake againſt your horſes, and your houndes and your abhominable lyuing? And doubtles, I did not ſay, but that you

myght haue poſſeſſions, all onely I ſpake againſt the ſuperfluouſnes, and the abuſe of them, for the which all ẏ worlde wondereth on you. What miſchiefe is there in the worlde vſed, ẏ is more clerely, and openly knowen, then that you doe abuſe the goodes of the Church? And yet muſt I bee cõdemned for an heretyke, for ſpeaking againſt it. Alas, doe you thinke, that God will ſuffer this violence, that you doe vſe againſt poore men? I will ſtãd in ẏ daunger, & proue how his Godly maieſty ſhall iudge this matter betweene you and mee I dare truſt hym with it.

The viij. article. SUre I am, that they can not by the law of God, haue any iuriſdiction ſeculer, and yet they chalẽge both powers, which if they haue, why doe they not put them both in vſe? For they muſt ſay, as the Iewes ſayde, we may kill no man. This is the article, that dyd byte you, for you can not bee content with the office of a byſhop, but you will bee alſo kynges. Howe that ſtandeth with Gods lawe, and with your othe, I haue declared it to our noble prince. I doubt not, but hee will put you to the tryall of it. Haue not you this many yeres condemned many a poore man, & then deliuered hym to the temporall power to be put to death, which knew nothing of his cauſe? And if hee would, ẏ yee ſhoulde put hym to death your ſelfe, then anſwered yee, how you might kyll no man. So ẏ they were alwayes your hangmen.

Officiers bee but byſhops hangmen, God amende it.

The ix. article. THey ſay they bee the ſucceſſours of Chriſt and of his Apoſtles, but I can ſee them folow none, but Iudas. For they beare the purſe, and haue all the money. And if they had not ſo great poſſeſſions, I am ſure an. C. would ſpeake againſt them, where now dare not one, for loſſe of promotion. As for this article I will ouercome you with the witnes of all the world, you may well condemne it for hereſie, but it is as true as your Pater noſter. Iudas ſolde our maiſter but once, and you ſell him as often as hee commeth in your handes. But I would it were that yee coulde proue mee a lyer, and that you folowed any of the Apoſtles ſauing Iudas onely. Yea, I woulde that yee were in certayne pointes as good as Iudas was. It had beene better for you that you had not medled againſt mee in theſe matters. For now I am compelled to ſpeake many thinges, which I would for ſhame of the worlde neuer haue ſpoken. But now that you will haue it ſo, take it to you, and make the beſt you can of it.

The x. article. THere is not the greateſt Phariſie in this Church, but I am ſure I pricke him with theſe wordes, and hee knoweth that they bee true, though hee ſay the contrary, and that doe I well know. This article did I ſpeake becauſe of Doctour Ryde, which on a tyme graunted in maiſter Doctour Buttes houſe, that the Byſhoppes were cleane out of order. And therefore I ſay, that I know it.

The xj. article. THeſe ordynary Byſhops and prelates doe followe that falſe Prophet Balaam. For they woulde curſe the people, but by the prouiſion of God, they were compelled to bleſſe them, that is to ſay, to teach them to liue well, though they thẽſelues liue moſt miſcheuouſly. And ſo the Aſſes which they ride vpõ, that is, the common people, haue their liues in abhominaiton. This is the haynous hereſie. For it ſpeaketh againſt the holy fathers, which bee almoſt as holy as Balaams Aſſe, that did once ſpeake the worde of God to a good purpoſe: And ſo doe they neuer. But I graunt that I did offende in caulling you ordinary Byſhops, for I ſhoulde haue called you inordinate butchers. And as for that, that I compared you to Balaam, it is your owne lawe. 2. queſt. 7. Secuti ſunt. And cap. Noſſi. And as for your liuing all the worlde knoweth it. I coulde tell here many holy pointes of Byſhops liuinge, as keeping of mens wiues, and daughters, but I will not, for I ſhoulde bee reckened vncharitable. But you may doe them, breaking not your holy charitie.

2. q 7. Secuti ſunt. & cap. Noſſi.

The xij. article. THey ſet vp an Idoll to deceaue ẏ people withall, whiche is called Baall Peor, or Baall Phegor, that is interpretated gaſping, as their lawes and conſtitutions, the which gaſpe and gape to maintayne theyr worldly honour. They cauſe vs to do ſacrifice by fayre women, that is by their carnall affections, and ſweete wordes, ſo that God of Iſraell is forgotten. And thus by their ſweete wordes, and benediction they deceiue the ſimple. These bee the false maiſters that Saint Peter ſpeaketh of. These bee the fountaines without water, for they geue no good doctrine to the people. Where is the hereſie in this? becauſe I cõpare your lawes to Baall? But loke whether the interpretation of the worde doe agree wyth the nature of your lawes or not? What doe all your lawes, but miniſh the auctoritie of Princes? and of all other Lordes, and exalte yours onely? Call you not that a gaſping Idoll? Let this article ſtand till you be able to proue it hereſie.

2. Pet. 2.

The xiij. article.

NOw they ſell vs, they ſell the people, they ſell holy orders, they ſell church halowing, there is no better marchandiſe in Chepeſide. Wilte thou knowe what is the price of a Church halowing? no leſſe than xl. ſhillinges. They ſell pardons, and remiſſiõs of ſinnes as openly as a Cow, and an Oxe is ſolde, for they neuer graunt them without money. The Suffragan of Ely did aſke of maiſter John Purgolde xl.s. and the offring, for halowing of S. Edwardes in Cãbrige: yea and hee woulde not doe it ſo good chepe (quoth hee) but becauſe he had a Goddaughter buryed in the churchyarde. But this may bee proued by examples ynough. For bryng yee forth one church in all Englande, that you haue halowed without money, or without hope of money, and I will graunt my concluſion falſe. And as for your pardons, all the worlde knoweth your handlyng. I dare ſay it is the beſt marchaundiſe in the worlde, as you handle it.

The popes pardons hath beene the beſt marchaundiſe in England.

But was it not a maruaylous blindnes, and a great preſumption, ſo cruelly to handle mee for theſe articles? was there no middell to haue punished mee for ſpeaking againſte you, but that I muſt needes be an hereticke? I dare ſay, there is not one among you ſo chameles, ỹ dare come forth now at this day, and proue theſe articles hereſie againſt mee. But doubtles as long as I liue, and am not reſtored to my name and fame againe, which you haue violently taken away from mee, will I bee vnto you a deuill, and a peſtilence. I require nothing of you, but my good name and fame, to the which I haue right, and to the which you ought of your charitie reſtore mee, though I neuer required you. I thinke you haue punished mee inough, for ſpeaking of a foliſhe worde or twayne againſt you.

The xiiij. article.

WIlte thou know what their benedictions is worth? They had rather geue thee ten benedictions, then one halfepeny. Is not this a fore hereſie? You ryde thorowe ſtreetes, and townes, bleſſing man and ſtone, but you neuer geue halfepenye to man, nor childe.

The xv. article.

NOwe is come a pardon, wherby they ſay that they haue power to ſende an hundreth ſoules to heauen. And if they may ſo doe without any further reſpect, then may they likewiſe ſende an other 100. to hell. For it foloweth in the text, Quodcunque ligaueris, that is, what ſo euer thou byndeſt. Is not this a fore hereſye, to ſay that you may not rule this matter at your iudgment. But this is a marueylous texte, Quodcunque ligaueris, for it bindeth in hell, and loſeth in heauen, and openeth mens purſes, & cofers in earth, it depoſeth Princes, it interditeth landes, it loſeth a man out of his cote: yea and often tymes it loſeth a man from his wife, yea and the horſe out of the carte. And all is done by this texte Quodcunque ligaueris. Is not this a merueilous text, that hath ſo greate a power? I know not ſuch an other in all the Bible.

The xvj. article.

IT is abhominable to heare howe they preach, and teach, that they may abſolue a pœna and a culpa, which I am ſure is impoſſible, as they vnderſtand it. Make of this what you can, can, and loke of your owne ſcholaſticall doctours, The which learneth boldlye that the keyes of the church hath none auctorite ouer ſinne, nor yet ouer eternall payne. But all onely hath auctorite to chaunge euerlaſting payne vnto a temporall payne: & that the pope may chaũge, & take away at his pleaſure. And amõg all temporall paynes, you reken purgatory ỹ greatteſt. Ouer the which ỹ pope hath full power. This is your owne doctrine.

Alexander Duns, Bonauenture in iij. Sent.

Loke in Alexander de Hales, in Duns, and in Bonauenture, in the 4. booke of the ſentences. Now if you will condemne mẽ, then muſt you fyrſt condemne this your owne doctrine.

The xvij. article.

WHat is the cauſe that they forbid vs that we ſhoulde not diſcuſſe how greate their power is? but becauſe that they would make all mẽ fooles, and holde vs in ignorauncе? Your owne ſcholemen ſay, the popes power is ſo greate, that no man can, nor may diſcuſſe it. Alſo your lawe cõmaundeth. That no mã bee ſo hardy, as to aſke ỹ pope, Lord why doe you ſo? But put the caſe that this were a lye, yet is it farre from hereſie. Yet my Lordes ſay, that I ſhall bee an heretyke, And why ſay I? Becauſe we will haue it ſo, ſay they. Yea and thou beeſt not ſo content, ỹ ſhalt bee burnt. Mary I thank you hartely my Lords. Pro bona veſtra informacione.

The Pope may not bee comptrolled of any man.

The xviij. article.

THey haue a lawe moſte abhominable, & contrarye to Gods lawe and charitie, to excommunicate the people. 4. tymes in a yeare, that is to ſay, thoſe men that raiſe the rent of an houſe: that muſt you vnderſtand, if it belong not to the church. For if it belong vnto ỹ church, thou maiſt raiſe it in euery moneth ons, and no man ſhall curſe thee. Alſo they curſe them that bee not buried in their pariſhe church, ỹ muſt bee vnderſtãded, if that they bee rich men, for if they bee poore, they may bee buried amõg the friers. The Byſhop of Bath ſayd, ther was no ſuch maner to curſe men. And all ỹ world knoweth the contrary. Moreouer I red theſe articles in the booke of the generall curſe, that belongeth to ſaynt Benets church in Cambrige and there did I marke it with myne owne hand, and yet the byſhop was not aſhamed to denye it. And why? Becauſe I muſte bee an heretyke, there is no remedye, the holy fathers hath ſo determined it.

The xix. article.

THey haue myters with glyſtering precious ſtones, they haue gloues for catching colde in ỹ middeſt of their ceremonies. They haue rynges, and ouches, & other ceremonies, ſo many ỹ there is in a manner now nothing els in the church, but all iewyſhe maners. Wyll you make this hereſy? becauſe I ſpeake againſt your dãnable and pompous myters? I thinke ſuch ornamentes were to bee condemned euen among heathen men, I will not ſay among chriſtean men. But this dare I ſay, that there was neuer no God among heathen men, that euer delighted in ſuch ornamentes: And yet you will ſerue the God of heauen by thẽ. And your poore brother, whom Chriſt hath redeemed with his precious blood dyeth in priſon, and openly in the ſtreate & hangeth him ſelfe for neceſſitie, & yet wil you not beſtow on hym ſo much as one of your precious ſtones. Tell me of one byſhop that euer brake his myter to the helping of a poore man? was there neuer man in neceſſitye in England? but all ỹ world may ſee what you bee. Theſe thinges bee ſenſible inough.

No man may ſpeake againſt the pompe of Prelates.

The xx. article.

THeſe myters I can not tell from whence they do come, except they take them from the iewes byſhops. & if they take them from ỹ Jewes, then let them alſo take they? ſacrifices, and their oblations from them, and offer calues, and lambes, as they dyd, and then haue we nothing to doe with them, for wee bee chriſten men, and no Jewes. I pray you tell mee where yee finde but one pricke in holy ſcripture of your myters? Our mayſter did inſtitute byſhops, And S. Paule ſetteth out what is their office, and alſo what is their ornamẽt. & yet ſpeaketh neuer a worde of your myters. But I dare boldelye ſay, ỹ if you bee put to ỹ tryall, you ſhall bee fayne to rũne to the olde lawe. But can I bee an heretyke, if I condemned clearely your myters, and ſayde they were of the deuyll: when you proue them to bee of Chriſtes inſtitution, then will I be an heretyke. Is not that inough? I praye you let mee ſo long bee taken for a chriſtean man. And if you bee not cõtent with this, truely then doe yee me wronge.

Byſhops myters, cõmeth from the Jewes.

The xxi. article.

THeſe myters with 2. hornes I cãnot tell what they ſhould ſignifye, except it be the hornes of the falſe prophet, of whome It is ſpoken, with theſe hornes ſhalt ỹ blowe afore thee all Syria. And ſo dyd hee mocke their ringes, and all their ornamentes, and eccleſiaſticall ceremonyes. It wil com to my ſaying, that you bee byſhops of the olde lawe, for you haue nothing to defende your rynges, your ornamentes, and your ceremonies, but bery tyranny. Wherefore to mayntaine theſe, depoſe you kynges, and princes interdite landes & burne man, wyfe, and chylde. And when you haue all done, you haue defended but a deuelyſh tokẽ of pride. The doctours, that wolde fauour your proude tokens, & expound them to the beſt, haue declared that the two hornes of your myters dyd ſygnify the new and the olde teſtament, that is, how you ſhould be learned in them both.

3. King.

Byſhops vſe vayne & foolyſh ceremonies.

Now I ſaw, that this expoſition did not agree with that thyng (for no man can bee leſſe learned in them thẽ you bee, I ſpeake of a great many.) Wherefore me thought it was but a vaine expoſition, and therfore I compared them to the two hornes of the falſe Prophet, bicauſe (as you know) this falſe Prophet ſayde vnto the kyng, that hee ſhoulde with theſe two hornes blow afore him all Syria. And yet hee lyed, for the kyng was the firſt mã that was ſlayne. So likewiſe you ſay vnto kynges, if they folowe your coũſell, and mayntaine your authoritie, and bee ruled after you, Thẽ ſhal they ouercome all their enemies: As ſinne, death, and hell, and yet (Salno ordine veſtro) you lye, for you haue no word of God for you. Wherefore you muſt be falſe Prophetes.

what the two hornes of the myter meaneth.

Here haue I cõpared with a ſimilitude your myters to the two hornes, and you to falſe Prophetes, what if this bee falſe? what if I can not proue it? yet can you make me none heretycke. For then muſt you make thoſe men heretickes, that haue compared the formes of your myters to the new, and to the old Teſtamentes. and you to the true Apoſtles, for they haue made a greater lye then I haue done. and they are neuer able to proue it. And as for me, I will proue my ſaying true (if ye will ſtãd to Scripture) or els wil I be taken for an heretycke.

The xxii. article.

THey haue baculum paſtoralem to take ſheepe with, but it is not like a ſhepheardes hooke, for it is intricate and manifold crooked, and turneth alwayes in, ſo that it may bee called a maſe, for it hath neither begynnyng nor endyng, and it is more like to knocke ſwine and wolues in the head with, then to take ſheepe. They haue alſo pyllers, and pollares, and other ceremonies, whiche no doubt, bee but tryfles, and thynges of naught.

I pray you what is the cauſe that you call your ſtaffe a ſhepheardes ſtaffe? you helpe no man with it? you comfort no man? you lift vp no man with it? but you haue ſtriken downe kynges, and kyngdomes with it, and knocked in the head Dukes & Earles with it. Call you this a ſhepheardes ſtaffe? There is a ſpace in the ſhepheardes ſtaffe, for the foote to come out agayne, but your ſtaffe turneth, and wyndeth alwayes inward, and neuer outward, ſignifying that what ſoeuer hee bee that cõmeth within your daũger, that hee ſhall neuer come out agayne. This expoſition your deedes doe declare, let thẽ bee examined, that you haue had to doe with. And let vs ſee how they haue eſcaped your ſhepheardes hooke. But theſe bee the articles, for the whiche I muſt needes bee an heretycke. Neuertheles all the world may ſee how ſhamefully, that I haue erred againſt your holynes in ſaying the truth.

The meanyng of the Byſhops croſier ſtaffe.

My Lord Cardinal reaſoned with me in this article, all the other hee paſſed ouer, ſauyng this, and the firſte article. Here did hee aſke, if I thought

it

it good and reaſonable, that hée ſhould lay downe his pyllers and pollares, & coyne them? Here is the hereſie that is ſo abhominable. I made him aunſwere, that I thought it well done. Then ſayd hée, how thinke you, were it better for me? (being in the honour and dignitie that I am) to coyne my pyllers, and pollares, and to geue the money to. v. or vj. beggers? then for to mayntaine the common wealth by them as I doe? Doe you not recken (quoth hée) the common wealth better then fiue or ſixe beggers? To this I did aunſwere, that I reckened it more to the honour of God, and to the ſalnation of his ſoule, and alſo to the comfort of his poore brethren, that they were coyned, and giuẽ in almes. And as for the common wealth dyd not hange of them, for as his grace knew, the common wealth was afore his grace, and muſt hée whẽ his grace is gone, and the pyllers and pollares came with him, and ſhould alſo goe away with him. Notwithſtandyng if the common wealth were in ſuch a condition, that it had néede of them, then might his grace ſo lõg vſe them, or any other thyng in their ſtede, ſo longe as the common wealth néeded them. Notwithſtandyng I ſayd, thus much did I not ſay, in my Sermon agaynſt them, but all onely I damned in my Sermon the gorgious pompe and pride of all exteriour ornaments.

Cardinall Wolſey lyked well hys pyllers & pollares.

Then he ſayd, well, you ſay very well. But as well as it was ſayd, I am ſure that theſe wordes made me an hereticke, for if theſe wordes had not bœne therein, myne aduerſaryes durſt neuer haue ſhewed their faces againſt me. But now they knew wel that I could neuer bée indifferently heard. For if I had got the victory, thẽ muſt all the Byſhops, and my Lord Cardinall, haue layd downe all their gorgious ornamentes. For the which they had rather burne yt. ſuch hereticks, as I am, as all ỹ world knoweth. But God is mighty, and of me hath hée ſhewed his power, for I dare ſay, they neuer intented thing more in their liues, thẽ they did to deſtroy me, and yet God of his mercy hath ſaued me, agaynſt all their violence, vnto his godly wiſedome is the cauſe all onely knowen.

The Byſhop of London that was then called Tunſtall, after my departyng out of priſon, ſayd vnto a ſubſtãciall man, that I was not dead (for I dare ſay his conſcience did not recken me ſuch an hereticke, that I would haue killed my ſelfe, as the voice wẽt, but yet would hée haue done it gladly of his charitie) but I was (ſayd hée) in Amſterdame, where I had neuer bœne in my life (as God knoweth, nor yet in the countrey this x. yeares) & certaine men did there ſpeake with me (ſayd hée) and hée fained certaine wordes, that they ſhould ſay to me, & I to them, and added thereunto, that my Lorde Cardinall would haue me agayne, or it ſhould coſt him a great ſumme of money, howe much I doe not clearely remember. I haue marueile that my Lorde is not aſhamed, thus ſhamefully, and thus Lordly to lye, all though hée might doe it by authoritie.

Tunſtall Byſhop of Londõ hath intelligence where D. Barnes was become.

And where my Lord Cardinall, & hée would ſpende ſo much money to haue mée againe, I haue great marualle of it. What can they make of mée? I am a ſimple poore wreatch, and worth no mans money in the worlde (ſauing theirs) not the tenth peny, that they will geue for mée. And to burne mée, or to deſtroy mée, can not ſo greatly profite them. For whẽ I am dead, the Sunne, & the Mone, the ſtarres, and the element, water and fire, yea and alſo ſtones, ſhall defende this cauſe agaynſt them, rather than the veritie ſhould periſhe. But if they bée ſo charitable to doe good workes, and to ſpende their money ſo well, they haue priſoners & poore men inough in the land, let them beſtowe their money of them. And as for mée, I doe promiſe them here by this preſent writing, and by the faith that I owe to Chriſt Jeſus, and by that fidelitie that I owe to my prince, that if they will bée bounde to our noble Prince, after the maner of hys lawe, and after good conſcience, and right, that they ſhall doe mée no vio-

I am now here what ſaye to you me.

Good counſayle geuen to the Byſhops.

lence, nor wronge, but diſcuſſe and diſpute theſe articles, and all other that I haue written, after the holy worde of God, and by Chriſtes holy ſcripture with mée. Then will I (as ſone as I may know it) preſent my ſelf vnto our moſt noble prince, there offring my ſelfe to his grace, that I will either proue theſe thinges by Gods worde againſt you all, or els I will ſuffer at his graces pleaſure. Whom the father of heauē preſerue in honour. Amen. And if you refuſe this condition, then ſay that you are neyther good, nor charitable. For I dare ſay you can deſire no more of a Chriſten man.

The xxiij. article. PRieſtes doe mumble, and roze out their Dyriges, and Maſſes in the Church and churchyardes, for theyr founders, curious to ſpeake theyr wordes diſtinctly. But I enſure them that their prayers ſhall doe them no good, but onely acceptatio diuina. As for this article, the Byſhops did not make much of, for they perceiued that it was gathered without any ſētence. For my saying was, that men ſhould make their prayers in ſuch a fayth, and with ſuch a deuotion, that God might accept them, and not ſo idlely, and without all deuotion bable, and ſay their dyriges, alonely of bondage and of cuſtome, and not of deuotion. I brought the ſaying of the Apoſtle for mée, which ſayth: Let your peti-Phil. 4. Iaco. 1. tions, and prayers appeare before God. And alſo hée that aſketh, let him aſke in faith, nothing doubting.

The xxiiij. article. THere is no prayer acceptable to God, except it bée fetched from the fyre of the aulter. This article was alſo gathered without any ſentence, for my aduerſaries did not greatly care what they made of ſuch articles as pertayned to learning, and edifi-ing. And therefore they neuer erred ſo much as they did in them. For in thoſe articles that were againſt the Byſhops, they did great diligence, & in a part of them gathered they my very true ſentences, and myne owne wordes. though in thoſe thinges they left out vncharitably, thoſe wordes that made for my declaration, and alſo for the probation of my ſaying, the which I haue alſo here lefte out, all onely adding the articles as thye laid them againſt mée, that all men may ſée ẏ worſt that they had againſt mée. For all men may thinke that they wil neither lay the beſt, nor yet the truth againſt mée. But this article dyd I thus preach: that men ſhould not in their peticiō and prayers, put to their good workes, nor their good dēdes, and their merites: As O Lord I doe faſte, I doe pray, I am no theiſe, I am in charitie with all the world, and for them deſire God to bée merciſull vnto them. But they ſhoulde deſire the father of heauen to bée merciſull vnto them, alonely for Chriſtes merites. For they were ẏ things wherby both wée, and our prayers are accepted in the ſight of the father. And to proue this I brought certayne Scriptures. As this: whatſoeuer yée ſhall aſke the father in my name, hée ſhall geue it you. And alſo the figure of ẏ old law, where there was no ſacrifice done, but with ẏ fire that was taken from the aulter. Now did I ſay, that Chriſt is our aulter. But thys myne aduerſaries vnderſtode not. But I maruayle what this article doth amonge the other hereticall articles? I thinke they doe not recken it hereſie.

The articles as euill as they were layd of myne aduerſaryes.

Iohn. 14.

The xxv. article. HEe did not praye for the thrée eſtates of holy Churche, neyther made hée his prayers in ẏ beginning of his ſermon, according to the olde cuſtome, but at the laſt ende, and for the true knowledge of all Chriſten men, making no prayer to our Lady, nor for the ſoules in gurgatory, nor for grace expedient. If the Byſhops had had any indifferency in them, or any charitie, they woulde haue bēne aſhamed that ſuch articles ſhoulde haue bēne brought afore thē. What is this to the purpoſe of hereſie, that I did not pray for the thrée eſtates of holy Church? And yet they graunt, that I prayde for all true Chriſtē mē, and that men might come to the true knowledge. Is not all the church contayned in this? But they bée vncharitable men, without all cōſideration, they

they bee so blinded in their worldly honour. That I did not pray to our Ladye, nor for the soules in purgatory, what is that to heresy? for then were the Apostles heretykes, for they did not pray in their sermons to our Lady, nor yet to ỳ soules in purgatorye. And as for praying for grace expedient, that is not the preacher bound to doe openly. But mee thinketh by these articles, that God gaue mée a greate grace, that I durst so boldelye reproue their abhominable liuing not fearing the daunger that should come thereof, but this I leue to other mens iudgement. And I dare boldelye say, ỳ if I had spoken tentymes asmuche against ỳ auctorite of our noble prince and agaynst all his noble dukes, and Lordes, & had taken all power, both spirituall and temporall from them, and geuen it to our idle byshops, then had I bene a faythfull christen man, for I had defended ỳ liberties of holy church. But god send them his grace, and space for to conuert. Amen.

Liberties of holye Churche may in wise bee impugned.

The whole disputation betweene the Byshops and Doctour Barnes.

NOw most honorable, & gracious Prince, here haue I shewed your grace the articles, that myne aduersaries vncharitablie, hath layd agaynst me. In the whiche though a greate many of my wordes, and sayinges were. Yet neuertheless there was left out all those things, that did make for my declaration, and for probations of my wordes, and also for mollifying, and temperatyng of those thinges, that seemed to bee somewhat hardly spokē, agaynst the Byshops. The whiche thinges were to longe to recite vnto your noble grace. But as God is my iudge, and also my conscience, and all my wordes, and déedes, and all maner of my liuyng, and conuersation, I did neuer intende, to speake agaynst the Byshops, or els any other man, further then their liuing, and conuersation were agaynst the blessed word of God, and the holy doctrine of Christes Churche. For the truth is, there was no great clerke in the Church of God this. CCCC. yeares, that wrote any thyng, but hee complained behemently agaynst the liuing of the spiritualtie. Let their bookes bée brought forth, to proue whether my saying be truth or not. Alas is it not a pituous case, yea and also agaynst all law and conscience, that I powre man shalbée thus violently cast away, for speaking agaynst these vices, that béene damned by almightie God: and by all hys holy creatures: yea and the Byshops them selues, and all the worlde must graunt that they doe liue as euill, yea and rather worse, then I did speake: Oh Lord God, where is loue to vertue: where is the shamefastnes that Christen men ought to haue: where is Justice: That I shalbée thus shamefully cast awaye, for speakyng of that thynge, that euery Christen man is bounde to speake: They doe so lyue, and I beyng a preacher of the verity, must bée condemned, for speakyng agaynst it.

All the auncient & learned fathers cry out vpō the pryde & lewde lyuyng of the Byshops.

But most gracious and mightie Prince, God hath set your grace in the same honour, and dignitie, that you by Gods ordinaunce, ought to defende those men, that are oppressed wrongfully. Wherefore humbly, and mékely, and with all lowlynes, & reuerence, I beséech your grace to minister vnto me gracious iustice, & let me bée heard indifferently, whether that I can iustifie my cause, with learnyng or not. If I can not iustifie it, your grace is a minister of iustice, I will refuse no maner of payne that shal bée due for my trāsgressiō. Wherefore ones agayne, with all mékenes, and lowlynes, in the way of charitie, and in Christes name, and for his swéete bloud sake, that bée hath shed for your grace, yea and also by ỳ ver-

In earnest petition made by Doctour Barnes.

tue of your auctoritie, that the heauēly God hath deliuered you, I doe require, and desire of your grace audience, and iustice. I and all my parētes bee your naturall subiectes borne, and a great many of vs hath dyed in your graces quarell and yet is there none of vs, but are ready to doe your grace that seruice, with our bodyes, & bloud that shall become trewe subiectes to doe, to their noble prince. Wherfore thyrdely, in my name, and in all our names (for al they are rebuked in me) with all meekenes & reuerence, I beseche your grace of gracious audience and of fauorable iustice. This thing I trust your grace will not denye me Nor yet take any displeasure with me your powre subiect, for thus requiring. For I haue none other prince, nor Lorde to seke vnto here on earth, but vnto your grace onelye. Nor can I come to any charitable ende with myne aduersaries. Wherefore I am compelled by extreme violence, thus to complayne vnto your grace, for my name, and fame, and estemacion, & all thinges that belong to an honest powre man in this world, is takē wrōgfully from mee hereby, and haue bene by ỳ space of .9. or 10. yeres (which is no smale tyme) compelled to liue in misery, and obloquy. Wherfore most gracious prince, lamentably I cry, & call vnto your grace, for gracious audience, & indifferent iustice. It were to long a processe to trobie your grace with, to tell all the vncharitable handlyng, that the Cardynall, and the byshops apoynted by hym, dyd vse with mee. But I wil make vnto your grace a short somme of it, as neare as I can call now to remembraunce.

1525. In the yeare of our Lorde. 1525. ỳ. 24. day of December, dyd I make a sermon, at the request of the parish in S. Edwardes church in Cambrige out of the which sermon dyd myne aduersaries gather these articles: which when I knew, I offered my selfe to preach agayne the sonday folowing. And to declare my selfe, and my meanyng clearely. But Doctour Rydley, and Doctour Preston, chaplens, and kynsmen to ỳ byshop of London fond the meanes, ỳ the Vicechaūcelour did inhibet me to preach. But I could neuer know any reasonable cause why, but that alonely hee sayde, it shoulde bee for my profyt to holde my peace. And with this I was so content. Tyll at the last, that these foresayd doctours with one maister Tyrell gathered in in writyng certayne articles, and presented them to the vicechauncelour, which sent for mee, and asked mee, what I sayd to those articles. I aunswered, that they were none of myne, But certayne wordes, and sentences there were in them, that I had spokē, but that was left out, ỳ should make for my declaratiō. Wherefore I sayd they were none of myne, And that I would bee reported by the audience. To this hee sayde, that I should take hede what I denied, for if they brought wytnes agaynst me, thē must I nedes dye. I aunswered, that the witnes shoulde bee false, for I neuer spake them. Then sayde hee, I could not proue a negatiue. I aunswered, that I woulde proue ỳ witnes false, what so euer hee were. Hee sayd, whether they were true or false, I must suffer for it, if witnes come in agaynst mee, for that was the lawe, I sayd, how ỳ was a piteous case, And by that lawe they might condemne our S. Christ. Hee sayd, how ỳ I shoulde remember mee what I did, for the matter was so daungerous, and so haynous in the lawe, that I might haue no counsell. Then I aunswered, & sayd, well, let god helpe, which knoweth all things. This was in the vniuersite scholes, the dores shut fast, no man being wt in on my parte, but I alone. But of my aduersaries parte, was there doctour Rydly, doctour watson, doctour Preston, and a doctour of law, whose name I haue forgotten, their was also one maister Foke, & mayster Tyrel which was appoynted amonge them, to bee the presenter of these articles.

Doct. Barnes inhibited of preachyng.

The Popish law is tyrannous.

Nowe the Vicechauncelour when hee coulde haue no more of mee, in cōmunication betweene vs, hee asked mee, what I would doe, I answered, hee should goe his way, and set hym downe, and heare their complaint,

and

And I would make such an aunswere as God should put in my mynde. Hée required mée instantly, not to cast my selfe away. So hée went and set hym downe, and I was called before him. As sone as I came, then stode forth M. Tyrell, & presented a roule, in the which were certayne articles (as hée sayd) gathered out of my sermon, of ỳ which some of them, sayde hée, were contentious, some were seditious, some were sklaunderous, and some were hereticall. When hée had thus spoken, Then sayd I to hym, Good M. Tyrell, wyll you present any of these articles as heresye? At this word spake ỳ vicechauncelour to mée, good maister doctour, let that passe. Wyll you bée content to submyt your selfe? Then sayd I where so euer I haue spoken against Gods word, or against the exposition of holy doctours, I will bée content to bée reformed, and to submyt my selfe. But with this was not doctour Rydlye, nor doctour watson content, except I should adde vnto it, If I had offended the lawes of the church. But at that I stopped, and sayde, it was to large, for I knewe not, what they ment by the lawes of the church, nor I was no doctour of lawe. Wherefore I iudged it sufficient for mée, to bée reported by Gods worde, & by the exposicion of holy doctours. For that was my facultie. Thẽ the Vicechauncellour rekened, that it was sufficiẽt for mée. But we could not agree in a great space, in this thing. Wherefore I sayd I wouldе agrée to all maner of lawes, ỳ were not gaynst Gods worde, nor S. Agustine nor S. Hierome, nor yet against none of the foure doctours. So did it rest ỳ day, at this poynt. and no more was handeled. For in this tyme was the whole body of ỳ vniuersitie gathered togither, and knocked at the schole dores, and said, they would heare the examination, seing the matter was manifest. And these few persõs should not take auctorite on them onely to here, and to determine such causes. Than the Vicechauncelour sent the bedell to the dore, requiring them to bée content, but they were the more moued, and knocked forer. So rose the Vicechauncelour, and went hym selfe to the dore, & gaue them as good and as faire words as hée coulde. But the conclusion was, they would not departe, except they might heare this matter iudged, and as they sayd, it apertained to learning. And they were the body of the vniuersitie. So ỳ Vicechauncelour came backe agayne vnto vs all, and sayde, wée must geue ouer this matter for the vniuersitie is in a rumour, & so departed wée a sunder.

Doctour Barnes is accused of contention, sedition and heresie.

The body of the Vniuersitie stirred vp.

Thẽ within two or thrée dayes after, was I cauled into Clare hall, to ỳ Vicechauncelours chamber, where were also the foresayde doctours, gathered agaynst mée. There did they entreate mée with good wordes for to bée cõtent to bee ordered after maister Vicechauncelours councell, I did require, that maister Vicechauncelour woulde indifferently heare mée, and myne aduersaries togither, And then if I had sayde any thing agaynst learning, I woulde bée ordered at maister Vicechaũcelours cõmaũdement. Thẽ sayd they, that it was done for my prayer, that maister Vicechaũcelour did not sit in iudgmẽt. For (as they sayd) they were all my frends, and woulde bée lothe that my matter shoulde bée heard in iudgemẽt. For if there came any witnes against mée (as they were sure there would) thẽ were I but lost. I aunswered, what witnes soeuer should come to proue those articles as they were layde against mée, I would proue them false. For I had preached openly, and many learned men were at my sermon, and I doubted not, but they would testify the truth for both partyes. But then aunswere was made mée, that if thre witnesses came agaynst mée, then would thrée and twenty not helpe mée, for that was ỳ course of the lawe. Then sayde I: This is a pitious case, ỳ a man shall not bée reported indifferently by his audience, seing it was in the Vniuersite. But by 2. or 3. false witnesses. Wherefore I woulde abide the daũger & let myne aduersaries doe their vttermost. If I shall thus dye, I must bée content (sayd I) I am no better then our master Christ. Then was there many wordes bred, and many daungerous wayes shewed mée, to haue withdrawen mée from this purpose, but I did stād fast in it. So they required mée to goe backe into a chāber, & they communed togither secretly alone. And at ẏ last they sent vnto mée the Vicechauncelour, which intreated mée very sore, to bée content with their ordinaunce. For by his cōscience hée could not perceiue, but they were all my frendes, and intended to saue both my name and fame, which they could not doe (the lawe was so daungerous) onles I would followe their counsell. Then asked I M. Vicechaūcelour, what they would that I should doe. For truely (said I) these articles were falsely, and vncharitably layde vnto mée. Hée aunswered, that there should bée no ieoperdy in ẏ matter, and therfore I should bée contēted to graunt thē. But vnto ẏ I would not agrée in any wise. Wherfore I desired hym to depart agayne vnto thē, and I would come, & make them a resonable aunswer, So came I in, making this protestation first.

I subtile, craftie, and popishe Chauncelour.

A protestation.

Right worshipful maisters, I trust you bée all my frendes, and haue so much charity in you, that you will not cast mé away, onles you perceiue a great faute, and obstinacy in mé, the which I trust you shall not fynde, for I did neuer intende, to speake, nor yet to doe, agaynst Christs holy doctrine. Notwithstanding, seing that ẏ lawe is so daungerous, as M. Vicechauncelour, and you haue tolde mé: Therfore I had rather put my selfe vnto your charitie, then to stande to ẏ daunger of the lawe. And for this purpose two of these articles that be layd vnto mé thus I aunswer.

D. Barnes answere to the articles alleaged against him.

These articles as they doe here stande, were neuer mine nor I neuer intended to speake them, as they bee here written. But neuertheles I doe graunt, ẏ here bée many of my wordes and also a great many of my sētēces ẏ I did speake. Wherfore I doe submit my self vnto you, desiring you charitably to deale wt mé, & not to take my wordes to ẏ worst sence. Then made they mé to bée sworne, to stande to ẏ Vicechauncelours determination. At that I stopped a great while, but at ẏ last I graunted to abide his determinatiō, if it were not agaynst learning and charitie. And vpon this the Vicechauncelour asloyed mé, as they said Ab excōmunicacione iuris. Now had they there standing vnknowen vnto mé, a notary, which did make an instrument of all my agrémentes. For I did not know, but ẏ they dealt with mé as frendes, and as priuate persons. And this instrument made by the notary, was afterward prēsēted vnto the court, for witnes against mé, when I was brought bēfore the byshops. And as we were thus talking in ẏ Vicechauncelours chamber, The Vniuersitie gathered togither, so that ẏ bodye of ẏ Vniuersitie was there. And then sent they vp certayne mayskers, and bachelours of diuinity to ẏ Vicechauncelour, requiring him that they myght bée admytted to bere the examination of mé, in as muth as they had heard mé preach. Aunswere was made agayne, that there was no suche matter in hand, but that they did deale with mé frendlye, to deuise an ende moste to my profite. By the reason of the which congregation, we were compelled to departe a sonder, as for that tyme. And so rested ẏ matter still, the space of a moneth. In the which tyme, doctour watson, and doctour Preston, at the agrément of the Vicechauncelour, wente & wrote a reuocation, and made it of euery article by it selfe, making me in the reuocation to graunt ẏ articles, as they were layde againſt mé. Addyng also to euery article, that bécause some men had so vnderstode mé, therefore I should reuoke the article, as in the fyrst article, where I had sayde, after the mynde of S. Hierome, ẏ all dayes were of lyke vertue. They added, ẏ certaine men did take mé, ẏ I would haue no holy dayes. And therefore I must reuoke that article as heresye.

Note here the craftie and wily Foxes.

Note here the most false and deuilishe practise of the popishe cleargie.

Item where I had spoken in myne articles agaynst the gorgious pompe. and pride of spirituall ornamentes. They did adde, ẏ certayne men dyd take out of my sayinge, that I would haue no halowed chalices, nor vestimentes, nor yet any ornamentes in ỳ church, And therefore I must reuoke that article, as heresy. And so in euery one of my articles where they coulde erpounde a word to an euell sentence or els of malice, make any mischeuous, or seditious saying, that layd they to mée, & would haue me reuoke it, as though it had bœne my saying, and meaning. So there was neuer an article, but that was either hereticall, seditious, contentious, blasphemous or els, pys auribus offensiuus.

take

God to helpe his true preachers stryreth vp some good men.

Moreouer, I had in ỳ same place a good frende, the which wrote the same reuocation priuely, as fast for mée as hée did wright it for doctour Preston. The which man is yet aliue. Nowe when I had this thing in wryting, I cauled into my chambre, an eyght, or tenne, of ỳ best learned men, ỳ were in Cambryge, the which hée yet aliue, as farre as I know, sauing master George Stafforde, and master Bylney. Of all these I asked their counsell, what they thought best to doe, seing this reuocation was so vncharitably made, and thinges falsly layde vnto my charge, which were not in myne articles, nor yet could hée charitably taken out of them. They also concluded, that it was neither right nor conscience, that I should agrée to this reuocation. Wherefore afterward when the Vicechauncelour called me agayne afore doctour Rydley, doctour watson, doctour Preston and master Tyrell, and deliuered mée this reuocation in his chambre, which I should rede openly ỳ sonday following in S. Edwardes church, and should saye neyther more nor lesse, then was therin writen. Yea and should also promyse, that if I were afterward called forth by any hygher power spirituall, to bée content, and suffer all payne, & punyshment, that hée or they shoulde lay vnto mée, Then would I not agrée in no wise to this determination, nor consent to these condicions. For they were neyther agreeable to learning nor yet standing with charitie.

O cruell & mercyleſſe Papiſtes.

There were certayne articles condemned for heresie, that were as true as S. Johns Gospell. And charity would not, that I should bée blamed for that thing, that I neuer spake, nor thought, but alonely malicious persons dyd take out of my sayinges false meaninges. Wherefore here was a greate tragedy among thē. For some sayde, that I was periured, by ỳ reason I was sworne to abide the determination of ỳ Vicechauncelour. And the other parte rekened, that my oth bound mée not, by the reason that it was so vncharitably made, the which was not their promyse to doe: Yea ỳ Vicechauncelour hym selfe, thought it to extreme. So ỳ after many words ỳ the cōgregation of them was dissolued, and I should make an aunswere within eyght dayes, what I would do Now in the meane season, did master Tyrell ride to London, and founde ỳ meanes (by the reason that hée could not obtayne his mynd in the Vniuersitie, for I sayd I would appeale from the vicechauncelour, to ỳ whole body of the Vniuersitie) that the Cardinal sent downe doctour Capon, and a sergeant of armes, called Gybsō, which did arest mée in the Vniuersitie, for to appere before your graces counsell. So was I brought vp to London, ỳ Tuesday afore shroue Sondaye, and on the wedensday at night after was I brought afore the Cardinall in hys gallery at westmynster, which toke & red all my articles quietly, tyl he came to the 6. There hé stopped and asked mée, if a byshop might haue any more Cities thē one. I aunswered, ỳ a Byshop was instituted to instruct, and teach the Cytie, & therfore hé might haue as much vnderneth him, as hé were able to preach and teach to, And to that mée thought S. Paule did agrée commaūdyng Timothe to set in euery Cytie a Byshop. Wherefore I knew none other order but this.

Barnes arested by a Sergeaunt of armes.

Then sayde hé: That in Paules dayes, a Citie was 6. or 7. myles long, beside the subburbes and of that whole Cytye, was there but one Byshop. So likewise now, a byshop had but one Cathedrall see, and all the residue of the countrey, were as subburbes vnto it. To this I sayde nothyng, for hée woulde heare mée no more, but returned and read forth ẏ articles, till that he came to the xrij. articles, where hée founde his pyllers, and his pollaxes. And there hée stopped, and had a great disputation with mée of them, as I haue written afore in my articles. So at ẏ last wée came so farre, that I sayde, how these articles were vncharitably gathered out of my Sermonde. Than hée sayd, you are defamed of heresie. I answered, and sayde: I trust there is no god mã that knoweth me, which will suspect mée. Hée sayde, doe not you knowe that there is a rumour, how that you bée brought afore vs for heresie? I aunswered, that rumour is scattered by mine aduersaries of malice, and not of any occasion that I haue geuẽ. He sayd, I beléeue that to bée true, but how will you purge your selfe: I answered, I wyll bée bounde to bryng vnto your grace xx. honest men, and well learned, of good name and fame, that shall depose for mée, how that I am not worthy of this infamy. Then hée sayde, can you bring mée vi. or x. doctours of diuinitie, that wil sweare for you, that you are neyther giltie, nor yet worthy to bée suspected? I aunswered, that it was not possible to bryng so many Doctours for mée, seeing there were no more but two at my Sermonde, and they belonged both to Byshops. Wherefore I supposed they woulde not testifie wyth mée: But I woulde bryng as many honest men, as shoulde bée required, and they shoulde bée as well learned, and better then I, for to testifie wyth mée. But he sayde, that woulde not helpe, for they must bée my péeres, after ẏ forme of the law. I sayd, ẏ was impossible. Then sayd hée, you must bée burned. I answered, that I trusted to haue more grace, and fauour at hys hand. Hée sayde, hée was sworne to mayntayne the lawes of ẏ church, and therfore hée must follow ẏ forme of the lawe. Wherefore I shoulde take deliberation with my selfe, whether I woulde stande to the course of the lawe, or els submit my selfe to his grace.

Cardinall greatly delighted and esteemed his crosses and pollaxes.

Nothyng els.

Now because I had once submitted my selfe to the Vicechaunceiour, and I was thereby circumuented: Therefore, I thought I would now not bée so hasty in submitting my self: And therefore I aunswered, that I woulde submit my selfe to his grace, in any thing that coulde be proued agaynst mée, that I had spoken, contrary to learning. He sayd, that this was no submission. And I woulde graunt no more. So after much communication, hée concluded wyth mée, & sayd, how that I was but a fole, & coulde not perceiue, how good hée was vnto mée. Wherefore séeing that I woulde bée reported by my déedes, therefore hée had signed rb. or rbi. Doctoures (sayde hée) the which shoulde ẏ nexte day heare mée. And so the nexte day, which was on the Thursday before Festigam Sonday, was I brought into the Chapterhouse of Westminster, where sate ẏ Byshop of Bathe, as principall iudge, and the Byshop of saint Asse, the Abbot of Westminster, the Abbot of Burye, Doctour Quarton, Doctour Allen, Doctour Stephen then secretary, with many moe, which I knew not. Then sayd the Byshop of Bathe: Syr you are defamed of heresie: but I denyed the same. Hée sayde, yée doe sée what a multitude of people here is gathered to heare your examination, whiche must rise of some fame? I sayde, that I knewe no cause of that gathering, for I knewe neuer a man there, nor brought any man wyth mée, sauing a childe of xij. yeares.

The maner of the examinatiõ at Westminster.

Than sayde hée, Dyd you neuer heare of any man, that you were accused of heresie? Than sayde I, Men may say their pleasures, I can not let them, but it is no matter to mée as long as I am faultles.

Then sayde hée, wée doe beléeue that you are faultles, but yet you must purge your selfe, and declare your innocency. I answered, to that I was content, and woulde bée reported by all men that euer knew mée, or heard mée. Well sayde hée, that is wel said. Now sayde hée, bée there certayne articles deliuered vnto vs, agaynst you, what

what say you to these? My desire was to know myne accusers. May sayde hée, wée procéede after an other forme of the lawe, wherefore, what say you to these articles? I aunswered, that they were vncharitably gathered agaynst mée, wherefore I did deliuer certayne articles into the court, subscribed with mine owne hande. As sone as they had them, than had they what they woulde, for I was nowe come in further daunger, then I wist of, for now must I néedes purge my selfe after their request, or els reuoke all thinges that they had laide against mée, as though they had béene myne, or els I must néedes dye, after their lawe. The which thyng I than neyther knew, nor suspected, And thys hath béene the cause, that all maner of men, whatsoeuer they were that came afore them, were they neuer so good, nor innocent, must néedes bée heretykes, if they were not good vnto them, the which they were seldome, as their déedes hath declared.

Here ye may note the crafty iuggelyng of the Papistes.

The more innocēt the sooner trapped and condemned among the Papistes.

But to come to our purpose, they enquired diuers questions of mée, nothing perteyning vnto mine articles: As whether a man might sweare or not? And whether my Lord Cardinall were myne ordinarye iudge or not, wyth other lyke captious interogations, at the last they came to my first article, and inquyred of mée, if all dayes were alyke. I sayde, after the mynde of S. Hierome, that all dayes were equall. Then asked they mée, if wée shoulde kéepe any holy dayes? I sayde, yes. And in this matter wée had a great disputation, till at the last my Lord of Rochester came. And hée asked mée if this commaundement, Sabatum sanctifices, were a ceremoniall, or a morall precepte? I answered, that it was a ceremoniall, alleaging for mée S. Augustine. Thā sayd hée, that I was not learned. But alwayes when they had asked of mée a question, and I had assoyled it, so that they neyther woulde, nor coulde obiecte any thyng agaynst mée, than was I commaūded alwayes to stand a parte. And they layde their heades togither, till they had inuented an other captious question. Than was I called agayne, and myne answere geuen, I was cōmaunded backe agayn. Thus they continued with me thrée dayes, in the which space their Notary wrote a reuocation of all my articles, before the tyme that myne aunswere was heard. And on the thyrde day after none, about iij. of ỳ clocke, was there a greate long rolle offered vnto me for to read word by word as it there stode, and commaundement was geuen me by ỳ Bysshop of Bath. that I should not speake one word afore the people, more or lesse, thē was written in the rolle, for if I did, hée would handle me well inough. So I required first to sée what was writtē in the rolle, or I would graūt vnto it. Aunswere was made, that if I would read it as it was written, well ⁊ good, if not, I should stand to the ieoperdy. So I desired them to know, if they had condemned any of my articles for heresie.

Epist. c. xix

They sayd, yea. I asked thē which it was. They sayd they would not tell me more, then was writtē. I aunswered, Alas my Lordes, ỳ truth is, that to my iudgement I haue spoken nothyng, but that standeth with S. Augustine, with S. Hierome, and with other Doctours of holye Churche. Wherfore if it shall chaunce me thus to bée cōdēned, and not to bée taught: wherein, I can not tell what I should preach in tyme to come. The Bysshop of Bathe aunswered, that I shoulde take no care for that, for as for preachyng hée would prouide for me. But I should alonly aunswere, if I would read this rolle, or not. I desired that they would first pointe with their finger (if they wold not speake it) which article they had condemned for heresie, and I would bée bounde to proue it true by S. Augustine, or els by S. Hierome, or I would bée takē for an heresticke. To this said the Bysshop of Bathe, that if S. Augustine, and S. Hierome were here, they should stād to the determination of the Church. Vnto whom I sayd, that the Church had so determined of S. Augustine, ⁊ S. Hierome, that if any other church determined agaynst them, I would suspect it. Well sayth hée. If you will stand vnto them, doe. We are contẽt, alonely tell vs whether you will read this rolle or not.

Then sayd I. My Lordes, I beseech you in the way of charitie, and for Christes sake, deale charitablye with me, & doe me no wrong. For S. Paule sayeth, that you haue power geuen, to edifyng, and not to destruction. Very well, sayd the Byshop of Bath, ye nede not to feare. Yere bée to many witnesses, that we should oppresse you wrongfully. But sayd hée, tell vs whether you will read this rolle or not? This is the third tyme, & the last. Then sayd I. I will not graũt to it, except I may first sée it. Doe as it shall please you. At this they sat all still, wone loking on the other. Then the Bishop of Bath commaunded me to departe aside. So toke they their counsell togithers. And at the last I was called agayne, and this was sayd to me. Syr ye shall haue a man, that shall read it vnto you afore. Well said I. I am content. And so one of their Notaries, a lay mã, was assigned vnto me, and we departed a litle aside, & there hée began to read. The yeare of our Lord, such a day of the moneth, was one Doct. Barnes conuented before the byshops in Westminster, for certeine articles, which were gathered out of a Sermonde, that hée preached in Cambridge, of the whiche, some of them bée sclaunderous, some bée erronious, some bée contentious, some bée seditious, some bée folishe, and some bée hereticall. When that hée came to this worde hereticall. I asked hym, which of them were hereticall? Hée answered mée agayne, yée haue heard what my Lordes sayth. I can make you no answere.

Note here the tyranny of the Papistes.

Alas sayd I, shall I bée thus condẽned for an hereticke, and can not tell what is myne heresie? Then sayd hée, it belongeth not to me, speake vnto them. Well said I. Read no more. So went I agayne before the Byshops. And fell downe on my knées, and desired them for the better passion of Christ, that they would shewe vnto me, whiche article they condemned for heresie, and then if I would not bée taught, they should handle me after the forme of law. But to this the Byshop of Bath aũswered, & sayd, I should chose whether I would read ẏ rolle, or els bée burned: ẏ one of both I should doe. Thẽ sayd I, Jesus haue mercy on me, I wil surely not read it. And so I deliuered it to them againe.

That was the last.

Then the other Doctours cryed vppon me, the one here, the other there, that I shoulde remember my selfe, and not to cast my selfe awaye after this manner. For to read the rolle, said they, was but a small thing, and I was neuer the worse mã. And I should sée that my Lord Cardinall should bée good, & gracious vnto me, and they would all speake for me, so that I supposed in very déede, that they would haue required no more of me, but for to haue read the rolle afore ẏ face of the world, that I should not séeme to haue the victory agaynst them all, which thing I did not greatly regarde. But in very déede, and if I had knowen, that there had bene so mischieuous poyson, tyranny, and cruelnes, in them, as I founde afterward. I would neuer haue read it, to haue dyed for it. But God bryngeth all thinges to passe at his pleasure.

Grace without deseruyng.

Now vpon this opinion that I had in them, and by the reason of they good wordes and pitnous, that they spake vnto mée. I graunted to reade the rolle. But than when I woulde haue read it, the Byshoppe of Bathe sayd, it was to late. so was there a great disputation betwéene them, vppon the matter: Till that Doctour Quarton sayd, my Lorde it is not to late, for it is all in one session, and in the tyme of one iudgement. But the Byshop of Bathe (our Lord forgeue him) sought all ẏ meanes ẏ hée could, & vsed all maner of cruelnes to haue destroyed mée. Neuertheles, at ẏ last hée deliuered mée ẏ rolle for to reade. Thẽ was all ẏ people ẏ stode there, called to heare me. For in ẏ other iij. dayes, was there no man suffered to heare one worde that I spake. So after their commaundement that was geuen mée, I red it, adding nothing to it, nor saying one word, that might make for myne excuse, supposing that I should haue founde the Bysshoppes the better.

to

Note here what crossing & tossing ỳ Papistes vse.

After this, I was commaunded to subscribe to it, & to make a crosse on it. Then was I commaunded to goe knéele downe before the Bysshop of Bathe, and to require absolution of hym, but hée woulde not assoyle mée, except I woulde first sweare, that I woulde fulfill the penaunce, that hée shoulde enioyne to mée. So did I sweare, not yet suspectinge, but these men had had some crumme of charitie within them. But when I had sworne, then enioyned hée mée, that I should returne that nyght agayne to pryson. And the nexte day, which was Fastingam Sonday, I should doe open penaunce at Paules. And that the worlde shoulde thynke that I was a marueylous haynous heretyke, the Cardinall came the next day with all ỳ pompe and pride, that hée could make to Paules church, and all to bring mée poore soule out of consayte, And moreouer were there commaunded to come all ỳ bysshops, that were at London, and all the abbots dwelling in London, that dyd weare miters, in so much that the prior of S. Mary spittell, and an other moncke, which I thinke was of Tower hill, were there also in their myters.

And to set the matter more forth, & that the world should perfectly know & perceiue, that the spirituall fathers had determined my matter substancially, The bysshop of Rochester must preach there the same day, and all his sermon was agaynst Lutherians as though they had cõuicted me for one: The which of truth, and afore God, was as farre from those thinges as any man could bée, sauing that I was no tyrãt, nor no persecutour of Gods worde. And all this gorgyous fasing with myters and crosstaues, abbotts, and priors were done, but to blinde the people, and to outface mée. God amend all thinges that is amysse. I had béene well content to haue suffered all these thinges, so I might haue come to a charitable end. But I must returne agayne after this to prison, & there remayne, tyll my Lord Cardinals farther pleasure. The which pleasure, I did abide first and last, 2. yeares, and thrée quarters & yet could neuer bée at any poynt with thẽ. For I sent vnto ỳ bysshop of London that was then, certayne worshipfull men of the Cyty of Lõdon, whose names bée these. Mayster Lambert, which hath béene Maior, M. Raynold, which hath béene shreue, M. Palmer, M. Petyt, M. Jones, and M. Pernell. And desyred these men in the way of charitie, to goe to the Bysshop of London, and to desire him to bée good and gracious vnto mée. And if I had offended, I would bée glad to make amends, asmuch as hée should reasonably require of mée. Desiring hym to shew thẽ, what hée would of his charitie require me to doe, & they for to bée bound vnto hym, ỳ I would kéepe it.

The Cardinall had put the matter to hym.

This they dyd. But what aunswer ỳ they had of hym, they bée men aliue for the most part, they can tell. And amongst all other, maister Petit sayd vnto the bysshop: Alas my Lorde it is a petuous case. If a man come in the daunger of your lawe, there is no remedy to helpe hym out. Yes sayde the bysshop. What is that sayd maister Petyt: This is a yong man, & hath good frendes, which would bée right lothe to haue him cast away. wherefore if there bée any remedy, deuise you it, and we will bée bound for him. At this the bysshop was astonyed, and sayde at the last, that hée would speake to my Lorde Cardinal for mée. Then these mẽ offered him to goe with him and to bée bounde for mée. Hée sayde it should not néede: But neuertheles hée spake so vnto them, or they departed, that whẽ they came home, there was not one of them, that durst geue mée so much bread & meat as hée durst geue his dog, nor yet speake one word to mée. Immediatelye after this, the bysshop founde ỳ meanes, that I was sent to Northãpton, there to remayne as in a perpetuall prison.

The glorious assembly of the papistes.

God saue me from such speaking.

Thus most gracious prince haue they handled me your poore Orator. I beseche your highnes, to bée good and gracious vnto mæ; & iudge, if this bæ charitable dealyng, thus to cõdemne mæ for an hereticke & not to shew mæ the poynt wherefore. But euen with a violent tyrannye, to compell mæ to doe, & confesse what they will, or els to bæ put to death. And if there bæ any of them yet, ỹ will come forth, and proue any of these articles heresye, I will not refuse to suffer any payne, that your grace shall iudge me worthy. Thus our Lord Iesus Christe preserue your noble grace euermore Amen.

Onely fayth iustifieth before God.

NOw, if your grace doe not take vppon you, to heare the disputation, & the probation of this article out of the ground of the holy Scripture, my Lordes the Bishops will condẽne it, afore they read it, as their maner is to doe with all thynges, that pleaseth them not, and which they vnderstand not: and then crye they, heresy, heresie, an hereticke, an hereticke, bæ ought not to bæ heard, for his matters bæ condemned by the Church, & by his holy fathers, and by all long customes, and by all maner of lawes.

Vnto whom, with your graces fauour, I make this aũswere. I would know of them, if all these things, that they haue reckened, can ouercome Christ, and his holy worde, or set the holy ghost to schole? And if they can not, why should not I then bæ heard: that doe require it in the name of Christ: and also bryng for me his holy worde, & the holy fathers, which haue vnderstand Gods worde as I doe: Therfore though they will not heare me, yet must they nædes heare them. In holy Scripture, Christ is nothing els, but a Sauiour, a redæmer, a iustifier, & a perfect peace maker, betwene God, and man. This testimony dyd ỹ aungell geue of him in these wordes. Math.1. Hæ shall saue his people from theyr sinnes. 1.Cor.1. And also S. Paule, Christ is made our righteousnes, our satisfaction, and our redemption. Esay.53. Moreouer the Prophet witnesseth the same, saying: For the wretchednes of my people, haue I striken him. So that here haue we Christ with his properties.

Now, if we will truly cõfesse Christ, then must we graũt with our hartes, that Christ is all our iustice, all our redemption, all our wisedoms, all our holynes, all alonely the purchaser of grace, alonly ỹ peace maker betwæne God and man. Briefely all gwones that we haue, ỹ it is of hym, by him, and for his sake onely. And that we haue nædе of nothyng towardes our saluation, but of hym onely, and wæ desire no other saluatiõ, nor no other satisfactiõ, nor any helpe of any other creature, eyther heauenly or earthly, but of him onely, for as Saint Peter sayth, there is no other name geuen vnto men, wherein they must bæ saued. Actes.4. And also S. Paule sayth, by hym are all that belæue iustified from all thynges. Actes.13. Moreouer S. John witnesseth the same, in these wordes. Hæ it is, that hath obtained grace for our sinnes. 1.Iohn.2. And in an other place. He sent his sonne to make agrement, for our sinnes. 1.Iohn.4.

Christ is all in all.

Now my Lordes, here haue you Christ, and his very nature full, and whole. And bæ ỹ denyeth any thyng, or any part of these thyngs, or taketh any part of them, & applyeth them, or geueth ỹ glory of thẽ to any other person, then to Christ onely, the same mã robbeth Christ of his honour, and denyeth Christ, and is very Antichrist. Wherfore my Lordes, first what say you to this? and vnto the propertyes of Christ? If you graunt them, thẽ are we at a poynte. For they proue that fayth in Iesus Christ, onely iustifieth afore God. Secondarily, if you denye it (as I am sure you will, for you had leuer deny your Crædе, thẽ graũt it.)

How

How can you thé auoyde, but that you bée the very Antichristes of whō S. John speaketh? For now haue we tryed your spirites, that they bée not of God, for you deny Christ. That is, you deny the very nature, & the propertie of Christ. You graunt ý name, but you deny the vertue. You graunt that hé descended from heauen, but you deny the profite thereof. For hé descended for our health, this denye you, and yet it is your Créde. You graunt, that hé was borne, but you denye the purpose. You graunt, that he is risen frō death but you deny the profit therof for hé rose to iustifie vs. You graūt, that hé is a Sauiour, but you deny, that he is alonely ý sauiour. I pray you wherfore was hé borne? to iustifie vs in part? to redéme vs in part? to doe satisfaction for part of our sinnes? so ý we must set a payr of old shoes, a lompe of bread, & chese, or a louse gray coate to make satisfactiō, for ý other part? Say what you will, if you gene not all, and fully, & alonely to one Christ, thē deny you Christ, and the holy ghost. And S. John doth declare you to bée contrary to Christ. This may also bée proued by a playne Scripture of the holy ghost, which is this. No man in heauen, nor in earth, neither vnder the earth, was able to open the boke, or to loke on ý boke, till the lambe came, vnto whom the seniours spake, on this maner. Thou art worthy to take ý boke, & to open the seales therof, for thou wast killed, and hast redéemed vs by thy bloud.

1. Iohn. 4.

The Papistes denying onely fayth to iustifie denye the nature of Christ.

Apoc. 5.

How say you to this my Lordes? In heauen was there none founde, neither by the aungels, nor yet by the seniours worthy to open the boke, but Christ onely. And will you finde, that they could not finde? will you set an helper to Christ, whō they set alone? But I pray you tel vs what hé shall bée. All the world knoweth, that they bée good workes. But now, from whēce come your good workes? whether from heauen? or out of the earth? or frō vnder the earth? If they were in any of these places, where were they when the aungels, and the seniours sought them? Haue you founde them? whom they could not finde? but let this passe. I praye you, what will you lay for your good workes? or by what title will you bring them in, to ioyne them with the lābe in openyng of the boke? The seniours haue layd for them, that the lābe alonely was worthy to opē the boke, because hé was slayne, and redéemed them with his precious bloud. Now what cause laye you for your good workes? The lābe hath alonely dyed for vs? The lambe hath alonely shed his bloud for vs? The lambe hath alonly redéemed vs? These things hath hé done alone? Now if these bé sufficient? then hath hé alone made satisfaction, and is alonely worthy to be our redéemer, and iustifier.

Christ one ý hath wrought our redēption.

Christ is our onely redemer & iustifier.

Moreouer, they that bé in heauen confesse, that this lambe is alonely worthy to redéme them. Bé your workes better then theirs? or cā your workes helpe them? If they can? then is not the lambe alonely worthy to redéme them. Moreouer, the seniours fall downe before the lambe, geuyng him alonely prayse. And shall your good workes stande vp by the lambe? Then bé they better then the seniours. But let vs proue this thyng by open Scriptures. S. Paule toke so great labours to proue this article, as hé neuer toke in any other, & all because hé would make it playne, and stoppe the mouthes of the agaynesayers. But all this will not helpe them, that haue not the spirite of God. Neuertheles, we will by Gods fauour, doe the best we can to confounde the crooked enemyes of Christes bloud, & thoughe we can not make them his frendes, yet at the lest we will so handle them, that they shall bée ashamed openly so to speake agaynst him, as they haue done longe tyme, and so will we handle them (by Gods helpe) that all the world shal know, that they glory in Christes name, and by hym bé they also so high promoted in this worlde, that they can not bé higher, And yet deserue they of Christ, worst of all men.

But let vs goe to our purpose. S. Paule sayth: All men bé sinners, and want

wante the glory of God, but they are Roma.3. iustified frely by his grace, thorough the redemption that is in Christ Jesu. What is this that all men haue sinned, yea and are iustified frely?
How shall a sinner doe good workes?
How can he deserue to be iustified?
what call you frely? if there be any deseruing lesse or more, then is it not frely. What call you by his grace? if it be any part of workes, then it is not Roma.11. of grace. For as Saint Paule sayth:
Then grace were not grace. Here can be no euasion, the wordes be so playne. If you bring in any helpe of workes, then for so much is not our redẽption frely, nor yet is it of grace, as concerning the part that commeth of workes, but partly of workes, and then doe you destroy all Saint Paule Faith with out workes iustifieth. and his whole disputation. For he contendeth agaynst workes, & cleare-ly excludeth workes in iustification, and bryngeth in grace onely. Nowe, that that is excluded in the whole by contention, can not be brought in, in parte to the cause. This is open in his wordes, where he sayth: Where is now thy reioysing? It is excluded.
By what lawe? by the lawe of work-es? Nay, but by the lawe of fayth.
We doe iudge therfore, that a man is iustified by fayth, without ẏ workes Roma.3. of the lawe. Heare you not, that the gloriation of workes is excluded? and yet will you boaste your workes?
Heare you not playnely S. Paules sentence, that iudgeth clearely wyth fayth, and agaynst all workes? How can this be auoyded?
Is it not cleare? What can be aunswere to it? Is not thys Paules proposition, that he toke to proue, faith onely iustifieth? It were but lost labour for Paule to proue that workes did helpe to iustification, For that the Iewes did graunt, and required no more, but that workes might not be clearely excluded. They were Christened, and content to receiue Christ for their sauiour, but not onely, and alonely. This was the contentation.
In so much that they glorȳed agaynst the Gentiles, which had no maner of workes, and for that dispised them, as people vnworthy to be iustified.

But paraduenture here wyll be sayde, that Paule condemneth the workes of the olde lawe, but not the workes of the newe lawe. Are you nowe satisfied in your conscience?
Thinke you, that you haue well as-soyled S. Paules argumẽt? Thinke you, that this is sufficient to auoyde Saint Paule, that hath take so great labour to proue this cause? Thinke you, that you shall be thus discharged afore God? If you doe, then goe boldly into the straite iudgement of God with this euasion, and doubt you not but there shall you finde S. Paule as stifly and as strongly against you, and your newe workes, as euer he was agaynst the Iewes, and they? olde workes: And if he did condemne the workes of the law, that were instituted by the mouth of God, and the best workes that euer were? Thinke you that those workes that you haue in-uented, shalbe there alowed?

A crafty & subtile cauasion.

Briefely, what workes can you doe, or excogitate (that be good) which be not in the olde lawe? and of the olde lawe? Ergo, he speaketh of all maner of workes, for the lawe inclu-deth all workes that euer God instituted. The highest, and the best, and most of perfection of all workes be,
Opera decalogi, the workes of the ten Commaundementes. And these be the workes of the olde lawe, and can not iustifie, after your owne saying.
Nowe what workes haue you of the newe lawe, other then these? or better then these? Our mayster Christ sheweth, that in fulfilling ẏ. of these Commaundementes, be all workes included. What workes then be of the newe lawe, that were not commaunded in the olde? Paraduenture you will say: All those workes that Christ speaketh of in the v. of Math.
be of the newe lawe, and not of the olde. For Christ sayth, I say vnto you: He that calleth his brother fole, or that loketh on a woman to desire her, and such like, doth offend. These seme to be workes of Christ, and not of Moyses. Ergo, there be workes of the newe lawe, that were not cõ-

All good workes are contey-ned in the law of God

maunded

maunded in the olde, and against thē disputeth not S. Paule, say yē.

To this I aunswere that our maister Christ doth there reproue ẏ false interpretation, that the Scribes and Pharysies did set to the lawe, but hē teacheth no newe workes, nor is no geuer of any newe lawe. For Saint John sayth: The lawe is geuen thorough Moyses, but grace and veritie came by Jesus Christ. Hē is the gēuer of grace and mercy, as all the prophetes testifieth, and not an other Moyses. And therfore to purchace vs fauour, hē dyed on the crosse, and so did not Moyses: But hē commaundeth vs to doe this, and doe that. But Christ sayth, hange thou on my doing, & beleeue thou, that I haue done for thē, for thē, and not for mē.

John. 1.

Christ suffered for our sinnes.

Now to our purpose, Christ I say doth interprete, and declare the olde lawe agaynst the Scribes and Pharyses, which learned, that the lawe was fulfilled and content wyth outwarde workes, and that was their iustification. This false doctrine doth our mayster Christ reproue: And sayth, that the lawe doth require a pure and a cleane hart, and will haue hys workes fulfilled out of the hart, and not alonely wyth hand, and fēte, and tothe, and nayle, as the Pharyses sayth, and teacheth. So that our mayster Christ teacheth no new workes, but alonely exposseth the vertue of the olde lawe. And thus doth holy Doctours declare this v. chapiter of Math. and specially S. Augustine. Wherfore out of that place cā not hē proued, that there hē certayne workes of the new law, that were neuer commaunded in the olde.

August. in ser. Domini de monte. Exod. xx. & Leuit. xix.

Moreouer, looke in the olde lawe whether these thinges hē forbidden, or commaunded, and you shall finde that the wordes of the law, and Christes exposition doth agrē. So that our mayster teacheth no newe thyng, nor yet any newe workes. But now graunt, that there hē certayne workes of the new lawe, which hē not of the olde: yet haue you not, nor cā not proue that those shall iustifie: For there can hē no more goodnesse in workes, then were in workes of the olde lawe, for they were to Gods honour, and to the profite of our neighbour. What goodnes can works haue more? And yet you graunt, that they can not iustifie. How then shall your newe workes iustifie? Blessed Saint Paule disputeth agaynst them that were Christened, and had both workes of the olde lawe, and also of the newe. And yet concludeth hē, that Christ alonely was their iustifier. Marke his argument, if righteousnes cōmeth of the law, then is Christ dead in vayne: As hē would say: if the lawe helpe to iustifie (for that was the opinion of the Jewes) then is not Christ alonely your iustifier. If hē be not your iustifier alonely, then is hē dead in vayne. How will S. Paule proue this consequent? On this maner: Eyther Christ doth thys thyng alone, or els hē is dead in vayne, for hē will haue no helper. Thys must nēdes hē the meaning of hys argument there.

What goodnes is in good workes.

Galat. 2.

Now will I take this argument of S. Paule, and likewise dispute agaynst your newe workes. If newe workes doe helpe to iustifie, then is Christ deade in vayne. But Christ is not dead in vayne. Ergo new workes doe not helpe to iustify. The first part is Paules, The second you graunt. Therfore the third must nēdes folow But let vs sē how S. Paule proueth this proposition by an example, not of the olde lawe as though hē disputed alonely agaynst the works of the ould lawe, But by that holy and excellent Patriarch Abraham, whō no maner of workes coulde iustifye, but fayth onely. Thynke you ẏ S. Paule doth speake here of the workes of the ould lawe? nay doubtles. For how could Abrahā doe ẏ works of lawe, & there was no lawe geuē. 400. & 30. yeares after? wherefore S. Paule constrayneth you to conclude, that no maner of good workes, (though they hē soe good as Abrahams workes) can helpe to iustificacion.

Rom. 4.

Galat. 3.

Note also S. Paules argument. Abrahā was iustified so many yeares before ẏ lawe was geuen. Ergo (saith hée) the lawe doth not iustifie. So like wise dispute I agaynst your newe workes. Men were sufficiently, and perfectly iustifyed alonely by fayth, afore any new workes were geuen, or preached. Ergo, the workes of ỳ new lawe doth not iustifie of necessitie. The anticedent I proue thus. Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and John Baptist, and all the holy prophetes were perfectly iustified, afore any new workes (as you take new workes) were spoken of. Ergo, men were sufficiently iustified, alonely by fayth. If Saint Paules argument conclude, so must mine also. Wherefore say what you can, Here standeth holy S. Paule stiffly, and strongly for mée, and against you and sayth: That we bée freely, and alonely iustified by fayth, without all maner of workes. But let vs sée what S. Ambrose sayth to this text. They are iustified freely, for they doing nothing, nor nothing deseruing, alonely by fayth are iustified by the gift of God. &c. Here you not, ỳ men working nothing at all, nor nothing deseruyng, are iustified by fayth onely: yea and freely: you were wonte to cry for Sola, sola, sola, onely, onely, onely. Here haue you him, and to helpe him you haue also gratis, that is to saye, freely, and also dono Dei, that is to say the gyft of God, and Nihill operantes, that is as much as working nothing at all. If these words, doe not exclude workes, and alowe fayth onely, I can not tell what words will doe it: graũt these wordes, and I will bée content.

Ambro. ad Rom. 3.

Orig. ad Ro. lib. iij. cap. iij.

I will also bring you Origyne on this same text, whose words bée these. Paule sayth, that the iustification of fayth is alonely sufficient. So that if a man doe beléeue onely, hée is iustified, though there bée no workes done of hym at all. By fayth was the thefe iustified, without the workes of the lawe. For our Lorde did not aske him what hé had done: nor did loke for any workes of him: but did accepte him all onely, for cõfessing of Christ. It followeth. Wherfore a man is iustified by fayth, Unto whom, as concerning iustification the workes of ỳ law helpe nothing. &c. What say you to Origine: that sayth how men bée iustified, though they doe no good workes at all, for workes doe help nothing to iustification, but fayth onelye: Bée not these plaine words: Graunt these wordes, and we will aske no more of you. Here haue you also, Sola, sola, sola. So ỳ you néede not cry no more for Sola. Also Origine bringeth an opẽ example of the thefe, that no man can deny. Who can haue lesse good workes then a thefe: which is neither good before God nor man. So ỳ all ỳ worlde may sée, that this is no new opinion, seeing that the scripture, and also holy doctours doth teach it. Also S. Paule in the 9. chapter bringeth in the Gentyle, which knoweth nothing of God, nor hath done any good workes, but cõtrary blasphemed God & his name, & hath alwayes lyued in Idolatrye, and bœne an vtter enemy vnto al goodnes.

Fayth onely and alone iustifieth.

Roma. 9.

Hé bringeth in also the Iewe full of good workes of the law which hath also great zeale vnto God, and to his workes, yea & of that Paule beareth hym witnes. Briefelye, hé bringeth in for him such a Iewe, that no man can complaine of, but is full of good workes. Yea take all the best of the Iewes togither, (for it were madnes of Paule to speake of the damnable Iewes, that were open wretches & damned by the iudgment of the lawe) with all their good workes, and yet S. Paule doth exclude them, & repelleth them clearely from iustifycation, with all their good zeale, and with all their good workes, and concludeth with playne wordes, that the gentyl, which is full of damnable wordes, and had neither zeale, nor loue vnto goodnes, is iustified by fayth onely.

Roma. 10.

These bée S. Paules wordes: we say, that the Gentils, which followed not righteousnes, haue obtayned righteousnes. I meane ỳ righteousnes, which cõmeth of faith. But Israell, which followeth the lawe of righteousnes, could not attayne vnto righteousnes. Wherefore? Because hé sought it not by fayth, but as it were by the workes of the lawe. Bée not these playne wordes? That the Gentiles, which followed no righteousnes nor had any minde therunto, are iustified fied frely by fayth? Is not here Sola fides, only fayth? Moreouer, the Iew is reproued with all zeale, with all his loue, with all his studye, and with all his good workes. Is not this a merueylous thing? yes verely, And so merueilous, that you shall neuer vnderstand it, without you beleue. But peraduenture here shall be sayd, that the good works of the Iewes dyd not profite thē, because they had no faith: But if they had had faith, then would they haue holpen to their iustificatiō.

Roma. 9.

we can neuer attayne to saluation but by faith in Christ.

To this I make answere, Trouth it is, good workes did not profyte the Iewes, for lacke of fayth. But this is false, That workes should haue holpen to iustification, if they had had fayth. For S. Paule proueth clerely that good workes helpe nothynge to iustification, nor euell workes let not the iustification, ẏ commeth by fayth. And this he proued by the example of the Gentyll, which had no good workes, but all damnable workes, & yet is iustified by fayth. Moreouer, the Iewe had ẏ zeale of God, and all manner of good workes wt all things that the world cā deuise, yea & also S. Paule speaketh of the Iewes ẏ were Christened, & all this could not helpe. Wherfore no maner of works, whether they be in fayth, or out of faith, can helpe to iustifye. Neuertheles workes hath their glory, and reward. But the glory, and prayse of iustification, belongeth to Christ onely. Also S. Paule proueth playnely in these wordes, that workes haue no place in iustification: To him that worketh is the rewarde not geuen of fauour, but of duetye: To hym that worketh not, but beleueth on hym, that iustifieth the wicked man, is fayth coūted for righteousnes.

Roma. 4.

Fayth is accompted for righteousnes.

How thinke you by these wordes? be they not opēly agaynst all workes? Sayth he not, ẏ iustification is imputed vnto him ẏ worketh not but alonly beleueth in hym, ẏ iustifieth ẏ wicked mā? I pray you what good workes doth the wicked mā? Marke also how he sayth, that righteousnes is imputed vnto him. Ergo, it is not deserued. For that that is deserued, is not imputed of fauour, but it must be geuen of duety. How thinke you? Is not this Sola fides, onely fayth? You know that there be but workes, and fayth that doe iustifie? And S. Paule excludeth workes clearely. Ergo, fayth alone remaineth. But peraduenture you will say, ẏ workes with fayth doe iustifie. Neuertheles of mekenes, and lowlynes, & auoyding of all boast of goodnes, you wil geue all ẏ glory to fayth, as vnto ẏ principal thyng, & without the which, no workes can helpe.

Notwithstāding workes be good, and helpe to iustification, thoughe of mekenes you will not know it. Is not this damnable hipocrisie? yea and that with God? which were intollerable, if it were with men. But how cā you proue by Scripture, that workes are worthy of any glorye of iustification? Is not this open lyeng on fayth to geue all to him, & yet (as you say) he is not worthy of all? for workes be worthy of parte. If fayth be not worthy alone, confesse it openly, and geue workes his prayse, and faith her prayse, & say not one thyng with your mouth, and thinke an other in your hart. For God searcheth the priuities of hartes. Who hath required of you such a mekenes? But I praye you how can workes helpe to iustification lesse or more? when they be neyther done, nor yet thought of? Who is iustified, but a wicked mā? which thinketh nothing of good workes. But these meke lyes, deserue none aunswere. Wherefore let vs heare what holy Doctours say, on this texte. To hym that worketh not. &c.

Saint Ambrose sayth on this maner: It was so decreed of God, that after ẏ lawe, the grace of God should require vnto saluation, alonely fayth. Which thyng he proueth by the example of the prophet, saying: Blessed is that man to whom God doth impute iustification, without workes. He sayth, that they be blessed, of whom God hath determined without labour, without all maner of obseruation, alonely by faith, that they shal be iustified before God. Blessed are they whose sinnes be forgeuē. Clearly they are blessed, vnto whom without labour, or without any worke, their iniquities be remitted, and their sinnes bee couered, and no maner of workes required of them, but alonely that they should beleeue. &c.

Bee not these wordes playne? God hath decreed, that hee shall require nothyng to iustification, but fayth: And hee is blessed, to whom God imputeth iustification, without all manner of workes, without all maner of obseruations. Also their sinnes bee couered, & no maner of workes of penaūce red of them, but alonely to beleeue. Here haue you Sola fides, and Tantum fides, and here can you not say, that S. Ambrose speaketh alonely of workes of the law, but of all maner of workes, of all maner of obseruations, yea and also of penaunce. Peraduēture it will bee sayd, as a great doctour sayd once to me, that S. Ambrose dyd vnderstād it of young children, that were newly baptised: them their fayth should saue alonely without workes. How thinke you? is not this a likely aunswere for a great Doctour of Diuinitie? for a great Duns man? for so great a preacher? Are not S. Paule, and S. Ambrose wel auoyded and clerkely? But I made him this aunswere, that this Epistle was written of S. Paule to the Romanes, which were men, and not children, and also the wordes of Scripture, speake of the man, and not of the childe. And S. Ambrose sayth, blessed is that man.

Sola fides iustificat.

D. Wetherall.

But at this aunswere, hee was not a litle moued, and sware, by the blessed God, let Ambrose, & Augustine, say what they will, hee would neuer beleeue, but that workes dyd helpe to iustificatiō. This was a Lordly word of a Prelate, & of a pyller of Christes Churche. But what medlyng is with such mad men. But yet peraduenture you will say, how that I take a peece of the Doctour, as much as maketh for my purpose. Notwithstandyng hee sayth otherwise in an other place, which I doe not bryng. What is that to me? yet is not my Doctour thus auoyded. For you cā not deny, but this is his saying, and vppon this place of Scripture, and this doth agree with Scripture, or els hee doth expounde Scripture euill. Wherfore you must aunswere to the saying of the Doctour in this place, for this is the place that is layd agaynst you, and this is ỳ place, whereby other places must bee expounded. And if you dare deny him in this place, then will I deny him in all other places, by that same authoritie: then bee the holy doctours clearely gone. Neuertheles, holy Scripture standeth openly agaynst you, which if you deny, then haue I a cause to suspect you. Wherefore take hēde what you doe. But yet peraduenture will ye say, that I vnderstand not S. Ambrose, nor holy Doctours, as my Lord of Rochester sayd howe I vnderstode not Tertullian, hee had none other euasion to saue his honour with. But this is not inough, so to say, but you must proue it, & other mē must iudge it, betweene you and me.

Here haue I translated a great many of their sayinges into English, let other men iudge, whether I vnderstand them or not. Go ye to the Latin, and let vs see what other sense you cā take out. But my Lordes, remember that our God is alyue, whose cause we defende, afore whom I dare well say, you are already confounded in your conscience, wherfore doubt you not, but that terrible vengeaunce hangeth ouer you, if you repēt not, which whē it cōmeth, cōmeth sharpely. How are ye able to defend a thing, that you cā not proue opēly by holy scripture? Say what you will, your conscience will murmour, and grudge, and will neuer bee satisfied with mēs dreames, nor yet with tyranny. Thinke you that your lawes, and your inuentiōs can bee a sufficient rule for Christen men to liue by? and to saue their conscience therby? Thinke you, that your cause is sufficiently proued, when you haue compelled poore men by violēce to graūt it? Then may we destroy all Scriptures, and receiue alonely your tyranny.

But my Lordes this matter is not righted by your iudgemēt, but by our maister Christ, and his blessed worde:

afore

afore whose strayte iudgement you shall bée iudged, and that straytly. For when all your grace, all your honour, all your dignitie, all your pompe, and pride, briefly all that your hartes doe nowe reioyse in, shall lye in the dust, then shall you bée called to a strayte rekening: It is no light game, nor no childes playe. Marke it well, for it lieth on your necke. But what nedeth me to lose many wordes, for if you be halfe so full of grace, as you say you bée of good workes, then will you recken it better then I can moue you. But againe to our purpose. S. Paule proueth the iustification of faith onely, in these wordes. No man is iustified by the workes of the law, but by the faith of Iesus Christ, and we doe beléeue in Iesus Christ, that we may bée iustified, by the fayth of Christ, & not by the workes of the law:

Gallat. 2.

Marke how hée sayth, that no man is iustified by the workes of the law, no not S. Peter: Howe thinke you: doth not S. Paule exclude workes: & bringeth in alonely faith: yea and that the workes of the law, whiche were the best workes in the world, and hée beléeueth to bée iustified onely by the fayth of Iesus Christ and not by workes, and that proueth hée in these wordes of the Prophet: A righteous man lyueth by fayth. Here you not: how a righteous man liueth by faith: What call you liuing by fayth: If hée liue any part by workes, then lyueth hée not by fayth, but partly by workes. Thē is S. Paules probation vnperfite. But let vs sée how your Doctours doe expounde this texte.

Abacuc. 2.

Athanasius.

Galat. 3.

The righteous man lyueth by fayth & not by workes

Now doth hée plainly shewe, that fayth alonely hath the vertue in him to iustifie, and bringeth Abacuk saying: Of faith (and not of the law) shal a righteous mā lyue. Hée addeth, well afore God, for afore man peraduenture they shalbe reckened righteous, that sticke to the lawe, but not afore God. &c. Here haue you Sola, onely. And also that this holy iustification is afore God, and after his iudgemēt, & not after mens iudgementes. Wherfore glory as much as you cā of your good workes. They can not alonely iustifie you, but also they bée of no valure, but damnable and very sinne, if there bée no fayth. So farre are they from helping to iustification. Thys doth S. Augustine witnesse in these wordes. Those same workes that bée done afore fayth, though they séeme vnto men laudable, yet are they but payne, and I doe iudge them, as great strength, and as swift running out of the way. Wherfore let no man coūt his good workes before fayth, where as faith is not, there is no good worke, the intention maketh a good worke, but fayth doth guide thee intētion. &c. Here S. Augustine condemneth all your good workes afore fayth, & sayth that they bée nothing worth, but vain and thinges out of the way. How can such thynges helpe to iustification:

Aug. in prolo. Psal. 31.

Good workes without fayth are but sinne.

Marke also how that your good intention (whereupon you boast, that you doe so many good workes by) can not helpe you, for hée is blynde, and knoweth not what to doe (though he stand well in his owne conceite) without fayth, which is his guide. So that all thinges afore fayth, are but very blindnes. But as sone as fayth commeth, hée doth both iustifie, and also maketh the workes good; which were afore sinne. But let vs sée what Saint Barnarde sayth of good workes. I doe abhorre (sayth hée) whatsoeuer thyng is of mée. Except paradnēture that that be myne which God hath made me hys. By grace hath hée iustified mée freely, and by that hath hée deliuered mée from the bondage of sinne. Thou hast not chosē me, (sayth Christ) but I haue chosen thée, nor I found any merites in thée, that might moue me to chose thée, but I preuented all thy merites. Wherefore thus by faith haue I maryed thée vnto me, and not by the workes of the law.

Barnar. super. Can. ser. lxvj.

I haue maryed the also in iustice, but not in the iustice of the lawe, but in the iustice which is of fayth. Now this remayneth, that thou doest iudge a ryght iudgment betweene thée and mée, Geue thou iudgment, wherein that I haue maried thée, where it is open, that thy merites dyd not come betweene, but my pleasure, and will,

&c. S. Barnarde doth despise all hys good workes and taketh hym onely to grace, but you sticke partly to your good workes, and not onelye to grace. Had S. Barnarde no good workes to sticke to? Marke that S. Barnarde is Gods child freely by grace, which can not bee, if workes doe helpe lesse or more. Was hee not a christened man? Had hee no workes of the new law, as you call them? I thinke yes. And yet hee sayth, ỳ there was no merites, nor any goodnes, but that we were freely chosen. Wherfore hee prouoked you, & all such as you be to iudge righteously betweene God and you, the which hath preuẽted all your goodnes and that of his owne will, and of hys owne pleasure. How can hee finde any goodnes, that preuenteth all goodnes? So that here haue you clearely, that good workes of ỳ law, or morall good workes (as you sayne) doe nothing helpe to iustificatiõ afore God, for they bee preuẽted of iustification.

workes of the newe law.

This is also well proued by Saint. Augustines sayinge. Wherfore these thinges considered, and declared after the strength, that it hath pleased God to geue vs, we doe gather, that a man can not bee iustified, by the preceptes of good liuing, that is, not by the lawe of workes, but by ỳ law of sayth, not by the letter, but by the spirite, not by merites of workes, but by free grace. &c. Here you this? not by merites of workes, but by free grace? what call you free grace? but without al things, sauyng grace? what call you not of workes, but ỳ workes helpe nothing. For if workes did helpe, then would hee not say, not of workes, but not of workes onelye, but part of workes, & part of faith, but hee excludeth workes fully & onely. Agayne the same thing, that purchaseth vs remission of our sinnes, doth also purchase iustificatiõ. For iustificatiõ is nothing but remission of sins. Now sayth purchaseth vs remissiõ, Ergo, by faith we ar iustified.

Aug. de spir. & lit. ca. xij.

No man can bee iustified by ỳ lawe of workes, but by the law of faith in Christes bloud.

Nowe that sayth doth purchase remission of sinnes, it is well proued by this article of our sayth, Credo remissionem peccatorum, I beleeue remission of sinnes. Now if I haue not this remission for sayth, then sayth deceiueth mee, for I doe beleeue onely, because I woulde haue remission of sinnes. What needeth me to beleeue remission of sinnes, if I may deserue it by workes? Also our mayster Christ declareth openly, ỳ no manner of workes what so euer they bee, can iustifye afore God. These bee his wordes: whẽ you haue done all thinges, that bee commaunded you, yet saye, that wee are vnprofitable seruauntes. If you bee vnprofitable, then bee you not iustified. And if you can not bee iustified, when you haue done all thinges, how will you bee iustified. When you doe in a maner nothing? and specially of those thinges, that bee commaunded you wherefore this is playne, ỳ our workes can not helpe vs to iustification. For whẽ we haue done all things yet we are vnprofitable. But let vs proue this by an open example. I put this case my Lordes (vnto you I speake) that our noble prince would call you all before him, and say. My Lordes, so it is, that it hath pleased vs to cal you vnto the spiritual dignitie of Bishops, & to make you of our counsell, and Lordes of our Realme, and also of our parlamẽt. Now wold we know of you which of you all hath deserued it, or reckeneth hym selfe worthy by his deseruing, les or more of this dignity? What will you say to this? What will you aunswere to the Kynges grace? Is there one amonge you all, that dare be so bolde as to say to the kinges grace, that he hath not geuen it vnto hym freely, but that hee hath done the king so faythfull seruice that he was boũd to geue it vnto him? Yea, and that of his deseruinge? If there were one that were so proude, as to say this, thinke you that ỳ kings grace woulde not laye to his charge, how that hee had not done halfe his duetie, but were rather bound, to doe ten tymes as much more, and yet the Kinges grace were not boũd to geue hym a bysshopricke, for hee had done but his duetye, and not all that.

Luke. 17.

Now if your good workes, and all your faythfull seruice, bee not able to deserue a bishopryke, of the kinges grace

grace, How will you bee able by your workes, to deserue heauen, and iustification before the king of all kynges? When you haue aunswered to this, before the kinges grace, then come and dispute with God, the iustification of your workes, and yet shall they bee farre vnlike. Wherefore I conclud of these scriptures, and of these doctours, that the fayth, that we haue in Christ Jesus, and his blessed bloude, doth onely, and sufficiently iustifie vs before God without the helpe of any workes.

Good workes can not deserue remission of sinne.

And though ỳ all scripture bee no thing els but a holle probacion of this article (that is alonely a perfect commēdation, and a prayse of Christ, and of his blessed merites, that hee hath deserued for vs) yet will I passe ouer to bryng in any moe places. For they ỳ are not cōtēt with these scriptures, wyll not bee satisfied, nor yet content to geue al onely glory to God, though I brought in all the newe testament. Yea Christ hym selfe could not satisfie them, if hee were here, no nor yet though heauen, and earth and all creatures therin, were nothyng els, but probations of this article, it would not helpe. Wherefore I let such infidels passe, and leue them to the iudgement of God, alonely certifieng them of this one thyng, that is infallible, how the day shall come, that it shall repent them, yea, and that sorer then I can either write, or thinke, that they did not beleeue the lest pricke of this holy article. But vnto our purpose.

The maner of iustification.

The very true way of iustification is this. First commeth God, for the loue of Christe Jesus, alonely of his mere mercy, and geueth vs freely the gift of fayth, wherby we doe beleeue God, & his holy word, and sticke fast vnto the promises of God, and beleeue, that though heauen, and earth, and all that is in them should perish, and come to nought, yet God shall bee founde true in his promises, for this faythes sake: bee we the elect children of God.

Fides historica.

This is not such a fayth, as men dreame, when they beleeue that there is one God, and beleeue that hee is eternall, beleeue also that hee made the worlde of naught, yea, and beleeue that the Gospell is true, and all thing that God speaketh must bee true, and fulfilled, with other such thynges. This I say, is not the fayth that wee bee iustified by, for deuils and infidels haue this fayth, and also wee may attayne to these thynges by strength of reason: But the fayth that shall iustifie vs, must bee of an other maner of strength, for it must come from heauen, and not from the strength of reason. It must also make mee beleeue, that God the maker of heauen and earth, is not alonely a father, but also my father: yea, and that thorow the fauour that Christ hath purchased mee, from the whiche fauour, neither heauen, nor earth, tribulation, nor persecution, death, nor hell, can deuide mee. But to this sticke I fast, that hee is not alonely my father, but also a mercifull father, yea, and that vnto mee mercifull, and so mercifull, that hee will not impute my sinnes vnto mee, though they bee neuer so great, so long as I hang on the blessed bloud of Christ Jesus, and sinne not of malice, but of frailtie, and of no pleasure

Fides iustificans.

Roma. 8.

Hee is also a lyberall father, yea, and that vnto mee liberall, which will not alonely promise mee all thynges, but also geeue them me, whether they bee necessary to the body or to ỳ soule. Hee is also not alonely lyberall, but myghty to performe all thynges, that hee promyseth vnto mee. Briefely, this fayth maketh mee to hang clearely of God, and of his blessed promyses made in Christ, and in his swéete and precious bloud, and not to feare death, nor any affliction, nor persecution: nor tribulation: but to despise all these thynges: and not alonely these, but to despise also myne own lyfe for Christes sake.

The frutes of fayth.

Finally, of a fleshely beast, it maketh mee a spirituall man: of a damnable child, it maketh mee a heauenly sonne: of a seruaunt of the deuill, it maketh mee a free mā of Gods, both deliuered from the lawe, from sinne, from death, from the deuill, and from all myserie that might hurt mee. My Lordes, this is the fayth that doth iustifie, and that wee do preach. And because it is geuen from heauen into our hartes by the spirite of God, therfore, it can bee no idle thing: But it must needes do all maner of things, ỹ bee to the honour of God, and also to the profite of our neighbour: In so much, that at all tymes necessary, it must needes worke well, & also bryng forth all good workes that may bee to the profite and helping of any man. But these workes bee not done, to iustifie the man, but a iust man must needes doe them. Not vnto his profite, but alonely to other mens profites, euen as our maister Christ, suffered hunger, and thyrste, and persecution, and toke great labours in preaching of his worde, yea, and also suffered death. All these thinges, I say, did hee not to further or to profite himselfe, but for our merites, and for our profite. So likewise doth a iust man his workes. And as a good tree in tyme of the yeare, bryngeth forth good Apples, not to make hym good, for hee is good afore, nor yet this apple is not to his profite, but vnto other mens, notwithstanding, ỹ good nature that is in hym, muste needes bring it forth. So likewise, the iust man must needes doe good workes, not by them to bee iustified, but alonely in them to serue his brother: for hee hath no neede of them, as concerning his iustification.

An exãple how fayth bryngeth forth good workes.

Wherfore now here haue you the very true cause of iustification, that is, fayth alonely: And also the very true way and maner of doynge good workes: And how that no man can doe good workes, but a iustified man, as our maister Christ sayth: Eyther make the tree good, and then his fruite good, or els the tree euill, and his fruit euill: for a good tree must needes bring forth good fruite, and a badde, euyll fruite. But nowlet mee aunswere to the Scriptures, and to the reasons that they bring to prooue that workes doe iustifie. First commeth the fleshly and dampnable reason, and thee sayth: If wee bee iustified alonely by fayth, what neede wee to doe any good workes? what neede wee to crucifie, or mortifie our flesh? for all these wil not profite vs, and wee shall bee saued though wee doe none of thē all. Thus did blinde reason dispute with Saint Paule, when that hee had proued that God of his mercy, had deliuered vs freely from the damnable bondage of the law.

Math.7.

Solutions and argumentes to the Scriptures.

Roma.6.

Anone hee iudged that he might do what hee would, for hee was no lõger vnder the law. To this S. Paule aũswereth, ỹ if wee obey vnto ỹ workes of sinne, then are we the seruauntes of sinne, & if we obey to the workes of iustice, then are we the seruauntes of iustice. So that if we truely haue that same fayth, that iustifieth vs, we shall desire to doe none other workes but those, that belong to iustification, not that the workes doe iustifie, but that we must needes do these workes, as the very true frutes of iustificatiõ, and not as the cause of iustification. And therfore those men, that will doe no good workes, because they be iustified onely by fayth, bee not the childrẽ of God, nor the children of iustification. For the liuyng spirite of God is none authour of ilnes, nor of sinne, but hee crieth in our hartes, Abba pater. And of that, is this a sure, and an euident token, for if they were the very true children of God, they would bee the gladder to doe good workes, because that they are iustified freely. Therfore should they also bee moued freely to workes, if it were for no other purpose, nor profite, but alonely to doe ỹ wil of their mercyfull God, ỹ hath so freely iustified thē, and also to profite their neighbour, whō they are bound to serue of very true charitie.

Good workes are the frutes of true fayth.

Take an example, here is a theefe, that is condemned by right, & the law to bee hanged, whom the kings grace of his mercy, doth freely deliuer from the gallowes, and geueth him his pardon. Now this theefe, thus deliuered, will not keepe hym selfe a true man, nor doe those workes, that belong to a true man to doe, but falleth agayne to stelyng, because the kyng pardoned hym so freely, and reckeneth that the kyng is so mercyfull, that hee will hãg

A very good example.

no

no thæues, but deliuer them all of his mercy, without their deseruing. Now how thinke you? wil ỹ king bæ mercifull vnto this thæfe, when hæ cõmeth againe to ỹ gallowes? Nay truely, for hæ was not deliuered for that cause, but for to kæpe hym selfe a true man.

Then commeth my Lord of Rochester, and hæ sayth, that fayth doth begyn a iustification in vs, but workes doe performe it, and make it perfite.

Arti. 2. I will recite his owne wordes. Per fidem initiari dicitur iusticia solum, non autem consummari, nam consummata iusticia non aliter quam ex operibus natis, & in lucem editis acquiri potest, opera consummatè iustificant. Fides primum in choat. &c. What Christened man would thinke, that a Byshop would thus trifle, and play with Gods holy word? Gods worde is so playne, that no man can auoyde it, how that fayth iustifieth alonely, and now commeth my Lord of Rochester, with a litle, & a vayne distinction, inuented of his owne brayne, without authoritie of Scripture, and will clearely, auoyde all Scriptures, and all the whole disputation of S. Paule. But my Lord, say to me of your conscience, how doe you recken to auoyde the vengeaũce of God, sith you thus trifle, & despise Gods holy word? Thinke you, that this vayne destinctiõ, will bæ alowed afore Jesus Christ? for whose glorye wæ doe cõtẽde & striue? afore whom, we doe handle this matter?

The Byshop of Rochesters vayne distinction.

I doe thinke verely, that your owne conscience doth sore accuse you, for thus blasphemyng the holy worde of God. Wherefore my Lord, for Christes sake remember, that you bæ aged, and shall not long tary here, and these vayne distinctiõs that you haue inuented to the pleasure of men, and to the great peruertyng of Gods holy word, shall bæ to your euerlastyng damnation. And at the lest wayes, if you feare not ỹ terrible vengeaũce of God, remẽber the shame of ỹ world, & thinke not, that all men bæ so mad, and so vnlearned, as for to bæ deceiued by this triflyng distinction, seyng that the worde of God is so playne a-Ephe. 2. gaynst it. Doth not S. Paule say, that our iustification is alonely of fayth? & not of workes? How can you auoyde this same? Non ex operibus? Not of workes? if that workes doe make iustification perfite, then are not Saint Paules wordes true? Also S. Paule sayth, that we bæ the childrẽ of God, by fayth. And if we bæ the childrẽ, we are also the heyres.

Now what imperfection finde you in childrẽ? and in heyres? Christẽ mẽ desire no more but this, and all this haue they by fayth onely. And will you say, that fayth doth but begyn a iustification: Beside that, you know well, that S. Paule doth proue in all the whole Epistles to the Romanes, and also to the Galathians, that fayth doth iustifie, yea, and that by contention agaynst workes. Now how can you bryng in workes to make iustification perfect? And S. Paule hath excluded them?

Moreouer, why did not the Jewes, against whose works S. Paule disputeth? bryng in this distinction for thẽ? Briefely, what will you say to all the Doctours, that I haue here recited? which say, that Sola fides, onely fayth, doth iustifie. But doubtles, if it were not to satisfie other men, this distinction were not worthy an aunswere. An other damnable reason is made, that is an open, & a playne lye, which is this. Thou sayst that workes doe not iustifie, nor yet helpe to iustification, but fayth onely. Ergo, thou destroyest all good workes, and wilt that no man shall worke well, but alonely beleeue.

Good workes are to bee done although they iustifie not.

I aũswere, if there were any shame in men, they might well bæ ashamed of these open lyes.

Tell me one, that is learned, that euer did say, or teach, that men should doe no good workes? Many there bæ, that say, workes do not iustifie, as S. Paule, and all his scholers, but no mã denyeth good workes. But I marueile not at them, for they doe but the workes of their father, whiche was a lyer, & a murtherer from the begynnyng. I pray you, what cõsequent is this, after your owne Logike? workes doe not iustifie, Ergo, wee nede not to doe them, but deſpiſe them, for they bée of no valure. Take a like conſequent. You ſay, that the kinges grace doth not iuſtifie, Ergo, you deſpiſe him: Ergo, hée is no longer kyng: Alſo the Sunne, and Mone doe not iuſtifie, Ergo, you deſtroy them? But ſuch a damnable lye, muſt S. Paul nédes ſuffer, whē hée had proued, that fayth onely did iuſtifie. Then came your ouerthwarte fathers, and ſayd, Ergo, thou deſtroyeſt the law, for thou teacheſt, that it iuſtifieth not. God forbid, ſayth S. Paule, for we doe learne the very waye to fulfill the law, that is, faith, whereby the law alonely is fulfilled, and without the whiche, all the workes of the law, bée but ſinne. So doe we likewiſe teach the very true way, wherby all good workes muſt be done. As firſt, a man by faith to bée iuſtified, & then a iuſt man, muſt nédes doe good workes, whiche afore were but ſinne, & now bée all good, yea, his eatyng, drinkyng, & ſléeping, are good.

Roma. 3.

But beſide all theſe, haue they certayne ſcriptures. Firſt of S. James, whoſe wordes bée theſe. Wilt thou underſtand, O thou vayne man, that fayth without déedes, is dead? Was not Abraham our father iuſtified of his dedes? When hée offered his ſōne Iſaac on the aulter? Lykewiſe was not Rahab the harlot iuſtified, when ſhe receiued the meſſengers? and ſent them out an other way. S. Auguſtine doth declare in diuers places, ý bleſſed S. Paule, and S. James, ſemed for to bée contrary in this matter, And therefore S. Auguſtine willing to ſaue the eſtimacion of this epiſtle, doth declare, how that S. Paule doth ſpeake of workes, that goe béfore fayth, and S. James ſpeaketh of workes, that folow fayth, And yet S. Auguſtine will not bée compelled by the wordes of this epiſtle, to graunt, ý any workes doe iuſtifie, by the reaſon, that Saint Paules wordes bée ſo appartly, and behemently to the contrary. Wherefore ſéeing that there ſheweth a controuerſy here in two places of ý ſcripture, it ſtandeth with all reaſon, and learning, that the ſame place, which ſéemeth for to bée féeblest, & alſo darkeſt, ſhould bée expounded, and declared, by that part of ſcripture, that is cleareſt, and moſt of autorite. Now is this of truth, that the autorite of S. Paule hath alwayes in the church of God, béene more of eſtimacion, and ſtrength, then euer was this epiſtle, (though that this epiſtle hath bene receyued) and eſpecially in this cauſe, ý we now here ſpeake of. For in all the ſcripture is not this article of iuſtifycation ſo playnely, and plenteouſlye handled, as it is by bleſſed S. Paule, this muſt euery learned man graunt.

Iam. 2.

Wherefore it ſtandeth with reaſon and lerning, that this ſaying of Saint James muſt nédes bée reduced, and brought vnto bleſſed S. Paules meaning, & not S. Paule vnto S. Iames ſaying.

Now therefore in as much, that both bleſſed S. Paule, and alſo Saint James meaning is, that good workes ſhould bée done, and they ý bée chriſtē men, ſhould not bée idle, and doe no good, becauſe that they are the childrē of grace, but that they ſhould rather in their lyuynge expreſſe outwardlye their godnes, receiued of grace: and as bleſſed S. Paule ſayth, To geue their membres to bée ſeruantes vnto righteouſnes, as they were afore ſeruauntes vnto vncleanes. For this cauſe (I ſay) S. James ſaying muſt nédes bée vnderſtanded, for to bée wrytten agaynſt thoſe men, that boſted them ſelues, of an idle, and vayne opinion, that they thought thē ſelues to haue, which they reckened to bée a good fayth. Now S. James to proue that this fayth was but an idle thing, & of none effect, doth declare it clerely, by ý, that it brought forth in time and place conuenient, no good workes. And therefore hée cauleth it a deade fayth.

Aug. 83. queſt. c. 76.

Hée bryngeth in alſo a naked brother, the wich hath néede of clothing, vnto theſe men, ý boaſted their fayth, which hath no compaſſion of his neceſſitie. Wherefore hée concludeth, ý that they haue no true fayth. And therefore hée ſayth vnto them, ſhew vnto mée thy fayth without workes, and I ſhall ſhew vnto thée of workes, my my fayth.

Heare is it playne, that S. James would no more, but that that fayth is a dead fayth, and of no valure ẏ hath no workes. For workes shoulde declare and shew the outwarde fayth, & workes should bee an outward declaration, and a testimonie of ẏ inwarde iustification, receiued of fayth, not ẏ workes can or may take away our synne, or els bee any satisfaction, for any part of synne, for that belongeth
1.Iohn.2. all onely to Christ. As blessed S. John sayth, and also S. Paule, hee hath appered once for al, to put sinne to flight by the offering vp of hym selfe. And Hebr. 9. that this is S. James meaning, it is declared by that that foloweth. Thou seest (sayth hee) that fayth wrought in Abrahams dedes & through ẏ dedes was his fayth made perfect.

Marke how fayth wrought in hys dedes? That is, his fayth, because it was a lyuyng fayth, brought forth & wrought out, ẏ high worke of oblation. Also his fayth was perfect through his dedes. That is his fayth was declared, and had a great testimonye afore all the worlde, ẏ it was a lyuyng, and a perfect, and a right shapen faith that Abraham had. So ẏ his inward Fayth iustifieth before God, and good workes declare our iustification to ẏ worlde. fayth declared him afore God, & his outward workes afore the worlde to bee good, and iustified. And thus was his faith made perfect afore God and man. Now vnto this, doe we all agree ẏ fayth alonely iustifieth before God, whiche in tyme and place doth worke well, yea it is a liuyng thing of God, which can not bee dead, nor idle in man. But yet for all that, we doe geue to fayth, and to Christes bloud, that glory, that belongeth to them onely, that is to say, iustificatiõ, remissiõ of sinnes, satisfieng of Gods wrath, takyng away of euerlastyng vengeaunce, purchasing of mercy, fulfillyng of the law, with all other like things. The glorye of these, I say, belongeth to Christ onely, & we are pertakers of them by fayth, in Christes bloud onely. For it is no worke, that receyueth the promise made in Christes bloud, but fayth onely.

Take an example. God sayth to Abraham, In thy sede shall I blesse all people. Now can Abrahams workes doe nothyng of receiuyng of this blessing, nor yet can they make him hang on that sede, but hee beleeueth God, and sticketh fast by fayth to that promise, and thinketh, that God shall bee true, though hee bee a lyer, and so is hee partaker of the blessing made in ẏ sede. Note also, that this blessing is promised in Abrahams sede, and not to Abrahams workes. Ergo, Abraham is blessed, because hee hangeth on the sede, & not on his workes. Also blessed S. Paule doth driue a sore argu- Gala.3.
ment agaynst workes, in as much as Scripture sayth, in semine, non in seminibus quasi in multis, sed in vno.

Now if workes doe helpe lesse or more to iustificatiõ, then must nedes the promise bee made, and pertaine to many, and not to one onely, ẏ which were sore agaynste blessed S. Paule. Wherefore I conclude, that the glory and prayse of iustification belongeth onely to fayth in Christes bloud, and not to workes in any wise. Notwithstãdyng we doe also laude, and prayse good workes, and doe teach diligently to doe good workes, in as much as God their maker hath commaunded them: yea, & also to profite their neighbours by their good workes: and furthermore, that other men, which blasphemeth the veritie, might bee moued through their vertuous liuyng, & conuersatiõ, to the holy religiõ of Christ.

For these causes, and other moe, I say, doe I teach good mẽ to liue wel, and vertuously: yea, & also wee teach
The reward of good workes is not remission of sinnes. that good workes shall haue a reward of God as scripture testifieth, but not remission of sinnes, nor yet iustification for their rewarde. Wherfore this saying of S. James must nedes bee verified against thẽ, that boasted them selues of bayne fayth, that was indede but an idle opinion, and no true fayth, for it did worke thorough charitie. And therfore S. James disputeth well agaynst them, that this fayth was but a dead fayth, and could not helpe them no more then it helpeth the deuill. So that this thing of S. James maketh nothing agaynst mee,

but

but rather wyth mée.

Also you haue an other Scripture for you, which is this. Before God, they are not iustified which heare the lawe, but they which doe the law shalbée iustified. Of this texte you glorye & cry opera, opera, workes workes. But if yée would consider the mynde of S. Paule, you should well perceaue that hée meaneth not, how workes might deserue iustification, for then coulde hée not haue concluded thys agaynste the Iewes, for they did the workes of the lawe to the vttermost, and yet were they not iustified. Wherefore S. Paule meaneth by the hearers of the lawe, all them that doe the outwarde workes of the lawe, for feare, or for rewarde, or of hypocrisie, or els by them to bée iustified. The doers caulleth hée them that doe the workes of the lawe, after the intent of ỳ lawe, and as the lawe commaundeth them, that is, in the true fayth of Christ Iesus, which is the very ende of ỳ lawe, and the fulfilling of the law (as Saint Paule sayth) to all them that beléeue. Wherefore all men bée but hearers onely of the lawe, till the tyme that that they haue the fayth of Christ Iesus, which is imputed vnto them for iustice. And the workes of the lawe bée no cause of iustification, but alonely an outward testimonie and witnes that the lawe is fulfilled inwardly in their conscience afore God, and fulfilled that it hath no accusation against them, for Christ hath made satisfactiõ for them, of the which they bée partakers by their fayth. And so the lawe must bée content to admitte all these men, to bée fulfillers & doers of ỳ law.

Roma. 2.

And now, that you shall not say, that this is my dreame, here bée S. Augustines wordes. The doers of the lawe shall bée iustified. So must it bée vnderstãded, that wée may know that they cã none otherwise bée the doers of the lawe, excepte they bée firste iustified, not that iustification belongeth vnto doers, but that iustification doth precéde all maner of doinges. &c. Heare you not that iustificatiõ is first geuen, that men might bée able to doe the workes of the lawe? This is also the exposition of your glose. I haue meruayle you studie it no better.

August. de spirit. & lit.

Also you haue an other Scripture, and that is this. Cornelius a Gẽtile, did great almes, and prayd vnto God alwayes: Vnto whome the Aungell spake on this maner: Thy prayer, & thy almes are come vp into remembraunce in the presence of God. Of this texte you gather, that hys good workes, did helpe to iustifie hym. I aunswere: The holy ghost hath opẽly declared hymselfe there. For hée sayth, that this Cornelius was a deuoute man, and one that feared God. How coulde this bée, without ỳ God had taught hym inwardely by fayth? Yea, how coulde hée know God, and that deuoutly, but by fayth? Ergo, hée was iustified afore God by his fayth, but ỳ world knew not his iustificatiõ. And therfore ỳ holy ghost doth declare hys inward iustificatiõ, whẽ hée saith, that hée was deuoute, & feared God: And also doth shew openly the fruits of his iustification, when hée sayth, that hée did almes. Moreouer, you haue there that the holy Ghost fell on them afore they were baptised in water, the which declareth openly, that they were iustified afore God.

Gloſa.

Actes. 10.

The man that is iustified before God can not bee idle but must doe good.

This is well declared also in your owne lawe, whose wordes bée these: Cornelius Cẽturio, being yet a Heathẽ mã, was made cleane by ỳ gifte of the holy ghost. Here haue you playnely ỳ hée was iustified by ỳ gifte of ỳ holy ghost, afore all good workes. For hée was an heathẽ mã. An other scripture yée haue, which is this. If I haue all faith, so ỳ I may trãspose moũtaines, and haue no charitie, I am nothyng. Of this gather you, that fayth without charitie can not iustifie. I aunswere. This can you not gather of S. Paule, for it is open that hée speaketh not of this thyng, whereby that men may bée iustified, but alonely hée teacheth how they that bée iustified, must worke with charitie. It is also plaine, that hée speaketh not of fayth, that doth iustifie inwardly, but of that faith that doth worke outwardely. The which is caulled a gifte of the holy Ghost: As ỳ gifte of tounges, the gift of prophesies, the gifte of healing, the gifte of interpretation, as it is opē in the chapiter afore. Now is this fayth not geuen to iustifie, but alonely to doe myracles, wonders, and signes by. And therefore sayth Paule: If I had all fayth, so that I coulde moue mountaynes.

Also it is open, that certayne men shall say vnto Christ: Beholde, wee haue done myracles, and cast out deuils in thy name: And yet hee shall say to them, truely, I know you not. So that this fayth is a gifte of God, that iustifieth not, no more then the gifte of science, or prophesies. And sometyme is it in the Church, and sometyme not, and it is neuer of necessitie there to bee. But the faith that wee speake of, which doth beleeue the promises of God, and sticketh fast to the bloud of Christ, hath none other vertue but to iustifie, and must needes iustifie, wheresoeuer hee is, and hee sticketh so fast to Gods worde, that hee loketh for no myracles. Thys fayth is neuer out of the Church, for it is the lyfe of the Church, and it is that fayth that our mayster Christe prayde for, that it myght neuer fayle. And therefore S. Paule, when he describeth this fayth, hee cauelleth it a fayth that worketh by charitie, not that it iustifieth by charitie. For as he sayth there playnely, it is neyther circumcision, nor yet vncircumcision, that is of any valure in Christ Iesu, but fayth. Here doth hee playnely exclude from iustification, the byghest worke of the lawe, circumcision, and setteth fayth alone: not the gyfte of fayth, that doth myracles, but the gift of fayth, that worketh by charitie. And that yee shall not thinke thys to bee a dreame, here bryng I you Athanasius sayinge, whose wordes bee these.

Matth. 7.

Iohn. 17.

Gala. 5.

There are two maner of faythes, one is iustifieng, as that, of the which is spoken, Thy fayth hath saued thee. An other is cauled the gyft of God, whereby myracles bee done. Of the which it is written: if you haue fayth, as a grayne of mustard seede. &c. So that here haue you playne, that fayth doth iustifie onelye, and perfectly, before all maner of workes, that is, fayth is geuē of God freely into our soules vnto the which fayth, iustification is all onely promised, and is all onely imputed, and rekened of God. Neuertheles, this fayth in tyme, and place conuenient, is of that strength, that hee must needes worke by charitye, not for to bee iustified thereby, for if he were not afore iustified, it were not possible that hee coulde haue charitie. For after your owne schole men, an Infidell cā not haue charitie: but ỹ iustified mā, hee is a free seruaunt vnto God, for the loue ỹ hee hath vnto him. The which loue seeketh not in God, his owne profit, nor his owne aduaūtage, for then were hee wicked, but seeketh alonely the wyll of God, and the profite of other men, and worketh neyther for loue of heauen, nor yet for feare of hell. For hee knoweth well, that heauen wyth all the ioyes thereof, is prepared from the begynnyng of the world, not by hym, but by hys father. And it must needes folow, as contrariwyse the Infidell, and the wicked man, doth not worke hys wicked deedes because hee woulde haue hell or euerlasting dampnation to hys rewarde, but hee woulde rather the contrary. Notwithstandyng, hell and euerlasting dampnation, must needes follow his wicked deedes. Finally, a righteous man, is a free seruaunt of Gods, and worketh not as an hyerelyng. For if it were possible that there were no heauen, yet woulde hee doe no lesse good, for his respecte is to the maker of the worlde, and the Lord of all rewardes.

Athan. ad Rom.

Fayth that iustifieth vs is geuē vs freely of God.

There is also an other argument, and that is thys. Fayth is a worke: but workes doth not iustifie, Ergo, fayth doth not iustifie. Aunswere: Truth it is, that we doe not meane, how that fayth for his owne dignitie, and for hys owne perfection, doth iustifie vs. But the Scripture doth say, that fayth alonely iustifieth, because that it is that thyng alonely, whereby I doe hange of Christe. And by my faith alonely, am I partaker of ỹ merites and mercy purchased by Christes bloude, and fayth it is alonely, Fayth onely iustifieth because by fayth we attaine the benefite of Christes death which onely iustifieth vs.

that receaue the promyses made in Christ. Wherefore we say with blessed S. Paule, that fayth onely iustifieth imputatiue: that is, all ý merites and goodnes, grace, and fauour, and all that is in Christ, to our saluation, is imputed and reckoned vnto vs, because we hange and beléeue of hym, and hé can deceaue no man that doth beléeue in hym. And our iustice is not (as the schole men teacheth) a formal iustice, which is by fulfillyng of the lawe, deserued of vs, for then our iustification were not of grace, and of mercy, but of deseruing, and of duty. But it is a iustice that is reckened & imputed vnto vs, for ý fayth in Christ Iesus, and it is not of our deseruyng, but clearely, and fully of mercy imputed vnto vs.

Now most honorable, & gracious Prince, I haue declared vnto your highnes, what faith it is, that doth iustifie vs before God, and also brought for my sentẽce, not alonely the blessed word of God, the which were sufficient in this cause, but the exposition of holy Doctours, that your grace might sée, that I am not moued to this opinion of a light cause, nor that this doctrine of myne is so new, as men hath noted it. Moreouer, I haue declared vnto your grace, how that I woulde haue good workes done, & would not haue a Christen mans life to bée an idle thyng, or els a life of vncleannes: but I would haue them to bée chaunged into all vertue, and goodnes, and to liue in good workes, after the commaundement & will of God. So that your grace may well perceiue, that myne aduersaries hath not reported truely on me, when they haue sayd, how that I would, that men should neither fast, nor pray, nor geue almes, nor yet bé penitent for their sinnes. I haue neuer sayd it, nor yet taught no lyke sentence, I take God to recorde, my workes, and my dédes, and all my writynges, that euer I wrote, or made. Wherfore I doubt not, if it please your grace, graciously to here me, but that I wil proue them vntrue in this cause, & many other mo. This doth almighty God know to bée true.

It is no new doctrine that is nowe taught.

Who euer preserue your moste royall maiestie, in honour, and goodnes. Amen.

What the Church is: and who bee therof: and whereby men may know her.

The Pope and hys Churche agreeth no more with the maners of holy Churche, then darknes & light.

The name of the holy church, haue those mẽ of long tyme vsurped presumptuously and wout all shame, they were the greatest enemyes that holy church could haue in earth. For they did no more agrée wt the maners of holy church, then darknes and light, then God and ý deuyll. For where holy church hard no man but Christ onely: They would heare all manner of men saying Christ, and neuer heare him, except it weare to to their profit or glory.

Where as holy church was ruled in this world, they would rule all the world, & where as holy church would bé holy by Christ onely, they would bé holy by their owne helpe.

And where as holy church was allwayes despised, and persecuted of the world, They would bé honored of ý world and persecuters of all men.

The Pope is a persecutor of holy Church.

And where as holy church was inwardly decked with spiritual vertues, they would bé outwardly shinyng in spirituall araye. And where as holy church would bé chaste in spyte they would with their mouthes vow chastite, and spend all their liues in whore dome.

And where as holy church dyd allwayes shew mékenes in the worlde, they would bé so proude, ý hart could deuise no more.

Breifely whatsoeuer thing ý was agreable with the church, of that had they neuer a crumme, but allonely by violence vsurped the name of holy church, So that if a man had had a crowne or a long goune and a white smock smock ouer his gowne, thē was there no remedy but hée must nedes bée of the church, yea and holy church her self. So ỳ if a Barber had made a Bul a crowne, & a Taylor Jack napes a lōg gowne, & brought an Asse forth in a white rochet, thē no mā might dout but ỳ there were holy church, & euerye man must fall downe to receyue clene remission a pœna and a culpa, toties quoties, for there came the successours of Peter & Paule: and they that haue the despensatiō of Christes blood, and the merites of holy saints, and ỳ suffrages of holy church to distribute, and the key bearers of heauē and hell. Who can denye but this is truth?

How farre the Pope doth differ with his Churche from the true holy Church.

The foule and greate abuse of the Pope in takyng vpō hym, that hee and his were ỳ holy Church.

It is to opē to nēde an probation, for wee sée it dayly before our eyes. So that if a man will compare our M Christ ỳ is ỳ very head of holy church vnto these Prelates (that call them selues his viccars) hée shall finde but smale agrément, betwéene the person and the vicar: and hée that will consider S. Peter and S. Paule, withall other Apostels shall think, that eyther they were none of holy Church, or els our prelats: for they agrée in nothing. Yea & hée may reckē that S. Peter & S. Paule were starke fooles & ryght mad men that liued so despectuous a lyfe. What nēde me to make many wordes, or to tell their names that I speake of, There is no doubt but that galde horse will bécwray hym selfe. But shortly, if the deuyll would come in his owne person disguised, tell me how it were impossible that hée could bée more contrary to Christ and hys apostels, then those men that call thē selues ỳ holy church: yea take away the name of the church, and set in her stéede the name of the deuyll, & how will you then know a byshop frō the deuyll? By their workes? nay trewly for they bée all one: And yet will you bée the heades of Christes church, yea the holy church her selfe: not so yée wicked, not so.

What difference is betweene a Byshop & the deuill.

Wherefore that this blessed spouse of Christ may bée knowen from thée open and abhominable whores and harlotes, therefore will I (by gods grace) set out what holy Church is and where by men shall know her,

This worde Ecclesia both in ỳ new testament and the olde, is taken oftētymes for the whole congregatiō and and the whole multitude of ỳ people both good and bad, as it is in the booke of Numeri: Why haue you brought the congregation or Church of God into wildernes. Nume. 20.

Also in an other place, The king turned his face and blessed the whole congregation or Church of Israell, and all the Church of Israell stode. 3. King. 8.

Likewise in the new testamēt Saint Paule to the Corinthians, I haue sēt vnto you Tymothy the which shall learne you my wayes, ỳ bée in Christ Iesu, as I doe learne euery where in all congregations. 1. Cor. 4.

Also in an other place: doe you despise the congregation of God? and shame thē that haue not? In all these places & in many moe, is it open that this greke worde Ecclesia is taken for the whole congregation both of good & bad. Wherfore this is not ỳ church that we will greatly speake of: for in this church are Iewes and Sarasens Purtherers, and Thœues, Baudes, and Harlots, though we know them not. 1. Cor. 11.

But there is an other holy Church of the which S. Paule speaketh: you men loue your your wiues, as Christ hath loued the Church, and hath geuē him selfe for her, that hée might sanctifie her, and clense her in the fountaine of water through the worde of life, to make her to him selfe a glorious Church without spot or wrincle, or any such thyng, but that she might bée holy & without blame. Here haue you the very true Churche of Christ, that is so pure and so cleane without spotte. Ephe. 5.

The holy Churche truely defined.

But wherby is shée pure & cleane: not by her owne merites nor by her owne might, not by exteriour araye, not by gold nor siluer, nor yet by precious stones, neither by myters nor crosestaues, nor by pillers nor pollares. But wherby then: by Christ onely which hath geuen him selfe for that intēt that hée would make her cleane and therefore ſayth S. Paule: He gaue him ſelfe that he might ſanctifie her, that he might cleanſe her, and make her to him ſelfe a glorious Church.

The true holy church is that which is ſanctified & made holy by Chriſt.

Also in an other place: you are waſhed, you are ſanctified, you are iuſtified in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, and in the ſpirite of God. See my Lordes, how the Church is waſhed by Chriſt & by his holy ſpirite, and not by your bleſſynges, not by your ſpirituall ornamentes, nor by your ſpirituall holy water, for theſe thynges cannot helpe the holy Church: for ſhe is holy in ſpirite and not in outwarde hypocriſie: ſhe is alſo cleanſed by Chriſtes bleſſed bloud, & not by outward diſguiſinges.

1. Cor. 1.

This doth S. Auguſtine wel proue, ſaying, Of Chriſt is the church made fayre: firſt was ſhe filthie in ſinnes, afterward by pardon and by grace was ſhe made fayre &c. Here S. Auguſtine ſayth ẏ Chriſt hath made his Church fayre, and that by his grace & his pardon, and not by your pardons, nor by your grace. For this Church ſtãdeth by Chriſtes election, & not by yours. And if Chriſt haue not waſhed you & choſen you then bee you none of this Church, though you ride with a thouſand ſpiritual horſes, and haue all the ſpirituall tokẽs on earth. For and if ẏ ſonne of God haue deliuered you, thẽ are you truely deliuered. Ye can not make by all your power and holynes that we ſhall alwayes finde good ale or wyne where there hangeth out a greene ſigne: and will you with your ſpirituall ſignes and tokens make the Churche of God to folow you, or by them aſſigne out where the Churche ſhall bee? Nay, nay, my Lords, it will not bee: but they that beleeue ẏ Chriſt hath waſhed them from their ſinnes, and ſticke faſt vnto his merites, and to the promiſe made to them in hym onely, they bee the Church of God, & ſo pure and ſo cleane that it ſhall not bee lawfull, no not for Peter, to ſay that they bee vncleane: but whether they bee Jew or Greeke, kyng or ſubiect, carter or Cardinall, butcher or Byſhop, tancardbearer or cannelrater, free or bounde, Frier or fidler, Auguſtinus de Verbis domini ſer. 50.

Iohn. 6.

The faithful beleuers in Chriſtes merites, are ẏ ryght holy church of God.

Monke or miller: if they beleeue in Chriſtes word, & ſticke faſt to his bleſſed promiſes, and truſt onely in the merites of his bleſſed bloud, they bee the holy Church of God, yea and the very true church afore God. And you with all your ſpiritual tokens, & with all your exteriour cleannes, remaine in your filthynes of ſinne: from the which all your bleſſings, all your pardons, all your ſpiritualitie, all your holynes, can not cleanſe you, nor bring you into this Churche. Boaſt, crake, blaſt, bleſſe, curſe till your holy eyes ſtart out of your head, it wil not helpe you, for Chriſt choſeth his church, at his iudgement and not at yours. The holy ghoſt is free, & inſpireth where he will, he will neither bee bound, to Pope nor Cardinall, Archbiſhop nor Byſhop, Abbot nor Prior, Deacon nor Archdeacon, Parſon nor Vicare, Nunne nor Frier.

God is not to bee ruled by any ſtate or degree of perſon.

Briefly come all the whole rabble of you togither that call your ſelues ẏ holy Churche, and exclude all other: yea and take ſunne, mone, & ſtarres to helpe you with all the frendes you haue in heauẽ and earth: and yet ſhall you not bee of holy church, except that you haue ẏ ſpirite of Chriſt, & bee waſhed in his bleſſed bloud. For ẏ holy Churche of Chriſt is nothyng els but that congregation, that is ſanctified in ſpirite, redeemed with Chriſtes bloud, and ſticketh faſt and ſure alonely to the promiſes that he made therein.

The holy Churche which is ẏ true church of God is to ẏ worlde inuiſible.

So that the Church is a ſpirituall thyng, and no exterior thyng, but inuiſible from carnall eyes (I ſay not that they bee inuiſible that bee of the Church, but that holy Church in her ſelfe is inuiſible) as ſayth is, and her purenes and cleanes is before Chriſt onely, and not before the worlde, for the worlde hath no iudgement nor knowledge of her: but all her honour and cleanes is before Chriſt ſure and faſt. And if there appeare any of her goodnes vnto the worlde, of that ſhe maketh no reckenyng, nor thinketh her ſelfe any thyng thyng the better, that the worlde iudgeth well of her: for all her truſt is in Chriſt onely. She ſuffe-

ſuffereth the woꝛlde to rage and blaſpheme both agaynſt her and agaynſt Chꝛiſt her maker. Shée ſtandeth faſt and beléeueth ſted faſtly, that, that ſhal haue a ſhamefull ende, and euerlaſting damnation to rewarde. Bꝛiefly, her meditations and her thoughtes are heauenly, and all that ſhée doth is ſpirituall. Foꝛ ſhée can not erre, ſhée cleaueth ſo faſt to the woꝛde of God that is the veritie.

The true holy church is the piller and ground of trueth.

And foꝛ this cauſe S. Paule calleth her the piller and grounde of truth, not that ſhée is ſo ſure of, and in her owne ſtrength, but that ſhée ſticketh ſo faſt to the lyuyng God, and to hys bleſſed woꝛde, that is the very true Church, that is ſcattered thoꝛow all the woꝛlde, and is neyther bounde to perſon by the reaſon of dignitie, noꝛ yet to any place by the reaſon of fayned holynes, but ſhée is a frée thynge thoꝛow all the woꝛlde, as S. Auguſtine doth witneſſe in theſe woꝛdes. The holy Church are wée, but I doe not ſay, as one ſhould ſay, wée that bée here alonely, that heare mée now, but as many as be here faythfull Chꝛiſtened inē in this Church, that is to ſay, in thys Citye, as many as bée in thys region, as many as bée beyonde the ſea, as many as bée in all the woꝛlde (foꝛ from the ryſing of the ſunne, till the goyng down, is the name of God pꝛayſed) ſo is the holy Church our mother. &c.

Auguſt. ſer. 99. de tempore.

The holy Church is the congregation of faythfull men where ſoeuer they bee in the woꝛld.

Here haue you playnely, that the holy Church is the congregation of faythfull men, whereſoeuer they bée in the woꝛlde. And neyther the Pope, noꝛ yet hys Cardinalles bée moꝛe this Church oꝛ of thys Church then the poꝛeſt man in earth. Foꝛ this church ſtandeth alonely in the ſpirituall faith of Chꝛiſt Jeſus, and not in dignities noꝛ honours of the woꝛlde, as Liranus doth declare in theſe woꝛdes. The Church doth not ſtand in men by reaſon of ſpirituall power, oꝛ ſecular dignities: Foꝛ many Pꝛinces and many Popes, and other inferiour perſons haue ſwerued frō the fayth. Wherfoꝛe that Church doth ſtand in thoſe perſons in whome is the true knowledge and confeſſion of fayth, and of veritie. &c.

Lyra in mat. ca. 19.

O my Loꝛdes, what will you ſay to Lyra? I haue great maruayle that you burne hym not. It is hye tyme to condemne hym foꝛ an heretike, foꝛ hée ſpeaketh agaynſt your lawe xxiij. q. 1. Quodcunq;. Where as your gloſe declareth that God ſuffereth not, the church of Rome foꝛ to erre. And Lyra ſayth playnely that many popes haue erred, and alſo that the Church ſtandeth not in dignitie, but in confeſſion of Chꝛiſt and of hys bleſſed veritie.

But now here wyll bée obiected that I fayne ſuch a Church, as our Logitions doe intentionem ſecundam, that is a thyng ý is no where. Where ſhall a man finde a Church that is ſo pure and ſo cleane that hath neyther ſpot noꝛ wꝛinckle in her, and that is wythout all ſinne, ſéeyng that all men muſt of trueth ſaye, foꝛgéeue vs our treſpaſſe? And if any man ſay (bée hée neuer ſo righteous) that hée hath no ſinne, thē is hée a lyer, and there is no veritie in hym. To thys I aunſwere, that thys holy Church hath ſin in her yet is ſhée pure and cleane. Marke S. Paules woꝛdes: Chꝛiſte hath geuen hymſelfe foꝛ her, that hée might make her gloꝛious. So that the cleannes of this holy church is the mercy of God toward her thoꝛow Chꝛiſt: foꝛ whoſe ſake, he layeth nothing to her charge: yea and if any other perſon woulde, hée is ready to géeue her his cleanes, and to let her by fayth clayme of right hys purenes foꝛ her owne. Foꝛ betwéene them, all is common, as betwéene man and wyfe. So that if the Church loke on her owne merites and of her owne woꝛkes, ſhée is full of ſinne, and muſt néedes ſay, demitte mihi debita. The which ſhée néeded not to ſay if ſhée had none.

Math. 6. 1. Iohn. 1. Ephe. 5.

The holy Churche how it is made pure and cleane without ſpotte oꝛ wꝛinkle.

But if ſhée referre her ſelfe vnto the merites of her bleſſed huſbande Chꝛiſt Jeſus, and to the cleanes that ſhée hath in hys bloud, thē is ſhée without ſpotte. Foꝛ by the reaſon that ſhée ſticketh by fayth ſo faſt vnto her huſband Chꝛiſt, and doth abyde in confeſſion of her ſinne, & requireth mercy foꝛ them, therfoꝛe is there nothing layde to her charge, but all thyng is forgæuen her. And therefore sayth S. Paule, there is no damnation vnto them that bée in Christ Jesu. And that this may bée the playner, I wyll bryng you S. Augustines wordes, the which was vered of the Donatistes wyth thys same reason that is layd agaynst mée, hys wordes bée these. The whole Church sayth, forgæue vs our sinnes, wherefore shée hath spottes and wrinckles, but by knowledging of them, her wrinckles bée extended and stretched out, by knowledging, her spottes are washed away.

Augustinus de Verbis Apostoli. s. 29.

The church abydeth in prayer that shée myght bée clēsed by knowledging of her sinnes. As lōg as we liue herein so standeth it, and when wée shall departe out of thys bodye, all such thynges bée forgæuen to euery mā, wherfore by thys meane ỳ church of God, is in the treasures of God, wythout spotte and wrinckles: and therefore here doe wée not lyue wythout sinne, but wée shall passe from hence wythout sinne. &c. Here haue you clearely that the church of God is clensed and purified by Christ for knowledgyng of her sinnes, and not by her owne purenes. Wherefore such a church there must nædes bée, though that ỳ carnall eye can not sée her, nor fleshly reason can iudge of her. Wherefore wée beléeue thys article by fayth, that holy church is a communion or felowshyp of holy men, and know it not by séeyng or feelyng, as wée doe the felowshyp of Drapers or mercers, for then were it none article of the faith.

The church of God is the treasures of God without spotte or wrinkle.

And it is playne, that all your exterior signes, wyth all your holy ornamentes, as your holy myters, your holy crossestaues, your holy pyllers, polaris, your holy red gloues, your holy ouches, and your holy rynges, your holy annoynted fingers, your holy vestmentes, your holy challices, and your holy golden showes, yea, & take also to helpe you S. Thomas of Canterburyes holy showe, wyth all the holy bootes of holy Monkes, and all these togither can not make one crumme of holynes in you, nor helpe you one pricke forward, that you may bée wythin thys church. For if these thynges coulde helpe, then were it no mastery to make an Asse to bée of the church of God.

That which is of fayth can neither bee seene nor felt.

But our holy mother the Church hath an other holynes, that commeth from God the father thorough the swéete bloud of his blessed sonne Jesus Christ, in whom is all her confidence and trust. Unto whom she sticketh onely by stedfast fayth, by whose purenes shee is also pure in that, that she doth confesse her vnclennes, for shee beléeueth stedfastly that she hath an aduocate for her sinne to ỳ father of heauen, which is Christ Jesus, and hée is the satisfaction for her sinnes: & hée of his mercy & not of her merites hath chosen her for to bée his, and because she is his, therfore must she bée cleane so long as she abideth in him.

The true holynes that is of our right holye mother the Church.

1. Iohn. 2.

This is well declared in S. John where our master Christe is compared to the vyne and all the members of holy Churche to the branches, that as the braunches, can bring forth no frute of them selues, so cā holy church of her selfe bring forth no gōdnes except shee remaine in Christ by perfite fayth.

Iohn. 15.

This is wel proued by your owne law whose wordes bée these, therfore is the Church holy, because she beléeueth righteously in God. &c. Here you not the cause wherfore the Church is holy: because she beléeueth righteously in God, that is she beléeueth in nothyng but in him, and she beléeueth nor heareth no worde but his, as our master Christe beareth witnesse, my shéepe heare my voyce, and an other mans voyce doe they not know. Also in an other place, hée that is of God heareth the wordes of God. How cōmeth this, that ỳ Church of God hath so sure a iudgemēt, that she knoweth the voyce of Christ frō other voyces, & can not erre in her iudgement? Because that Christ hath chosen her, and because she is learned of God as our master Christ sayth, and because she hath (as S. John sayth) the inwarde ayntmēt of God, ỳ teacheth his all maner of verity, so that she can not erre. But why can shee not erre? because she may doe what she will? Because

that that all thing that she doth, is well done: because she may make new rules and newe lawes at her pleasure: Because she may inuent a newe seruice of God that is not in Scripture at her wil: Nay nay my Lordes. For she is but a woman and must bee ruled by her husbande, yea she is but a sheepe and must heare ỹ voyce of her shepheard, and so long as she doth, so long cã she not erre because the voyce of her shepheard can not bee false.

De pene. Dist. 2. Si in glossa. 24. q. 1. Aretta & in Glossa.

This may be proued by your own law whose wordes bee these, ỹ whole Church can not erre. Also in an other place, the congregation of faythfull men must nedes bee, whiche also can not erre. &c. These wordes bee playne what Church it is that can not erre: that is the congregation of faythfull men that bee gathered in Christes name, whiche haue Christes spirite, whiche haue the holy oyntement of God, whiche abyde fast by Christes word, and heare no other mãs voyce but his. Now my Lordes gather you all togither with all the lawes that you cã make, and all the holynes, that you can deuise and crye, the Church, the Churche, and the Councels, the Councels that were lawfully gathered in the power of the holy ghost (all this may you say & yet lye) and if you haue not in deede the holy ghost with in you, and if you doe heare any other voyce then Christes, then are you not of the Churche, but of the deuill, and theaues & murtherers as Christ saith. For you come into the fold of Christ without him, you bring not his voice. but you come with your owne voyce, with your owne statutes, with your owne word, & your owne mandamus, mandamus, precipimus, precipimus, excommunicamus, excommunicamus.

The faythfull congregation can not erre.

The voyce of murtherers and theeues.

These bee the voyces of murtherers and Theeues, and not of Christ, therfore you can not but erre, for you bee not taught of God, you haue not the holy oyntment, you haue not the worde of God for you, you heare not the voyce of the true shepheard, therfore must you nedes erre in all your counsells. This is an other maner of rule then my Lorde of Rochester doth assigne to examine your counsels by, for hee sayth, where that the Pope and the counsell doth not agree all in one, there will hee suspect the counsell not to bee right.

A rule that Rochester teacheth to know the difference betweene ỹ Pope and Councell.

Who did euer heare such a rule of a Christean man: yea and of a bishop: yea and of a doctor of Diuinite, where hath hee learned this Diuinite: to recken a counsell to bee trew, because ỹ the Pope and so many men doe agree in one, yea and that such men as haue so often tymes erred in their coũcels, as hee doth declare hym self rekening the counsell of Constantinople that had .330. Bysshops and yet did erre, and hee knew no other cause, but because the Pope did not agree to them. Is not this a resonable cause? cã not the Pope erre: let hym read his own lawe. Distinctio. 19. Anastasius, & Distinctio. 40. Si Papa and also .24. q 1. Aretta in the glose, and there shall hee fynde that the Pope hath erred. Wherefore then should the matter stande in his iudgment: Now how will hee by thys rule saue the counsels of constance, and of Basell where in both counsels, the Popes were condemned for heretykes? As the same counsels make mencion, also that the councels haue erred, that graũted hee hymselfe, but peraduenture hee will saye, that they were not full Councels.

The Councell erreth if the Pope agree not to their doynges.

Popes haue erred.

Popes condemned for heretickes.

Now is it well amended, what distinction is (as conscernyng the veritie in a counsell that hath a thowsand bysshops and in an other that hath fyue thowsand, can the multitude helpe to thee veritie: Then had the Turke the veritie and we the falsed, then had the Prophet Micheas the worse part for hee was alone against .iiij. hundred so was ỹ verytie by ỹ Prophets of Baal, and not by Elyas, for they were foure hundred and fyftye & hee was but one man. Wherefore Christes flocke is alwayes ỹ smallest nũber in this world but yet it is the best, not the smallest number maketh Christes flocke, but that Christes Church stãdeth neyther by the greatest number nor yet by the smallest, nor by the iudgmẽt or numbring of man, but by the callyng and election of God. Wherefore let my Lorde bring forth what counsell that hee will, and if they haue not the word of God, I will not all onely say they may erre, but also that they doe erre in verye deede. And that will I proue by the greatest lawyer that they haue called Panormitanus whose wordes bee these, that Councels may erre as they haue erred, as concernyng that contract of matrimony, inter raptorem & raptam, and the saying of Saint Hierome was afterward preferred aboue the statute of the counsel as it is proued. 36.q.2. Tria, for in thinges concerning the fayth is the saying of a priuat person to bee preferred afore the saying of the pope, if hee haue better reasõs and scriptures of the new, and of the olde testamẽt for him then the Pope: nor it can not helpe, to say that the counsell can not erre, because that Christ did pray for his Church ẏ her fayth should not fayle. For I aũswere to this, that though ẏ generall coũcell doe represent ẏ whole vniuersall church: neuertheles in very deede there is not ẏ very vniuersall church, but representatiue. For the vniuersal church stãdeth in ẏ election of all fayth full men: & all faithfull mẽ of ẏ world make that vniuersall Church, whose head and spouse is Christ Jesus, & the Pope is but the vicar of Christ and not the very head of the Church, this is the Church that can not erre. &c.

De electio. c. significa.

The Councell of Mideld dyd erre.

A generall Councell is, not the vniuersall Churche.

Here it is open that the counsell may erre, and that a priuate person hauing scriptures for hym is to bee heard before the Pope and also ẏ coũsell, hauing no scriptures for them, you haue also what is the very trew Church which can not erre, which thing can not bee verifyed of your counsels for they bee neyther without errour, nor yet the holy Church, but that they doe represẽt the Church as a legate representeth a kings person: but of that followeth not that hee is ẏ king, or hath as much power as the king, or is aboue. The king or that he may rule the king, this may also bee proued by S. Augustine whose wordes bee these, those counselles that bee gathered in euery Prouince must without doubt geue place to the auctoritie of the ful counsels which bee gathered of all Christendom: and also those full counsels oft tymes must bee amended by the full counsels that come after: if any thyng bee opened by any experience that was afore shut, and if any thing bee knowen that was hydden. And this may bee done without any shadowe of superstitious pride, without any boasted Arrogancy, with out any contentiõ of malicious enuy, but with holy meekenes, with holy peace and with Christen charitye. &c.

Augustinus de bap li. 2. c. 3 contra Donatistas.

Councels haue erred and many erre.

Here it is playne that your full coũsels may bee amended and reformed: ẏ which thing needs not, if they could not erre: yea and if they did not erre in deede. Moreouer you must needes graunt that there is a rule where by your counsels must bee examined, & where by sentence must bee geuen which of your councels bee true and which false, by the which rule if your counsels bee not ordered, they must needes erre and bee false, and of the deuill. Wherfore gather all your coũsels togither, and yet of them can you not make holy church.

But peraduenture there may bee many in your coũsels good and perfite men and of holy Churche: but they and you togither make not the vniuersall holy church that can not erre: neither haue you any auctoritie ouer holy Church, further then the holy scripture of God: but as soone as you forsake Christ and his holy worde, so soone are you the congregation of the deuyll, and theeues and murtherers: and yet for all this, there must needes bee an holy church of Christ in earth, that is neyther bounde to Jerusalem nor to Constantinople, nor yet to Rome, as though shee were lyke vnto the Alle and the sole.

The holy scriptures are the iudges of the Counsels doings

But now wyll there bee obiected, that our Mayster Christ commaundeth, if my brother offende mee, that I shoulde complayne to the church. Now is this church that I haue set out spirituall, and no man knoweth her but God onely, shee is also scattered thorow out the worlde, wherfore how can a man complayne to that church

Math. 10.

church? I aunſwere, our Y. Chriſt doth playnely ſpeake of a man that hath wronge, the which muſt nedes bee a perticuler and a certayne man: and therefore likewyſe hee biddeth hym complayne not to the vniuerſall church, but to the perticular church.

There are perticular Churches to whome wee may complayne.

Now this particular church, if ſhee bee of God, and a true member of the vniuerſal church, ſhee will iudge righteouſly after Chriſtes worde, and after the probations brought afore her. Neuertheleſſe, oftētymes cōmeth it to paſſe, ẏ this particular church doth fully and wholy erre, and iudgeth vnryght, and excommunicateth him that is bleſſed of god, as it is open in your owne lawe, whoſe wordes bee theſe: oftētymes hee that is caſt out is within, and hee that is within is kept without. &c.

24. q. 3. Si. quis et c. cū aliquis.

Here haue you playnely ẏ the particular church may erre. Wherefore that church that can not erre is all only the vniuerſall church which is cauled the communion and the felowſhip of Saintes, the which addition was made by holy fathers (for in Cipriāns time was there no mention of it) by all likelyhode to declare the preſumption of certayne men, and of certayne congregations that reckened themſelues to bee holy church. Wherfore my Lordes ſee well to it, leaſt the holy Ghoſt haue pricked you wyth thys addition, for you haue alwayes made your ſelfe holy church, yea and that wythout any holines. Now haue I declared vnto you, what is holy church, that is, the congregation of faithfull men thorowout all ẏ world: and whereby ſhee is holy, that is, by Chriſtes holyneſſe and by Chriſtes bloud: and alſo what is the cauſe that ſhee can not erre: becauſe that ſhee keepeth her ſelfe ſo faſt to the worde of God, whiche is a perfite & a true rule.

The communion & felowſhip of Saintes is the vniuerſall Church.

Nowe muſt we declare by what ſignes and tokēs, that we may know that in this place or in that place there bee certeine members of this holye church. For though ſhee bee in her ſelf ſpirituall, and can not bee perfitely knowen, by our exteriour ſenſes, yet neuertheleſſe we may haue certeine tokens, of her ſpirituall preſence, whereby we may recken that in this place and in that place bee certeine of her members. As by a naturall example, though the ſoule of man in her ſelfe bee ſpirituall & inuiſible: yet may we haue ſure tokens of her preſence, as hearyng mouyng, ſpeakyng, ſmellyng, with ſuch other. So likewiſe, where the word of God is truely and perfitely preached without the damnable dreames of men, and where it is well of the hearers receiued, & alſo where we ſee good workes that doe openly agree with the doctrine of the Goſpell, theſe bee good and ſure tokēs whereby we may iudge, that there bee ſome men of holy Church.

How a mā may know the church.

In example teaching how ẏ true church may be knowne.

As to the firſt, whereas the Goſpell is truely preached it muſt nedes light in ſome mens hartes, as the prophete witneſſeth, my word, ſhall not returne agayne to me fruſtrate, but it ſhall doe all thyng that I will, and it ſhall proſper, in thoſe thynges, vnto the which I did ſend it. Eſay. 55.

Alſo S. Paule ſayth, fayth cōmeth by hearyng, and hearyng commeth by the word of God: and therfore it is open in holy Scripture that when Peter ſpake the wordes of God, the holy ghoſt fell downe on them all. Wherfore it is open that Gods worde can neuer bee preached in vayne, but ſome men muſt nedes receiue it, and thereby bee made of holy Churche, though that men doe not know them neither by their names nor yet by their faces, for this word is receiued into their hartes. Roma. 10. Actes. 10.

The ſecond token is, that the receiuers of this word doe worke well thereafter as S. Paule declareth of his hearers: when you receiued of vs the word wherewith God was preached, you receiued it not as the word of men, but euen (as it was in deede) the word of God, whiche worketh in you that beleeue. So that if men doe worke after the worde of God, it is a good token that therebee men of the Churche, though that we (hypocriſie is ſo ſubtile and ſo ſecret) may bee oftentymes deceiued by theſe outward workes, but neuertheles charitie iud- 1. Theſſ 2.

Good workes are the fruite of good fayth.

geth well of all thinges that haue a good outward shewe, and bée not opẽly agaynst the worde of God. But it is no ieoperdy though charitie bée deceiued, for it is opẽ to all ieoperdies: but fayth is neuer deceiued.

Charitie may be deceaued, but fayth can neuer bee deceaued.

Now to our purpose, that where the worde of God is preached truely, it is a good & a perfite token that there bée some mẽ of Christes church. This may bée proued by Chrisostomes wordes: they that bée in Iudea let thẽ flée vp into the mountaines, that is to say they that bée in Christendome, let them geue thẽ selues to Scriptures. Wherfore commaundeth hée that all Christened men in that tyme should flye vnto Scriptures, for in that tyme in the which hereties haue crept into the Church, there can bée no true probation of Christendome, nor no other refuge vnto Christen men, willyng to know the veritie of fayth, but ỳ Scriptures of God. Afore by many wayes was it shewed which was the Church of Christ, and which was the congregation of Gentiles: but now there is no other way to them that will know whiche is the very true Churche of Christ, but alonely by scriptures. By workes first was the church of Christ knowen when the conuersation of Christen men, either of all or of many were holy, the which holynes had not the wicked men, but nowe Christen men, bée as euill or worse then heretickes or Gentiles, yea & greater continencie is founde among them, then among Christen men.

A saying of Chrisostome.

Wherefore hée that will knowe which is ỳ very church of christ, how shall hée knowe it but by Scriptures onely. Wherfore our Lord cõsidering that so greate confusion of thynges should come in the latter dayes, therfore commaundeth hée that Christen men which bée in Christendome willing to reserue the stedfastnes of true fayth, should flye vnto no other thyng but vnto Scriptures, for if they haue respect vnto other thynges they shall bée sclaundered and shall perishe, not vnderstandyng whiche is the true Church. &c.

These wordes nède no exposition they bée plaine inough: they doe also exclude all maner of learning sauing holy scripture. Wherefore sée how you can with honestie saue your holy lawes, and defend them against Chrisostome. Moreouer if Chrisostome complayne of the incontenency that was in his dayes, how would hée complaine if hée now liued & sawe the baudry and fornication, that is in the Church? And also he sendeth men to scriptures that will know the holy Church, and not vnto ỳ holy Church for in the Church were hereseyes, but not in scripture.

Chrisostome sendeth vs to scriptures to learne which is the holy Church, & not vnto them that call themselues ỳ holy church.

Also. S. Paule witneseth the same saying, you are built vpon the foundacion of the Apostles and Prophets, heare haue you playnely that the very trewe Church is grounded, yea and founded of holy scripture, and therefore whereseoeuer that the worde of God is preached, that is a good token that there bée some men of Christes Church. But now as to the fruites and workes of this Church, she doth all onely fetch out her maner of lyuing and all her good workes out of ỳ holy word of God, and she fayneth not, nor dreameth any other new holines, or new inuented works that be not in scripture, but she is content wt Christes learning and beléeueth, that Christ hath sufficiently taught her all manner of good workes that bée to the honour of our heauẽly father. Therfore inuenteth shée no other way to heauen but followeth Christ onely, in suffering oppressions, and persecutions, blaspheminges, & al other things that may bée layd vnto her, which as S. Augustine sayth she learned of our M. Christ. Our holy mother ỳ church throughout all the world scattered far and long, in her trew head Christ Iesus taught, hath learned not to feare the contumelys of the Crosse nor yet of death: but more and more is shée strengthed not in resisting but in suffering. &c.

Ephe. 2.

The holy Church is builte and founded vpon the Apostles & Prophets.

Augustinum.

The true Church is a sufferer, and no persecutor.

Now my Lordes compare your selfe to this rule of S. Augustine, and let vs sée how you can bring your self into the Church: or els to proue your self to bée holy: The Church suffereth persecutions (for as S. Paule sayth, they that will liue deuoutly in Christ must suffer persecution) and you with stand all thinges and suffer nothing. You oppresse euery mã, and you will bée oppressed of no mã. You persecute euery man, and no man may speake a worde agaynst you, no though it bée neuer so true. You cast euery mã in prison, & no mã may touch you, but he shal bée cursed. You compell euery mã to say as you say, & you will not once say as Christe sayth. And as for your holynes all the worlde knoweth what it is: for it standeth in clothing and in decking, in watching and slæping, in eating and drinking this meate or ỳ meate, this drynke or that drinke, in pattering and mumbling these Psalmes or those Psalmes, without deuocion.

persecucions

1. Tim. 3.

The Popes church are persecutors but no sufferers.

Briefly all your holines is in bokes Bels, Cãdels, Challeces, oyle creme water, horses, houndes, pallaces, & all that is mighty and glorious in the world, there on hange you, there in glory you, there on crake you, there on boast you, there vpon builde you. Is this ỳ natures of ỳ church? is this holines? Of whome haue you learned these maners? You can not deny but these bée true, and if you would denye it, all the world is witnesse agaynst you: yea and also your owne facts & dœdes. Of whom haue you learned this holynes? not of Christ nor yet of his holy Church: but you haue learned it of the Arians, ỳ were the seruauntes of the deuyll. Hilarius wryteth in these wordes, the Church doth threaten, with banyshmentes & prysonmentes, and shée compelleth men to beléeue her, which was exciled and cast in prison, now hangeth shée on the dignitye of her fellowshyp, the which was consecrated, by the threateninges of persecutors: shée causeth priestes to flye that was encreased & by the chasing away of priestes, shée glorieth that shée is loued of ỳ world, ỳ which could neuer bée Christes except the worlde did hate her.

The glory of the Popes churche is in trash.

How thynke you my Lordes, doe not you all these thinges, that bée layd to the Arians charge? Your owne frendes, yea your owne consciences must nœdes accuse you of all these thinges, and yet will you bée called Christes children, I lay nothyng to you, but that holy Doctours lay vnto you.

But let vs sée what S. Barnarde sayth on you: they call themselues the ministers of Christ, but they serue Antichrist: they goe gorgiously arayed of our Lordes goods, vnto whome they gœue none honour, and of these goods commeth the harlottes decking that thou séest dayly, the game players disguising, and kynges apparell: of thys cõmeth golde in their bridles, in their saddles, and in their spurres, so that their spurres bée bryghter thẽ the aulters: of thys commeth they plenteous wine pressles and their full sellers, bolkyng from thys vnto that: of thys cõmeth their tunnes of swéete wynes: of thys bée their bagges so filled, for such thinges as these bée, will they bée rulers of the church, as Deacons, Archdeacons, Bysshoppes, and Archbyshops. &c.

Barnardus super can. f. 33.

Note here the saying of Saint Barnard.

My Lordes I had thought to haue added Cardinalles and Legates, Abbottes and Pryors, to haue made the company more holy, but I durst not. How thinke you, of whom doth hée speake when hée sayth Bysshops and Archbyshops: what holynes doth hée reprowue, when hée speaketh of gorgious araye, of harlottes deckyng, of game players disguising, of goulden spurres, saddelles & bridles? If there were an C. that did vse it more then you, yet must you nœdes graunt that hée speaketh of you. Hée palleth more in condemning of your holy ornamentes, for hée caulleth you the seruauntes of Antichrist, and your holy ornamentes harlottes decking, and game players disguising, and hée saith that you are neyther the church nor of the church, but the seruauntes of Antichrist, how thinke you by S. Barnarde, it is tyme to condemne hym, for hée speaketh agaynst holy church and all her holy ornamentes, thys dare I well say, that if the best

S. Barnard greatly reprooueth the insaciable pryde of the Popes Church.

Christen

Chriſten man within the Realme ſhould preach theſe wordes of Saint Barnarde, you woulde not ſticke to condemne hym for an heretike, but you were wonte to call hym ſweete Barnarde, but mée thynketh that hée is ſoure inough in thys thynge. Wherefore diſpute the matter wyth hym that you may come into the Church, and not wyth mée.

FINIS.

An other declaration of the Church, wherein hee aunſwereth to Maiſter More.

IN my firſt booke I dyd declare how that certayne men dyd take vpon them to bée counted of holy Church, whoſe maners and lyuynges, dyd nothyng agrée wyth holy church. But after that, cummeth M. More, and hée layeth to my charge, that I counted all the ſpiritualtie to bée naught, becauſe hée would make my name ſomewhat odious vnto them. But verely hée doth mée great wrõge, for it was neuer my meanyng, nor yet my ſaying. But myne intent was to declare that neyther the Pope, nor his colledge of Cardinalles, nor yet all the Byſhoppes in the worlde, gathered togither, did make holy Churche, becauſe of theyr names, or elſe for theyr long gownes, or for theyr ſhauen crownes, or elſe annoynted fingers, nor yet for any other exterior thynges, that the worlde had in admiration. But yet neuertheleſſe I dyd graunt, and alſo doe now confeſſe many good men to haue ſhauen crownes, and alſo longe gownes. But yet for theſe thyngs, they were neuer the more of the church.

xiiij. queſt. i c. Quodcũq; in Verbo Reconciliat. All the popes learning hath bëene, that hée and his, hath bëene ỳ church, the which can not erre, and all things that belong vnto them, were called ỳ goods of holy church. All lawes made by them, were the lawes of holy Church. They myght not bée conuẽted before any temporall Prince, becauſe they were men of holy church. They myght not bée hanged for murther, becauſe they were annoynted, and of holy church.

Briefely, there bée innumerable ſuch thynges inuented of them, to maynetayne and to defẽde theyr holyneſſe, and to proue that they bée holy Church, the which thinges I thynke M. More can not denye. And if hée woulde, yet there bée a great many of bookes forth comming, to proue my ſentẽce againſt him. And alſo ỳ practiſe that hath bëene vſed in ỳ worlde, will teſtifie the ſame.

M. More would haue vs to thinke there is none other holy church but ỳ Pope and his Cardinals and Byſhops &c.

I thinke M. More, nor yet any mã lyuyng, dyd euer know in hys tyme, that any man was iudged, or taken to bée of the church, but ſuch men as I haue ſpoken of. And I thynke thys name church, was neuer named, but it was taken ſpecially, and principally, for thoſe men that had ſhauen crownes, and other lyke tokens. Let mée bée reported to thoſe men that bée alyue. Now, becauſe I ſaw that theſe thynges were nothyng the cauſe of holy church, nor yet belonged greatly to holy church, therefore I ſay, was I moued to declare what holy church was, and who were thereof, and by what ſignes and tokens men myght know her.

Now to declare this, I brought certaine places of ſcripture to proue, that this worde Eccleaſia, was taken in ſcripture, for the whole congregatiõ, both of good, and bad. But I ſayd, I would not greatly ſpeake of that cõgregation, for that was not it, that could not erre, of the which was mine intent to ſpeake. And I brought for me, ỳ ſaying of S. Paule. Chriſt hath geuen hym ſelfe, for his Church, that hée might ſanctifie her, and cleanſe her in the fountaine of water, through the worde of lyfe, to make her to hym ſelfe a glorious church, without ſpot, Epeſ. 5.

or or wrincle, or any such thyng. But that she might be holy, and without blame. To prove, that the Churche was cleansed by Christ, I brought the saying of S. Augustine for me. Of Christ is the church made fayre. First was she filthy in sinnes, afterwarde by pardon, and by grace, was she made fayre. &c.

Aug. de Verbis Domini. serm. 15

Moreouer, to proue, ỳ this church was made cleane by Christ, and not by names, or by clothyng, or by any other exteriour thyng, I brought for me ỳ saying of S. John. If ỳ sonne of God haue deliuered you, then are you truely deliuered. Also S. Paule. You are washed, you are sanctified, you are iustified, in ỳ name of Jesus Christ, & in the spirite of God. But vnto these things, doth M. More answere, that I doe not well to exclude, out of this Church bad mẽ, for ỳ knowne church (sayth he) standeth in a gathering together of good mẽ and bad: & to proue that, he bringeth in certeine parables of our Sauiour Christ.

Iohn. 6.

1. Cor. 6.

To this I aunswere, that I neuer denyed, but that there was such a cõgregatiõ of good, and bad: but I sayd, that that was not ỳ very true church, afore God, though it beare the name of the Church, and in very deede, hys owne parables doth declare, that our maister Christe shall at length, geue sentence agaynst them, that call themselues falsely of the Churche. Judas was called an Apostle, and taken so of all his company, but yet our maister Christ calleth him the deuil. Now if M. More will haue Judas in hys Churche, I must bee content, that he shall also betraye Christe. The very trueth is, that bad men bee mixt here in the Churche, and after outwarde signes, bee taken for members of the Churche, specially if they bee not excomunnicate. But the Churche, whiche I dyd speake of, was not a felowshyp gathered togither in a cõsent of exteriour things, and ceremonies, as other politicke felowships bee. But it is a felowshyp specially gathered in the vnitie of fayth, hauyng the holy ghost within them to sanctifie their spirites, whiche doth set their trust onely in the redemptiõ promised thẽ, in Christes blessed bloud.

How euill men be in the church.

What the very true church is?

This I say, is the very true church of God, let the worlde say what they will, and let men call themselues as it pleaseth thẽ. For as S. Paule saith, he that hath not the spirite of God, is none of his. Also M. Mores learnyng will graunt that euill men, bee the dead members of the Churche: what they bee, worth, let other men iudge. But M. More reckoneth, that there is not such a Churche here in earth, that is without spot, and wrincle, as S. Paul sayth. For the Church, sayth he, is here gracious, and not glorious. Truely, I haue marueile, what he meaneth, thus to expound Saint Paules saying: for I thinke he can not proue, but that S. Paules saying is verified of the Church, that is here militant, and not of the church triumphaunt. But I will not at this tyme greatly dispute with M. More. But, and if he were as he hath beene, I would say some thyng more to hym, then I will doe at this tyme. He can neither mocke me, nor iest me out of cõceite, and if I were disposed to couple with hym, nor it is not hys foule, & shameles workes, and vntrue sayinges, that he layeth to me, that could feare me. But now, that it hath pleased God (without any helpe, or knowledge of me) to bryng hym vnto this fall, I will praye to God for hym, to geue hym grace, that he may reuoke all such false doctrine, as he hath brought into the worlde. For doubtles, if he abyde in the meanyng, that he is now in, I doe not see, how he can dye Gods seruaunt. Yea, his own knowen Church is agaynst hym, whõ (he sayth) men are bound to beleeue, vnder payne of damnation. But truely, as God shall iudge me, I am sory for hys trouble, if I could helpe hym with any lawfull meanes, I would doe my best, so euill will beare I him.

Homo mortuus non est homo.

M. More layeth many thynges to me wrõgfully.

But to procede farther in my matter, I will not greatly speake much of the Church, by the reason, that many other men, sence my first writinge, haue declared this article, much better then I can doe it. Wherefore I will all onelye reſite the places of holy doctours, that I haue brought for mée in my firſt booke, and the intent wherefore I aleaged them, to prowe that ẏ Church was afrée thing, throughout all the world, and not bounde eyther to place or to perſon. I brought for me ẏ saying of S. Auguſtine, saying theſe wordes. The holy Church are wée. But I doe not saye, are we, as one ſhould say, we that bée heare all onely that heare mée now, but as many as bée heare faythfull chriſtean men in this Church, ẏ is to say, in this Cytie, as many as bée in this region, as many as bée beyonde the ſea, as many as bée in all the whole world (for from ẏ ryſing of the ſunne, tyll the goinge downe, is the name of God prayſed.) So is ẏ holy Church our mother. &c.

Aug. Serm. 99. de tempore.

Alſo Lyra ſayth, The Church doth not ſtand in men, by the reaſon of ſpirituall power, or ſeculer dignitie. For many princes, and many Popes, and other inferiour perſõs, haue ſwerued from the fayth. Wherefore the church doth ſtand in thoſe perſons, in whom is the true knowledge, and confeſſion of fayth, and of veritye. &c.

Lyra in Mar. ca. xix

Here Lyra ſayth as much as I doe in cleare wordes. And M. More doth not, nor yet cã reſell hym. Afterward I bring a saying of S. Auguſtine, to prowe, that the Church hath ſpottes, and wrynckles in her: And yet by confeſſing of them, and by ſtycking to Chriſtes bloud, they bée not imputed vnto her. This is his saying.

De Verbo Apoſt. ſer. xxix.

The whole Church prayeth, Lord forgeue vs our ſinnes. Wherefore ſhe hath ſpottes, and wrynckles. But by knowledging of them, her wrynckles bée ſtreatched out, and by knowledging, her ſpottes are waſhed away. The Church continueth in prayer, ẏ ſhée myght bée clenſed by knowledging of her ſynnes. And as long as we here liue, ſo ſtandeth it. And when euery mã departeth out of this body, all ſuch ſinnes are forgeuen hym, the which ought to bée forgeuẽ. For they bée forgeuen by dayly prayer, and hée goeth hence clenſed. And the Church of God, is layde vp in the treaſure of God, for puregolde, & by this meane the Church of God is in the treaſure of our Lord, without ſpotte or wrynkell.

A notable saying of S. Auguſtine.

It foloweth: Let vs therefore pray that God may forgeue vs, and that we may forgeue our dettours, ſeeing it is sayde: and it ſhall be forgeuen vnto you. We say this dayly, and dayly we doe this, and this thing is done dayly in vs. We are not here without ſinne. But we ſhall departe hence without ſynne. &c. Let euery man iudge, whether that this place of S. Auguſtine, maketh for my purpoſe, or not, that is to say, whether that ẏ Church hath any ſpottes or wrincles in her, or not. And yet neuertheles, ſhée hath no ſpottes nor wrincles. For S. Auguſtine ſayth, ẏ Church of God is in the treaſurie of God, without any ſpotte, ſo that through Gods mercy, nothing is imputed vnto her. Her cleannes is not, ẏ ſhée hath no ſpots: but bécauſe, that for Chriſtes ſake, there is nothing layd to her charge.

M. More maketh many wordes of venyall ſynnes, and deadly ſynnes. But to ſpeake after his owne ſchole men, it ſhould bée to harde for hym to defende that expoſition, that hée here maketh of S. Auguſtine. But to prowe that the Church is cleane, by the reaſon of Chriſt, I brought for mée their owne lawe, whoſe wordes bée theſe. Therefore is ẏ Church holy, becauſe ſhée beléeueth righteouſly in God. &c.

De conſe. D. iiij. c. Igitur.

Furthermore, to prowe that this congregation of faythfull men, is the Church, that can not erre, I brought for mée their owne lawe. Whoſe wordes bée theſe. The holy Church can not erre. &c. Alſo in an other place The Congregation of faythfull men muſt nédes bée, which alſo can not erre. &c. So that it is cleare, firſt, that there muſt nedes bée a congregation of faythfull men, which bée neyther bounde to Rome, nor to Hieruſalem, nor yet to any certayne place, but it is ſpread abrode throughout the whole worlde, and ſtandeth in the vnitye of faythfull chriſten men. And that is the church, that God ſuffereth not to erre in thoſe thinges, that belong to ſalnation. Wherefore I dyd say in my oxxiiij. q. 3. Arctha in gloſa.

ther

ther boke, that the Popes councels were not the church, that coulde not erre. For, for ỹ moſt part, thoſe coũſels did not order themſelues after Gods worde. Wherfore I ſayd, they myght well erre. And for that cauſe a priuate perſon, hauing ſcripture for hym, ought to bée preferred afore a whole counſell, if they had no ſcripture. For Gods worde ought to bée iudge ouer all counſels, and to prœue this, I brought for mée the ſaying of Panormitanus, which ſayth. The counſell may erre, as it hath erred, concernyng ỹ contracte of matrimony, inter Raptorem & Raptam. And ỹ ſaying of S. Hierome, was afterward preferred aboue the ſtatute of ỹ coũſell, as it is prœued 36. queſt. 2. Tria. For in theſe thynges concernyng the fayth, the ſaying of a priuate perſon, is to bée preferred before the ſaying of the Pope, if hée haue better reaſõs and Scriptures of the newe and olde teſtament for hym, then the Pope hath. Neyther it can helpe to ſay, that the counſell can not erre, becauſe ỹ Chriſt did pray that the fayth of the church ſhould not fayle. For I aunſwere to thys, that though the generall counſell doe repreſent the whole vniuerſall church, yet neuertheleſſe, in very déede, there is not the vniuerſall church, but repreſentatiue. For the vniuerſall church ſtandeth in the election of all faythfull men, throughout the whole worlde, whoſe head & ſpouſe is Chriſt Jeſus. And the Pope is but the Uicar of Chriſt, and not ỹ very head of the church. Thys is the Church that can not erre. &c. Here ſayth this Doctour, that ſame ſẽtence of the church, that I ſayd. I brought alſo for the ſame purpoſe, the ſaying of Auguſtine, whoſe wordes bée theſe. Thoſe counſels that be gathered in euery prouince, muſt without doubt geue place to the auctoritie of the full counſels, which bée gathered of all chriſtendome. And alſo thoſe full coũſelles oftentymes muſt bée amended by the full counſelles that come afterwarde, if any thing bée opened by experience, that was before ſhutte, and if any thing bée knowne that was before hydden. And this muſt bée done without any ſhadow of ſuperſtitious pride, without any boaſted arrogãcy, without any contention of malicious enuy, but wyth holy mékenes, with holy peace, and with Chriſten charitie. &c. Here S. Auguſtine ſayth plainly, that the full counſelles may erre, and may bée reformed.

De electio. c Significat. 1.

The counſell of Welcens did erre.

Au. de Bapt. li. 2. cap. 3.

The full counſels may erre.

After this I did declare, how a mã ſhould know this church, & by what ſignes and tokens, & ſayd, that where as the worde of God was purely and ſincerely preached, and the ſacramẽts orderly miniſtred, after the bleſſed ordinaunce of Chriſt: and where as mẽ did patiently ſuffer for the veritie, & the hearers did apply their lyuing to Chriſtes doctrine, and with mékneſs receaued the holy ſacaments: Theſe I ſayde, were good and perfect tokens to iudge vppon, that there were certayne members of Chriſtes church. And to prœue this, I brought alſo S. Auguſtine, ſaying: Our holy mother the church, through all the world ſcattered farre and wyde, taught in her true head Chriſt, hath learned not to feare the contumelies of the Croſſe, nor yet of death: But more, & more, is ſhé ſtrengthened, not in reſiſting, but in ſuffering. Alſo Chriſoſtomes wordes bée theſe. They that bée in Judea, let them flye vp to the mountaines, that is to ſay, they that bée in Chriſtendome, let them géue themſelues to ſcriptures. Wherfore commaunded hée that all chriſten men in that tyme, ſhould flie vnto ſcriptures? For in that tyme, in the which, hereſies haue crepte into the church, there can bée no true probation of chriſtendome, nor no other refuge vnto chriſten men, willing to know the verity of fayth, but the ſcriptures of God.

How a man may knowe the church.

The church ſuffereth.

Chriſ. in opere Imperfecto.

Before by many wayes was it ſhewed, which was ỹ church of God, and which was the congregation of ỹ Gentiles. But now, there is none other waye to them that will knowe, whiche is the very true Churche of Chriſt, but alonely by ſcriptures. By worke, firſt was ỹ church of Chriſte knowne, when the congregation of chriſten men, eyther of all, or of ma-

By ſcriptures men may know the veritie.

my were holy, the which holynes had not the wicked men. But now, chri-sten men bee as euill, or worse, then heretikes or Gentiles: yea, and greater continencie is founde amonge them, then christen men. Wherefore hee that will know which is the very church of Christ, how shall hee know it but by scriptures onely? And therfore our Lorde, considering that so great confusion of thynges shoulde come in the latter dayes, for that cause commaundeth hee that christen men, willing to reserue ỳ stedfastnes of true fayth, shoulde flee vnto none other thyng, but vnto scriptures. For if they haue respect vnto other thynges, they shall bee sclaundered, and shall perishe, not vnderstandinge, which is the true church. &c.

Maister More hath no great thing in this pointe agaynst mee, sayynge, that hee sayth, these sayinges are none of Chrisostomes, but of an other mã written in Chrisostomes name. Neuertheless, I let it passe: let other men iudge betweene vs both. Afterwarde, because that I sawe so great persecution vsed by the popes church agaynst all maner of sortes of good men, whome M. More cauilleth heretikes, more for his pleasure then for they? deseruynge: For this cause, I Hila. contra Arrianos. say, I brought a saying of Hilarius, to prooue that they that did exercise such tyranny, were more to bee compared to the Arians, then to Christes church: his saying is this. The church doth threaten with banyshmentes, & imprisonmentes, and shee compelleth men to beleeue her, which was exiled and cast in prison. Shee hangeth on ỳ dignitie of her felowshyp, the which was consecrated by the threatenings of persecutours. Shee causeth Priestes to flee, that were encreased by the chasing away of Priestes. Shee glorieth that shee is loued of ỳ worlde, the which coulde neuer bee Christes except the worlde did hate her. &c.

Barn. sup. cã. serm. 33. After this I brought a saying of S. Barnard, to proue, that the name of spirituall array, & gorgious apparell ỳ is vsed in ỳ Popes church, dyd not make ỳ Church. Hys saying is thus: They bee the ministers of Christ, but they serue Antichrist, they goe gorgiously arayed, of our Lordes goodes vnto whom they geue no honor. And of these commeth the decking of harlots, that thou seest dayly, the game players disguising, & kings apparell. Of this commeth golde in their brydells, in their saddelles, and in their spurres: so that their spures bee brighter then the aulters. Of this commeth their plenteous wyne presses, & their full sellers, bolking from this vnto ỳ. Of this cõmeth their tũnes of sweete wynes. Of this bee their bagges so fylled. For such thinges, as these bee will they bee rulers of the Church. As Deacons, Archdeacons, Bishops, & Archbyshops. &c.

Men may make an exposition of S. Barnarde, but it wil bee hard to frame hym to their purpose. But for a conclusion, M. More, and I doe vary, but in this poynt, that hee sayth, the very Church of God stãdeth by them, that bee good, and bad, and I say, that the trew church of Christ, standeth in thẽ onely, that bee good men. For the kingdome of Christ is distincted in very deede, from the kingdome of ỳ deuyll. For euell men bee doubtles the members of the deuell, as Paule sayth, Ephe. 2. Also our L. Christ sayth, vnto the Pharysyes: You are of your father the deuell. Wherefore it can not stande with no learning, that wicked men, which bee the members of the deuyll, and bee gouerned by hym, can bee members of Christs body, though that in this present lyfe, they bee not yet so declared vnto ỳ worlde. God send vs all his grace, ỳ we may bee of his holy Church, and mẽbers of his blessed Sonne Jesus Amen.

The true church of Christ stãdeth onely in them that are good men.

FINIS.

TO declare this matter our Schoolemen haue wrapped them selues in suche doubtes that they were neuer able to come out of thē, nor yet to satisfie thē selues nor any good Christen mans conscience. For all ẏ they write is but dreames of their owne inuention, and as Paule calleth them the doctrines of ẏ deuill agaynst the holy word of God, and wringyng & wrestyng the blessed worde of God to their purpose, alonely conslderyng how they might, by right or by wrong stablishe the authoritie of miserable men, not cōsideryng the intent of the holy ghost whiche intended nothyng els in all places of Scripture, but to opē vnto vs Christ, & the losing from our sinne by hym alonely. The which thyng our dreamers, and inuenters of all subtile lyes dyd neuer preserue, nor neuer sought for: but by despising the holy worde of God, and stickyng so fast to their owne corrupted reasons, dyd they fall into innumerable heresies, dissentions and contentions, and brawlynges of wordes, and scoldyng lyke harlots, so that none of thē could agrée with an other. Wherfore that saying of the holy Prophete may well bée verified of them.

1. Tim. 4.

The keyes of ẏ church is the openyng of Christ, and the loosing of vs from sinne.

Psal. 80.

My people haue not heard my voice and Israell hath taken no hēde vnto me, and therfore haue I let thē passe after the desires of their own harts: and therefore they shall folow their owne inuentiōs. This is alwayes the sore vengeaunce of God, when we will not beléeue and receiue alonely hys worde, then doth hée let vs passe, so that we can doe nothyng but erre. Notwithstandyng we are so blynded that we thinke darkenes light, and errours veritie.

This is openly proued, by all our greate clarkly schoolemen: and that it may bée open to all men, I will recite what they learne of the keyes. Duns & all his scholers say that these keyes bée nothyng els, but an authoritie geuen to Prieستes whereby they geue sentence, that heauen must bée opened to this man, and shyt vnto the other: so that heauen is opened & shyt at the sentence of ẏ priest. This is his learnyng. Who could haue inuented such a doctrine, but ẏ deuill him selfe? who can speake greater heresie then this is? who can speake more openly agaynst Christe and hys holy Scripture? If the authoritie of the Priest bée the keyes of heauen, and can open open and shyt heauen, then nēde we no other thyng to our saluation, but the authoritie of the Priest: then can no man bée saued without the authoritie of the Priest: then can there no Prieستes bée damned: For they haue the keyes of heauē: I thinke they wil not bée so mad: as by their authoritie to shyt them selues with the deuill.

Sentus 4. sent. di. 18.

How Duns interpretetth the keyes.

Briefely what nēde haue we of Christ and of hys holy word. For the authoritie of the Priest is the keye of heauen, but let me bryng their owne words ẏ the matter may bée playner.

The keye in this purpose is taken after the similitude of a materiall key whiche is the next instrument to shyt and to open a dore, whereby we enter into the house: So lykewise, the authoritie to geue sentence that heauen must bée opened vnto this man, is called the keye. &c. To vse many wordes in refellyng this damnable opinion it nédeth not. But agaynste them all, I will set the authoritie of S. Hierome whose words bée these. I shal geue thée ẏ keyes of heauē. This place, the Byshops and the Prieستes not vnderstandyng haue vsurped vnto them somewhat of the Pharisеis pryde, so ẏ they thinke that they may condemne innocentes, and lose them that bée giltie: when afore God not ẏ sentence of the Priest but the lyfe of the giltie is regarded. &c. Here you haue playnly that the sentence of the Priest is not loked on, nor able to lose a sinner afore God. Marke also that S. Hierome sayth you vnderstād not this place.

Nicho. de orbel. di. 19 supra.

Hiero. in M. c. 16.

The saying of S. Hierome vppon the keyes.

Moreouer I would know of you all, where you cā bryng me one example in Scripture, that the sentence of a Priest hath losed a sinner, or bound a righteous man, and if it can not doe this, then is there an other thyng aboue the sentence of a Priest.

Furthermore that your auctoritie should bee the keyes of heauen, it is a gaynst reason, & agaynst your owne learning. For Duns and also Lyra of the same text. Quodcunque ligaueris, doe playnely declare, that your key of auctoritie may erre: Now if it may erre, then is it not the right key to the locke of heauen, for the right key can neuer erre in his owne locke. Wherfore at the most you can make it but a picklocke which belongeth to robbers and thæues onely.

Scotus 4. sen. dist. 15. Quest. 1.

Moreouer if this were the key, thē should we neuer bee in suretye whether heauē were opened or not. First we haue no promise nor no worde of God, made vnto this key. And againe we can not know when it openeth heauen and whē not: for it may erre after your owne doctours. And if it chaūce for to erre, then are not heauē gates opened. So ý by this meanes we shall bee allwayes in doubt, whether we bee losed frō our sinne or not.

Wherefore we must seeke out an other key that is the very trew key to the locke the which can not erre, of the which we shall bee in surety and without all doubt. But ere wee declare what this key is, we will first shew the nature and the propertye of this key.

August. ser. 2. de sanc.

S. Augustine sayth, That must be called a key where by the hardnes of our harts are opened vnto fayth, and whereby the secretnes of mindes are made manyfest. A key it is (sayth hee) the which doth both open the conciēce to ý knowledge of synne, and also includeth grace, vnto the wholesomnes of euerlasting mistery. &c. This is the diffynition of this key that we speake of after, S. Augustine. Now compare your power vnto this diffinitiō, and see how they doe agree.

The nature & property of the keyes of heauen.

Fyrst what can your power doe (which you call your key) to remoue away the hardenes of the harte, and to bring in fayth?

Agayne what can your key Judge of the secreatnes of mans mynde?

Thirdly what can your power doe to mens consciences, to make thē to knowledge their sinne? yea where by doe you know your awne synne? by your power? then haue all priestes a like knowledge. Fynally what grace doth your power include in hym, ý may bring vs to euerlasting Joye? Wherefore you see that this deffiniti-on agreeth as well with your key, as Chalke and Cheese.

Therfore must we seeke an other key, ý hath all these properties. This is nothing els but the holy worde of God, whereby that we receaue fayth into our hartes as. S. Paule sayth: Fayth is by hearing and hearing is by the wordes of God. And for this cause the holy Prophet calleth it a lanterne, saying. Thy word is a lanterne vnto my feete, & it is a lyght vnto my pathes. By this word doe we receiue lyfe as the prophet sayth. Thy speach shall quicken mée. Also the secreates of our hartes be opened by this word.

Roma. 10.

Psal. 118.

Ibidem.

S. Paule declareth saying if there come one that doth not beleeue, hee is reproued by the word of all men, and the secreates of his harte are opened. By this worde also is declared vnto vs grace and euerlasting lyfe. as S. Paule sayth, Christ hath put away death, and hath brought lyfe and immortalitie vnto the light through the Gospell.

1. Cor. 14.

2. Tim. 1.

This is the thing onely where by that our conscience is losed and made frée from synne. Therefore sayth the holy Prophet there is much peace vn to them that loue the lawe of God, & there is no sclaūder vnto them. Much peace is nothyng els but remission of sinnes: yea & that without any doubt for hée that is losed by the worde of God, that is, hée that hath the open word of God for hym, that his sinnes bée forgeuē him, hée can not bée sclaū-dered: that is, there is nothyng can make him to doubt: but though heauen and hell, life and death, doe threaten him, hée is not offended, hée is not sclaundered, but bydeth fast, & knoweth surely that all these thynges must perish

All thinges shal perish, but ỹ word of God endureth for euer.

perishe, but the word of God bydeth for euer. Wherefore this is the very keye that iudgeth the thoughtes and the intentes of the hart, as S. Paule sayth: By this haue we also the very knowledge of our sinne, as S. Paule declareth to the Romaines: by this is also declared vnto vs grace, & also remission of our sinnes if we beléeue it.

Hebr. 4.

Roma 3.

Wherefore this must néedes bée the very true keye, as you may sée euidently throughout all Scripture, and not your boasted and craked power: for there is no such thynge, nor yet can bée in man, that can lose the soule of man from hys sinne.

Wherefore, it is damnable and deuilishe learning, and commeth of the presumptuous pride of mã to learne, that man hath a power in hym, by the which power, mans soule is bounde or lосed from sinne. But this is all that man hath, hée is a minister, and a dispensator of the heauenly worde of God, for whose sake our sinnes bée remitted, when we beléeue it, and our sinnes bée retained when wée doe despise it. Therfore the blessed word of God is the very keye, and in that is all the might and power to lowse our sinnes, and man is but a minister and a seruaunt vnto this worde. This may bée proued by our Maister Christes wordes, where hée sayth: Goe your wayes into all the worlde, and preach the Gospell vnto all creatures, and hée that doth beléeue and is baptised shalbe saued, but hée that doth not beléeue shall bee damned. Here may you playnely sée, that the Apostles bée but ministers and seruauntes, and haue no power, but alonely ministration. The keyes that they haue, whereby they must lose men and bynde, is the very worde of God. And therfore sayth our Maister Christ: hée that beléeueth shall bée saued, and hée that doth not beléeue shal bée damned. By this worde did the holy Apostles declare grace thorough Christ, and learned mẽ to set all their hope of saluation in Christ onely. By this worde did they learne men to knowledge their sinne, and to séeke for grace, & fully and wholly to hope for remission & forgéuenes of their sinnes in Christ onely. Briefely, by these keyes is opened all goodnes, if they bée receaued: And all goodnes is shutte from vs, if wée receaue them not. Now, where this keye is receaued by faith, there is all things lосed: that is, all sinnes bée forgéuen, and the consciences bée made frée. And where it commeth not in, nor is receaued by faith, there all thynges bée shutte and bounde.

what power it is that the Priest hath.

The worde of God is the true keye that openeth & loseth.

Math. 6.

Of this maner did the holy Apostles bynde and lose, when they preached this holy worde of God vnto ỹ people: As wé haue an open example of S. Peter that preached this holy worde, and at his preaching ỹ hearers were pricked in their hartes, and asked Peter what they myght doe, and hée aunswered them, repent and bée baptised euery one of you, in the name of Iesus for remission of your sinnes, and you shall receaue the gifte of the holy Ghost, wherfore as many as receaued his word, were baptised.

Acte. 2.

Here you haue playnely, the very true maner of losing from sinnes, as ỹ holy Apostles vsed it, that is, when the people beléeued the worde that they preached, thẽ they declared how their sinnes were remitted for Christes sake, and not thorow any power that they had, for they were but ministers. But the very power was in the word of God whereby they were deliuered from their sinnes. This is well proued by our maister Christes word, where hée sayth vnto them, goe and preach, saying. That the kyngdome of heauen is at hande. What is this the kyngdome of heauen? not any power that is in man, but remission of sinnes shall bée geuen to them that receiue either your power or your persons: and therfore followeth it. In what house you enter, say first peace bée with you, and if the house bée worthy, your peace shall come vpon the same, that is to say if they receiue your word and beléeue it, than shall your peace, that is the peace of the Gospel which you bring with you geue them quietnes of conscience, and lose them from all synne. But if the house bée not worthy, your peace shall returne to you agayn, and whosoeuer shall not receiue you, nor will heare your preaching, when you depart out of that house, shake of the dust from your féete. I say vnto you it shalbe easyer for Sodom and Gomorra in the day of Iudgment then for that Cytie.

What is this your peace shall returne agayne? nothing els but that they shall not bée pertakers thereof, but shall remaine bound in their sinne And why? because they receiue not your persons or your power? nay trewlye: but because they heare not your preaching.

The hearyng of the worde of God and beleuyng the same, loseth vs from our sinnes.

It is not to bée doubted, but that many men by hearing the Apostles preaching the word of God, were loosed from their synnes and yet neuer spake with the Apostles. Wherefore the receauyng of the word, & not the Apostle, loseth vs from our sinnes: & for that cause the Apostle did declare by their departing frō thē that would not beleue the word ỳ they remained still in their sinnes, for as S. Marke sayth, your departyng shal bée a testimonie agaynst them, that is to say a token of their condemnation.

We haue also an open practise of S. Paule how hée dyd bynde thē that did not receiue his preaching, to whō hée sayth these wordes. Your bloud vpon your heades. I will departe frō hence in clennes vnto the Gentiles. Mark. 6. Actes. 18.

Now haue you playnely how the holy Apostle dyd bynde and lose, and with what keye they did it, that is by preachyng of the holy word of God. And because this thyng shoulde bée done without any errour, and that no man should doubt in it, hée gaue them the holye ghost, saying these wordes: whose sinnes you doe forgeue shall bée forgeuen, & whose sinnes, you doe retaine shall bée retained. To these wordes addeth S. Luke. Thē opened hé their wytte that they might vnderstand the Scriptures, so that where S. John sayth, hé gaue them the holy ghost. Luke sayeth, hé opened their wytte to vnderstand Scripture. Iohn. 20. Luke. 24.

It folowth in Luke, thus, & thus, is it written that Christe must suffer death and rise agayne the thyrd day & that repentaūce, & remission of sinnes shoulde bée preached in hys name among all nations. Now where Saint John sayth, whose sins you doe lose shall bée losed &c. That sayth Luke in these wordes remissiō of sinnes must bée preached in hys name. So that whose sinnes you doe lose shal bée losed, is nothyng els but that you must preach remission of sins in my name, and as many as receiue this word, you shall lose them by this word & as many as doe not receiue it you shall bynde them by that same word. Luke. 24.

Preachyng of the word of God is losing from sinne.

That this is the sentence of these two places, it is opē by that, that they speake all of one story & of that thyng that was done all in one day. This doth also S. Paule proue wel where hé reciteth the wordes of Luke saying, Christ must nédes suffer & ryse agayne from death, and this Iesus is Christ. Here is it plaine that S. Paule loosed men from their sinnes by preaching remissiō through Christ: so that you haue openly here the practise of the holy Apostles, how they did bynde & lose by preaching the word of God. Actes. 17.

How the worde of God byndeth & how it loseth.

They did bynde with the word when it was not beléeued. They dyd lose by the worde when it was beléeued. Thus dyd they by one word preache both saluation and damnatiō, but vnto diuers men. This vertue of the worde doth S. Paule declare in these wordes, we are vnto God the swéete sauour of Christe both among them that are saued, and also among them which perish. To the one part are we the sauour of death vnto death, vnto the other parte are we the sauour of lyfe vnto lyfe. What is this sauour nothyng els but the Gospell, which is vnto one sauour of lyfe, that is nothyng els but losing and remission of sinnes: And vnto the other, it is the sauour of death vnto death, that is occasion of byndyng and reteinyng in sinne. This doth Paule also declare in an other place. The preachyng of the crosse is to them that perish foolishnes. But vnto vs whiche are saued it is the power of God. What is ỳ power of God? nothyng els but remission 2. Cor. 2. 1. Cor. 1.

and

The worde of God is remission of sinne, if it bee beleeued when it is preached.

and losing from our sinnes. What is folishenes: nothyng els but they despise the Gospell & recken it of no value, and of no power. Wherfore they remayne bound in their sinne.

Thus is it declared that one word of God worketh in diuers mẽ, diuers operatiõs. In ẏ one it worketh lyfe, ẏ is, remission of sinnes: in the other worketh it death, & is taken for folishnes, that is, it declareth them bounde and retained in their dãnable sinnes: and yet in him selfe, hée is of one gõdnes and of our nature: but the diuersitie commeth, of them that hée the receiuers. This may bée proued by a naturall example. The dew of heauẽ cõmeth dowme indifferently vppon all grounde: but in the one it bryngeth forth good corne & swéete frutes: and in the other it bryngeth forth nettles & brombilles, that bée nothyng worth but to the fier. This exãple haue you in the epistle to the Hebrues, for this same purpose. Likewise by one word doe the holy Apostles & Christes ministers lose and bynde: but this doe they not by charmyng, coungeryng, iugglyng, and whyslyng absolutions as you doe: But by preachyng the holy word of God which when it is beléeued doth quiet and lose our conscience from all sinne, and offereth it vs through Christ onely. But when it is not beléeued then doth it bynde vs and retaine vs in sinne. So that this holy worde is the very true keye of heauen, for by it heauen is opened and shut.

Hebr. 6.

By preachyng of the worde of God, heauẽ is opened and shut.

Chrisost. in M. c. 15. De doctr. christi. li. 1. c. 15. et. 18.

This doth Chrisostome wel proue in these wordes. The key is the word and the knowledge of Scriptures, whereby the gate of veritie is opened vnto men &c. S. Augustine doth also witnes the same saying. These keyes hath hée geuen to the Churche, that what shée byndeth in earth shall bée bound in heauẽ, and what shée loseth in earth shall bée losed in heauen, that is to say, who soeuer doth not beléeue that his sinnes bée forgeuẽ hym in the Churche, they bée not forgeuen hym: But hée that doth beléeue, and auerte him selfe from his sinnes, beyng with in the Church by that same fayth and amendement is hée made whole &c.

Here haue you openly that by béeleeuing the worde of God our sinnes bée losed: & by vnbeléefe bée we bounde in our sins. But now must we search to whom these keyes bée geuen. They may not all onely bée geuen to Peter, for then Paule, and the two sonnes of thunder had them not. Nor they may not bee geuen, to one more then to the other: For Christ was indifferent and they were all his Apostles & their confession was all one. Wherfore no doubt but these keyes weare geuen vnto all Christes Apostles vnto the whole Church, as S. Augustine doth declare openly vpon John.

Augustine in Ioan Trac. 124.

This may bée also proued by the wordes of your owne lawe which bée these, if Peter haue power all onelye to binde and to lose, then doth it not the Church: But if this bée donne in the Church, then did Peter when hée receaued ẏ keyes, signifie holy church &c. Heare haue you openly that Peter had not onely the keyes, but hée receiued them in the name of the Church. Wherefore they belong to all Christen men. This doth Origene well proue in these wordes. Tu es Petrus. &c.

24. q. 1. Quodcũq;.

Origenes Super. M. Ho. 1.

These wordes were spoken vnto Peter, vnto all Apostles, vnto all maner of perfect faythfull men (for all they are Petrus) & in all them is builded the church of Christ, and agaynst none of them can the gates of hell preuayle. Dost thou recken that ẏ keyes of heauen were all onely geuen to Peter, and that no other Christen man did receaue them? &c.

The church is builded vpõ the confession of all the Apostles and of all faithfull people.

Here is it clearely that all Christen men bée Peter and all they haue receyued the keyes of heauen, and hell can not preuayle agaynst them. S. Augustine. doth also testifie the same in these wordes. Wherefore the church which is founded and grounded in Christ, of hym hath receyued in Peter the keyes of heauen, that is, to say power to bynde and lose. &c.

Super Ioan Trac. 124. c. 21.

Thus is it playne that those keyes are geuẽ to ẏ whole church of Christ for her fayth, and they bée the cõmon treasure of the Church and belonge no more to one man then to an other but because that all men can not vse these keyes all together (for ẏ would make a confusion) therefore doth the Church, that is the congregation of faythfull men commyt the ministration of these keyes, that is of preaching ẏ worde of God, vnto certayne men whome they thinke most able and best learned in the worde of God: the which mẽ thus chosen, bee but ministers of the commen treasure, and no Lordes ouer it. For the Churche may depose them, ẏ is thee may take away the open and the common mynistration that thee committed vnto them, if they vse it not well and then they bee but as other Christen men hauing no common office nor administration in the Church.

Preachers, if they abuse their preaching, maye bee deposed.

Wherfore they may neither preach nor yet minister sacramentes openlye but as other Christen men may doe prvately, in their owne houses, or in other places where men bee gathered, which wil heare of Christ: there I saye both they and all other Christẽ men, may speake and learne Christes worde, and declare it after the gift ẏ is geuen vnto them of God. And they that doe beleeue this word thus preached by Christen men, bee by the power of ẏ keyes losed from their sinne and bound if they beleeue not. For all the Church and euery part of the Church haue power to execute these keyes, all onely that the open order bee not broken, This doth S. Paule declare saying, you may all interprete scriptures but see that all thinges bee done after an order.

1. Cor. 14.

Now to keepe an order and that nothing should bee done after a confuse manner, therefore the Church assigneth certayne men to be the open and the common mynisters of this treasure the which bee but all onely mynysters, and no Lordes. And of this cõmon treasure and not of their prvate treasure as S. Paule sayth let a man so reckẽ vs as the ministers of Christ and dispensators of the mynystery of God. Also in an other place, what is S. Paule? what is Appollo? but mynisters by whom you haue beleeued.

1. Cor. 4. Item. 3.

Also S. Peter your predecessor, commaundeth you, that you shoulde not exercise any dominion ouer the congregations, but geue example to the flocke. Bee not these playne scriptures, how you bee no Lordes but ministers of Christes treasure: and you leaue the ministration and vsurpe auctoritie. S. Peter, whose successors you boast your selues to bee, commaũdeth you that you shoulde bee alonely but ministers, & keybearers of these keyes. As Chrisostome prouueth in these wordes: The keye bearers are prestes, vnto whome is committed the worde to teach, and to interprete Scriptures. &c.

1. Pet. 5.

The ministers of the Churche ought to be no Lordes.

In Mat. c. 23.

Heare you not, how you bee but keybearers, and teachers of ẏ worde of God. This doth S. Ambrose witnesse in these wordes: sinnes bee forgeuen by the worde of God, whose interpreter is the Deacon. &c. Marke that sinnes bee forgeuen by the word of God, of the which you bee but interpreters.

li. de Cain et Abell.

Where is now I pray you your Lordly power? which you call the keyes of heauen, is not Scripture, and the practise of the Apostles, and the exposition of holy Doctours opẽly against you? Will you vsurpe a thing that is contrary to all these? I pray you where finde you in all holy Scripture, but one, that Peter or Paule did assoyle after the maner of your keyes. And yet no doubt, but they had the keyes, yea and also dyd vse them. Wherfore it is to mee great maruayle, of whome you haue learned your vsage, and where you haue gotten such keyes. It maketh no matter to mee though you cry as you are wonte. Fathers, Fathers, Counsels, Counsels, the Churche, the Church. For it wilnot helpe you. You see opẽly that I haue the holy worde of god, and our maister Christe, which is elder then our fathers. I haue also the practise of the holy Apostles, that vnderstand this thynge better then all your counsels.

The Byshops and cleargie abuse Christes keyes.

But let vs graunt that you haue fathers and counselles for you, That is the nert way to deceaue the church of

The false allegyng of fathers and Councels is the next way to deceaue the Churche of God.

of God. By whom can Christen men bée deceaued, but by such men as bée of auctozitie, and dignitie of ỳ wozld? This you know, that men can not bée deceaued by Hozses, noz by Calues, but it must bée by men, and not by foolishe mẽ (foz who will regarde foles) but by them that bée reckoned of wisdome and of reputation in the wozld. And not by one wise man (foz an other wyse man may bée of as good reputation and wisdome as hée) but it must bée by many, oz els it can haue no shyne nor colour of excellencie, yea and by such a multitude, that reason can not suspect. So that there is neuer so great daunger vnto the church of God, as when all these thynges come togither. And therefoze sayth ỳ holy Prophete: Blessed is that man that foloweth not the counsels of wicked men. You know that counselles cã bée no smale thing, noz no foolishe: noz the wicked men themselues doe recken it foz no smale thinge, but foz the greatest thynge, and the wysest thyng, and the strongest that they can thinke oz deuise. And no doubte but it hath a foze reason, and a foze all the wozlde a great apparence of no smale wisdome, and is so strong that euery man is compelled to receaue it. Yea and also those men haue auctozitie (foz as the Prophet saith: they sitte in the chayze, the which doth both signifie great learning, and and also great auctozitie): And yet saith ỳ Prophet, that blessed is hée that foloweth not their counselles, noz sitteth in theyz chayze.

Psal. 1.

Now, if these thynges coulde bée iudged by some reason, oz els they séemed so euill, that all the wozlde could iudge them. What néede the holy Ghost to make such a dwe, oz to write so strongly agaynst them? yea and to say, that blessed is hée ỳ heareth them not? Wherfoze hée must néedes speke of such mischiefe, and of such falshod, and of such errours as haue all those thinges foz them, that you bzynge foz you: That is, fatherhod, wysdome, learning, auctozitie, multitude, and long custome. The which thyngs bée able to peruerte any man, bée hée neuer so wise, oz neuer so holy, if hée sticke not fast to the wozde of God onely. And therefoze sayth the Prophet: Blessed is hée whose wyll and meditation is night and day (that is continually) in the law of God. Vnto the which, if all your coũsels, all your fathers, all your customes, briefly, all that you bzing foz you, bée compared, then shall wée sée whether it bée true, and of God oz not. Foz of themselues they haue no truth, but bée inuentions of cozrupted reason, and perswasions of the deuill, to peruerte the holy church of God.

Blessed are they whose meditation is in the law of God.

But my Lozdes, let vs goe to reason: Tell mée by your honour, is it reasonable that the holy Churche of God, redéemed wyth Chzistes pzecious bloud, and alloyed by hym from all her sinnes, should bée now bounde vnto you, and to your absolution? and that shée should not bée released, but thozow your power? séeyng that you bée but ministers and seruauntes ozdayned of Chzist vnto her pzofite, and not to your honour? Thys wyll I declare by an example.

An exãple.

I put this case, that there bée a pzisoner bounde fast in cheynes, ouer the which you haue the custody and the kéepyng, after the kynges commaundement, now the kynges grace saith vnto you, lose that fellow, & let hym goe frée out of pzison vnder this cõdition, that he shal pzomise to serue no Pzince but mée onely. What, will you lose him oz not? Cã you, oz dare you kéepe hym longer if you woulde? Oz can you compell him to make any other composition with you, than al onely to serue ỳ king? If you woulde kéepe him longer in pzison, did you not runne in the kynges displeasure? And if hée did pzomise you any other composition, were hée bounde therto? Nay doubtles. Moreouer, in losing of him, what thyng doe you by your auctozitie? yea what thyng doe you at all, but that you are mynisters vnto the kynges commaundement, and a seruaunt to the pwze fellowe. The minisstration & seruice is yours, but the auctozitie is the kinges, of the which you haue neuer a crumme.

The ministration of the Church belongeth to the Byshops & other ministers but the authozitie of the same belongeth to Chzist.

Take

Another example.

Take an other example. If it please the kynges grace to make any of you an Embassadour, and geeue you a commission, and commaundement, to fetch home into his lande a banished man, vnto whom the kinges grace writeth his pardon, with such wordes and vnder such condition as pleaseth his grace. Now, this pardō deliuereth hée to you, for to beare and to declare vnto the banished man. Here would I know of you, what you can doe for this banished man more then is written in your cōmission? Also what can you doe againste hym, in these thinges that the kinges grace hath pardoned hym? You can neyther adde nor take away from the kinges pardon. You can no more doe but declare it vnto the partie. And if hée receaue it, then may hée as lawfully, and as frely come into the land as you may, and you can not say by right that you haue by your auctoritie discharged hym, or geuen him any pardō of his banishmēt, but alonely you haue deliuered & declared vnto hym the kinges pardon, which when hée had receaued with the considerations therein, then is hée discharged of hys banishment. And if hée will not receaue the kinges pardon, then can you neyther helpe him into the land, nor yet discharge hym of his trāsgression: but onely you leaue hym, and declare vnto him, yea and that by the kinges wordes that hée is a banished man, and so shall remayne till hée receaue the kinges pardon.

So likewise ý word of God where in is pardon for all sinners is commitred vnto you to preach and to declare, which if they receiue by faith, they are free and losed from their synnes, but if they doe not they are bound (not by your auctorytie, for you bée but mynisters and seruauntes, and can no further goe then your commyssion) but by ý auctorytie of God onely. Wherefore see well to your conscyence how you can discharge your self afore God that doe so presūptuously vsurpe his auctorite, of the which you haue neyther worde nor example in scripture.

The doctrine and true preaching of the worde of God is the pardon and remission of our sins.

Moreouer how can you proue this manner of absolution. Ego absoluo te auctoritate mihi comissa, for to bée lawfull. I pray you where was there euer any auctorite cōmitted vnto man to take away synne? There is no auctoritie committed vnto man, but all onely ministratiō of the worde. Now your absolucion maketh mencion of auctorite, yea and that without the worde, and a great many of you vnderstode not the worde. Duns sayth, Quod absolutio sacerdotis, est dispositio necessitatis ad remissionem culpæ. How thinke you, bée these fitte wordes for a Christen man?) if your absolution bée necessary, then can not God take away sinne without you, nor you wout hym, but God and you togither take away sinne. Whether will you now? Will you ascend so hie, will you bée check mates with God? I thinke shortly you will also bée Gods. The Phareses did recken much better of God then you doe, for they sayd, that God onely did absolue from sinnes, & you say I doe absoyle, yea and that by auctorite, so that you farre passe the Phareses. But let vs sée what S. Augustine sayth of such mē, many sinnes bée forgeuen thee, hée prophecyed of men that bée to come. There weare many men to come that would say, I forgeue sinnes, I iustefie, I sanctifie, I make whole so many as I baptise. Wherefore the Iewes did better vnderstande the remissyon of synnes thē heretykes doe, for the Iewes sayde, what mā is this, ý forgeueth synnes, & the heretyke saith, I forgeue, I make cleane, I sanctifie. &c.

The popes Clergy is condemned by S. Austen to bee heretickes.

Luke. 7. August. lib. Quinquaginta homeliarum. ho. 23.

These wordes bée playne inough agaynst you, for you say we haue auctorite to remyt synnes. And. S. Augustine sayth, you bée heretyckes for so saying. You can not denye, but S. Augustine reprooueth your owne absolucion, where in you say that your absolution is requisite of necessitie to remyssion of sinnes, the which is nothing els, but clearly denying of christ. of his blessed blood, and also of his holy worde. But if wée had grace, wée might perceaue that neyther you, nor your absolucion, nor yet any thing ý you doe weare of God. For all ý you

doe is clearely done for mony and for no other cause. Recken one thing that you doe, as concerning your ministration, but that you will haue money for it: As not so much as washing of a heape of stones.

Whereby haue you gotten all your great possessions, but alonely vnder the collour, that you bee Christes holy bishops. For money you make whore dome as lawfull as matrimony. For money, stollen good shall bee better the heritage. For money, you make vsury lawful marchandise. For money, all sinnes bee vertue. Yea and also haue great pardon to them. For money, you sell man, wife, mayde & child king, and land. For money you make as good marchaundise, of womens priuities, as a Goldsmith doth of gilted plate. You will recken that this is a shame for me to write, but it is more shame for you to doe it. And if you did not these shamefull dedes, I shoulde haue none occasion to make this shamefull writyng. Take you away ẏ cause and I will take away ẏ writyng. Yea you are not so content, but you sell Christ, you sel the blessed Sacrament of his flesh and bloud, you sell his holy worde, you sell all other Sacramentes. Briefely you sell, all maner of thyng that euer hee left in earth to the comfort of mans soule, and all for money. Yea and not so content, but you make also more lawes, and more statutes, & dispense with them for money, and all these thynges doe you, by the authoritie of the keyes, that both open heauen and hell, and a mans coffer and also his purse yea & sometime they losse the coate frō his backe. Our maister Christe sayth vnto you, you haue receiued it free, geue it free agayne, and you geue nothyng free. But I know your answere. You will say that you sell not your Masse, nor Sacramentes, nor the word of God, but the labour that you haue about them. O thou deuill when wilt thou bee without an excuse, whē wilt thou graunt thy selfe guilty? Tell me ye that bee without shame, if you doe sell but your labour, is it not sore and an vnlawfull price to sell it so deare & what Bysshop can deserue by his labour a thousand pound by yeare: & yet some of them haue a great deale more, and labour nothyng at all. How deare wil these men sell their labour, if they shoulde bee tankerdebearers. They would make water dearer thē wyne. Yea tel me what labour there is with in the Realme that is halfe so dears sold as their idlenes is?

But you belly gods, did not Christes Apostles take paynes & labours about the ministration of the worde: and in fulfillyng of their office, more in one day then you doe in all your lyues: and yet was it not lawfull for them more to receiue then a lyuyng. For our maister Christ sayd, ẏ worke man is worthy of his meate: so ẏ our maister wold that they should receiue no more but that was necessarie. Also S. Paule sayth our Lord dyd ordeine that they whiche preache the Gospell should lyue on ẏ Gospell. Marke how hee sayth, they that preach ẏ Gospell. Now which of you all doth preache ẏ Gospel: not one: and yet will you enuye these innumerable possessions. S. Hierome sayth on this same text, you must lyue on the Gospell, but not bee riche, also Chrisostome sayth, I say boldly that the bysshops and Prelates of the Church, may haue nothyng but meate and drinke and cloth. &c.

Yeare haue you playnely, that if you did labour faythfully and truely in the Gospell, you could haue but a lyuyng there on, and no Lordly possessions, but now doe you nothing in the worlde, but exercise tyranny on them that would preach the Gospell, and make lawes and statutes, to destroy them, and the holy Gospell of God, so that Chrisostome speaketh well of you. Beholde I see men that haue no trew sence of holy scripture: yea they vnderstand nothing at all thereof: & to passe ouer many things, for I am ashamed to call thē mad mē, triflers & wranglers) they bee such as know not what they say, nor of what thynge they speake, but all onely bee they mighty & bold to make lawes, & to curse & cōdemne those things, of ẏ which they know nothing at all. &c.

And yet will you haue these great possessions, and bee also greate Lordes, doing nothing therefore at al but al onely play the part of a byshop, as a Christmas game player, doth of a king, and as a Popet which springeth vp and downe and cryeth Peepe Peepe and goeth his way. So doe you make a countenaūce of great holines & of great perfectiō, but all ỹ world can testify what you doe in indeede. More ouer you are more bound to the Gospell, then all other men bee in ỹ world for thereby haue you all your honour all your riches, all your Lordly possessions, and if the gospell were not, men would no more regard you, then they doe Coblers, & yet deserue you worst of all men of the Gospell.

A fore sentence of Christ agaynst vnpreachyng Prelates.

FINIS.

¶Free will of man, after the fall of Adam of hys naturall strength, can doe nothyng but sinne beefore God.

IN this article will wee not dispute, what man may doe by the cōmon influence geuen hym of God, ouer these inferior and worldelye thinges, as what power hee hath in eating and drinking, in sleeping, and speaking, in buying and sellyng, and in all other such naturall thinges, that bee geeuen of God indifferently to all men, both to good and bad. But here will wee search, what strength is in man, of his naturall power, without the spirit of God, for to will, or to doe those thinges that bee acceptable before God, vnto the fulfilling of the will of God: as to beleeue in God, to loue God after his commaundemēts, to loue iustice for it selfe, to take God for his father, to recken him to bee mercifull vnto him, to feare God louingly, with all other thinges that mē doe call good workes: this is the thing that wee will search to knowe Now, that hee can doe nothyng in these causes, by his free wil, our maister Christ prouueth it in these wordes: Hee that abideth in mee, and I in him, bringeth forth much fruite, for without mee cā ye doe nothing: if a man abide not in mee, hee is cast out as a braunch, and shall burne.

In what thinges we haue free-will, and in what none.

Iohn. 15.

Here it is open, that free will without grace, can doe nothing. I doe not speake of eating, & drinking (though that bee of grace) but nothing that is fruitfull, that is meritorious, that is worthy of thanke, that is acceptable before God. For hee that hath not Christ in hym, is cast out, this is the first fruite of freewill: than wythereth hee, that is the second fruite, this wythering helpeth hym nothing to goodnesse, hee must wither, let him doe the best: than is hee gathered, and cast

The frutes of freewill. Freewill without gods grace can doe nothyng that is good.

caſt in the fire, this is the thirde fruit. What can hée in the fire doe? nothing but burne. Hée can not lye there as a thing indifferent, but hée muſt néedes burne, & hée cã not come out of ẏ fier by his owne ſtrẽgth: let hym intende as much as hée can, his intention can not helpe hym, nor yet further hym. So that all the might of frée wil, when hée is left alone, is nothyng els, but firſte to bée caſt out: and ſeconde to wyther, ſo decayeth hée: thyrdly, to be caſt into the fire. All this is worſe, and worſe. Finally, hée burneth, this is worſt of all, for here is hée paſt helpe, ſo that this is the ſtrength, that frée will hath, to bryng him ſelfe to vtter deſtruction.

Bona intentio.

Now, where will our Duns men, bryng in their Bonum conatum? they are ſo longe in bryngyng of it in, that frée will is brought to the fire, & there can hée neither ſaue him ſelfe frõ burning, nor yet helpe him ſelfe out. But to this my Lord of Rochẽſter aunſwereth in a certaine place, that frée will can doe no good meritorious, ſed tamẽ non omnino facit nihil. What is this to ſay, but nihil? If hée doe no good, ẏ is meritorious, nor worthy of thãke beſore God, I pray you, what doth hée, but nihil? Our diſputation is, what goodnes that hée can doe, wout grace, and you graunt, that hée can doe no goodnes, and yet you ſay, that hée can doe ſomethyng. But let vs ſée how S. Auguſtine vnderſtandeth this text of S. John. Leſt any man ſhould ſuppoſe, that the braunche of hym ſelfe could bryng forth, at the leſt wayes, a litle frute, therfore ſayth hée, nor without me, can you doe a litle, but without me can you doe nothyng, therfore whether it bée litle, or much, without him, can it not bée done, without whõ is nothyng done. One of two things, muſt the braunche néedes doe, either abyde in the vyne, or els burne in the fier, if it bée not in the vyne, then is it in the fire. &c.

Super Ioannem tract. lxxi.

My Lord, where will you bryng in here, your ſomethyng, that frée will doth? Saint Auguſtine ſayth, without grace, cã frée wil doe neither litle, nor much: for if thée bée not in Chriſt, thée burneth in the fire. Call you that ſomwhat? Where bée nowe M. Dunſis mẽ, with their bonum conatum, bonum ſtudium, & applicationem ad bonum. Here muſt they néedes lye in the fire, with all their good intẽtes, with their good preparations, and their holy diſpoſitions. Also S. Paule, we are not ſufficient, to thinke any thyng of our ſelues, but our ſufficiencie, is of God. What is this? that we are not able to thinke any thyng of our ſelues? what can bée a ſmaller thyng, thẽ to thinke? and yet this ſmall thynge can we not doe. It is alſo open, that Saint Paule meaneth not of the thinkyng, that cõmeth by naturall power, for ẏ God doth not let, but letteth it proceéde, after his firſt ordinaunce, as we haue open experience in infidels. But here hée ſpeaketh of ſuch a thinkyng, as is acceptable, and thankful before God, and therefore foloweth it, God hath made vs worthy miniſters of ẏ new Teſtament. Here is it open, that hée ſpeaketh of that thinking, that is a ſingular, and a ſpeciall gift of God, and not of the common gift of nature, for that were nothyng, to the miniſtratiõ of the Goſpell.

Diſces doctrine quer-throwen.

2. Cor. 3.

We of our ſelues as of our ſelues can not doe ſo much as thinke a good thought.

But let vs ſée what S. Barnarde ſayth, of this text. What ſhall we ſay? is this alonely all the merite of frée will, that hée doth alonely conſent? yea doubtles. Not that, the ſame conſent, in the whiche is all his merite, is not of God, when that we can neither thinke (the whiche is leſſe, then to conſent) any thyng of our ſelues, as though we were ſufficient of our ſelues. These wordes bée not myne, but the Apoſtles, the whiche geueth vnto God, and not to his frée wil, all maner of thinges, that can bée good, that is to ſay, to thinke, to will or to performe. &c. Here you not, that all thyngs, that can bée good S. Barnarde geueth to God? Now, what ſtrength hath frée will, hée can neither thinke good, nor wel, nor yet performe it? what remaineth? I know nothyng, but either it is included in thinking, in willyng, or in performinge, and all theſe bée geuẽ to God. Also our maiſter Chriſt ſaith, Shal men gather grapes of thornes, or figges of bromble bushes? An euill tree, can bring forth no good frute. What meaneth our maister, whē hee sayth, that grapes bee not gathered of thornes? nothyng els, but that ỹ frute must bee lyke the manner of the tree. And therefore sayth hee, an euill tree, can not bring forth good frute. Now, can you not denye, but that freewill without grace, is an euill tree, Ergo, his frute must needes bee euil, hee may well bring forth frute, but it shall not bee good. Is not all freewils power declared in these wordes, hee can not? I pray you, what meaneth our maister Christ in these wordes, hee can not? Christ sayd, hee can not, and will you say, hee can? Also our maister sayth. Math 12. You adders byrdes, howe can you speake good thynges, seeyng that you bee euill. Had not these men freewill? and yet sayth our maister, they could not speake good thynges. You recken it but a small power, to speake good, and yet as small as it is, freewill can not doe it, hee may well speake, but it shall not bee good. For how should hee speake good, that is euill of him selfe? how should hee doe good, that knoweth no good? but is the very enemy of goodnes, yea and asmuch as lyeth in him, hee wold there were no goodnes.

Mans free will without Gods grace can doe nothyng that is good.

You haue also a commō principle, there is nothyng loued, and desired, but that, that is knowne. Now how should freewill flee from sinne, and desire goodnes, and hee knoweth not, whiche is very sinne, and which not? As S. Paule sayth: by the law, is the knowledge of sinne, so blinde às free wil, that hee knoweth not sinne, to bee sinne, nor vertue, to bee vertue, but iudgeth that thyng to bee good, that is euill, and that thyng, that is euill, to bee good, for hee is lost, & hath no true iudgement. As S. Augustine sayth, what goodnes can hee doe, that is lost, except that hee bee deliuered from his miserie? Can hee doe good by his free will? God forbyd, for man euill vsing his freewill, did both lose him selfe, & also his freewill, and as man being a lyue, doth kill him self, & whē hee hath killed him selfe, hee cā not make him selfe aliue agayne. So likewise, whē

Roma 3. 15

In Enchir. ca. 29.

Man by losing of hys freewill euill, did lose both hymselfe & his freewill.

we doe sinne by freewill, & sinne hath the victory, then is freewil cleane lost, for of whom a man is ouercome, vnto hym must hee bee seruaunt. Doubtles, this sentence is of Peter the Apostle, the whiche, seeyng that it is true. I pray you what maner of freedome can a bonde seruaunt haue? except it bee, when it pleaseth him to sinne. &c.

What can bee sayd to this? doth hee not clearely say, that mā hath lost his freewil by sinne? and can no more doe vnto goodnes, then a dead man can doe, to make him selfe alyue agayne? yea, hee can doe nothyng, but delight in sinne. Call you that a freedome? Call you that bonum conatū? Call you that a preparyng to grace? S. Augustine doth declare, what goodnes, that freewill deserueth, without grace saying. O cursed freewill, without God, we haue experience, what freewill cā doe without God, therfore are we miserable, because we haue experience, what freewill is able to doe, without God. Behold, man was made good, & by his freewil, was hee made an euill mā. Whē shall an euill mā by his free will, forsakyng God make a mā good, hee beeyng good, could not keepe hym selfe good, and now, that hee is euill, shall hee make hym selfe good? when that hee was good, hee kepte not him selfe good, and now, that hee is euill, shall hee say, I make my selfe good? &c.

De Verbis apost. ser. 11.

Here is the very strength of free will, by his strength, are wee made miserable, and that doth experience learne. And yet wee boaste free will? S. Augustine calleth it cursed freewil, and will wee call it blessed freewill? Is not this a goodly freedome, and great power to bryng vs to this euerlasting miserie? This is our bonum conatum, and facere quod in se est, and preparare se ad graciam, with other dampnable dreames, that wee haue, whose conclusions are nothing els, but to bryng vs to dampnation. You see S. Augustines wordes bee so plaine that no mā can auoide them. Also S. Paule saith: Roma 8. The wisdome of the flesshe, is enemy to God, it is not subiecte vnto ỹ law, nor cā bee, for they that serue ỹ flesshe, can not please God. And hee that hath not

Mans free will cā doe nothyng but sinne.

Mark

not the spirite of Christ, the same mā is none of his: for the selfe spirit beareth witnes to our spirite, that wē be the children of God. Here haue you plainely, that the wisdome of ỹ flesshe, is the very enemy against God. It cā not bē saide, but by wisedome he vnderstandeth the best thyng that is in man, for better thē wisdome, cā there nothing bē: and yet that is enemy to God, for it is but flesshe, and all that is in man without the spirite of God. And that S. Paule declareth, when hē sayth: hē that hath not the spirite of Christ, the same man is not Christes. Here is playne, that will, reasō, wisdome, hart, or whatsoeuer thing ỹ is in man (without the spirit of God) is but flesshe, and can not bē obedient. Hē sayth not, he wyll not, but he can not, hē hath no might, hē hath no power, let hym intende his best, doe all ỹ lyeth in hym, with all his might, & all his power, & yet can it not please God, for it is but all flesshe.

Mās flesshly wisdome is enemy to God.

Duns.

But here M. Duns will make a distinction, and say, that flesshe is takē here for flesshely desires onely, and voluptuousnes, & not for the desires of the soule, nor for the electiō of ỹ will. I woulde know, what part of man it is that desireth: or that coueteth thys voluptuousnes: It is not the bones, nor the sinowes, nor the flesshe that hangeth thereon, but it is the highest parte of man, the very soule of man, hē is the grounde and auctor of all concupiscence: take away hym, and there remayneth no voluptuousnes. Therefore S. Paule declareth hym, and hys operation, when hē cauilleth it the wisdome of the flesshe. But I woulde gladly know what hē vnderstandeth by vncleane desires, and by voluptuousnes: If hē vnderstand, euill cogitations, as aduoutry, fornications, manslaughter, theft, couetousnes, deceite, vncleanes, blasphemy, pride, and folishnes. If hē call these volupousnes, these bē they that come from the hart of man, and bē chosen by the election of the will, as our M. Christ doth clearely declare Mark. vij. Marke.7. Yea, and that from the very bottome of the hart. Can they inuent any other vncleanely desires thē these? And these come not from the bones, nor from the sinowes, but frō the very ground of the hart, and these bē all hys desires, and other hath bē none of hym selfe. Wherefore these dreamers dreame, they wot not what, and speake, that they vnderstand not. For all that is in man, harte, soule, flesshe, and bone. &c. wyth all theyr workes, is but flesshe, excepte the spirite of God bē there. Euery man hath a soule, but by that is hē not Christes, for thē Infidels were Christes, but the spirite of Christ, maketh hym Christes, and the spirite of God gēueth witnes to our spirite, that we bē the children of God. Our spirite gēueth no witnes to himself, that hē is Christes, for then were the spirite of God frustrate. Roma.8.

Wherefore let our spirite as well as hē can, studye hys beste, to apply hymselfe to goodnes after the vttermost of his power: and yet is it but wisdome of the flesshe, and hath no witnes of God: yea, it is but an enemy, and it must nēdes bē sinne. For S. Augustine sayth: Hē that fēdeth without mē, fēdeth agaynst mē. &c. Marke how hē sayth, agaynst mē. Wherefore all that frēwill can doe without grace, is but sinne. Marke also, that Paule did write vnto the Iewes: yea, and to the best of them, which did studye to doe good workes: yea, and that the best workes, that were the workes of the lawe, and yet all these hē cauilleth but flesshe, and declareth openly, that all these good workes coulde not helpe them, & yet no doubt but that the Iewes dyd as much as lay in theyr frēwyll to doe, to come to the fauour of God, & yet it helped not, for all was but wisedome of the flesshe, and enemy to God. De Verbis Domini ser. 16. Freewill without grace is sinne.

Also S. Paule sayth: If you mortifie the dēdes of the flesshe, by the spirite, you shall liue. You will not recken, that S. Paule doth iudge the spirite of God necessary, to kyll the desires of the flesshe, that is, of the synowes, or of the bones, or of any other thyng that is in man, beside the spirite of man, for that were but a Roma.8.

small thyng, yea it were but frustrate to set the spirite of God to kylle these thynges, for the spirite of man can kill them, yea and also rule them. For after your owne Philosophers, the spirite of man, is the ruler and the guider of all the workes, that bee done by the body. Wherefore the spirite of God must bee hee that shall kyll the disease of our spirite, the whiche is the most spirituall thyng in vs: and yet is it but flesche afore God. For if there were any power in hym, hye, or lowe, to kyll hys desires, then were it but voyde to call the spirite of God to helpe. But let vs heare what S. Augustine sayth on this texte, if you mortifie your flesche. &c. Thou wylte say, that can my wyll doe, that can my freewill doe. What wyll? what maner of freewill? except that hee guide thee, thou fallest, excepte hee lyfte thee vp, thou lyest styll. How canst thou then doe it by thy spirite, seeing that ỹ Apostle sayth: As many as bee ledde by the spirite of God, bee the children of God. Wilte thou doe of thy selfe? Wilte thou bee ledde of thyne owne selfe to mortifie the deedes of the flesche? what will it profite thee? For if thou bee not an Epicure, thou shalt bee a Stoicke? Whether thou bee bee an Epicure, or a Stoicke, thou shalte not bee amonge the children of God. For they that bee guided of the spirit of God, bee the childrē of God: not they that lyue after their owne flesche: not they that lyue after theyr owne spirite: not they that bee ledde of their owne spirite: but as many as bee led of the spirite of God, they bee the children of God.

De verbis Apost. s. xiij.

We can doe nothyng that is good without the spirite of God

Who are ỹ children of God?

But heare a man will say, Ergo, then are wee well ruled, and we doe not rule. I aunswere. Thou both rulest, and art ruled, but then doest thou well rule, if thou bee ruled of the good spirite. Utterly, if thou want the spirite of God, thou canst doe no good. Thou doest truely without his helpe, by thy freewyll: but it is but euill done. Unto ỹ is thy will apte, which is cauled free, and by euell doeing, is thee made a damnable bonde seruant. When I say without the helpe of God, thou doest nothing, I vnderstand by it no good thing, for to doe euell, thou hast free will, without the helpe of God, though that bee no freedome. Wherefore you shall knowe, that so doe you goodnes, if the helping spirite bee your guider, the whiche if it bee absent, you can doe no good at all. &c. We thinke this saying is sufficient, if men would beleeue S. Augustine. Marke how hee sayth, without the spirite of God we lye in synne, let our spirit doe ỹ best hee can. For they bee not the children of God, ỹ are guided after their owne spirite but after the spirit of God. For our spirite can doe no good at all, but euell, if the spirite doe not leade hym. Where is now our bonum studium? our bonus conatus and applicacio ad bonum? For our spirite can doe nothing but euell, and is of hym selfe, but a damnable seruant. What good can a damnable seruant doe of hym selfe? So that here it is openly proued, that the free will of man, of his owne strength, and of his owne power, can doe nothing but synne.

Bonus conatus Veritum de congru.

Fleshly & carnall reason, reasoneth frowardly and crookedly.

But now commeth the damnable reason, and fleshly wisedome, & will dispute, and say: if our free will cā doe no goodnes, what neede God to commaunde so many good thinges? what neede God to geue those cōmaundementes, that he knoweth well bee impossible for vs? And if they bee impossible, what right is in hym that damneth vs for that thyng, that is impossible, for vs to doe? I aunswere.

O thou blinde and presumptuous and damnable reasō, where hast thou learned of any other creature, to enquire a cause of thy makers will? or els to murmour, agaynst the ordināce of thy lyuyng God? What hast thou to doe to require a cause of his actes? Hee hath made thee without thy cōsēt and counsell, & may hee not set lawes, and commaundementes to rule thee by, at his pleasure, without thy counsel? thou art worthy of none aūswere, thou art so presumptuous: nor there is no godly annswere, that will satisfie thee. Neuertheles, I will stoppe thy blaspheming mouth, by thyne owne

wiſedome, to thy great ſhame.

As God is nothynge but goodnes, ſo can hee commaunde nothyng but that which is good.

Fyrſt, this thing muſt thou graunt mée, that thy God is Eſſenciall goodneſſe, and is nothyng but goodneſſe. Wherefore hée can commaunde nothyng but that is good, iuſte, and righteous. Which thynges, if thou doe not, or bée not able to doe, thy maker may not let his goodnes vndone, becauſe of thy naughtines, or for thyne vnablenes. And if thou bée not able to doe thoſe good thynges, that hée cõmaundeth thée, there is no faulte in the commaunder, nor yet in the commaundementes. Wherfore then doſt thou grudge agaynſt hym wythout a cauſe? But yet wilte thou murmure, and ſay, how that hée knoweth, how they bée impoſſible for thée. Truth that is, hée knoweth it. Then wylte thou ſay, wherfore doth hée cõmaũde them to mée? O thou preſumptuous creature, it were ſufficiently aunſwered to thée, to ſay, that it is his pleaſure ſo to commaunde. What couldeſt thou ſay more? what occaſiõ haddeſt thou to murmure? what wronge haſt thou?

But I wil goe farther. Thy maker knoweth that they bée impoſſible for thée: hée knoweth alſo thy dammable & preſumptuous pryde, that reckeneſt, how thou canſt doe all thynges that bée good of thyne owne ſtrength, wythout any other helpe. And to ſubdue this preſũptuous pryde of thine, & to bring thée to knowledge of thyne owne ſelfe, hée hath géeuen thée hys commaundementes, of the whiche thou canſt not complayne, for they bée both righteous and good. And if thou complaine becauſe they bée impoſſible for thée, then conſider thy dampnable pryde, that thoughteſt thy ſelfe ſo ſtronge, that thou couldeſt doe all goodneſſe.

Why God hath geuen vs his commaundementes to bee kept.

But what wilt ỹ now doe? Theſe commaundementes bée géuen, and can not, nor ſhall not bée chaunged, to ſatiſfie thy preſũptuous pryde. Wherof wylte thou now complayne? Gods commaundementes bée reaſonable, they be good, they bée righteous, and they bée laudable, ſhal all theſe things bée deſtroyed, to ſatiſfie thy pryde? nay not ſo. But thou ſhalt rather remaine wyth all thy pryde, vnder the damnation of theſe commaundementes. What ſayeſt thou thereto? Cãſt thou auoyde this? Cãſt thou ſay but this is right? Canſt thou ſaue thy ſelfe from daunger? Canſt thou auoyde thy dãpnation, by all thy carnall wyſdome? Nay verely. For hée that is thy aduerſary is omnipotent. Wherefore, ſay what thou wilte, ſo muſt it bée, for it is Gods ordinaunce, which may not bée chaunged. But now, wilte thou aſke what remedye? no remedy but this onely, to confeſſe thy weakenes, to confeſſe thy pryde, to knowledge thy vnablenes, to graunt, ỹ theſe cõmaundementes bée lawfull, holy, and good, & how thou art bounde to kéepe them, and to geue laude, and prayſe to God for them, & to goe to thy mercyfull maker with this confeſſion, and to deſire hym, that hée will helpe thée, that hée will bée mercyfull vnto thée, that hée will ſtrengthen thée, for thou art to weake, that hée will geue thée his ſpirite: for thy ſpirite is to fleſhly, to fulfill theſe ſpirituall commaundementes, and doubt thou not, but thou ſhalt finde hym both mercyfull, and alſo gracious, for hée gaue thée theſe cõmaundements for that intent, ſecretly declaryng, both thy pryde, & alſo thy weakenes, that thou mighteſt ſéeke, and call vnto hym for helpe.

This doth S. Auguſtine declare well in theſe wordes: If man doe perceiue, that in the commaundements, is any thing impoſſible, or els to hard let hym not remaine in hym ſelfe, but let hym runne vnto God, his helper the which hath geuen his commaundementes for that intent, that our deſire might bée fyred vp, and that hée might geue helpe. &c. Marke S. Auguſtine ſayth, that the commaundemẽts bée impoſſible vnto our ſtrength, but we muſt call to God for ſtrength. De temp. ſer. lxij.

The Pelagians dyd recken, that they had got a great victory, whẽ they had made this carnall reaſon, ỹ God would commaũde nothyng, that was impoſſible. Of this reaſõ did they glory, and triumphe, and thought, that they muſt nédes haue ſome naturall strength, and power to fulfill the commaundementes of God, seeyng that God would commaunde nothing impossible to man. Of this same reason, doth my Lorde of Rochester, and all his scholers glorye vnto this same day.

De lib. arb. cap. xvi.

But let vs see how S. Augustine aunswereth them. The Pelagians (sayth hee) thinke, that they know a wōderous thing, when they say, God will not commaunde that thyng, the whiche hee knoweth is impossible for man to doe. Euery mā knoweth this, but therfore doth hee commaunde certeine thyngs, that we can not doe, because we might know, what thyng we ought to aske of him. Fayth is shee, which by prayer, obtaineth that thyng, that the law commaundeth.

Ecclus. Gods commaundementes bee impossible to our nature.

Briefely, hee that sayeth · If thou wilt, thou mayest keepe my commaūdementes. In the same booke, a litle after sayth. Hee shall geue me keeping in my mouth. Playne it is, that we may keepe the commaundementes, if we will, but because our will is prepared of God, of him it must bee asked, that we may so much wil, as wil suffice vs to doe thē. Truth it is, that we will whē we will, but hee maketh vs to will that thyng, that is good. &c.

Here haue you playne, that my Lord of Rochesters opinion, and the Pelagiās, is all one, for they both doe agree, that the commaundementes of God, bee not impossible to our natural strength. But S. Augustine sayth, they bee impossible. And therefore bee they geuen, that we should know our weakednes, & also aske strēgth to fulfill them. For faith by prayer, doth obteine strength, to fulfil, the impossible commaundementes of the law. Here haue you also, that God moueth vs, and causeth vs to bee good willers, & geueth vs a good will, for els we wold neuer will, but euill.

Whereof our good will commeth.

Here is also to bee noted, that ỳ Pelagians, & our Duns mē, agree all in one, for they both say, that ỳ grace of God doth helpe más good purpose, so that man doth first intende, & purpose well. And as Duns sayth, disposeth hym selfe by attriciō to receiue grace, & thē God doth helpeth hym. But the truth is contrary, for there is no good purpose in man, no good disposition, nor good intent, but all is agaynst goodnes, & cleane cōtrary against all thing that agreeth with grace, vntill that God of hys meere merry commeth & geueth grace, & chaungeth a más will vnto grace, and geueth hym will, to will goodnes, yea, and that when hee thought nothing of goodnes, but doth clearely resist all goodnes.

De cōgruo.

This doth S. Augustine proue in these wordes. The Pelagians say, ỳ they graunt how that grace doth helpe enery mans good purpose, but not ỳ hee geueth the loue of vertue to hym, that striueth agaynst it. This thyng doe they say, as though man of hym selfe, without the helpe of God, hath a good purpose, and a good mynde vnto vertue, by the whiche merite procedyng afore, hee is worthy to bee holpen of the grace of God, that foloweth after. Doubtles, that grace that foloweth, doth helpe the good purpose of man, but the good purpose should neuer haue beene, if grace had not preceded. And though that ỳ good study of man, when it begynneth, is holpen of grace, yet dyd it neuer begyn without grace. &c.

De lib. arb. cap. xvi.

The Pelagians sayth that God giueth good lawes & man may keepe them of his natural strength or els the cōmaundemēts were frustrate.

Here it is open, that the Pelagiās graunt as much of grace, as my Lord of Rochester doth, and all his Duns men, whiche learneth, that man may haue a good purpose, bonum studium, and a good mynde, & a loue to grace, of his owne naturall strēgth. The Pelagians graunt euen the same. But here you see, how Saint Augustine is cleare agaynst them. But now let vs here Ỹ. Duns wordes. A sinner may by the naturall, and by the commō influence of God, consider his sinnes, as a thyng that hath offended God, & as a thing cōtrary to the law of God, and letteth hym from reward, & bringeth hym to payne, & by this meanes may hee hate, and abhorre his sinne: this calleth hee attriciō, wherby there is a disposition (sayth hee) or a merite in a man of congruence, to take away mortal sinne, and this attrition is sufficient for a man, that shall receiue the Sacramentes, & quod non ponat obicem.

iiij. sen. dis. xiiij. quest. ỹ.

cem, that is, that hée haue no mortall ſinne actually in his will, this is ſufficient, and alſo a neceſſary way to receiue grace. &c.

This is ten tymes worſe then the Pelagians sayinges, for they graunt, that man muſt néedes haue a ſpeciall grace, to performe his good purpoſe. And ℣. Duns ſayth, that man may performe his attrition, of his naturall power, yea, and this attrition of congruence, is a diſpoſition to take away mortall ſinne, without any ſpeciall grace.

I pray you ℣. Duns, of what congruence is it? What hath attrition deſerued, that mortall ſinne ſhould bée taken awaye for his pleaſure? what hath hée deſerued, that grace muſt follow hym? Infidels may haue this attrition (for you graunt, that it cõmeth of naturall ſtrength) and yet ſhall it not followe of congruence, that they muſt receiue grace, and alſo remiſſiõ of their ſinnes? Alſo had not Iudas this attrition, when hée ſayd, I haue ſinned? and was ſorye for his ſinne, & alſo repẽted him? and knew well, that hée had offended God, and alſo deſerued payne? and was no more willyng (I thinke) ſo to doe, and had all ỳ properties, that belongeth to your attrition, and yet ſée how hée dyd deſerue of congruence grace, and remiſſion of his ſinnes. Yea, dyd not this attritiõ, bryng hym to extreme deſperation? Howe can a man without a ſpeciall grace, abhorre his ſinne? It is not poſſible, but hée muſt loue ſinne, ſo longe as hée is the enemy of God, yea hée woulde there were no God, to puniſhe ſinne, ſuch a pleaſure hath hée vnto ſinne.

Hee that hath not ỳ grace of God cãnot abhorre ſin.

This is the nature of our hartes, and that doth euery one of vs féele, though theſe men teacheth the contrary, but I ſay to them the wordes of the Prophete, redite ad cor preuaricatores, grope in your boſomes, & there finde you the mortal enemy of God, which neither careth for Gods diſpleaſure, nor yet for his ſinne. And you ſay that hée may haue a good attritiõ, of his naturall ſtrẽgth, and if this attrition bée good, then may hée doe good before grace, ſo that we ſhall gather grapes of thornes, and figges of briers.

But what ſayth S. Paule to your good attrition? He ſayth, that all thing without fayth is nothyng. Is not this man a fleſhly man? and hath nothyng of the ſpirit of God (for by your own learnyng, hée hath but the commõ influence) and yet ſhall hée bée ſory, that hée hath offended God? Shall hée abhorre his ſinne? Shall hée depoſe hym ſelfe of congruence to grace? S. Paul ſayth. The fleſh lufteth cõtrary to the ſpirite, and the workes of the fleſhe, bée aduoultry, fornication, vnclennes, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, wrath, zeale, ſedition, enuying, with ſuch other. I pray you, how dor theſe workes agrée with your attrition? Call you this abhorryng of ſinne? Call you this heauines, for offẽdyng God? Bée theſe good diſpoſitions? Bée theſe our good preparatiõs vnto God? Thinke you, that theſe workes, doe deſerue of congruence remiſſiõ of mortal ſinne? Theſe bée the beſt workes, that a ſinner hath in his hart, or els S. Paule lyeth. Wherfore it is not poſſible, but hée muſt haue in his wil, actual ſinne, for hée cã will nothyng but ſinne. And therefore, if hée receiue the Sacramentes with this attrition, hée receiueth them to his damnation. For before grace, hée is an vtter enemye to God, and to all his Sacramentes. Wherefore God muſt of his mere mercy, mollifie his hart, and geue him grace to will goodnes, or els hée cã neuer doe it, nor yet deſire it. As S. Auguſtine doth declare in theſe wordes. De gredeſti. cap. 8. The grace, which is geuẽ of the largenes of God, priuely into mens harts, can not bée deſpiſed of no maner of hard hart. For therfore it is geuẽ, that the hardnes of the hart ſhould bée taken away. Wherfore whẽ the father is hard within, and doth learne, that we muſt come to his ſonne. Then taketh hée away our ſtony hart, and geueth vs a fleſhely harte. And by this meanes, hée maketh vs the children of promiſe, & the veſſels of mercy, which hée hath prepared to glory. But wherfore doth hée not learne all men to come to Chriſte? Becauſe that thoſe, that hée learneth, hée learneth of mercy, and those, that hée learneth not, of hys iudgement doth hée not learne them. &c. Marke, that S. Augustine sayth. That there is no hardnesse of hart, that can resist grace. And Duns sayth, that there may bée an obstacle in más hart. S. Augustine saith, that grace findeth the harte in hardnes, & obstinacie. And Dũs saith, that there is a mollifieng, that precedeth grace, whiche hée calleth attrition. S. Augustine sayth, when the father learneth vs within, then taketh hée away our stony hartes. And Duns sayth, that we can doe it by the common natural influence, that is, we can dispose our selues of cõgruence. Marke also, how all men, bée not taught to come to Christ, but alonely they, ý bée taught, of mercy bée taught: and if it bée of mercy, then it is not of congruence by attrition.

Grace taketh our hartes ſtony.

Meritum de congruo.

Briefely, a greater heresie, more contrary to Christe, and his blessed word, cã no man learne, and yet must hée bée taken for a great clarke, and a subtile Doctour, bicause hée pleaseth the flesshe. But shortly, haue I openly proued by inuincible Scriptures, and by Doctours of great authoritie, that frée will of his naturall strength, with out a speciall grace, can doe nothyng, but abyde in sinne. Fayne, inuent, excogitate, and dreame, as many holy purposes as we can, as many subtile distinctions, as many good attritions, as many good applicatiõs, and all they bée but sinne, till grace come: yea our sléepyng, our eatyng, our drynkyng, our almesses, our prayers, our singyng, our ryngyng, our confessyng, our mumblyng, our mournyng, our wayling. Briefely, all that we cã doe, is but hypocrisie, and double sinne afore God, till the tyme, that hée of hys mercy chooseth vs. For as hée sayth. You haue not chosen me, but I haue chosen you.

Sine fide impossibile est placere Deo

Now will I declare a scripture or two, that men bring to proue our conatum and our bonum studium. The fyrst place is this. God, from the bégynnyng dyd ordayne man, and left hym in the handes of his owne counsell, hée did geue hym his commaundementes, and his preceptes, if thou wilt kéepe the commaundementes, & also kéepe peasably sayth, for euer they shall kéepe thée. I haue set before thée water, and fyre, stretch thy hand to which thou wilt.

Of this place is gathered, that mã may haue a good intent, a good mynde, to apply hym selfe to God of his naturall power. But this can not be proued of this text. For there is neuer a worde of entending, of studying, or of applying will. For if we will take the wordes of the text, as they sound, they rather proue, that we may kéepe the Commaundementes of God, yea, and also beléeue in God, then any other thing, the which, I am sure no man will graunt. For then howe could men auoyde, but that the Philosophers be saued? For no man can denye, but that they dyd asmuch, as lay in their naturall power to come to God? Moreouer the Pelagians bring this text, to proue, that man may doe good of his naturall strength. Nowe how will we auoyde them? For if we denye, that it proueth their opinion (for the which ý wordes sound most) then will they denye, that it proueth our conatum, and our bonum studium, of the which, the text speaketh neuer a worde. Wherefore this text maketh neither for thẽ, nor yet for you. Plaine it is, that the wordes of the text soũde of kéeping, and of beléeuing, if we will, and not of intending, nor of studying. Wherefore it maketh not for your purpose.

But let vs goe to the text, God frõ the bégynning dyd make man. These wordes bée open of the creation, of ý fyrst man. Hée left hym in the handes of his owne counsell. These wordes make nothing for frée will, for heare is nothing commaunded hym to doe, but all, onely heare is signifyed, that man is made Lorde ouer all inferior creatures, to vse them, at hys pleasure, as it is opẽ. Genesis. 2. Where that all thinges were brought afore Adam, to receyue their names, signifying, that they were all left vnto his vse, and to hys will, & hée was Lorde ouer

Eccl. 16.

Mans Lordshyp ouer all creatures of God.

ouer them all, and none ouer hym. This was his kingdome, in ỹ which hē dyd raigne, and gouerne all things after his commaundementes, but yet was it by generall influence, geuen him firſt of God: Hē did adde his cōmaundementes, and his preceptes. In theſe wordes is there no power geuen vnto hym, but heare hē geuen hym commaundementes, Whereby hē muſt bē ordered, and ruled, And not rule after his owne counſell, but after the counſell, and commaundementes of God. Wherefore by theſe commaundementes, was their parte of hys frē domination, and lordſhip, that hē had ouer the inferior thinges taken away, as where God commaūded hym, that hē ſhould not eate of ỹ Trē of knowledge, both of good and euyll. Now was it not frē for hym to vſe this trē after his owne will, but after the commaundement of God, and what power hē had, by his frē will to kēpe this commaundement, ỹ effect did declare. If thou wilt kēpe ỹ commaundementes. Here beginneth the doubt. But yet of theſe wordes can you not gather, that hē hath power to kepe them, nor yet ỹ hē might intend to kepe them. For it followeth not, if thou wilt, Ergo, thou mayſt, or thou mayſt entend, As it followeth not, if I would, Ergo, I could depoſe you, for you will let this conſequent.

Mans dominion reſtreined.

Alſo you haue a generall rule, Conditionalis nihil ponit. Wherefore theſe wordes, if thou wilt kēpe the commaundementes, geueth no power, nor ſtrength to frē will. But this all onely followeth of this terte, if man will kēpe the commaundementes, then they ſhall kēpe hym. But now, where ſhall hē haue this will? that is not in hys power: but lyke of S. Auguſtine aboue recited, and there ſhall ſhall you fynde, how man commeth by this will. Also the wordes of ỹ tert bē not, if thou wilt, thou mayſt kēpe them, or intende to kēpe them. Nor they bē not, Man may kēpe them, or intende, if hē will. But if thou wilte kēpe them, then they ſhall kēpe thē. Wherefore of theſe wordes, can you not conclude any power in man. For it folowth not, when God ſayth, doe this, heare this, heare that, kēpe this, kēpe that, if thou wilte doe this, if ỹ wilt doe that, That we can doe theſe thinges, or can intende to doe them. For God commaundeth vs to doe all good thinges. Ergo, we bē able of our naturall ſtrength to doe them? Then were the ſpirite of God fruſtrate, for the ſpirite of God is not geuen vs, to geue commaundementes, but for to geue vs ſtrength, to fulfill, and righteouſly to vnderſtand thoſe thinges, ỹ bē commaunded vs.

Aug. de lib. arb. cap. xvi

By the commaundementes, is declared that thynge, that we ought to doe and alſo they ſhew our weakeneſſe, and imbecilitie, that we might learne to ſēke for a greater ſtrength, and greater helpe, then is in vs. As Sainte Auguſtine ſayeth, in theſe wordes. The lawe was geuen that man myght fynde hym ſelfe, and not to make hys ſickenes whole, but by his preaching, the ſicknes increaſed ỹ the phiſicion might bē ſought. Wherfore the lawe threatning, and not fullfilling that thing, that hē commaundeth, maketh a man to be vnderneath hym, but the law is good, if a man doe vſe it well. What is that, vſe the law well? By the law, to know our ſinnes and to ſēke Gods helpe, to helpe our health. &c.

Auguſt. de verb. Apoſt. ſent. xiij.

Wherefore the lawe is giuen.

Yeare is it playne, that the commaundementes of God, geue vs no ſtrength, nor yet declare any ſtrength to bē in vs, but ſheweth vs our dutye, and alſo our weakenes, and alſo moueth vs, and cauſeth vs to ſēke further for ſtrength. So that theſe wordes, ſi voluerit, ſi fecerit, ſi audierit, ſi emundauerit, ſi vis, with all other ſuch, that bē wordes of commaundementes, or wordes vnder a condition, doe nothing declare, but what we are bounde to doe, and what ſhall folowe, if we doe them. And as the wordes of the lawe doe threaten an euyll ende for ſynne, all onelye for to feare euel doers, and wicked perſons from euell, ſo doe the wordes of promyſe ſtyre vp and quicken good mēs hartes, for to doe well, and alſo comfort thē, that they ſhould not diſpayre

in

in aduersities: But neither these, nor those geue vs any strēgth, to doe that that is commaunded: but alonely they doe declare what paines and what reward shall folow to the breakers and the kepers of them.

Math.23. An other scripture haue you, where as our Maister Christ sayth: How often woulde I haue gathered thy children, and you woulde not? Here cry you, liberum arbitrium, lib. arb. For if they had no frēwyll, what nēde our Maister Christ to say, thou wouldest not? First must wee consider, ỹ there are two maner of wils in God: One is called hys godly wyll, or hys secrete or vnscrutable will, whereby that all thinges bē made and ordered, and all things bē done. Of this will no creature hath knowledge what hē ought thereby to doe, or not to doe, for as S. Paule sayth, it is inscrutable, & therefore it is sufficient for vs, to knowe therof alonely, that there is an inscrutable will. The other will in God, is called a declared, and a manifest will, the which is declared and geuen to vs in holy Scriptures.

Two wils in God.

Gene.1. This will was shewed vnto the vttermost by our M. Christ the sonne of God, and therefore is it lawfull. And also, men are bound to search, & to know thys wyll, and for that consideration, was it manifested vnto vs. This wyll doth declare what euery man is bounde to doe, and what euery man is bounde to flie. And by thys wyll is offered vnto euery man, those thynges that bē of saluation: And by this will GOD will haue no man damned, for hē letteth his worde to bē preached indifferently to all men.

Nowe, hē that wyll knowe this wyll, must goe to our Maister Christ, in whome as S. Paule sayth, is all treasures of wisedome and science. So that hē will shew vs as much as is necessarye for vs to knowe, and as much as the father of heauen woulde wē shoulde know. Now to the terte, here speaketh God, that is incarnated, that was sent to will, to speake, to doe, to preach, to bē familiar with vs, to doe myracles, yea, and also to suffer death for our saluation.

How Christ willed to saue the Iewes

Now, sayth hē, I woulde haue gathered thy children, that is to say, I dyd preach, I did labour wyth all diligence to conuerte thē, I did myracles afore thē, yea, I wepte, I wailed for thy sake: all these thynges did I, with all other thinges that myght bē to thy conuersion, and that belōged to God incarnate to doe. But all these things did not profite them. And why? Because they woulde not. In hym was there no faulte. For there was nothyng vndone, that belonged to hym to doe, so that hē was wyllyng, and yet did it not profite Ierusalem. And why? Because they woulde not. But now, why woulde they not? Because it was in theyr power to wyll, to consente and to wyll, not to consent? Nay truely, but because as John sayth: They coulde not beleeue, for hē had blinded their eyes, & hardened their hartes, that they shoulde not see with theyr eyes, nor vnderstand with their hartes. So that they must nēdes alonely will, not to consent, and coulde no otherwyse doe, but not consent: and yet were they neyther constrayned, nor compelled, nor wrunge to it wyth violence, but frely they woulde not consēt, and yet had they the libertie of their frēwill, that was to bē agaynst Christe, and not to bē wyth hym. For the libertie of frēwill standeth not in this, that he may wil this thing, and also will the contrary therof. But it standeth in that, that all thyng that hē wyll, or wyll not, is at his owne wyll, and is not therto constrayned, but wylleth it frely wythout compulsion, and yet hē can not chose, no nor wil not chose, but so to wyll, or so not to wyll. So that there is a necessitie immutable, but not a necessitie of compulsion, or coaction.

Iohn.11.

Wherin the libertie of freewill consisteth.

Magist. sen. in. ij.

Nowe is it open, that this place maketh not for you, for there was no power, nor none entente in their frēwyll, to consent vnto Christ, but to wyll the contrary, and not to wyl vnto hym: and all was because they were blynded, and their hartes were hardened. And therefore of their naturall strēgth coulde they none otherwyse

It was not in their handes to chaunge their will.

wyſe doe, but bary from Chriſt: no, they would, nor deſired no other wiſe, but to ſwarue from hym: that was all their will and delyte. But wherefore they were blynded, and wherefore they were hardened, that muſt you inquire of the inſcrutable wyll, that pleaſed hym ſo to leaue thē. The cauſe therof, I am ſure hē cā tel you, if hē woulde. I am ſure it is righteouſly done, that is inough for mē.

we may not ber to inquiſitiue of Gods ſecretes.

But now commeth the blynde and fleſhlye reaſon, and murmureth at thys, and aſketh, why are wē cōdemned for this? why doth God puniſhe vs for this? ſeīng wē can wyll no otherwyſe? Alſo hē blyndeth vs, hē maketh our harts harde, that wē can not amende vs, and it lieth not in our power wythout his will. Nowe, why complayneth hē of vs? why layeth hē it to our charge? Here is nothynge done but hys will: wē bē but inſtrumentes of hys will. And if wē doe not well, why geueth hē vs not ſtrength to doe better? Thou dampnable reaſon, who can ſatiſfie thē? which reckoneſt nothyng to bē well done, but that thou doſte, and that is done wyth thy counſell? Thynkeſt thou not, that thou art good and perfecte in thyne owne nature? and all that is in thē, is both wel and righteouſly made?

To this, thou wilte aunſwere yea, for thou wilt not condemne thy ſelfe, nor any thing that is thine. But now aunſwere mee to this. What hath made thē ſo well? and geuen thē all thy righteouſnes? and all thys goodnes that thou haſt? Thou muſt nēdes ſay God.

But what was the cauſe that thou art ſo wells ſo righteous? and ſo good made? ſeīng that thou deſerueſt nothyng? Yea. and all theſe thynges bē done ſo well, and ſo righteouſly, that thou canſt not complayne, nor amēde them: no, nor yet deuiſe which way to amende them.

Now, why doeſt thou not murmur agaynſt God? ſeīng, that all thyngrs is done without thy knowledge? and alſo without thy deſeruing? why doeſt thou not inquire a cauſe of hym? why murmureſt thou not, that hē hath made thē ſo good, and ſo rightfull? ſeīng thou haddeſt nothyng deſerued? But here wilt thou graunt, that God dyd all thyng for the beſt. Why doeſt thou not lykewiſe in other thynges?

Furthermore, thou muſt nēdes graunt, that God thy maker, and the gouernour of all thyngs, is moſt wiſe moſt righteous, and moſt mercyfull: & ſo wiſe that nothyng that hē doth, can bē amended: ſo righteous, that there can bē no ſuſpition in hym, of vnrighteouſnes: ſo mercyfull is hē, that hē cā doe nothyng without mercy. Howe thinkeſt thou? wilt thou graunt theſe thynges of thy maker? Thou muſt nēdes graunt them.

Nothyng that God doth cā bē amended.

Now compare vnto this rule, thy blindnes that is within thē, thy induratiō, that is in thē, thy peruers will toward goodnes, and what cauſe haſt thou to complayne? Thou haſt graunted, that hē doth all thynges righteouſly: Ergo, thou haſt no wrong. Hē doth all things mercyfully: Ergo, thou art in thy blyndnes, and in thy hardnes, better intreated thē thou haſt deſerued. Moreouer, thou beleueſt, that God is righteous, that God is wiſe, and that God is mercyful. Now fayth is of thoſe thynges, that doe not appeare, nor that can bē proued by exteriour cauſes. Hold thē faſt to this fayth, then all thy fleſhely reaſons bē aſſoiled. For whē God ſaueth ſo few men, and damneth ſo many, and thou knoweſt no cauſe why, yet muſt thou beleeue, that hē is mercyful, and righteous. This is fayth, which if it could bē proued by exteriour cauſes, then were it no nēde to beleeue it.

Note here the wicked and ſinnefull ſtate of man.

Fayth doth not come of exteriour cauſes, but is the mere gift of God

Now, if thou beleeue, that hē is mercyfull, good, & righteous vnto thē. wherefore murmureſt thou? But yet wouldeſt thou know wherefore hē indurateth thē, and blyndeth thē, and geueth thē no grace to amende, and vnto thy brother, that hath no better deſerued then thou haſt: yea, hē hath likewiſe euill deſerued as thou haſt, and yet hē geueth hym grace, and taketh away his hardnes, & geueth him a will, to will all goodnes. This is not indifferently done as thou thinkeſt.

God disposeth hys mercy to whom it pleaseth hym.

First, I say to thée, thou hast no cause to complayne, for thou hast no wrong, thou hast all thyng, that is thyne, and nothyng is taken frō thée, that belōgeth to thée. Why doest thou complayne of this right? Yea, but yet sayest thou, that hée geueth the one mercy, and geueth the other none. I aunswere, what is that to thée? is not his mercy his owne? Is it not lawfull for him to geue it to whom hée will? is thy eye euil, because hée is good? Take that, that is thyne, and goe thy way.

Math. 20.

For if it bée his wil to shew his wrath and to make his power knowne, ouer the vessels of wrath, ordeined to damnation, and to declare the riches of his glory, vnto the vessels of mercy which hée had prepared, & elected vnto glory. What hast thou therewith to doe? what cause hast thou therof to cōplayne? it is the will of God, which can not bée, but well, & righteous, the which (as thou sayest) thou beléuest.

Roma. 9.

God hath no delight in our damnation.

Wherefore leaue of thy murmuryng, & thy disputation agaynst God, and recken, that hée is of his nature mercyfull, and hath no delite, nor no pleasure in thy damnatiō, but beléue thou stedfastly, that if hée shewe hys mercy but vnto one man in all the worlde, that thou shalt bée that same one man, & though an aungell would make thée beléue, that all the world should bée damned, yet sticke thou fast to his mercy, and to his iustice, that iustifieth thée, and beléue, that the swéete bloud of his blessed sonne, can not bée shedde in vayne, but it must néedes iustifie sinners, and so many as sticke fast vnto it, though they bée neuer so blynded, and neuer so hardned, for it was shed alonely for them.

A comfortable and wholesome doctrine.

If thou canst thus satisfie thy selfe, then doest thou wel, & thou art doubtles out of ieoperdie. If thou wilt not bée content, but wilt dispute, and inquire causes of Gods inscrutable will, then will I stand by, and loke on, and sée what victorydome thou shalt get I doubt not, but it will repēt thée, and that hée will conclude with thée, on this maner. May not I doe what I will? Now here haue I aūswered, to an intricable doubt, that our schole men are wrapped in, whiche would know, what is the cause of predestination, and of reprobatiō. Duns bée- Scotus 3 sent. dist. xli.
yng wrapped betwéene carnall reason, and the inuincible Scriptures of S. Paule, can not tell, whether hée may graunt, that the will of God is alonely the cause of election, or els any merites of man precedyng afore: hée concludeth, that both ỹ opinions may bée defended. Bonauenture blyndly concludeth, that there may bée a cause preceding grace to deserue it. So that in these vnfrutefull questions, which ingender nothing but contēction, haue they spent all their liues, and for these thinges hée geuen vnto them peculiar names, as subtile and seraphicall, and irrefrigable Doctours. But agaynst them all, I set S. Paule, whiche toke intollerable labours, to prowe by inuincible Scriptures, and examples therof, that there was no cause but alonely the will of God. And to prowe this, hée byngeth in an euident example of Jacob, & Esau, how Jacob was elected, & Esau reprowed, afore they were borne, and afore they had done, either good, or bad. Bonauenture. Iacob, Esau.

Can there bée a playner example? what meaneth Paule in these words when they weare neyther borne, nor had done neyther good nor bad, but that the election of God myght stande? Doth hée not clearely take away all manner of merites, both de congruo, & also de condigno? and declare the wyll of God to bée the cause onely? But heare will subtyll blyndnes say, that God sawe beéfore, that Jacob should doe good, and therefore dyd hée chuse hym. Hée sawe also, that Esau should doe no good, and therefore hée repelled hym. Alas for blindenes, what will you iudge of that, that God saw. How know we that God sawe that? And if hée sawe it, yet how know we that that was the cause of Jacobs election? These children bée vnborne, and they haue done neyther good nor bad, and yet one of them is chosen, & the other is refused, S. Paule knoweth none other cause, but the will of God, and will you discuse an other. Meritum de congruo. Jacob is elected and Esau reiected.

And where you say, that God did sée

ſée afore, that one of them ſhould doe good, I praye you what was the cauſe or whereby ſaw hée, that hée ſhould doe good? you muſt néedes ſay by that that hée would geue hym his grace, Ergo, the will of God is yet the cauſe of election, for becauſe ỳ God would geue hym his grace. Therefore God ſaw, that hée ſhould doe good, and ſo ſhould alſo ỳ other haue done. if God woulde haue geuen hym that ſame grace. Wherefore you gyauntes, that will ſubdue heauen and earth, leaue your ſearching of this cauſe, and bée content with the will of God, & doubt not, but the will of God, is as righteous, and as lawfull a cauſe, as your merites can bée. And doubt you not, but S. Paule (that toke ſo great labours in this matter) dyd ſée as farre in mans deſeruing, as we can doe: & yet hée concluded with theſe wordes of ſcriptures, I will ſhew mercy: to whom I ſhew mercy: I will haue cõpaſſion, of whom I haue compaſſion. So lyeth it not in mans will, or cunnyng, but in the mercy of God. Hée ſayth not, I will haue mercy on hym, that I ſée ſhall doe good: but I will ſhew mercy to whom I wil. Hée ſaith not, I will haue compaſſion of hym ỳ ſhall deſerue it de congruo? But of him of whom I will haue cõpaſſion. This doth S. Auguſtine well proue in theſe wordes: The diſputatiõ of thẽ is vain ỳ which doe defend ỳ preſẽce of God, agaynſt the grace of God, and therfore ſay, that we were choſen afore ỳ making of the world, becauſe ỳ God knew afore that we ſhould bée good, not bécauſe hée ſhould make vs good. But hée that ſayth, You haue not choſen mée, ſayth not that. For if hée dyd therefore chooſe vs, bécauſe that hée knew before, that wée ſhould bée good, thẽ muſt hee alſo knowe bécfore, that wée ſhould fyrſt haue choſen hym: &c.

Rom. 9.

Gods mercy is ỳ cauſe oncly of our ſaiuation.

Auguſt. ſuper Ioannem tract. lxxxvij.

Here is it playne, that the election of God is not, becauſe hée ſawe afore, that we ſhould doe well, but all onely the cauſe of election, is his mere mercy, and the cauſe of our doing well, is his election. And therefore S. Paule ſayth, not of workes, but of callynge.

Now goe to you ſubtill Duns men, with all your carnall reaſons, & ſearch out a cauſe of his ſecrete will. If you dyd beléeue, that hée were good, righteous, and mercyfull, it were a great comfort for you, that the electiõ ſtode all onely by hys will, for ſo were you ſure, that it ſhould bée both righteouſly done, and mercifully, but you haue no fayth, & therfore muſt you nedes myſtruſt God, and of that, fall you to inuent cauſes of election of your own ſtrength. As one ſhould ſay, bécauſe God will not of his righteouſnes, or of his mercy chooſe vs, we will be ſure that we ſhall bée elected. For fyrſt will we inuent, that the election commeth of deſeruyng, and then will we alſo deuiſe certayne workes, that ſhall thereunto bée appoynted of vs, and thoſe will we doe at our pleaſure, ſo that the election, and reprobation, ſhall ſtande all in your hands, let God doe what that pleaſeth him. But now bécauſe there bée certayne open places of ſcripture, that geue onely the cauſe to God, all onely of election, & alſo of reprobation, therefore are theſe men ſore troubled, and can not tell no other remedy, but all onely to ſtudye, how they may wring, & wreſt the open ſcriptures, to the fortifiing of their errour, and to the ſatiſfyinge of their carnall reaſon: ſo that where the holy Ghoſt ſayth, I will obdurate the hart of Pharao, they will take vpon them to learne and to teach the holy Ghoſt to ſpeake better, and to ſay of this maner: I will ſuffer Pharao to bée indurated, but I will not doe it, but my eaſynes, my ſoftnes, whereby that I ſhall ſuffer him, ſhall bring other men to repentaunce, but Pharo ſhal it make more obſtinate in malice. So that God doth indurate (as you ſay) when hée doth not chaſtice a ſynner, but ſheweth ſoftnes, and eaſynes and ſufferaunce to hym. Hée is merciſull, when hée doth call a ſinner to repentaunce by affliction and ſcourging. So that induration after your expoſition, is nothing els but for to ſuffer cupll by ſoftnes, and by goodnes. To haue mercy, is nothing els but to correcte, to ſcourge, and to punyſhe

God is mercyfull.

Mãs good intent to ſaue hym ſelfe.

men for their synnes.

Origine in periarcon. Glos. Rom. 5 Hiero. super Esaiam.

This is the exposition of induration, after S. Hierome and after your common glose. S. Hieromes wordes bée these: God doth indurate, when hée doth not by and by castigate a synner. Hé hath mercy, when hée doth call a synner by and by vnto repentáce by afflictions. &c. This is auctoritie inough, as you thinke, what shoulde you search any farther? Dyd not these men vnderstand scripture? Is not this exposition playne? This taketh away all inconueniéces? By this exposition God is not the auctor of euell? This is a clarkely exposition? Briefly, this this must néedes bee the true expositiō Wherfore it weare better for you, to erre with S. Hierome, and with our oulde schoolemen, then for to say true with these newe heretykes, so call you all them, that will reproue oulde errours.

Which bee newe men.

Now haue you well defended the matter. Now is your cause well proued. Now must the holy Ghost chang his wordes. For hée hath new schoolemaysters. And wheare hée was wont to say, I haue hardened Pharos hart. Now must hée say. Pharao hath hardened hym selfe, by my softnes, and by my easines, but I haue not done it.

But yet I pray you, how woulde you satisfie a weake conscience? that stickes faste to the worde of God, and reckeneth that the holy Ghost knoweth well what hée shal speake, and wil speake nothing without a great cause but that that hée speaketh, shall bée so well spoken, that you can not amende it?

How thynke you? is it sufficient to say to this pore man, S. Hierome, and all schole men say so? holde thou thy peace, bée thou content with their expositions, serch thou no further, it doth not become thée to know it?

But now, if hée wyll laye to your charge, that this thyng is opēly writtin scripture, and the wordes of Moyses and of Paule bée playne, therfore you must aunswere to them. And it shall bée as lawful and as necessary for hym to know the minde of holy scripture, as the expositiō of S. Hierome, or of S. Duns. Scripture saith plainly, that God doth indurate Pharaos hart, and not Pharao his owne hart. It is a new exposition, to say, I will indurate Pharaos hart, that shall bée as much, as Pharao shall indurate himselfe thorough my softnes and patience. By this rule shal Anaragoras Philosophy come in place, that shall make of euery thing what hée wyll. And where as scripture sayth, Saul, Saul, why dooste thou persecute mée? Shall bée as much to say, as why sufferest thou mée to bée persecuted. Also the father of heauen, sent hys onely sonne into the worlde, shall bée as much to say, as hée suffered his sonne to bée sent. So that wée shal expounde all places of Scripture, to our owne purpose, and not to loke what is the sentence of holy Scripture, nor yet what the mynde of the holy ghost is: but what expositiō will please vs best, and what will best serue to our carnall minde. Furthermore, if God doe harden mens hartes, when hée suffereth, and when hée is softe and sheweth mercy: then did hée harden the hartes of the Iewes, whē he brought them out of Egypt into wildernesse: then did hée harden them, when hée brought them out of the captiuitie of Babylon, then hardeneth hée all the worlde, whom hée suffereth in great softnes and mercy. Also after your exposition, hée was mercifull to Israell, when hée sent them into Babylō. For there dyd hée chasten them, and by afflictions prouoked them to repentaunce.

Howe the Papistes & schoole men peruert the holy scriptures.

Likewise the father of heauen had no mercy on the worlde, whē hée sent his sonne, for of that hée gaue men an occasion of induratiō. But when hée hée damneth the sinners, then by your rule hath he mercy on them, for he chasteneth and punisheth them for their sinnes. This is your rule of induration, and no mā may say against it. Misereri may not signifie to geeue grace, nor to remitte sinne, but to chastice and to scourge, and by paines prouoke to repentaunce. And indurare, shall not signifie to harden, but to suffer, and to bée patient, and to bée mer-mercifull, and not to chastice.

But maisters, how was God mercifull vnto Pharao, by softenes, & by sufferaunce, whome hee chastened so sore with ten plagues, and wyth such plagues as Moyses marueyled of? Call you that softnes? was that suffering of Pharao? was that an occasion of induratiō? by patience? easines, & by sufferaūce? God send his aduersaries of that patience, and of that sufferaunce. I pray you, how coulde God chastice hym more? and yet at euery plague, he sayth: I will indurate Pharaos hart. Wherefore Pharao had none occasion of induration by sufferaunce, and patience of God, but rather by his scourging. Wherfore there must bee an other sence in these wordes then you doe make, and wee must seeke out an other waye to know, how God doth worke induration in mens hartes (such wordes doth the holy ghost vse, therfore dare wee speake them.) And how hee is ỹ doer both of good and euil: and yet all thynges that hee doth, is well done. First, you must needes graunt, that after the fall of Adam, the pure nature of man was corrupted by sinne, whereby wee bee all wicked, and borne (as S. Paule sayth) by nature the children of wrath, and as Dauid sayth, wee are all conceiued in sinne. Notwithstanding, of this corrupt nature, doth God make all mē, both good and bad. Those that bee good, be good by hys grace. Those that bee badde, bee badde of corrupted nature, and yet God hath made them. Nevertheless, by nature they are of the same goodnes, and no better thē nature is, that is to say, euill: but yet the creation of God, and his workemanship is good, thouth the thyng bee euill in it selfe, yet is Gods worke before hymselfe good, though all the worlde say naye.

How God indurateth.

* Ephe. 2.

Nowe God of hys infinite power doth rule, and guide all maner of men both good and badde, and all mē by his infinite power, are moued vnto operations, but euery man after his nature. As after your owne philosophy, Primum mobile, by the realō of his swifte motiō, carryeth all the inferiour thinges with him, & suffereth nothing to bee vnmoued: notwithstāding, hee moueth all thynges after their owne naturall course.

So likewise God of his infinite power, letteth nothyng to bee exempted from hym, but all thynges to bee subiecte vnto his action, and nothing can be done by them, but by his principall motion: so that hee worketh in all maner of thynges that bee eyther good or bad, not chaunging their nature, but mouinge them alonely to worke after their nature: so that god worketh good, and euill worketh euil, and God vseth them both as instrumentes, and yet doth hee nothyngs euill, but euill is done alonely thorowe the euill man, God working by hym (but not euill) as by an instrument. Take an example. A man doth salue a blocke with an euil salue. The which is nothyng apte for to cut wel, and yet must it needes cut at the mouing of the man, though it bee neuer so euill, for the man in mouing, doth not chaunge the nature of the salue. Neuertheiesse, the action of ỹ man is good and cunningly done, but the cutting of the salue is after his nature. So likewise God moueth these euyll instrumentes to working, and by his common influence geuen to all creatures, suffereth them not to bee idle, but he chaungeth not their nature. Wherfore their operation, is a fruite conuenient for their corrupted nature, but yet there is no faulte in Gods mouinge.

All thyngs are subiect to the will of God.

Gods actiō is good.

Here haue you now, howe God workes all thynges, in all men both good and bad. But now let vs goe to the induration of them, that bee euill. Thus is it. First, they bee euill by nature, and can abyde nothyng that is good, nor yet suffer any good to bee done. Wherefore when God the author of goodnesse, doth any thyng, or sayth any thyng vnto them, then are they more, and more, sower, and sower contrary vnto God, and to all hys workes, for of their nature they are so corrupted, and can not agree to the will of God, nor to any thynge that is good, but when it is offered them either in word, or deede, thē blaspheme they, then withstād they with all theyr might, with all their power, then are they prouoked of their corrupted nature to more mischief, and more, and allwayes harder and harder: As for an example, when the blessed word of God is preached vnto them, that bee wicked, to whom God hath geuen no grace to receiue it, then are they nothyng amended, but more indurated, and allwayes harder and harder. And the more ỳ word of God is preached, the more obstinate are they, and the more mischief intende they.

As ỳ faithfull take profite by the hearing of the word of God, so the wicked and vnfaithfull take hurt thereby.

Then all their study, then all their wisedome, then all their labour, then all their might, then all their power, then all their craft, and subtiltie, then all their frendes, that they can make in heauen and in earth is nothyng els but to oppresse the word of God: yea and they thinke all to litle, for ỳ more it is preached the more they grudge, and the wodder bee they. After this maner was the hart of Pharao indurated, whē that the word of God was declared vnto hym by Moyses, & hee had no grace to receiue it: then the more that Moyses laboured in the worde, the more sturdyer was hee in withstandyng of it, and allwayes harder and harder.

This is also euidently seene in the corrupt nature of man, for the more a thyng is forbydden hym, the more desireth hee to doe it. But what neede me to goe into Egypt to fetch an exāple to prowe this? Loke of mine own countreymen, if they bee not openly indurated and so blynded, that no mā is able to defend them by any reason, or law, and therefore they take them selues to violence and oppression, as Pharao dyd, whiche bee the right signes, and tokens of induration. For the more ỳ word of God is preached, and the veritie is declared vnto them the more sturdyer, and obstinate bee they agaynst it. And all theyr study, all theyr wyttes, all theyr counseis, all their craft, and mischief with all glosinges and lyinges, and with blasphemyng of God & hys preachers, is nothyng els but to keepe ỳ word of God vnder, and to withstand that veritie, which they know in their conscience must needes goe forth, though all the world say nay. And therfore will they heare no man, nor reason with any man but euen say as Pharao dyd, I will not let the people goe.

But if they were not indurated, & the verye enemyes vnto the veritie, they woulde at the lest wayes heare their powre brethrē of charitie, & know what they coulde say, & if they coulde prowe their saying to bee true: then if they had ỳ loue of ỳ veritie, as they haue but ỳ shadow, they would geue immortall thākes to god, & with great meekenes, and with a low spirite, receiue the heauenly verity, and thanke their brethren hartely, that they warned them of such a damnable way, now in good tyme & season. But there is no loue to the veritie, nor yet feare of God, nor regarde to the daunger of their soules. And why? For they be children of induration and of blasphemy. And therfore the more it is preached, the more are they obstinate. This is the verye induration, that God worketh in mens hartes, wherby they bee the children of darkenes.

Therefore let vs pray instantly to God, to mollifie our hard harts, for Christes deare bloud sake. Amen.

That it is lawfull for all maner of men to read the holy Scripture.

HOw can Antichrist bee better knowen, then by thys token, that hee condemneth Scriptures, and maketh it heresie and high treason against the kynges grace for lay men to reade holy scripture. The Pope and his cleargie will not allow ỳ scripture to bee in ỳ mother ℰ vulgar tongue of ỳ people.

to say wyth the token of the beaste: as with shauē crownes, long gownes and baners about their neckes. They that haue these tokens bee the heyres of holy Scriptures, and may reade it at their pleasure, though they vnderstand as much as a Popingaye. But holy Scripture, that is sent vs from heauen, yea and that by the sonne of God, to destroy all heresies: this holy scripture shall ingender in lay men heresie: If this bee not the doctrine of Antichrist, I know not hys doctrine. Tell mee what can bee more contrary to Christ, then by violence to oppresse the scriptures, and to cōdemne them as vnlawfull, yea and as heresie, for certaine men to reade, and to say that there bee certayne secrettes in them that belonge not for lay mē to know. And that this thing shall not bee denyde (for I know they bee slipper that I haue to doe wyth, and there is no holde of them) therefore wyll I recite an open acte that all the worlde doth remember.

This was Bysshoppe Stokesley.

A common practise of Prelates to deface the scriptures.

My Lord of Londō openly at Pauls crosse was not ashamed with intollerable blasphemes to condemne the holy testament of Christ Jesus hauing for hym, but a damnable collour and and a deadly reason of the deuill, that was, how there were in the translation so many heresyes, that all ỳ world knoweth that it was abhominable ℰ and a deadly lye, though it were a lordly lye. But such probations doth God all wayes let them haue, that bee agaynst his holy veretye. But let vs graunt that that translation was so false. Why dyd not you there take vpon you openly for to amend it and to set forth truely the holy testament of Christ. You must nedes graunt that there is an holy testament of his in earth (except you will denye Christ as I doubt not but that you will in effect) Wheare is it? Why haue we it not? If that weare not it? Why doe not you set ỳ very true testament out.

The cleargie were more willing to finde faulte wyth the translating of the Scripture then to amende it.

W. Tyndal

You were ready to condemne an other mans faythfull labour and diligence: but you had no charytie to amende it. You thinke alwayes to disceaue the world with your holy hypocrisy. Men bee not so blinde but that they can well indge, If you had condemned that testament all onely because of errours, yet at ỳ least wayes you should both of charitie, and also of dutye haue set forth the trew text, and then would men haue thought, ỳ you condemned the other by the reason of errours. But men may nowe vpdently see, ỳ you dyd not condemne it for errours sakes, (For how shoulde they indge errours that bee so vnlearned) but all onely because that the veritie was there in, ỳ which you could not abyde that men should knowe: ℰ that dyd the processe of your sermon and also your tyranny that doth folow wil proue. But my Lord I say to you, and to all yours if you doe not amend it shall bee to your euerallsting damnacyon: for God will not take this rebuke at your hand. Remember that hee hath swoorne (by the mouth of hys Prophet) by hys right hand, and by the myght of his strength, that hee wil defende this cause. Bee not these lordly wordes, of the eternall God, think you to make hym forswoorne? Remember how the holy ghost threatyneth you in an other place saying, if a man dyd dispise the lawe of Moses, hee must without any mercy dye. Howe much more are they worthy of punishment, that doe treade the sonne of God vederneath their feete, and despise the bloud of his testament. How thinke you is not this openly agaynst you, that condemne not all onely Christ, but also his blessed worde, ℰ all that longeth to hym, Take awaye Christes word, and what remayneth behynde of Christ? nothing at all. I pray you my Lorde to whome was this worde fyrst preached? to whome was this written? all onely to priestes and not vnto lay men? yea was it not written to all the worlde? yes truely. Wherby will you conuerte a Turke or an Infidell, not by holy Scripture? When they bee converted, what wil you learne them? what wyll you geeue them to reade, any other thing then holy Scripture? I thinke nay. How will you make your owne countreymen, your owne citizens, your owne subiectes, yea your owne brethren, redeemed with Christes blessed bloud, worse then Iewes and Infidels? But there is no reason, nor no brotherhod, nor no Christen charitie that can moue you, or that can helpe you, for you are so blynded and so obstinate against Christ, that you had rather all the worlde shoulde perishe, then his doctrine shoulde bee brought to light: but I doe promyse you, if God doe spare mee lyfe, and geeue mee grace, I shall so set it out, if you doe not reuoke it, that it shall bee to your vtter shame and confusion: finde the best remedye that you can. I doe beleeue stedfastly, that god is mightier then you: and I doe reckon and faythfully beleeue, that you are ten tymes worse then the greate Turke: for hee regardeth no more but rule and dominiõ in this worlde: and you are not therewyth content, but you will also rule ouer mẽs consciences, yea and oppresse Christ and his holy worde, and blaspheme and condemne his worde. Was it not a holy counsell of the Chauncelor of London, to counsell a certaine marchaunt to buye Robyn hode for his seruauntes to reade? What should they doe wyth vitas patrum, and with bookes of holy Scripture? Also the same Chauncelour sayde to an other man: what findest thou in the Gospell but a storye? what god canst thou take there out.

The Byshoppes worse then the great Turke.

Worshypp full counsell of an vnpreachyng Prelate.

O Lord God where art thou? why sleepest thou? why sufferest thou this blasphemy. Thou hast defended thy Prophetes with wild fire from heauen, and wilt thou suffer thy onely sonne and thy heauenly worde, thus to bee despised, and to bee reckened but as a storye of Robin hode. Rise vp god Lorde. Rise vp, thy enemyes doe preuayle. Thy enemyes doe multiplye, shew thy power, defend thy glorye. It is thy contumely and not ours, what haue we to doe with it but alonely to thy glorye. Reuenge this cause for thy enemyes shall recken it not to bee thy cause. ritie. See howe thou art mocked. See how thou art blaspheмed, yea & that by them, that haue taken on them to defend thy glorye. But now heauenly father, seeyng that thou hast, so suffered it: yet for the glorye of thy name, geue some man strength to defend it, or els shalt thou bee clearely taken out of the hartes of all men. Wherefore most gracious Lord, of thy mercy and grace I beseech thee, that I may haue the strength to defend thy godly worde to thy glorye and honour, and to the vtter confusion of thy mortall enemyes. Helpe god Lorde helpe, and I shall not feare a thousande of thyne enemyes. In thy name will I begyn to defend this cause.

First commeth thy faythfull seruaunt Moses, true and iust in all thy workes, and hee commaundeth faithfully & truely, with great threatnings that man, woman and child should diligently read thy holy worde: saying. Set your harts on all my wordes the which that I doe testifie vnto you this day, that you may commaunde them vnto your children, to keepe, to doe, & to fulfill all thynges that bee written in the booke of this law. Marke how hee commaũded them, to learne their children all thynges that bee written in this booke, and so to learne thẽ that they might keepe and fulfill all things that were written in ỹ booke: Moses made nothing of secretnes, & will you make secretes therin? how shall men fulfill those wordes that they knowe not. How can men knowe the very true way of God & haue not the word of God: is not all our knowledge therin? The Prophet sayth, thy word is a lanterne vnto my feete and a light vnto my pathes. Hee calleth it a lanterne and light, yea and that vnto all men: and you call it but a storye, darknes, and a thyng of secretnes, yea and occasion of heresie, how can the occasion of darknes geue light, how can a lanterne bee a thing of secretnes, how can the veritie of God bee occasion of heresie? The holy Prophet sayth, blessed is the man that setteth his delectation in the will of God, and his meditation in Gods law night and day.

Here

Here sayeth the spirite of God, that men bee blessed, that study the worde of God: and you say that men bee heretickes for studying of it. How doth the spirite of God and you agree?

Ephes. 6. Also S. Paule commaundeth vs to receiue the helmet of health, and the sworde of the spirite, the whiche is the worde of God. I pray you to whom doth hee here speake? to Priestes onely? How many of your Priestes dyd hee knowe? yea was not this Epistle written to the whole Churche of the Ephesians? And dyd not they read it? were not they lay men: and why shall not our lay men read, that they read? Moreouer doth not Paule call it the sworde of the spirite: is it not lawfull for lay men to haue the spirit of God? Or is the spirite of God not free but bounde alonely to you. Also S. John sayth, if any man come to you & bring not this doctrine, receiue him not into your house nor yet salute hym. Here the holy ghost would we should haue no other doctrine, but holy scripture: and you will take it alonely from vs. Furthermore this was written vnto a woman and to her children and you will y no other man, wyfe nor childe shall reade it. But if we should receiue your Priestes into our houses, after this rule: I thinke we should not bee greatly cõbered with them, for their are few of them that haue this worde. Also our S. Christ saith vnto the phareses, search you scriptures, for in them you thinke to haue eternall life. Our Maister sent the Pharisies to scriptures, and you forbyd Christen men to reade them: who had a worse spyte then they? and yet they iudged better of holy scriptures thẽ you doe. For they iudged to haue lyfe in thẽ, & you iudge to haue heresyes in thẽ: so that you bee ten tymes worse to scriptures, thẽ euer were they. Also Paule saith, all scripture geuen by inspiration of God is profitable to teach, to improue, to enforme, to enstruct in righteousnes, that the man of God may bee perfect, and prepared vnto all good workes. You will not denye but but scripture is genẽ vs of God? Ergo it followeth. &c. S. Paul saith it is profitable to learne with: and you say that it is dawnable & good to learn herises with. S. Paule sayth it is good to improue heresyes, and you say it engendereth heresyes. S. Paule sayth it is good to informe, and to instruct righteousnes: and you say to enforme heresies. S. Paule sayth that the man of God may be perfect by it, and you say that the Priestes al onely shal haue it, so that you play ouerthwart with S. Paule in all thinges. Also S. Paule sayth, you may all interpretate scripture, one by one, that all men may learne, and all men may haue comfort, but let your wyues kẽpe sylence in the congregation. Marke how that all men may prophesye: which S. Augustine doth declare, for interpretating Scriptures. Therefore, it belongeth not all onely to priestes. Also hee sayth that women must hold their peace, which hee nede not to cõmaund if they were vnlearned.

Furthermore hee will that womẽ shall learne of their husbãds at home: How shall their husbandes learne them if they bee vnlearned thẽselues? Also S. Paule geueth testimony of Tymothy that hee was learned in holy scriptures, from his childhode, the which were able to instruct hym vnto saluatiõ, by fayth that is in Christ Jesu. Here you not how Tymothe was learned in holy scriptures before hee was eyther priest or byshop, yea being but a childe: the which as S. Paule sayth, weare able to enstruct hym, and you say they bee able to condemne mẽ. Is not this cleane cõtrary against S. Paule: are you not ashamed? What workes shall Antichrist doe more cõtrary to Christ thẽ these bee: let all christẽ men write the dedes of Anterchrist & they must all agree in this that hee shal condemne scripture. But that shall he not doe, without some colour of right and of holynes: and you condemne it hauyng no colour, nor no shadow of holynes, but all onely reason of fleshlynes, and of starke madnes. Thinke you if the great Turk would receaue such reasons as yours bee, yea and a great deale better agaynst hys Mahomet, that hee coulde raigne so long as hée hath done.

Nay doubtles, and yet you loke to bée alowed agaynst Chryst, the ryght sonne of God (yea and that of Chrysten men) which coulde not bée hard agaynst mahomet.

Mar.vlt. Mat.vlt. Also our M. Chryst commaundeth his Apostles that they should preach ỳ Gospell vnto all creatures, & as Mathew sayth, that they should teach mẽ to kéepe all manner of things that hée hath cõmaunded them: Marke that the Gospell, must bée preached to all manner of men not to prieſtes onely, the Apostles must also learne to kéepe all thinges of the Gospell, which they can not doe without they knowe them no if these thinges that the Apostles: dyd learne should ingender or be any occasion of heresies, then the holy Apostles were occasion (by theyr doctrine) of heresies. Yea and that at the commaundement of our M. Chryste, what néede the Apostles to learne vs any thing that might bée occasion of heresie: were wée not in heresie bée fore they came: were wée not all disposed of our nature vnto all maner of mischiefe: and yet after your learning they come and learne that thing that is occasion of heresie. But of your conscience, are you not ashamed, thus damnably to blaspheme the heauenly worde of God: thus shamefully to cõdemne Gods worde: thus presumptuously to vndertreade the gifte of ỳ holy ghoste: yea and that vnder the prẽce of holynes, & of Chrystẽdome, as though you dyd fauour Chryst. Will you make Chryst an auctor of heresy, and that vnder the name of holynes: will you by your holynes, and your damnable hipocresye, condemne our M. Chryst, the auctor of all goodnes: But briefly if you woulde teach nothing, but that which our M. Chryst hath left to bée taught, we should not haue so many heretykes as we haue. For nowe men bée no heretykes for speking agaynst Scripture (for you graunt that men speak scripture) but for speaking agaynst your law: for ỳ cause bée they made heretykes, and by ỳ bée they proued heretykes. Now let euery Chrysten man Judge in hys conscience if this bée right or lawfull. Is not this a merueilous thing, let a man liue in fornicatiõ, in whoredome in theft, in murther, drunkennes, in extortyon, in bribery, briefly in all mãner of mischyfe, and you will haue nothing to doe with thẽ, you will scarsly reproue hym: yea hée shall bée a great officer vnderneath you, & greatly in your fauour. But let a man come and preach ỳ very true Gospell of Chryst, and thereby reproue your damnable lyuyng, and thẽ begynneth hée to bée an heretycke, & it shall cost you great labour, if you make hym not an heretyke in déede. And yet haue you nothing that you can reproue in hym as concerning hys lyuyng, but all onely that hée preacheth the Gospell. Is not thys a merueilous heretyke: whose lyuyng you must néedes graunt to bée good. And also you can not proue, but that his learning is of Chryst: but all onely that it pleaseth you not: no you dare not take in hand to proue it false but all onely by byolẽce you will condemne it. Thinke you that God will thus suffer: remember what hée sayth by the holy Prophet: Thou hast reproued the vnfaythfull people, & hast destroyed the wicked, and takẽ away their name for euer. The Lorde hath prepared his trone of Judgmẽt, doubt you not but hée shal shortly reprous you. His trone is set, & to the Judgemẽt must you come, where you shall neuer bée able to defẽd this cause, but you must perishe for euer. But here will you say that you preach the Gospell to the people, and that is inough: for they néede not to haue it in Englyshe. I aunswere, I pray you when was there any lawe that euer men were bounde to kéepe, but that it was geuen them in wrighting: I will not say that you doe not teach them the right Gospell, for you know it not. But how are they able to beare away that thing ỳ they doe but heare: And if they may heare it of you, why may they not also reade it: But loke on S. Luke that wrot his Gospell that men might know for a certayne, those thinges that they were informed of. Moreouer why did ỳ Apostle write Papistes abyde the true preachers of the Gospell.

Psal.9.

The Papistes are blaspheamers of Gods heauẽly word.

The euangelistes and Apostles did not onely preache, but also wrote the Scripture that all mẽ might read it.

yea

yea and that vnto lay men, sayng that they were so diligent in preachyng I dare boldly say as you bee: But let vs see howe lay men were forbydden to read holy Scripture in the Apostles tyme: The noblest of Thessalonia, whiche receiued the worde, searched the Scriptures dayly, whether those thinges that Paule preached were so or not, here haue you playne that lay men searched Scriptures to knowe whether Paules doctrine were true or not, and also how they read dayly Scriptures. And now come you and say that lay men shall read no Scriptures but alonely receiue thē of your preaching? What if you preache lyes (as it will bee proued to your face that you doe) shall it not bee lawfull for them to search Scriptures, but to learne your lyes?

Actes. 17.

Papistes preach lyes.

Here will I recite how a great prelate of Christ Churche (the first letter of his name is Doct. Allen) did interpretate and declare certaine places of Scripture, to the ghostly instruction of Christes Churche as all men may iudge.

Doct. Allen erpoundeth Scripture.

The first place was this a three fold cable is hard to breake, by this three fold cable, hee vnderstode, the Reuerent father in God my Lorde Cardinall. The first fold was, that hee was an Englishmā borne, the which was a strong thing and hard to withstand. The second fold was that hee was Legate & that not after the common maner, but Legatus a latere, this is sprōg out of the blessed side of our holy father the pope. This was a strong fold and could not bee lightly broken. The third fold, hee was a Lord and that of the kinges counsel. This was a strōg fold, and all these three together dyd make so strong a cable that no man within the Realme might breake it or withstand it. I was sore afrayde that hee should haue reckened the noble & the royall blood, that this threefolde cable dyd spryng out of, then had it been so strong, that the strongest Ore in the butchers stall could not breake it. This erposition dyd I here and sat by hym, therefore I can testifie it the better.

A Popish Doctors interpretation.

A foolish tale of a tubbe.

The seconde Scripture was this from Syon shall come out a law, and the word of God frō Jerusalem. This did hee erpounde on this maner. The commaundement of the most reuerēt father in God Lord Legate, is come from his highe Palace, and from his noble grace hither vnto you.

The Papisticall and vayne doctrine of Papistes.

The thyrde Scripture, was this Sumite Psalmum & date tympanū, this dyd hee erpounde on this maner, I haue done my visitatiō, now gene me my money. How thinke you by this holy Doctour, and this Prelate of Christes Church hath hee not wel declared holy Scripture, is hee not worthy to bee beleeued? What reasō were it that lay men shoulde searche Scriptures, then might they repraue this noble prelate: what order ware that? It were right if hee were well serued ý hee had a threefold halter to stretche him in. But by such doctours as these bee, must the poore people bee ruled & if they wil search for the veritie themselues, then must they bee heretickes bycause they will not beleeue these holy fathers. But let vs proceede in our matter agaynst these blasphemers of Gods word: Priscila & Aquila dyd expoūd vnto Apollo which was a great learned man ý perfite vnderstanding of scriptures. These were lay persōs and yet were they so learned in scriptures ý they wer able to teach a great Doctour. And now lay men may not read Scriptures. This was alowed by Peter, and Paul. But their successours will condemne it as heresie.

Authorities to proove that the scriptures ought to bee in the mother tounge.

Actes. 18.

Also Eunuches that was the treasurer vnto the Quéene of the Ethiopians dyd read Esay the Prophete. The whiche hee vnderstode not, till God sent him Philip to declare it vnto him. This was a lay man, and also an infidell and yet was not forbidden of God to read Scriptures. But rather holpen to the vnderstandyng of them and now will you forbid Christen mē, to read holy Scriptures, that are sworne vnto them, yea and also to defende them vnto death.

Acte. 8.

Also S. Paule sayth. Let the word of God dwell in you plenteously. S. Paule woulde that lay men shoulde Collos. 3.

learne

learne the worde of God, yea & that plenteously. And you commaunde that they shall haue nothinge of it. How standeth your nothing wyth Saint Paules aboundaunce. Aboundantly, and nothing, bée farre a sunder. But thus doe you alwayes agrée with S. Paule and with holy Scripture. And if you woulde say playnely in wordes that your déedes doe declare openly, then were wée in no doubt of you: for all ỳ worlde woulde take you, as you bée taken béefore God, that is, for the Antichristes that the world loketh for. Neuertheleſſe, doubt you not, but God shall declare it openly at his time, to your vtter confusion and damnation. For doubtleſſe you neither holde with Christ, with his holy doctours, nor yet with your owne lawe, where they bée against you: but all these must bée expounded and wronge vnto your carnall purpose, or els you make it heresie. But thinke you that the father of heauen (which for the great tender loue, that hée had to mans soule, sent hys onely sonne to redéeme it, and also géeue it a lawe to liue by, out of his owne mouth) shall thus suffer it loke thorough your hypocrisies and his godly worde to bée ouer trodden for the mayntaynyng of your worldly glory? Nay doubtles, for if it were possible that hée coulde more regarde your pompe and pride, then mans soule and his godly word: yet were it vnpossible that euer hée should so dispise the swéete blonde of his blessed sonne swéete Jesus. Wherefore loke vppon your charge.

The Pope and hys Clergy are the very Antechristes.

August. ad fratres. ſ. 38.

But to our purpose, S. Augustine is openly against you in these words. My brethren, reade holy Scripture in the which you shall finde what you ought to holde, and what you oughte to flye. What is a man reputed without learning? what is hée? Is hée not a sheepe or a Goate? Is hée not an Oxe or an Asse? Is hée any better thē an Horse or a Mule, the which hath no vnderstandyng. &c.

Here S. Augustine moueth men to reade holy Scripture: and you commaunde them not to reade it. S. Augustine sayth: they shal know in them what to doe, and what not to doe, & you say they shal learne nothing therout but hereſies, S. Augustine sayth, a mā without learning of scriptures, is no better then a brute beast: are not you good fathers that will make all your childrē no better thē beastes? Also Athanasius: If thou wilte that thy children shall bée obedient vnto thee, vse them to the wordes of God. But thou shalt not saye that it belongeth alonely to religious men to study Scriptures: but rather it belongeth to euery Christen man, and specially vnto hym that is wrapped in the businesses of this worlde: and so much the more, because hée hath more nede of helpe, for hée is wrapped in ỳ troubles of this worlde: therefore it is greatly to thy profite that thy children should both heare and also reade holy Scriptures, for of them shall they learne thys commaundement: Honour thy father and thy mother. &c.

In epiſt. ad Epheſ. c. 6.

Scriptures teache the commaundementes of God.

These wordes bée playne inough against you, they nede no exposition: And the doctour is of auctority, wherfore answere you to hym. Also Chrisostome that was a Bysshop as well as you bée, cōdemneth your sentence openly, saying: I beséeche you that you will oftentimes come hither, and that you will diligently heare the lesson of holy Scripture, and not alonely when you bée here, but also take in your handes when you are at home the godly Bibles, and receaue the thyng therein with great study, for thereby shall you haue great aduantage. &c.

In Gen. c. 9. ho. 28.

A notable saying of S. Chrisostome.

These wordes bée so plaine, that I can adde nothyng to them, woulde you that wée shoulde take you for byshops, and for holy fathers, that bée so openly agaynst Scripture, and so contrary to holy doctours? That will I neuer doe while I liue. I will neuer loke to sée other Antichristes then you, and so will I take you, till I sée almighty God conuerte you. Also the same doctour saith. Which of you all that bée here, (if it were required) coulde say one Psalme without the booke, or any other part of holy scripture,

In Mat. c. 1 hom. 2.

ture, not one doubtles. But this is not alonely the worste, but that you bée so slow and so remisse vnto spirituall thinges, and vnto deuillishnesse you are hotter then any fier, but men will defende this mischief, with this excuse, I am no religious mã, I haue a wife and children, and a house to care for. This is ỳ excuse wherewith you doe (as it were with a pestilence) corrupt all thinges: for you doe recken that the studye of holy Scripture bélongeth alonely vnto religious men, when they bée much more necessary vnto you then vnto them. &c.

The scripture is meete to bee knowen of all states and sortes of people.

Here may you sée that your damnable institution was in the hartes of men in Chrisostomes dayes, & howe they woulde reade no scriptures: but you sée hée condemneth it, and calleth it a pestilẽce, and will you now bring it in agayne? If you had but a louse statute of your owne against mée, or an other man, you woulde call vs hetikes. But you neither regarde Christes holy worde, nor holy Doctours, nor yet any other thinge ỳ is agaynst you. But let vs sée what your owne lawe saith to this: If Christ (as Paul sayth) bée the power and the wisdome of God, thẽ to bée ignorannt in scriptures, is as much as to bée ignorannt of Christ. &c. Here haue you playnely that to take away scriptures from lay men, is as much as to take away Christ frõ them, the which no doubt but that you doe intẽde in your harts to doe, and that thing God knoweth, and your workes doe declare it, the which God shall aduenge full straitly ouer you. Also in an other place. I will set my meditation in thy iustifications, and I will not forgette thy wordes, the which thing is excéding good for all Christen men to obserue and kéepe. &c.

Di. 38. Si iuxta.

ỳ. Sinod. c. Omnes et. di. 38.

Here is a counsell of your owne that hath admitted that all Christen men shall study Scripture. And will you now condemne it? Is there neither Scripture of God, nor practise of Christẽ men, nor exposition of Doctours, nor your owne law, nor yet any statute of counsels that will hold agaynst you? You bée marueilous giantes, how shal a mã behaue him selfe to handle with you? it is not possible to ouercome you, for you wil admitte nothyng that is against you. But yet will I not so leue you, but I will first declare it manifestly, ỳ you bée cõtrary to Christ, and to all holy doctours. S. Hierome, reprooueth you very sore in these wordes. O Paula and Eustochium, if there bée any thyng in this life that doth preserue a wise mã and doth persuade him to abide with a good will in the oppressions and the thraldomes of the world, I doe recke that specially it is the meditations and the study of holy scripture, séeyng that we doe differre from other creatures specially in that that we bée reasonable & in that that we can speake: now is reason and all maner of wordes cõteined in godly Scripture, whereby that we may learne to knowe God & also the cause wherefore we bée created. Wherfore I doe sore marueile, ỳ there bée certein men the which geue thẽ selues, to slouthfulnes, & sluggishnes and will not learne those things, that bée good, but recken those men worthy to bée reproued, that haue that good mynde. &c.

In prohe. In Epist. ad Ephes. Li. 1.

What benefites we may receaue by readyng of Scripture.

Marke how that this was written to two women that were learned. Also hée reckeneth nothyng better, then to study holy scriptures, hée also marueileth, that certaine will neither study Scriptures them selues nor yet let other mẽ study thẽ. It is well knowẽ, that these wordes pricke no men but you, and ye bée so slouthfull & so geuen to voluptuousnes, that you your selues will not study Scriptures nor yet suffer other mẽ to study them: but if you doe study them, it is to deceiue your simple and poore brother there by, and to maintaine your abhominable liuing, with wrestyng and wrongyng of them: other profite commeth there none of your study, as all the worlde knoweth. For you may not preach, but when you haue damnably condemned Christes blessed word or els by violence, made some of your poore brethren heretickes: then come you with all your gorgious estate, pompe and pride, to out face Christ and your simple brother, with your outward dánable pryde afore the face of the world. But my Lordes, leue of your fasing and your brasing: for our Lord whose cause we defend agaynst you, will at length not bée out faced. Remẽber how the holy ghost prayeth Psal. 5. against you saying: iudge them Lord, that they may fall from their cogitations: expell them Lord for they haue prouoked thée: doubte you not but this holy spirite will preuaile agaynst you, though God suffer you for a season, yet hath hé till this day defended him selfe & his godly wordes agaynst all the proude crakyngs of the world: and thinke you that hé wil now take a fall at your hand? nay nay, hé shall first thrust you out headlonge that all the world shall take example by you: this is my beléeue. For that word that you haue cõdemned doth thus learne me. Wherfore if you doe not reuoke the condemnation of the new Testament, and ordeine that all Christen men may read holy Scripture, you shal haue the greatest shame that euer men had in this world: for you are neuer able to defend it by any meanes, nor by any power ỳ is in earth. And if all power in earth wil withstand it, hé shall rather bryng them all to dust and raise vp of stones newe rulers.

Doctour Barnes is vehement.

You wormes meate, you stinking carrion, you nourishmẽt of hell fire, how dare, you thus presume against your God omnipotent? whether will you flie to auoyde his daunger. Heauen & earth, water and fire, sunne, mone, and starres, saintes and angels, man and child, bé against you and holde you accursed. What though the deuill laugh on you for a season. Remember the ende, but God geue you hys grace, that I lose not my labour about you.

The Papistes first reason to proue that lay men ought not to read Scriptures.

But now let mé assoyle your carnall reasons that you bring for you. The first is this, cuyll men doe take an occasion of heresy out of scriptures Wherfore it is best they haue it not. I aunswere lykewise, good men doe take an occasion of goodnes there of Ergo, the people ought to haue it: but will you condemne all thinges where by men doe take occasion of euill? Thẽ must you first put out your own eyes for by them, take you occasiõ to sée many idle thinges: you must also destroy your handes, your féete, your tongue, and al that you haue for these doe you mysuse very often, you must also destroy your own harts whereby you haue not alonely occasion of euil, but you doe thinke euil in very déede: you must also destroy all fayre womẽ, for of them take you sore occasions of euyll: you must also burne all your goodes and destroy all your riches, for of thẽ men take occasion to be thèeues and you to bé proud: you must also destroy all wynes, for of thẽ men take occasiõ to bé drõkẽ, you must destroy all meates, for they géeue mẽ occasiõ of gluttony, yea you muste destroye the mercy of God, of the which euell men take boldenes in their myschief. Briefly what is there so good a thing but that euell mẽ can take an occasion of euill, yea and that of Christ hym selfe, as Saint Paule saith which vnto the Iewes is offence, and vnto the Gentyls occasion of folyshnes: & yet for al this you may not destroy Christ but hé must remayne stil, and so likewise the Gospell: for though that the euell men (which will neuer bé good) receiue of it occasion of euyll: yet ther bé many thousandes ỳ receaue there by their saluation.

Euill men will take occasion of euill of euery good thyng.

1. Cor. 1.

Now bécause the spider gathereth poyso of ỳ good herbes, it were no reason therfore to destroy al good herbes. An other of your reasõs: thrée bé certayne sẽtences in scripture ỳ doe not belõg for euery man to know, as our M. Christ sayth, vnto you it is geuẽ to know, the misteries of the kingdome of heauen, vnto them it is not geuen. I aunswere, whom meane you when you say, vnto you it is geuen: if you meane that Apostles & all onely there successors, then may not you reade holy scripture, for you bé not the successors of ỳ Apostles, by my Lord of Rochesters auctoryte, but if you meane the Christẽ people, that haue ỳ spirite of God, as our M. Christ ment, then bé you excluded, for you haue not the spirite of God as ỳ effect doth declare,

Mach. 13.

An other reason of the Papistes.

therfore

therfore you may not read scriptures. Marke also that our mayster saith, vnto you it is geuen. as who sayth if it were not geuen you, you shoulde no more haue it then other men.

Now how can you proue that the vnderstanding of scripture is geuen to you: but now to ỳ tert: our Maister Christ speaketh heare of the spirituall, and the right vnderstanding of holy scriptures, which is the gift of God onely, and hee speaketh not of studying or reading of holy scripture: for you haue in the same place, how that many dyd followe him, and heare his preaching, but yet they vnderstode him not. Therefore this tert maketh directly against you, and your workes doe declare that you bee the hearers & readers of the worde of God, but the vnderstanding is not geuen you. But now wyll my Lord of Rochester saye that you haue the very vnderstanding as holy doctors had it, for though that scriptures in themselues and of their owne nature bee plainest, & best to bee knowen, yet bee ỳ holy doctors playnest vnto vs: wherefore hee that will vnderstand scripture must fyrst learne to vnderstand the doctours, & they shal bring hym to the true vnderstanding of holy scripture, or els hee must erre. I aunswere: O my Lorde doe you wyte this with a safe conscyence? thinke you ỳ you can discharge your conscience before the dreadfull face of Christ with this trifling distynction, Quedam sunt notiora nobis, et quedam notiora natura, I pray you if you wil proue that God were wise, would you begin to proue it at your wisedome? if you would proue that God were alive, woulde you proue it by that ỳ you bee alive? if you would perswade a man to beleeue that there is a God, would you learne hym, that hee must needes beleeue it, because ỳ there bee creatures? These thinges bee best knowen vnto you, and if you woulde proue that a man hath a true sence of Scriptures, will you proue it, by that that hee hath the sence of the doctours? What if ỳ doctours had taken a false and a contrary sence, (this case is possible) would you therefore say that the sence which the mã hath takẽ out of scripture is false. But I pray you my Lorde, after this this rule, how could men vnderstand scriptures, in Peter & Paules dayes when there weare no doctours. But after your owne learning, that same science which must proue the principelles of other sciences is fyrst knowẽ actualiter, & distinctly. Now bee all the pryncipels of all other doctours proued trew by holy scripture: therefore there is no saying nor exposition of holy doctours ỳ can bee perfectly knowẽ except that scripture bee fyrst knowen this is your owne dryuntie you can not denye it, wherefore if you will proue that you haue the veryte you must proue it, bécause you haue the sence of holy scripture, and not the sẽce of holy doctours. But doubtles I haue great meruell, that my Lord of Rochester, is neyther ashamed of mã, nor yet afrayde of the vengeance of God ỳ thus trifleth wỉ holy scripture.

Scotus. 11. Sent. di. 3. q. 3.

Scriptures must bee first knowen & therby you may iudge the opinion of the Doctours. whether they say right or not.

Besides this you haue an other bauld reason, the Citie of London hath certeine priuileges and secrete counsels, it were no reason that all men should know them, this was my Lorde of Londons reason at Paules crosse, when hee condemned the new Testamẽt. I aunswere my Lord: say of your cõscience, did you not speake these wordes to please my Lorde the Maior of London and his brethren? But I pray you is this a like similitude of ỳ certeine counsels of mẽ, the whiche must bee kept secrete bycause they bee cõusels: and of the holy scriptures the whiche were brought into this world not to bee kept secrete, but to bee preached openly, as our maister Christ commaundeth, preach the Gospell to all creatures, heare you to all creatures, let these mẽ haue it (for all these bee of ỳ counsell) & keepe you it from the residue. Furthermore our maister Christ saith in an other place, that I haue shewed you in secretnes, preach it on the tope of the house.

A third reason of the Papistes.

Cõusailes are to bee kept secret, but the Scripture must bee made knowen to all men.

Mar. vlt.

Also S. Paule sayth, the Gospell is declared openly through preachyng & in an other place God haue brought life and immortalitie, vnto light thorough what is meant by this saying, to you, is geuen the true vnderstyng and interpretation of scriptures.

Ti. 1. 2. Tim. 2.

Iohn.3. Math.5. rough the Gospell. Also our maister calleth it the light of the world: nowe who will set (as hee saith) a light vnder a bushell, and not rather openly that all mē there by may bee lightned. Wherfore my lord your similitude is very far vnlike: and if you were not a Lord, it were worthy to bee despised.

A foolishe similitude made by Stokesley Byshop of London. But doubtles it may bee wel thought that you were at a sore exigent, when you were compelled to proue this thynge with so bauld a reason. Who would haue loked for so simple a reason in so earnest a matter of so wise a man, of so great a Doctour, of so worshipfull a father, and of the Bishop of London, yea and of him that is called an other Salomon, notwithstanding such an haltyng similitude dyd hee neuer learne in the Prouerbes of Salomon: but it had beene a better similitude, of the kings proclamatiō, which is proclaimed ẏ all men might know it and also keepe it & no man is bound to keepe it, till it bee proclaimed: likewise the Gospel was geuen for to bee proclaimed, and euery man is bound to keepe it. Wherfore it must needes bee proclaimed to euery man, and vnto you my Lorde. I beseeche God that you may bee one of them of whom it is spokē: To you is it geuē to know the misteryes of God. Amen.

¶ That mens constitutions, which are not grounded in Scripture, bynde not the conscience of man vnder the payne of deadly sinne.

There are two maner of powers. TO this article we must note that there bee two maner of ministers or powers: one is a temporal power, the other is called a spiritual power: the tēporall power is cōmitted of God to Kinges, Dukes, Earles, Lordes, Barons, Judges, Maiors, Shrines, & to all other ministers vnder thē, these bee they that haue onely the tēporall sword, wherby they must order al ẏ cōmō wealth with all worldly thinges lōgyng thereunto, as ẏ disposition of these worldly goodes, who shal bee right owner and who not, the probation of mens testamentes, the ordering of payments and customes, the settyng of all maner of taskes and forfaites, the correction of all transgressions, wherby the cōmon wealth, or any priuate person, is disquieted or wronged: as correction of theeues, murderers, harlotes, baudes, slanderers, wranglers, extortioners, bribers, vserers, false buyers and sellers, and of all other thynges whereunto belongeth any outwarde ordering, or any corporall payne. In thys power is the kyng chiefe and full ruler: all other bee ministers and seruauntes, as Paule doth declare, saying: let euery soule bee subiect and obedient vnto the hye powers. &c.

A temporal power.

The description of the temporall power.

Also S. Peter: bee subiect vnto the kyng as vnto the chiefe heade, eyther vnto rulers as vnto thē that are sent of the kyng for the punishmēt of euill doers. Unto this power must wee bee obedient in all thynges that pertaine to the ministration of this present life and of the commō wealth, not alonely (as Paule sayth) for auoyding of punishment, but also for discharging of our consciences: for this is ẏ wyll of God. So that if this power commaunde any thing of tyranny against right and law (alwayes prouided that it repugne not agaynst the Gospell, nor destroye our fayth) our charitie must needes suffer it: For as Paule sayth, charitie suffereth all thyng. Also our maister Christ: If a man strike thee on the one cheeke, turne hym the other, for hee doth exercise tyranny. But ouer these worldly goods, & these present thynges, and ouer thy corporall bodye, which Christen men doe not alonely not regarde, but dispise it. Neuertheles, if hee commaunde thee any thyng agaynst ryght, or doe thee any wronge. (As for an example

Roma.13. 1.Pet.2. Roma.13. 1.Cor.13. Math.6.

A man wrongfully imprisoned by a tyraunt maye in quyet maner make his escape.

cast thée in prison wrongfully) if thou canst by any reasonable and quyet meanes, without seditiõ, insurrectiõ, or breakyng of the commõ peace saue thy selfe, or auoyde hys tyranny, thou mayst doe it wyth good conscience. As if thou were in prison, if thou couldest auoyde without any sedition, thou mayst lawfully doe it, & thy cõscience is frée so doyng, and thou dwste not sinne, nor offende the lawe of God,

1.Cor.7. as Paule sayth: If thou mayste bée frée vse it: but in no wise (bée it ryght or wrong) mayst thou make any resistaunce wyth swoorde or wyth hand, but obey, except thou canst auoyde,

Such as haue made offices to the common weale ought not to breake prison. as I haue shewed thée. But if ỳ cause bée ryght, lawfull, or profitable to the cõmon wealth, thou must obey, and thou mayst not flye wõut sinne. That men haue fled from the tyranny and the wrong of thys power, wée haue it openly in diuers places of scriptures.

4.Kyng.6. 3.King.89. As of Elezy, that fled from the tyranny of the kyng of Siria. Also Helyas fled from the tyranny of kyng Achas.

Actes.12. idem.9. and.14. Also S. Peter fled out of prison: And S. Paule out of the Citie of Damascum, and out of Iconium, as it is open in the Actes of the Apostles. So that agaynst this power (though thou haue wrong) mayst thou not make any corporall resistaunce: but alonely auoyde by flying, or els kéepe ỳ thing that is commaunded thée. But if it bée ryght, and to the profite of the cõmon wealth, thou must both fulfill it and also abyde.

But now wil it bée inquired of mée of this case: if it please ỳ kinges grace to condemne the newe testament in Englishe, and to commaunde that none of his subiectes shall haue it vnder displeasure, whether they bée bounde to obey thys cõmaundement or no? To this will I aũswere: That I doe béleéue, that our moste noble Prince hath not forbidden that Christen men may haue Christes Testamẽt, whether it bée in latyne or Englishe, French, Douche, Greeke, or Hebrue, for Christes veritie, is all one in all tonges. And as his grace knoweth, it were very vnreasonable that any man should eyther counsell, what were to bee done if the kyng should forbyd vs the readyng of the Scripture.

or forbid his grace that bée shoulde know or reade the Testament of the moste noble Prince hys father, in the which is alonely géuẽ and promised worldly goods, which as sone as they bée géuen, bée ready to decay and to perishe: and if (I say) this bée vnreasonable and vnright: how much more were it vnreasonable to take awaye from vs our father of heauens testament, whose legacy and promises doe as farre excell the legacies of the noble Prince his father, as God doth excell man. But what shoulde I make many reasons, to proue vnto hys grace that thyng to bée lawfull, that the father of heauen hath sent vs, frõ whom cõmeth nothyng but goodnes. Yea, and it was not sent by man, by Angell, or by Saint, but by the onely sonne of God both God and mã, and diligently declared by hym to all the worlde. Not vnto the Phareses alone, but vnto all maner of people, and that to the houre of death, and also thereof toke his death, and not yet so content, but sent his glorious Apostles to declare and to learne thys godly worde thorough all the worlde. And bécause the ministration of thys worde, required a greater strength then was in any naturall man, therefore also gaue hée them his eternall spirite, to establishe them, to confirme them, and to make them strong in all thinges, that there might bée nothing desired, to the declaration and setting out of his worde.

Now, who coulde finde in his hart that is a true subiecte, and regardeth the honour of our noble Prince, and the saluation of his soule, eyther to thinke that his grace would condẽne it, or els to moue hym to condemne that thyng, that cõmeth from heauen, yea, and that frõ the father of heauen, and sent and learned by his eternall sonne, which hath sealed it wyth hys moste precious bloude, and also commaunded his glorious Apostles to preach it, and confirmed it wyth so many myracles, and did also géue to the confirming and the writing of it. the glorious consolatour of the holy Ghost. So that it is open, that the father of heauen did not send this godly worde with a small diligence, or as though hee cared not whether it shoulde remayne in earth or not. But so hath hee declared this holy worde, wyth such a processe, that heauē, earth & hell, should know ỹ it is his worde, and that it is his will, that all men shoulde haue it, and that hee woulde defende it, and bee enemy vnto all thē that woulde ouerpresse it. Wherfore let them that bee cappitall enemies vnto his grace, both in hart and in deede, suspect that of his grace and moue him vnto it, for doubtles I will neuer doe it. For I dare boldely say, that the deuill of hell which is enemy vnto his grace, both of body and soule will moue hym vnto no other thing but alonely so to condemne Gods worde: and this thing doth his grace know well, and therefore I doubte not but that hee hath and also will auoyde the daunger thereof. Neuertheless, it may please God to take so great vēgeaūce for our abhominable sinnes that after hys graces dayes, hee may sende vs such a tyraunt, that shall not alonely forbid the Newe Testament: but also all thynges that may bee to the honour of God: yea, and that paraduenture vnder such a coullour of Gods name, that all men shall recken none other, but that hee is Gods frende.

This will bee a great scourge, and an intollerable plague, the father of heauen of hys infinite mercy defende vs from such a terrible vengeaunce. For it is the greatest plague that can come in earth (as S. Paule doth declare to the Romaynes) when that Gods veritie is condemned in Gods name, and mē bee so blynde that they can not perceaue it, for they bee geeuē into a peruerse sēce. This plague neuer cōmeth, but it is a token of euerlasting reprobatiō. Our most merciful redeemer Christ Jesus, defende vs frō it, Amē. But if it come that wee must needes suffer this plague, howe shall Christen men vse themselues to this Prince, that will so condemne Gods worde? My Lordes the Bysshoppes woulde depose hym with shorte deliberation, and make no conscience of it. They haue deposed Princes for lesser causes thē this is a great deale. But against them will I alwayes lay Christes facte, and his holy Apostles, and the worde of God, whom Christen men must alonely follow. Therfore, the kynges commanndement, must bee considered on this maner: If the kyng forbid the newe Testament, or any of Christes Sacramēts, or the preaching of the worde of God, or any other thynge that is agaynst Christ vnder a temporall payne, or els vnder ỹ payne of death: men shall first make faythfull prayers to God, and then diligent intercession vnto ỹ kynges grace with all due subiection, that hys grace woulde releasse that commaundement. If hee will not doe it, they shall keepe their Testament, with all other ordinaunce of Christ, and let the kyng exercise his tyranny (if they can not flee) & in no wise, vnder the payne of damnation shall they withstand him with violence, but suffer patiently all the tyranny that hee layeth on them both in their bodyes & goodes, and leaue the vengeaunce of it vnto their heauenly father whiche hath a scorge to tame those bedlames with, when hee seeth his tyme. But in no wise shall they resiste violētly, neither shall they deny Christes veritie, nor yet forsake it beefore the Prince, lest they runne in the daūger of these wordes: he that denyeth me and my worde beefore men, I shall deny hym beefore my father in heauen. And let not men regarde this matter lightly, and thinke that they may geeue vp their testamentes, and yet not denye Christ. For what so euer hee bee that geeueth vp his Testament, as a thyng worthye to bee condemned, hee doth beefore God denye Christ, though his testamēt bee peraduenture (hee not knowyng) false and vntruly Printed, or vntruly trāslated: yet vnto him is it a true testament, and therfore shall hee not deliuer it to any that will condemne it as vnlawfull. But this shall hee doe. If any man that is learned doe finde any faulte there in hee shall bee glad to amende that faulte,

but

Note here what is to bee done if the kyng doe forbid the Scripture to bee read of his subiectes.

Subiectes must obey, but here is shewed in what sorte and maner.

Roma. 1.

Note here how a Christian subiecte must shewe himselfe obedient.

but not to suffer in any wise for that or for those faultes the whole testament to bee condemned as vnlawfull. For if that should bee suffered, then should we haue no testamēt: for there is no testament ỳ is so true, but either there bee faultes in deede, or els men by cauilations may inuent ỳ there bee defaultes. For this dare I say boldly, that the new testament in Englishe, is ten tymes truer, then the old translation in Latin is, in the which bee many places that doe want whole sentēces, and many places, that no man cā defend without heresie, as this terte. 1.Cor.15. Non omnes immutabimur. Also this. Math.20. Sedere ad dexteram meam vel sinistram Act 20. non est meum dare vobis. Also these pla- 1.Tim.6. ces want. Commorati sumus trogilij. Se- thngere ab is qui huiusmodi sunt, with many other places more, that no man can say but they bee euidently false: & yet we may not burne our bookes for all that, but keepe them and amende them. Neither shall they goe about, to depose their Prince, as my Lordes the Bishops were wont to doe, but they shall boldely confesse, that they haue the veritie, and will therby abyde: and alonely shall they praye to their heauenly father to chaunge the hart of their Prince, that they may lyue vnderneth hym, after Christes worde, & in quietnes, as Paul exhorteth vs saying. I exhorte that prayers 1.Tim.2. supplications, petitions, and geuyng of thankes, bee had for all men: for kynges, & for all that are in prehemi- nence, that we may lyue a quyet and a peaceable lyfe in all godnesse and honestly.

This shal men behaue them selues towarde their Prince and in no wise shall they denye Christes worde, or graunt to the burning of their testa- mentes: but if the kyng will doe it by violence they must suffer it but not o- bey to it by agreement. This may bee proued by ỳ examples of the Apostles when the hie Priestes of the temple commaunded Peter and John, that Act 4.& 5. they should no more preach any teach in the name of Jesus. But they made them answere it was more right to God is to bee obeyed beefore me. obey God then man. Also the Phary- ses came and commaunded our S. Christ, in Herodes name, That hee should depart frō thence, or hee would kyll hym: but hee would not obey, but made them aunswere to Herode with a great threatning: Goe tell the wolfe beehold I cast out deuils and I make Luke. 13. men whole this day and to morrow, and the third day am I consumed: ne- uertheless I must continew this day to morrow and the nert day &c. So ỳ hee left not the ministration of ỳ word neyther for the kinges pleasure nor yet for feare of death.

Also we haue openly, that the three childeren would not obey to the com- Daniell. 3. maundement of king Nabuchodono- sor, but because it was against ỳ word of God. Lykewise we haue an exāple where as the king Darius commaun- Dan.6. ded that no man should aske any pety- tyon, eyther of God or of man with- in the space of 30. dayes but of hym onely. Notwithstanding Daniell wēt into his house, & thrise in a day made his prayers to God of Jerusalem, for the which thyng hee was put into the denne of Lyons, the which hee dyd o- bey as in suffering of the payne, but not in consenting to the vnright com- maundement, So that Christen men are bounde to obey in suffering the kinges tyrāny, but not in consenting to his vnlawfull commaundement: al wayes hauing beefore their eyes the comfortable saying of our S. Christ: Feare not them ỳ kill the body, which Math 10. when they had done they can no more doe. Also S. Peter, happy are yee if 1.Pet.3. you suffer for righteousnes sake, ne- uertheless, feare not, though they seeme terrible vnto you, neither bee troubled, but sanctifie the Lord God in your hart. And let them not feare, but God doth wōderfully worke to saue and defend hys poore flock. ỳ their father of heauen hath care for them, and shall deliuer them, and also bryngе his godly worde vnto lyght when it shall please his eternall will, agaynst the which no tyraunt is able to withstand. But when the tyrants thinke themselues most sure of the victory, and bee all ready prouided to burne Susanna, then shall hee rayse Dan.13. vp a Daniell that shall caule agayne the sentēce of the lecherous priestes:

and when Ioseph is solde into Egipt, and there cast in prison, then will hee make him Lord ouer all Egipt, yea, and also ouer them that solde him. Hee bringeth also to passe that proude Haman (hee hee neuer so great in the kinges fauour) shalbee hanged on his owne gallowes, that hee made for Mardocheus the Israelite. Also when Pharao hath cõmaũded vnder payne of death to destroy all ỳ mẽ childrẽ of Israell. Then cã hee finde the meanes to saue Moses, yea & that on ỳ water: where as all ỳ power of Egypt could not saue the kyng, yea and hee nourished him in the kynges house, at the kynges cost yea and by the kynges daughter. Did Pharao suppose this? or was there any coũsell of Pharaos that could preuaile agaynst this? was there any wisedome or tyranny in the earth that was able to extinct Moses? nay verely. Furthermore when Israel hath beene in Egypt iiij. C. yeres in great captiuitie and thraldome, yet agaynst Pharaos will keepeth hee his promise and deliuereth them, and maketh water, fire, & earth to serue thẽ: and when all Israell was in despayre and Pharao the tyraunt was ready to sucke bloud, then shewed our God his mighty power. What can Israell thinke when hee hath the read Sea beefore him? And Pharao with all his might and power after him, and of euery side a great mountaine? what hope hath hee by mans might, by mãs power, by mans wisedome, by mans pollicie, for to bee deliuered? none at all. But beefore Israels carnallitye all thyng is in extreme desperation.

Gene. 37. and. 39.

Exod. 2.

Psal. 2.

But now you Princes that Iudge the earth learne and take heede: here commeth the God of Israell, whom all Egypt hath despised, scorned mocked and condemned, and sheweth his might where as nothyng cã helpe but hee onely, and where the tyrauntes recken to bee most sure of victordom, there bryngeth hee all their malice to an end. And when Herode hath Peter in prison fast bound in cheynes, & of euery side of him a souldier, & keepers set at the prison doore euery man in his office watching that Peter shal not escape (for Herode intendeth the day folowyng to bryng hym forth to wonderyng and also to death.) Then agaynst Herodes will, aboue all his might, aboue all his wisedome & pollicie, notwithstandyng all the souldiers and gaylers of the prison, cõmeth the power of our eternall God and ledeth Peter through the first and the second ward, yea and the brasen gate must wilfully opẽ, and let Peter out, whom our Lord God would deliuer.

Actes. 12.

Shortly, what should I bring many examples to proue Gods power & to declare how the truth of God and his childrẽ bee alwayes in persecutiõ, but the ende is alwayes glory vnto them. Wherfore this one exãple, of our maister Christ shall bee sufficiẽt to stablish & to confirme all feeble harts, & also to mollifie all stony harts, and finally to cõfound, the violẽt tyranny of mortall tyraũtes which bee but stubbles, haye and dust, & in a momẽt bee brought to a lumpe of stynkyng carryon. Cõsider our maister Christ which is the very true sonne of God, & God him selfe & yet is hee crucified and put to death, as a seditious persõ, as a malefactor, as a theefe, as a traytor, yea and as an hereticke: hee is layd also in the graue and a great stone beefore the doore, & souldiours that were not of the common sort, but of the Romaines, hee set diligently to keepe the graue with all the pollicie and wisedome that the byshoppes could deuise, and all that hee should not rise vp agayne accordyng to his worde: but all this could not helpe, for the power of God would not bee let, his veritie could not bee proued false, his worde could not bee oppressed: but when the tyrauntes thought to make their triumphe of victory, thẽ were they most ouercõmed. For it is neither water nor fire, Sea nor land, heauen nor earth, death nor hell, that cã let God to defend his children, or to bring forth his godly word to light, and to keepe his eternall promises. Therfore let Christen mẽ not feare to keepe the worde of God, and fast there by to abyde, and not to deny it for any tyranny: for the day shall come when it shall bee greatly to their glory.

Math. 27. and. 28.

Christ is for euer to bee set beefore vs for an example to comforte vs in our persecutiõ.

glory. And Sodome, and Gomorra shall bee more easely handled, thē such Princes, that doe persecute the holy word of God.

Now is it cleare made that we can not resist this temporall power in no wise by violēce: but if we haue wrong eyther we must doe the thing that is commaunded vs, or els flie, but if any thing bee commaunded vs that is against the word of God whereby our fayth is hurt, that we should not doe in any wise: but rather suffer persecution and also death. But against this power goeth not our article, for it cōmaundeth nothing as concerning the conscience, but all onely as concerning the ordering of worldly thinges, and therefore, it ministreth a temporall payne ouer the body onely and therwith is cōtent. Wherfore we wil now speake of the other power which men call spirituall.

wee must rather suffer persecution, then in any wise resiste.

A spirituall power.

First here is to be noted that this is no power, nor none auctoritie worldly, but all onely a ministration of the word of God and a spirituall regiment, preaching the gouerning of the soule and the mynistration of ỳ spirit, hauing nothing to doe with the exterior Justice or righteousnes of the worlde, and therfore hath it no power by right and law to make any statutes or lawes to order the worlde by, but all onely faithfully & truely to preach, and to minister the word of God ther by instructing the conscience of man, nothing addyng there to, nor taking there from: but as S. Paule sayth, to abyde in those thinges that they haue learned, and that bee committed vnto them, for. S. Paule (as hee hym selfe sayth) durst speake no other thing but those things which christ had wroght by him. For hee curseth him hee he mā or Angel that preacheth any other gospell, then hee had preached. Therefore the Prophet commaundeth vs that we should not heare the wordes of those prophetes which deceaue vs, for they speake visions of their owne hartes and not out of ỳ mouth of god, and yet speake they in the name of God. Wherefore these men solong as they speake onely ỳ worde of God, so long are they to be heard, as Christ himself, after ỳ saying, hee ỳ heareth you hereth mee: also what soeuer they say vnto you sytting in the chayre of Moses do it. On ỳ which text speketh S. Augustine, By syttyng in ỳ chayre is to vnderstand the learning of the lawe of God, and therefore God doth teach by them, but if they will teache their owne doctrine heare it not, doe it not, for such men seeke that is theirs and not Christes. &c.

The spirituall power hath not auctoritie to make lawes to rule the worlde by.

These wordes bee playne agaynst all them that preach any thing but the law of God onely. Wherfore if these mynysters will of tyranny, aboue the worde of God, make any lawe or statute, it must bee consydered after two maner of wayes: fyrst whether it bee openly and derectly agaynst the word of God and to ỳ destruciō of ỳ faith, as that statute is whereby they haue condemned the new testament, & also forbydden certayne men to preach the worde of God, hauing no trew cause aganst them, but all onely their malicious suspeciō: also ỳ learning wherby they learne, that workes doe iustifye: moreouer that statute whereby they bynde men vnder the payne of damnation to bee assoyled of them. These statutes I say with other lyke men are not bound for to obey neither of charite (for here is faith hurt which geueth no place to charitie) nor yet for auoyding of sclaunder, for the worde of God may not bee auoyded, nor yet gēue place vnto sclaūder, for then shoulde it neuer bee preached, but it must bee fast stucke vnto: and the more that men bee offended withall, and the stiffer that they bee against it, the more openly and playnely, yea and that to their faces, that make such statutes, must wee reūke them wyth these wordes: wee are more bounde to obey God then man.

Act. 5.

This is well proued by Hilarius wordes: All maner of plantes that bee not planted of the father of heauen, must bee plucked vp by the rootes, that is to say, the traditions of men, by whose meanes, the cōmaundementes of the lawe bee broken, must bee destroyed, and therefore caulleth hee thē

Hylarius in Mat. cano. 14.

blynde guides of the waye to euerlasting life, bécause they sée not that thyng they promise: and for that cause bée sayth, that both the blynde guides, and they that bée led, shall fall into the dyke. &c.

All traditions of men that are agaynst Gods lawe, must bee rooted vp by the rootes.

Marke that all traditions of men, which are agaynst Gods lawe, must be destroyed. Therfore let euery man take héede, for it longeth to their charge: for both the blynde guides, and also they that bée led shall fall in the dyke. It shall bée none excuse for hym that is led, to say that hys guyde was blynde: but let them heare the worde of God by his holy prophetes, Ezechi 20. walke not in the preceptes of your fathers, nor kéepe not their iudgemẽts, but walke in my preceptes, and kéepe my iudgementes. The other maner of statutes bée, when certaine thinges that bée caulled indifferent, bée commaunded as thinges to bée done of necessitie, and vnder the paynes of deadly sinne. As for an example: To eate flesshe or fishe, this day or that day is indifferent and frée: also to goe in this rayment, of this colour or that colour: to shaue our heades or not: a priest to wear a lõg gowne or a short: a gray Fryer to weare a gray coate or a russet: a whyte Fryer to weare a white or a blacke: a Priest to marry or not to marry: an Heremyt to haue a beard or not. These with all other such outwarde workes, bée thinges indifferent, and may bée vsed and also left. Now if the Bysshoppes will make any lawe or statute, that these thynges shall bée determinately vsed, so that it shall not bée lawful for vs to leaue it vndone, but that wée must precisely doe them, and not the contrary vnder the payne of deadly sinne: here must they bée withstanded, and in no wise obeyed, for in this is hurt our fayth and libertie of Christendome, whereby wée are frée and not bounde to any exteriour worke, but frée in all things, and vnto all men at all tymes, and in all maner, except it bée in such a cause where as brotherly charitie, or the common peace should bée offended. Therefore in all these thynges bée wée frée, and wée must withstand them that will take this libertie from vs, with thys texte of Scripture: Wée are bought 1.Cor.7. with the price of Christes bloud, wée will not bée the seruauntes of men. This texte is open against them that will bynde mennes conscience vnto sinne, in those things that Christ hath lefte them frée in. Of this wée haue an euident example of Saint Paule, the whiche would not circumcise Ti- Galat.2. tus when the false brethren woulde haue compelled hym thereunto as a thynge of necessitie, vnto whom. S. Paule gaue no rowme as cõcernyng to bée brought into subiectiõ. S. Paul dyd not withstand them, bycause that Circumcisiõ was vnlawfull or might not bée vsed of Christen men, but bycause that they would haue compelled hym vnto it as vnto a thyng of necessitie, that thyng woulde not Saint Paule suffer, for that was agaynst the libertie that we haue in Christ Jesus as hée sayth here playnely. Wherfore we bée not alonely by Christe made frée from sinne, but also made frée in vsing all maner of thynges that bée indifferent, and vnto them we can not bée bounde as vnto thynges of necessitie, as on the Friday to eate fish, and thereunto bée bounde in conscience vnder the payne of deadly sinne. In this we may not obey for it is against the worde of God, not bécause it is euill to eate fishe (for in tyme conuenient and when thou art disposed it is good) but bycause that they will in this thyng bynde our consciences and make that thynge of necessitie, that God had hath left frée.

Thynges that are indifferent to bee done or not done, are to bee obeyed, so that ỹ same bee not commaũded vnder the peine of deadly sinne.

Note here that things that of thẽ selues are indifferent and yet are commaunded to bée of necessitie obserued, those are to bee disobeyed.

Therfore speaketh Paule against them in these wordes. In the latter 1.Tim.4. dayes certeine men shal swarue from the fayth applying them selues to the spirites of errours, and doctrines of the deuill, forbiddyng Mariage, and to abstaine from meates, that God hath created to bée receiued of faythfull mẽ with thanks: for all creatures of God bée good, and nothyng to bée refused that is receiued with thãkes. Marke how Paule sayth, nothyng is to bée refused that may bée receiued with thankes this is openly agaynst them thē that will forbid either fish, or flesh, this day or that day, as a thynge vnright for a Christē man to eate: for as S. Paule sayth, meate doth not commende vs vnto God. Also in an other place the kyngdome of heauen is neither meate nor drinke. Therfore they doe vnright to bynde our conscience in such thynges, and to thinke vs vnfaythfull bycause we obserue thē not.

1.Cor.8.

Roma.15.

Superstition of the Monkes of the Charterhouse.

Now let our holy hypocrites of the Charter house loke on their cōscience, whiche recken to buy and to sell heauē, for a pēce of fish or flesh: but they recken it no vice to lyue in hatred, rāncour, and malice, & neither to serue God nor their neighbour, but with such an hypocrites seruice as they haue inuēted of their own hypocrisie, & not receiued of God. They thinke it a great perfection to abstaine from beefe and mutton, and to eate pike, tenche gurnarde and all other costly fishes, and that of the dentiest fashion dressed: but a pēce of grosse beefe may they not touche, may they not smell: for then they lose heauen and all the merites of Christes bloud. Is not here a godly fayned hypocrisie, before the world it shynneth bright, but compare it vnto Christes Scripture and there can not be a greater blasphemy. For here in they clearely damned Christ and his ordinaunce & make that of necessitie, ỳ Christ left as indifferent. Agaynst these holy hypocrites writeth S. Paule saying, We ought not to be led with the traditiōs of men, that say touche not, tast not, handle not, which thynges perish with vsing of them, and are after the commaundements and doctrine of men: whiche thynges haue the similitude of wisedome in superstitious holynes and hūblenes, in that they spare not the body and doe the flesh no worshyp vnto his nēde.

Coll. 2.

A notable saying of S. Paule.

Here is clearely condemned all superstitiousnes, and fayned holines, that men haue inuented in eating or drinking, in touching or in handling, or in any other such, thinges not that we may not doe them, but that we doe them as thinges of necessitie and recken our selfe holy whē we doe thē, and to synne deadly when we doe thē not. This is by the dānable institutions of men, The which S. Augustine condemneth in these wordes, The Apostle sayth, Touche not, handell not &c. Because that those men by such obseruations were led from the veritie, by ỳ which they were made frē, whereof it is spoken, the veritie shall deliuer you. It is a shame (sayth he) and vnconuenient and farre from the noblenes of your libertie (seing you be the body of Christ) to be disceaued with shadowes and to be iudged as sinners if you dispise to obserue these things. Wherfore let no mā ouercom you (seing you are the body of Christ) that will seme to be meke in hart in the holynes of Aungels and bringing in thinges which he hath not seene &c.

Ad Paul. Epi. 59.

Here haue we playnely that those thynges which be of the inuention of man doe not bynde our conscience, though they seme to be of neuer so great holynes and of humblenes and holynes of Angels, as Paule sayth. Wherefore, let them make what statutes they will, and as much holynes as they can deuise, Inuent as much Gods seruice as they can thinke, and lye that they haue receaued it frō heauen, and that it is no lesse holynesse then Angels haue, and set thereunto all their mandamus, remandamus, excōmunicamus, sub pena excommunicationis maioris, & minoris, Precipimus, Interdicimus, & sub indignatione dei omnipotentis, & Apostolorū Petri & Pauli ligamus, with all other such blasphemies that they haue (for doubtles, if their bellies were ripped, there should be nothing found but blasphemes of God and of his holy word, detractions, oppressions, Confusyons, damnations of their pore brethren, Other god haue we none of them, let all Christen men aunswere to this of their conscience if it be not trew) And yet are we frē in our conscience, and all these can neyther bynd, nor damne our conscience, for we are frē made thorow Christ, And in conscience not bound vnder ỳ paine of deadly sinne, to nothing that mā can order or set, except it be conteined in holy scripture.

Collos.2.

But

Epi. ad ro prepo. 72.

But in body we are bound to euery man. This doth S. Augustine proue in these wordes. Seing that we bee made of soule and of body, as long as we doe line in this temporall lyfe we must vse to the norysshing of this lyfe, these temporall goodes. Therefore must we of that part that belongeth to this lyfe bee subiect vnto powers, that is vnto men that doe minister worldly things with some honour, but as concerning that part, wherby we beleeue in God and bee cauled vnto hys kingdome, we ought not to bee subiect vnto any mã that will peruert that same thing in vs that hath pleased God to geue vs to eternall lyfe. &c.

Our bodyes are subiect to princes, but our soules to God.

Here is it playne, that we in conscience by Christ bee made free, & nothyng can bynd vs vnto sinne but his word onely. Now is it clearely open, that if any power of heauen, or earth, commaunde any thyng against Gods worde, or to the destruction or minishing of the same, no mã may obey in any case vnder the payne of damnation: for Gods veritie is not indifferent, to bee lefte or not to bee lefte. Agayne, if man commaunde any thyng to bee done that may bee done in time and place conuenient, if hee will binde vs vnto indifferent thinges, as vnto a thing of necessitie, then shall wee not doe it, not because it is euill to doe, but that it is damnable to bee done as a thyng of necessitie. Neuertheless, if any of these thynges bee commaunded of the Bysshops, as burdens, and as thinges indifferent, then shall wee keepe them in tyme and place conuenient, as where I may by them serue my brother, or edifie hym, or doe him any good, or that it may bee vnto hym any meanes to come to the verity: neuertheless, at an other tyme, when I am in place conuenient, where I shall not offende my brother, nor ingender no sclaunder, nor any disquietnes in the common wealth: There may I freely, without any charge of conscience, and without all maner of sinne, breake the Bysshops commaundement. For it is but as a burden of a tyraunt, that is layde on vs, and neither helpeth to the increasing of gods honour, nor to the edifyng of our brethẽ, & they them selues kepe thẽ not. Of these speaketh our master Christ: they binde grieuous and intollerable burdens, & lay them on mens neckes, but they themselues will not once set their litle finger to them. As for an example: To eate flesshe on the Fryday is forbidden by the Bysshoppes, now if they compell thee to it as vnto a thyng necessary, and without the which thou canst not bee saued, then shalt thou not doe it vnder the payne of sinne: but if they will haue thee kepe this as a thyng of congruence, and as a thyng that may bee an exterior meane to mortifie the bodie, or an outwarde shyne of holynes, and vnto this he will compell thee by outwarde paynes, this thyng shalte thou doe of thy charitie, because thou wilt not breake the outwarde order, nor make any disquietnesse for those thinges that neyther make thee good nor yet condemne thee before God: for as S. Paule sayth, if wee eate neither are wee the better, nor if wee eate not, are wee the worse. Allwayes prouided, that in these indifferent thynges, thou neyther set confidence nor holynesse, nor yet offende thy weake brothers charitie: for therein though thou bee free in thy selfe, & the thyng is also indifferẽt to thee, yet of charitie freely makest thou thy selfe seruaunt to all mẽ, as S. Paule saith: When I was free from all thynges, yet dyd I make my selfe a seruaunte, that I might winne many men. Note that hee allwayes speaketh of weake brethren, and not of obstinate and indurate persons, agaynst whome thou shalt allwayes withstand and defende thy libertye as hee dyd: hee is thy weake brother that hath a good minde and beleueth the worde of God, neuertheless, hee hath not that gifte to perceaue as yet this libertie to vse indifferent thynges freely wyth thankes. Therfore fayth and charitie must bee thy guide in all these thynges, and folowing them thou canst not erre.

When things that are indifferent are cõmaunded to bee done of necessitie then are not the same to obeyed, because the same destroyeth our freedome in Christ.

FINIS.

That

That all men are bounde to receiue the holy Communion vnder both kyndes vnder the payne of deadly sinne.

IF men had stucke to the opē scriptures of God, & to ẏ practise of Chriſt, es holy church, and to ẏ exposition of olde doctours as it did bēcome Chriſten men to doe: then had it not bēne nēdefull for mē to haue taken these paynes & labours in this cause, nor yet to haue layd to their charges those thinges ẏ Antichriſt doth onely. But now seeyng that they will doe the open dēedes of Antechriſt, they must bē contēt that I may also geue them his name. And that all the world may openly know, ẏ Antechriſt doth raine in the world (yea and that vnder the name of Chriſt) I will heare set you forth an act of his which whē it is cōpared to our M. Chriſtes wordes I doe not doubt but all trew Chriſten men will iudge it to bē of the deuyll, as it is in very dēede, though that the childrē of the world doe iudge it otherwyse.

Yee that doth the workes of Antechriſt, the same is Antichriſt.

This doe I say of an acte, that the Councell of Constance dyd make agaynſt the moſt holy and glorious sacrament of our eternall God Jesus Chriſt. Where in, the one kynde of this moſt blessed sacrament was condemned as vnlawfull for lay men to receiue: and ẏ euery man may know, by what auctoritie they dyd it, & what thing did moue them to condemne so blessed and so glorious an ordinance of our Lord Jesus Chriſt, here will I wryte their owne wordes which be these. As this custome for auoyding certayne sclaunders and perrils was reasonably brought in, notwithstāding in the bēginning of the Church this sacrament was receiued of Chriſten men vnder both kindes, & afterward it was receiued al onely vnder ẏ kind of bread, wherefore seeing that such a custome of the Church, and of holy fathers reasonably brought in & long obserued must bē taken for a lawe ẏ which shall not bē lawfull to repreue nor without auctoritie of the Church to chaūge it at a más pleasure. Wherfore to say ẏ it is sacrilege, or vnlawfull to obserue this cōsuetude or law, must bē iudged erronius, and they that doe pertinaciter defende the contrary of these premiſſis, must bē restrayned as heretikes, and greuously punished by the Bishops or their officials, or by them that bē inquiſitores hereticæ prauitatis, which that bē in kyngdomes or in prouinces, in these men that doe attempt or presume any thyng agaynſt thys decrē, shall men procēde agaynſt them, after the holy and lawfull decrees that bē inuented agaynſt heretickes and their fauters, into the fauoure of the Catholicall fayth. &c.

Councell of Cōstāce forbad the Sacramēt to bee receaued of the lay people in both kyndes.

The wordes of the councell and determination of Antechriſt.

Now wyll I exhorte all Chriſten men in ẏ glorious name of our mighty Lord Jesus Chriſt (which is both their redeemer & shall bē their iudge) that they wyll indifferently heare this article discussed, by the blessed worde of our Sauiour Chriſt Jesus, whiche was not alonely of God, but also very God himselfe: and all that bē dyd was done by the counsel of the whole trinitie, and not alonely by his, by whose counsell all counselles both in heauen and earth must bē ordered, and that counsell that is contrary to it whether it bē of Sainte, Angel, or of man, must bē accurſed, and iudged to bē of the deuil, though they bē neuer so mighty, neuer so well learned, and neuer so many in multitude, for there is no power, no learning, nor yet no multitude, neither in heauen, nor in earth, nor no ieoperdies, nor no sclaūders that may iudge Chriſt and hys holy worde, nor that they may gēue place vnto. Wherfore if I can prōue by open Scriptures, of our Sauiour Chriſt, and also by the practiſe of holy Church, that this counsell is false and damnable, then let all Chriſten men iudge which of vs must bē heard and bēlēued, eyther the counsell hauyng no scripture, yea contrary to all scripture, or els I that haue the opē worde of God, and the very vse and practise of the holy Apostles, & of holy church. Christ is of God, & that no mā doubteth, but ẏ holy counsell though there were fiue thousādes of byshops, therin must proue thēselues to bē of God by the worde of God, and by theyr workes, the which they can not doe if they bē contrary to Christ and hys blessed worde.

Moreouer Christ is not true vnder a condition bycause that men doe allow hym, for though all the worlde were agaynst hym, yet were hē neuertheless true, but the coūsell is not true but alonely vnder this condition bycause it doth agrē with Christes holy worde, and of it selfe it hath no veritie, but is of the deuill if it varye from Christ. Before the dreadfull trone of God shall ẏ counsell bē iudged by Christes holy worde, & Christ shal not bē iudged by the decrē of the counsell, but hē shall bē the counsels iudge: and if Christes worde condemne the coūsell, who shal appreue it, who shall prayse it, who shall defende it? The temporall swerde, nor the multitude of Byshops, nor interdiction, excommunication, nor cursing, can then helpe. Wherefore, let euery true Christē man loke on this matter indifferently: it is no trifling wyth God, nor with his holy worde, for God will remayne for euer, & his holy word must bē fulfilled: and if we wil not fulfill it, hē shal cast vs down to the dēpe pit of hell, and make of stones mē in our stede that shall kēpe his worde. It is no light thyng, for it lyeth on the saluation and damnation both of body and soule, frō the which we can not bē deliuered, with these glorious wordes, Concilium, Concilii, Patres, Patres, Episcopi, Episcopi: for all these may bē the ministers of the deuill, yea though they were aungels. Therfore ones agayne. I doe monish and exhorte in the glorious name of the lyuing God, and in ẏ swēt bloud of Christ Iesus all true Christē men, to take hēde what they doe agaynste Christes holy word, whiche is their eternal God, their mercyfull redemer, and shall bē also their mighty and glorious iudge.

All counsailes are of the deuill if they varye frō Christe.

Gods worde is the iudge of Councels and not Councels iudges of Gods worde.

Now let vs examine the wordes of the Councell. First of all the Councell graunteth that in the begynning of the church, all Christen men were houseled vnder both kyndes, nowe would I knowe of the Councell of whom the Church had receiued this maner: of Christ or his holy Apostles (as doubtles shē dyd) then what authoritye had the Councell to chaunge the institution of Christ, and of his holy Apostles, and also the vse and practise of holy Church? was not the first Churche of God? Did shē not kēpe Christes institution? did shē not fulfill Christes word? Did not ẏ holy Apostles learne here so? And now shall the Councell of Constance first condemne Christ and his blessed word, & then the learnyng of Christes holy Apostles? and also the long vse and practise of Christes blessed Church, without any Scripture, without authoritie, or without any speciall reuelation frō God, but alonely for auoydyng of certeine perils? Yea and not content alonely to cōdemne these thinges but vnder the paine of heresie to cōdemne them. This is to sore a cōdemnation of Christes open worde, and of that thyng whiche they graunt that the Church dyd vse at the begynnyng.

Note here what the Councell hath graunted.

Furthermore the Councell sayth that holy fathers and the Church dyd bryng in this custome to housell laye men vnder one kinde. Are you not ashamed of these wordes? Doth not your conscience prike you thus openly to lye? yea of Christ and of his holy Church? Christes worde is openly agaynste you, and you graunt that the vse of the church was also otherwise. And as for holy fathers here may you sē what they say to it, but you are the childzen of the kyngdome of lyes: and doubtlesse if you bryng not forth the holy fathers that make for you, you shall not alonely bē taken for abhominable and open lyers, but also for shameful and detestable sclaunderers both of holy Church, and also of holy fathers.

The Councell doth shamefully bee lye both the fathers and the Scriptures.

But it is no wonder, for Antichrist must declare him selfe openly to bē a-gaynst

Antichrist doth at all tymes declare hym selfe to bee agaynste Chryst.

gaynst Chryst, & yet is hée neuer without an excuse, and a shaddow of holynes, where by hée may blynd the powre people. But what excuse had hée here in the Councell to cõdemne Chrystes wordes? That they might auoyde certaine sclaũders and perrils, & bécause that there is no body without bloud. Bé not these lawfull causes to condemne Chrystes open word, yea and that vnder the payne of heresie? Is not this a new maner of law to make that hée that will not obeye a statute made agaynst Gods word, which hée is bounde to obey vnder payne of euerlastyng damnation, alonely for auoydyng perrils to bé condemned for an hereticke?

New doctrine made by Antichryst.

Briefely by this reason may they condemne all holy Scripture, by laying ieoperdies & perrils thereto, they may condemne all the creatures of God, for there may bé perill in vsing of them all. But what néede many wordes to prowe this Councell to bé of the deuill? for if that bé not of the deuill that is contrary to Chryst, and hath no excuse for it but alonely to auoyde perrils, I cã not tell what is of the deuill? I am sure Antichryst shall neuer bé without some carnall excuse, for if hé will deny Chryst to bé both God & man, hé shall haue stronger carnall reasons for him then the Councell hath for this: but this matter must not bé iudged by carnal reasons. It is Gods worde that is aboue all creatures: wherefore let vs goe to the Scriptures as a sure ancore to ouercome Antichryst with all his carnall reasons.

what soeuer is contrary to Chryst, the same is of the deuill.

First our maister Chryst when hé dyd institute this blessed Sacrament did vse these wordes, take it and eate it, this is my body. &c. Likewise takyng the challice hé gaue thankes & gaue it vnto them saying, drinke all of this, this is my bloud of the newe testament the which shall bé shed for many into remission of sinnes. These bé playne wordes drinke of it all: hé that sayth all excepteth no man. Furthermore hé knewe that there might bé ieoperdies in the receiuyng of it & yet hé sayth drinke of it all, for it is my bloud that shall bé shed for the remission of sinnes.

Math. 26. Marke. 14. Luke. 22.

Chrystes institution of the Sacrament of his body and bloud.

Now was it not shed for lay mens sinnes? why shal they not then drinke of it? The maister and the Lord sayth drinke therof: and shall the miserable seruaunt withstand his commaundemẽt? yea commaunde the playne contrary and say drinke not therof?

But now commeth my Lord of Rochester (which perceiueth that the Councel is conuict in that, that it consenteth that the whole Church in the begynnyng did receiue this Sacrament vnder both kyndes, and yet forbiddeth that same thyng, and sayth to mainteine this errour, that Chryste spake these wordes, drinke of it all, alonely to his Apostles (for there were no other men there but the Apostles) and therfore they must alonely drinke therof.

Rochesters glose vpon Chrystes wordes.

I aunswere: My Lord if this thing were alonely lawfull vnto the Apostles, how will you discharge the primatiue Churche, in the whiche were those men that Chryst ministred this Sacrament vnto? yea & the selfe men did minister it vnder both kyndes to the whole congregation according to this commaundement drinke of it all. Dout not but they vnderstode Chrystes will as well as you in this commaundement.

But in the way of communication let vs graũt you, that to the Apostles this was onely sayd, how will you thẽ discharge your owne Priestes from deadly sinne, the which receiue it vnder both kindes, and yet bé they neither Apostles nor successours of thẽ, but after your own learnyng the Bishops alonely bé their successours, & the Priestes doe represent Xpi. Disciples. Shal they in this thyng represẽt the Apostles, and in absoluyng from sinne but the Disciples? But let vs sée farther in your forfetched reason: tel vs how and by what authoritie (your highe pollitike rule saued) that you dare géue either of these kindes to the laye men, seyng they were both alonely geuen to the Apostles, for euẽ by that authoritie that you haue power to take away the one kynd, by that selfe same haue you power to take away the other, for they were both geuen at once and indifferently to the receiuers, so that as many as receiued the one, receiued also the other, and to them that hée sayd take and eate this, this is my body, to them hée sayd, drinke all of this. &c.

The Pope may aswell forbid all lay men to eate of Christes body, as to forbid them to drinke of Christes bloud.

Now if you may thus take away ỳ partes of ỳ sacramentes at your pleasure, ỳ cõsequent shall bée, ỳ incontinuance all the sacramentes shalbe destroyed, and Christes word set at naught. Wherefore my Lord this blasphemous euation will not helpe you: but such shamfull solutions must they vse that will be agaynst the open worde of God. Amend your conscience my Lorde, for if you doe not remẽber the terrible wordes of ỳ Prophet: hée shall shake his sword & bend his bowe & make it al ready & therein hath hée prepared the shot of death, & his arrowes for to burne. This is no smal threatning nor lightly to auoide.

D. Barnes is playne with the Bishop of Rochester.

But let vs sée what the scriptures say, that which I gaue vnto you I receaued of ỳ Lord. Marke. S. Paules wordes how hée receaued this thyng of the Lorde. &c.

The Lord Jesus the same night in ỳ which hée was betraied, toke bread and thanked, and brake it, and sayde. Take ye and eate, this is my body which is broken for you: this doe yée in the remembraunce of mée. After ỳ same manner, hée toke the cup & said, this cup is the New testament in my bloud: this doe, as oft as you drinke in the remembraunce of mée: for as often as you shall eate this bread and drinke this cup, you shall shew the Lordes death tyll hée come. Marke diligently how S. Paule declareth, how the Lord Jesus Christ dyd institute this blessed and comfortable sacramẽt in both kindes, and in both kindes dyd mynister it hymselfe, and not that all onely, but also enacted this cõmaũdement to all Christen people which must receiue it. This doe as often. &c. Yea and this commaũdement is geuẽ after the Sacrament is ministred in both kinds, Teaching vs that in both kindes the Lord hath instituted this Sacrament to bée receiued, and also that they ỳ so receaue it not, breake this commaundement of the Lorde. This doe as often. &c.

This commaundement. S. Paule did not lightly let slyp, but hée knew that it was the ordinaunce and ỳ commaundement of the Lord: and also knew ỳ one iot or tytle of his wordes should not, nor ought, nor can not bée let slip, without perrell of the soules of them ỳ so littell makes of his word. And therfore hée durst not, nor would not (and yet hée had as great auctoritie as the counsell of constance) let slip or transpose the institution and commaundement of the Lord, but wholy and fully with all diligence hée wrote those wordes vnto all the whole congregation of the Corinthians, not to the ministers or priestes all onely, but to the whole congregation, that is as well to the mynisters of the word as to lay men: and also the contrary, for hée sayth when you come togither: & that you may perceaue ỳ hée speakes indifferently, hée there repreueth thẽ that tarryed not for poore men. And also these wordes bée playne, who so euer shall eate of this bread and drink of this cup worthely. &c. Now vnto this whole congregatiõ (I doubt not but by ỳ spirit of the Lord which saue bẽfore this damnable errour to bée instituted of antichrist and his very & all onely mynisters) hée sayd drinke you, yea and to repreue and manifestly to declare this open errour, hée adeth this worde, Cuppe, signifying and teaching that Christes ordinaunce is not to receaue the bloud in the body onely, but to receaue the bloud after his institution) by it selfe out of the cup, lest they should bée found correctours and blasphemers of the holy institution and commaundement of the Lord, Of whom S. Paule receaued this cõmaundemẽt, and of no coũsels.

Christes bloud is not to bee receaued in his body onely, but in the cup.

Now what Christẽ man can doubt but our S. Christ (to whom all thing is bare and open both things present & also to come) knew that there was bloud in his owne body. Also Saynt Paule his scholer which learned this lesson of hym was not ignorant that there

there was bloud in his body. And yet firste our maister Christ geueth his bloud alone by it selfe out of the cup. and his diligent scholer knowyng the doctrine of his maister dyd the same, regardyng his maisters doctrine and preferring it before his carnall reasō, which knew that there was bloud in euery body, but his maisters doctrine taught him that his maister kept not his bloud in his body, but for vs lost and damned persons for our innumerable detestable (and aboue all capacitie to declare) damnable and abhominable sinnes, brake his body & shed his blonde thereout plentcously, and therewith made sacrifice and satisfactiō for all our sinnes, as Saint John 1.Iohn.1. sayth. The bloud of Jesus Christ cleanseth vs from all sinne, also we are sanctified by the offeryng of the body of Jesus Christ once for all. Now that all Christen men which bē sanctified by the offeryng of this body, and by sheadyng the bloud out of this body, Hebr.10. shoulde alwayes haue both those partes in remēbraunce, bē according as the bloud was deuided frō the body for all sinners indifferētly that will come vnto Christe, and according to his maisters institution & commaūdement, ministred this Sacrament, and also ordeined it to bē ministred to all men. The body by it selfe & the bloud by it selfe. That they might alway not remember alonely that our Sauiour Christ offered his body for vs, but also shed out of that same body his most precious bloud and therfore sayth S. Paule (as his maister Christ taught him.) As often as you shall eate this bread and drinke this cup, you shall shew the Lordes death till bē come.

Paule ministred Christes body by it selfe, and the cup of his bloud by it selfe to the lay and commō people.

Now my Lordes come to your counselles. Christ and S. Paule defendeth thys thyng partinaciter, (as you call it) that is, stifly and strongly wyll they abide by it and will not reuoke it. Wherfore after the decrē of your Counsell, they bē condemned for heretickes. I can no more say, but God helpe them, for there is no remedy with them, but they must nēdes to the fier, for they will not bē abiured in no wise. It is a piteous case, that two, so good men as these bē, will bē thus openly agaynst the decrē of the holy counsell, yea and against so many and so noble fathers, and so great clarkes, the which knew this matter (as ye say) as well as they, and it is not to bē thought that the holy Ghost would leaue so many excellent and holy fathers, and great Doctours of Diuinitie, and so many noble Princes and wise men of the worlde, and bē with these two poore men which bē of no reputation in this worlde.

Wherefore my Lordes, procēde against them after the holy decrees that bē inuented agaynst heretickes, sticke not for their names, for it is neither Christ nor Paule that cā hurt you, you haue also condemned their learning and preuailed against them: why should you not condemne them as well? you bē Lordes, and you haue the strength and the wisdome of the worlde with you, and as a certayne Doctour of the law sayde: they haue no man to holde with them but a sorte of beggers, and despised persons of the worlde, wherfore spare them not, bē bolde, Implete numerum patrum vestrorum, All tyrantes bē not yet dead.

Councell of Constance condemne Christ and Paule for heretickes.

But now, when you haue condemned them, yet haue you as muche to doe as euer you had: for your owne lawe is openly agaynst you, in these wordes. We vnderstand that certayne men receauing alonely the portion of the blessed body, doe abstaine from the chalice of the holy bloud, the which doubtles (seeing I can not tell by what superstition they are learned to abstayne) let them eyther receaue the whole Sacrament, or els let them bē forbidden from the whole Sacrament, for the diuision of one and of ỹ same mistery can not bē done without great sacrilege. &c.

De consecra. dis. 2. c. cōperimus.

The popes own lawes agaynste both hym selfe & his Clergie.

Now thynke you by these wordes: bē they not playne that all men shall eyther receaue both kyndes or none? Here haue you an other hereticke, for hē iudgeth, and sayth that it is a sacrilege (which is openly agaynst your Counsell) to receaue it in one kynde. But paraduenture you wyll say this law was written to priestes: I aunswere, to whomsoeuer it was writtē, it maketh no matter, for these wordes bee plaine: the diuision of one misterye can not bee done without great sacrilege. These wordes bee not spoken of the persons that shall receaue it, but of the deuiding of the sacrament, whosoeuer shall receaue it, it is sacrilege to deuide this thynge, aunswere you to that. Marke also, that your owne lawe cauleth it superstition to receaue but one kynde, and no doubt they that did receaue it so, were blynded by this damnable reason of yours, that there is no body without blonde, and yet hee calleth it superstition.

The popes owne lawe sayth it is superstition to receaue but the one kynde onely.

But let vs see what your glose saith on this terte, it is not superfluously (sayth hee) receaued vnder both kindes, for the kynde of bread is referred vnto the flesshe, and the kynde of wyne vnto the blonde. The wyne is the Sacrament of blonde, in the which is the seate of the soule, & therfore it is receiued vnder both kindes, to signifie that Christ did receiue both body and soule, and that the partaking thereof, doth profite both bodye and soule. Wherefore if it were receiued alonely vnder one kynde, it shoulde signifie that it did profite alonely but one part. &c.

The gloser agaynst the counsell.

How thinke you, doth this glose vnderstand it of preistes onely: haue lay men no soules? May not this Sacrament profite them both bodye and soule? Marke also that hee sayth it is not superfluously nor without a cause receiued vnder both kyndes. Also an other lawe: When the host is brokē, and the blonde shed out of the chalys into the mouthes of faythfull men, what other thyng is there signified, but the immolation of our Lords body on the crosse, and the shedding of hys blond out of his side. &c.

De consecr. di. 2. c. cum frangimus.

Here is it plaine, that the blond is gēeuen out of the chalys, and not out of the body, and into faythfull mens mouthes, and not alonely into priests mouthes. Also an other lawe: If that the blond of Christ bee shed for remission of sinnes (as oftē as it is shedde) then ought I lawfully for to receaue it. I which doe alwayes sinne, must alwayes receaue a medecyne. &c.

De consecr. de. 2. c. Si quocienscunq;.

Here your owne lawe sayth, that the receiuing of the blonde is a medycinall way to bee receiued of thē that sinne: you will not denie but that lay men sinne. Wherefore shoulde they not then receiue a medicyne for their sinne? you may perceiue that thys is not alonely spoken of Priestes, but of sinners. &c.

Popes lawe saith the receauing of Christes blond is medicinable

Furthermore, S. Cipzian sayth: How doe wee teach, or how can wee prouoke men to shed their blonde for the cōfession of Christes name, if wee doe denye them the blonde of Christ when they shall goe to battayle? Or how dare wee able them vnto the victordum of martyrdome, if wee doe not firste by right admitte them to drincke the cuppe of our Lorde in the congregation. &c. Here is Cyprian openly against you which will that as many shall receiue ỹ blond of Christ, as doe confesse the name of Christ, yea and that out of the cuppe and not out of the body.

Ad Cornelium ī apam.

A goodly saying of Cyprian.

Also S. Ambrose sayth to the Emperour Theodosius, how shalt thou lift vp thy handes out of ỹ which doth yet droppe vnrighteous blonde? how shalt thou with those handes receaue the body of God? with what boldnes wilt thou receaue into thy mouth the Cup of the precious blond, seeing that through the wodnes of thy wordes, so great blond is shed wrongfully. &c. Marke that the manner was in Saint Ambrose tyme that lay men should receiue ỹ blessed blond of Christ, yea and that out of the cup seuerally, and not out of the body onely: wherefore thy Lords see to your conscience, how you can discharge your self before the dreadfull trone of Christ Jesus, for making this detestable & dānable statute against ỹ beauēly word of God, and against the vse of holy Church, & contrary to the exposition of all holy doctours. It were to great a thing for you so presumptuously to breake the statute of your mortall prince, howe much more of your immortall God, which will not bee auoyded with a carnall Ecclesiastica hist.

Saint Ambrose willeth all men to receaue the cup of the blond of Christ.

The Pope and hys clergie feare not to breake Christes institution and ordinaunce.

nall reason, nor with condemnation of heresye, nor yet with saying there bee ieoperdies, perils, and sclaūders, for these proud crakes can not there excuse you nor yet helpe you. For I doubt not but the great Turke hath as good reasons for hym as these bee, & also as proude crakes as you haue, though peraduenture hee vseth them not so hipocritely agaynst God omnipotent as you doe, but yet it will not helpe hym. Wherefore now most excellent and gracious Prince, I doe with all meekenes, with all due subiection admonysh & exhorte your most noble grace, yea and the father of heauen doth openly commannd you vnder the payne of his displeasure, and as you will auoyde the daunger of eternall damnation, and also by the vertue of Christes blessed bloud, and as you will receiue remission from all your sinnes thorow the merites of his glorious bloud, that you doe defēd with all your might Christes blessed worde and his sweete bloud, and his holy ordinaunce, and suffer them not so lightly to bee oppressed and troden vnder the foote. Your grace may not consyder in this cause the multitude nor the dignitie of men, for you bee as good as the best of thē, but your grace must consider that it is God omnipotentes cause, it is Christes cause, it is the worde of God, it is the blessed bloud of Christ that is ouer troden, it is the ordinaunce that commeth out of heauen, and not out of counsels, yea and geuen by God hymselfe, and not by mans auctoritye: And now shall your grace suffer thys thynge so lightly to bee broken, becaūse men doe inuent a carnall reason agaynst it & the deuill was neuer without a reason, but that proueth not the cause against Gods worde. King Saul had no finale reasō for hym, whē hee dyd saue kyng Agag & the best shepe and Dre to offer to God, was not this a resonable cause, to saue the beastes to Gods honour, and to offer thē vp vnto God: was it not a godly thinge to saue the kyng rather then to kill hym. What man will recken it euill to saue a mā: what man can iudge it euill to saue beastes, and that the best to offer them to God: Was not God best worthy: was not this a good consideration: was not this a good intent:

Barnes exhorteth K. Henry the viij. to restore the sincerite of Christes holy worde.

1. Reg. 15.

Finally it is ten tymes better then the reason of the counsell is, and yet Saul with all his good reason, wyth all his good deuotion, with all his good purpose, with all his fatte beastes, is repelled of God for euer & all bycause hee stucke to his good intention & left the commaundement of God. Some men will thinke it but a light thynge whether they receiue the blessed bloud by it selfe, or els with the body: but as light as they thinke it, yet is it Gods worde, yet is it Christes ordinaūce, yet did the Apostles obserue it, yet did the holy Church so fulfill it. And if the worde of God were away, by reason it were but a light thyng to Baptise in water or in wyne, but the worde of God is open that it must bee done with water and not in wyne, and yet there is no cause why, but the worde of God.

Reason and deuotion, being contrary to Gods will, is mere blyndnes & impietie.

Moreouer, by reason it was but a light thyng to say: Bee glad the daughter of Siō, behold thy kyng cōmeth to thee sittyng on an Asse & on her fole. This saying by reason is not alonely simple, but also folishe, to say that a kyng shal come riding on an Asse, yea and on a borowed Asse, and therof to make so much a doe as though it wer a notable thyng: who would not now mocke a kyng if hee dyd so ryde, notwithstandyng all this, these bee the wordes of God, yea and also fulfilled in very deede of our maister Christ in his owne proper person.

Zacharie. 9 Math. 20.

Moreouer by reason, it was but a madde token that the Sauiour of the world Christ Jesus was borne, to say you shal finde a young child wrapped in cloutes & layd in a cribbe, what is this to purpose: what is this to prowe that the sauiour of the world is borne: will not reason mocke this: when will reason bee persuaded by this token the Messias (whom all the Prophetes & all the Patriarkes haue promised so many hundred yeares afore) was now borne: and yet this token came from heauē, yea and by the ministration of

Luke. 2.

The sayinges and domges of Christ are not to bee iudged by naturall reason.

aungels and the shepheardes dyd beléeue ẏ word. Briefly by reason what bée all the articles of the fayth? where is Christ? where is remission of sins? where is ẏ lyfe to come? Reason mocketh all these thynges but yet they bée true, bycause alonely ẏ word of God speaketh them. Wherfore most noble and excellẽt Prince, looke on the word of God and not of blynde reason, and saue the honour therof, for it shal saue your grace at your most néede.

Furthermore I doe exhorte and require with all honour, yea and I doe cõmaunde in the vertue of Christ Iesus and his blessed word, all Dukes, all Earles, all Lordes, all maner of estates hygh and lowe, that will bée Christen men, that will bée saued by the vertue of Iesus Christes blessed bloud, that they doe sée this ordinaũce of the God of heauen obserued to the vttermost of their power, and when soeuer that they will bée housseled, that they receiue the blessed Sacramẽt vnder both kyndes, and at the lest desire it with all their hart of their curates, and so desire it that they may bée discharged afore the immortall God of heauen whiche will not bée mocked nor auoyded with a damnable reasõ: but what soeuer thyng there bée that is agaynst the holy word of God, and the glorious ordinaũce (what collour so euer it bryng with it of holynes) let it bée a cursed and reckened of the deuill. This doth S. Cyprian learne vs saying, what thyng soeuer it bée that is ordeined by mans madnes, where by the ordinaunce of God is violated, it is whoredome, it is of the deuil and it is sacrilege. Wherfore fly frõ such contagiousnesse of men and auoyde their wordes as a canker and as pestilence. &c.

John. 6.

What soeuer is ordened agaynst the ordinaunce of Christ, the same be accursed.

These wordes bée playne of all maner of men of what estate what dignitie, or of what honour soeuer they bée, and what collour of holynes soeuer they bryng with them. Wherfore in this present writyng I doe counsel and exhorte all true Christen men to take héede what they doe. The word of god is so playne in this matter that they can desire it no playner. It is no childes game to trifle with Gods worde: God will not bée trifled with nor yet mocked. But nowe to helpe poore men that bée vnlearned I will assoyle certeine of their damnable reasons. The first is we will not geue it vnder that kynde of wyne, lest that there shoulde by negligence either of the Priest or of the receiner, fall any droppe on the grounde.

Blynd reasons of the Papistes.

I aunswere, our Christ dyd know that such a chaunce might come, you can not deny it (except you will say that hée was not God, as you would not greatly sticke to doe, if you might haue maintenaunce) and yet notwithstanding dyd hée institute it in both kindes. Aunswere you to this. Moreouer, why doe not by this reasõ your owne prestes abstayne frõ the wine, séeing that this perill may also chaũce to them, as your cautelles of ẏ Masse doe graunt. Also if it bée a reasonable cause that you shal not kéepe Christes ordinaunce, bécause of auoyding of perilles, then may you take away all the whole Sacrament to auoyde perilles, for in receauing of it in ẏ kinde of bread, is ieopardous, least there remayne any crumme in the receauers téeth. This reasõ is as good as yours: so that now all the Sacramẽt in both kindes is taken away.

Furthermore, if you will auoyde all perilles, then may you géeue thys Sacrament to no man, for you can not tell who is in deadly sinne & who not, for you know not their hartes: & it were a sore perell and greatly more ieoperdye to geue the pure body of Christ Iesus into a foule soule, then ẏ a drop of bloud by negligence should fall on the ground, for there falleth but a drop, and here is ẏ whole body in a foular place then the ground is. Also that may bée auoyded with good diligence and wisedome of the Priest, but that the sacrament shall alwayes bée receiued into a pure conscience there is no dilygence of the priest that can make it.

The Papistes finde kanite with gnattes, & swallowe Camels.

Now thinke you now? now is all the whole sacrament & Christes blessed ordinaunce clearely taken away and all for auoyding ieoperdies and perrells

perells. Thus trifle you with Chriſtes holy woꝛd, yea and ỹm your great and holy counſels. Other reaſons my Loꝛde of Rocheſter bꝛingeth that bee woꝛthy of no ſolution: foꝛ hee doth but mocke & ſcoꝛne and trifle with Gods woꝛd. Hee bꝛingeth ỹ myꝛacle of ỹ fiue loues, where there is no mentiõ made of wyne, therefoꝛe lay men muſt bee houſeled in one kinde: is not this madnes? What meane theſe men ỹ neyther feare God, noꝛ yet bee aſhamed of man? what is this to the purpoſe? Iohn. 6. Chriſt dyd a myꝛacle of fyue loues, where is no mencion made of wyne: what is this to the ſacrament? If the bꝛead ſygnifyed one part of the ſacrament, what ſygnifyed the 2. fyſhes & they that were there. Theſe 2. things muſt needes ſignifye the other part. Fonde argumentes made by ỹ Byſhop of Rocheſter. Alſo lay men did touch this bꝛeade. Moꝛeouer in an other place, Chriſt geueth all onely wine. Therefoꝛe the ſacrament muſt bee receiued in the kinde of wine al onely of the lay men. Bee not theſe goodly argumentes yea and that of biſhops? it were madnes to aunſwere to them.

That by Gods worde it is lawfull for Prieſtes that hath not the gift of chaſtitie, to marry Wiues.

The cauſe that moued hym to write of this thing. I Haue ſeene and heard in diuerſe countryes, where I haue beene, intolerable perſecutiõ agaynſt Pꝛieſtes, that were compelled by weakenes of nature to mary wyues, foꝛ that intent that they might after Gods law, and mans law bſe an honeſt cõuerſation in this woꝛld. Foꝛ the which thyng, I ſay, they haue beene ſoꝛe perſecuted, ſome caſt out of their countrey, ſome dꝛowned, ſome burned, and ſome beheaded: Finally, all the cruelnes that could bee excogitated againſt them, men thought it to litle.

Wherfoꝛe I, that recken my ſelfe a debtour, and a ſeruaunt vnto all mẽ in all thynges, wherein I may pꝛofite them, and ſpecially in thynges that apperteine to inſtructiõ of their conſcience, hath taken vpõ me, in this cauſe to ſhew my litle and ſmall learnyng: charitably deſiryng thẽ that bee ſome thing yet againſt this thyng, that they will let them ſelues bee taught, and inſtructed by Gods woꝛd, and not to ſet them ſelues obſtinately agaynſte the verity of Gods bleſſed woꝛd. Foꝛ our Loꝛd can eaſely beare and ſuffer, an vnwilled ignoꝛaunce, but a peruerſe malice and a froward reſiſtyng of his veritie, can hee not ſuffer, but thereunto is hee a moꝛtall, and an extreme enemy.

Wherefoꝛe let men conſider, that if this article doth ſtand with Gods woꝛd, & with Chriſtes holy doctrine, that if then they reſiſte, and ſet themſelues agaynſt it, how that they doe reſiſte God, the which no man is able to perfoꝛme. Certaine men there bee, Two ſoꝛtes of men. that of a very peruerſe, froward, and obſtinate mynde, doth ſet themſelues agaynſt this article & other moe. And will in no wiſe admit either reaſon, oꝛ learnyng, but ſtill remaine in theyꝛ old errour, that they haue conceiued in their bꝛaynes, whiche is neither grounded in Gods holy woꝛd, noꝛ yet in the holy conuerſation, oꝛ lyuyng of bleſſed and vertuous mẽ. Vnto theſe men will I wꝛite nothyng, bycauſe I will not trouble them, and bycauſe I would bee loth to bee toꝛne with dogs teeth, oꝛ elles to caſt pearles beefoꝛe ſwyne.

An other ſoꝛte of mẽ there bee, that Math. 7. doth not admit this article, by the reaſon that they bee ignoꝛaunt in Scriptures, and know not the very groũde therof, but alonely are led by an old cuſtome, that they haue been bꝛought vp in. Yet neuertheleſſe they are not obſtinate enemyes vnto the veritie, but would gladly geue place to learnyng, and reaſon. And all that they doe, is to ſearch with a ſober mēkenes, what ẏ truth is. The which thing they are glad to embrace, as ſone as it is layde to them. Unto theſe men is my writyng, and my labour ſpent: whom I doe charitably beſeeche, that they will fauourably, and indifferently iudge this my writyng. This doe I bynde my ſelfe, to prowe this thing (by Gods grace) out of Chriſts holy worde, by the ſayinges of holy Doctours, by the authoritie of authēticall ſtories, by the examples, & practiſe of holy and vertuous men. And if I doe not this, I will bee contented not to bee beleeued, which thyng, if I can performe, I thinke all reaſonable men will geeue credence to mee.

Finally, and laſt of all I will ſhew thoſe reaſons, and authorities, wherby that the Pope hath bounde hys Prieſtes to keepe (as hee calleth it) pure chaſtitie. And in concluſion, after my poore learnyng, I will aſſoyle all thoſe Scriptures and reaſons, and prowe that in this thyng they cā haue no place. Unto the perfornyng of the whiche, Jeſus of his infinite mercy graunt me of his holy ſpirite. Amen.

FIrſt cōmeth bleſſed Saint Paule, whom the Church of God hath alwayes had in reuerence, and hee approueth this doctrine of mine, ſaying:

1.Cor.7. Let euery man for auoyding of fornication haue his wife, and euery woman haue her huſband. Marke how bleſſed S. Paule cōmaundeth, where as any daunger of fornication is, that euery man in auoyding of vicious lyuyng, ſhould take a wife. Here is no man excepted, for the text is for euery man, and ſpecially for them, that can not lyue ſole. Unto thē it is a ſtreight commaundement to marry: there is none other remedy ordeined of God to auoyde fornication, but mariage. Yea, and if there were ten other remedies more then mariage, yet muſt mariage bee as lawfull as they to bee vſed, yea and a great deale more, ſeeyng, that it is ſpecially appoynted of God, for a remedy in this caſe. For as for all other remedyes (as faſtyng, watchyng, labouryng, chaſtiſing of a mans body) though they bee lawfull, laudable and good, yet bee they not appropriately, and onely appoynted of God, to bee remedies agaynſt fornication: as bleſſed S. Paule doth here appoynt mariage for to bee.

Prieſtes are more bounde to mary for auoyding vicious liuing thē to other chaſtiſing of theyr body, ſeyng that is Gods ordinaunce ther unto appointed.

Wherefore if it bee lawfull for Prieſtes for to faſt, and watch, to auoyde fornication, it muſt needes bee more lawful for thē to marry wiues, if they bee in daunger of fornication. For mariage in this caſe, is not alonely commaunded of God, but it is appointed of God for an eſpeciall, and ſingular medecine for this diſeaſe. Marke alſo the occaſion that S. Paul had to write this text to the Corinthians. There were certeine men amōg them, that reckened it an holines, and a perfectiō (as certeine mē doth now, for Prieſtes) that Chriſten mē ſhould lyue ſole without wiues, as the text declareth. It is good for a man, not to touch a woman. Now doth bleſſed S. Paule aunſwere to this holy hypocriſie on this maner: To auoyde fornication, ſayth hee, notwithſtandyng your holyneſſe, let euery man mary a wyfe.

Now, if bleſſed Saynt Paule had thought it vnlawfull to marry for any Chriſten man, then would not hee haue ſayde: Let euery man marry. Marke alſo, that it is not agaynſt the perfection of any Chriſten man for to marry, but hee is rather boūde to marry, if hee haue not the gifte of chaſtitie.

Farthermore, note that S. Paule neither biddeth them, that thought it holynes to bee vnmaryed, to faſt, or to labour, or to weare hēre. But alonely to marry, as who ſhoulde ſay, God hath ordayned and approued a lawful and a laudable remedy againſt your ſicknes. My doctrine is, that you ſhall heare your God, and vſe to your comforte, thoſe creatures & remedies with thankes geeuing, that God hath appointed, and therewith bee you cōtent, and recken not your ſelues wyſer then God, in helpyng and curyng your diſeaſes. For nothing can bee vnlawfull that God doth allowe, and

prowue. And for vsing of Gods creatures and his ordinaunces, in tyme, and place requisite, can no man bee blamed beefore God. But for refusing of Gods remedies, whē they bee necessary, let no man thinke, that hee shall auoyde Gods daunger.

As for an example: Hee that wyll not eate and drinke when hee is hungry and thirsty, but excogitateth some other remedie of his owne brayne, so long that hee bringeth himselfe in vtter destruction: let no man doubte, but in this case beefore God hee is a murtherer, and an homicide. I thinke there is no learning to the contrary. Wherefore I woulde that mē should well remember themselues in thys case, & thinke not that they cā inuent a thyng more pleasaunt vnto God, then hee can doe hym selfe. His pleasure is best knowen vnto himselfe. For this cause, I iudge it lawfull for euery Priest that hath not the gift of chastitie, to vse the remedy that God hath ordayned, and also sanctified. Blessed S. Paule saith, that mariage is honorable, and the bedde of them is vndefiled: but fornicatours, and aduoulterers God shal iudge. Marke that S. Paule caulleth it honorable, and a cleane thyng. What presumption is therefore in vs, that recken it a dishonour, and vncleannesse for priestes to vse maryage? God sayth, hee shall iudge whorekeepers and aduoulterers: but not them that bee maryed. Wherefore yet agayne, after ỹ doctrine of S. Paule, I exhorte all Priestes that can not liue chaste, to receiue Gods remedie with thankes. This is S. Paules doctrine, where hee sayth, I woulde that all men were as I my selfe am. But euery mā hath his proper gift of God, one after this maner, an other after that. I say vnto the vnmaryed men and wydowes, it is good for them, if they abide as I doe. But and if they can not abstaine, let them mary. For it is better to mary then to burne. I can not deuise a clearer text for my purpose then thys is. Saint Paule woulde that euery man had the gifte of chastitie. But in as much as all men hath not one gift, therefore sayth S. Paule, must euery man vse himselfe after his gifts. And hee that hath not the gifte of chastitie, S. Paule wyll plainely, that hee shall mary. Hee sayth not, that hee shal chastice himselfe wyth labour and wyth payne, to remedye that weakenes, though I woulde bee contente for my parte gladly, that men shoulde prowue all maner of lawfull remedies, to helpe them to lyue sole. But then, if they can not so continue, I wyll in no wise that they shall refuse maryage, as a thyng vnlawfull and filthy: but rather vse it, and prowue it at the least wise, as they haue done other remedies, that they haue inuented, seeing that God hath instituted this, as a thyng that hee iudgeth for a lawfull and principall remedy. But note, that S. Paule sayth, it is better to mary, then to burne. S. Paules meanynge is, that if man hath not the gifte to extincte the burnyng, and ardent desire of nature, that then hee must mary, rather then bee subiecte vnto such concupiscence. S. Paule sayth not, rather mary then to keepe whores. But hys will is, that wee shoulde bee so farre from all whoredome, that wee should not suffer our selues so much as to burne. The whiche precedeth all whoredome, and is lesse in very deede then whoredome. And yet S. Paule wylling vs to auoyde this lesse thing, commaundeth vs to mary: how much more to auoyde open whoredome, & abhominable and detestable vncleannes, that is now vsed shamelesse in the worlde?

Hebr. 13.

1. Cor. 7.

It is not sufficient before God to auoyde S. Paule with a light and a payne solution.

I doe not reprowue that Priestes doth lyue sole, I had rather thereto exhorte them. But this I detestate, that men had rather suffer, and allow priestes to liue in whoredome, and in all abhominable fornication, then for to vse that lawfull remedy that God hath both ordayned and sanctified. We haue no mention in any storye, that euer any Priest was burned for keepyng of whores, but for mariage, we haue seene, and doe see dayly, how cruelly and violently men doth persecute them, as though Gods blessed ordinaunce were rather to bee extincted Whoredom is lawful in no case, but mariage is lawfull in diuerse cases, ergo mariage must rather bee alowed then whoredome.

and

and abhorred, then that thyng, ẏ both God, & nature reprœueth. Where is there one man in England, that hath ſo great loue, and reuerence to the holy ſtate of Patrimony, that hée ſhould kéepe a maryed Prieſt in hys houſe? But Prieſtes that lyue vnlawfully agaynſt Gods law, and mans law, and agaynſt all honeſty, and morall vertue, bée in euery mans houſes & company, and rulers, and coũſellers, and controllers. Alas for pitie, what ſhall I ſay to the affectiõs of mens hartes, that thus can winke (I will not ſay allow) at ſuch abhominable thynges. Yea, and the ſelfe ſame men ſhall bée moſt extreme, and cruell vnto a poore ſimple Prieſt, that of a good hart towardes Gods ordinaunce, maryeth a lawfull wife. This Prieſt, I ſay, ſhall neither haue meate, nor drinke of thẽ, nor yet no office of charitye. But the other ſort ſhalbée exalted, and ſet vp in all honour and kept in reuerence and eſtimatiõ. And whye? Bycauſe as they ſay they bée good and cleane felowes, and loueth a péece of fleſh well. Theſe blaſphemous wordes haue I heard diuerſe tymes and many. And men ſit and laugh at them, & haue a great reioyſing in them. So ſore is Gods holy ordinaunce, & a morall vertue, & goodnes extincted in mens hartes.

O Lord God, and thy mercy were not, how were this world able to cõtinewe, that thus abhominably, and ſhamefully iudgeth of thy halowed, & ſanctified workes? But oh Lord haue thou mercy, and pitie on vs, for the ſwéete bloud of thy ſonne Chriſt Ieſus. Loke not on our ſynnes, oh lord God, for who is able to abyde in thy ſyght. But Lord of thine infinite mercy, ſend downe thy ſpirit into ẏ harts of thy people, that they may bée taught better to iudge of thy heauenly, and Godly inſtitutions. Amen.

To our purpoſe. Other articles that I haue written of, bée ſomething harde, and obſcure, ſauing all onely to theſe men, that bée learned. But as for this article, mée thinke it is ſo playne, that I meruayle how any mã ſhould doubt in it. For doubtles it néedeth no learned iudge, but onely a Ciuell, and a morall good man, that is indued with reaſon and equitie. For ſurely mine aduerſaries doth not earneſtly defend pure, and cleane chaſtitie, for they know how few prieſtes there bée, that kéepeth their chaſtitie. Yea & they know how ſore they haue punyſhed thoſe men, that hath broken theyr chaſtitie. So that they doe not defend chaſtitie, but rather fylthines, and abhominable lyuing. In ẏ which the moſt part of the ſpiritualtie doth liue. Of this I will bée reported to the recordes of the kinges courts, and alſo to their owne recordes. in ẏ which (if they ſhould bée ſerched) ſhould bée found an innumerable ſort detected of vncleanes. Theſe matters bée open, notwithſtanding I am right ſory to rehearſe it, but I am compelled, ſeing there is ſuch intollerable violẽce vſed agaynſt thoſe poore mẽ that marry, becauſe they would not all onely lyue vertuouſly béfore God, but alſo morally before the world.

I write not agaynſt thoſe Prieſtes that cã, and doe lyue chaſt, but I rather exhorte thẽ ſo to continue,

Let thoſe men at the leſt marrye wyues ſeyng they doe not, nor can not lyue chaſt.

Now let men all onely vſe reaſon in this caſe, and make compariſon betwéene theſe two manner of lyuings, and conſyder which of them doth bécome a polytike order, and a common wealth beſt. Whether is it after reaſon better for mé to defile ſhamefully, other mens wyues, other mens daughters, and other mennes maydens, that no mans ſeruaunt ſhould bée in ſafegarde for mé? or els that I ſhould marry a wyfe of myne owne, as other noble kinges, and Dukes, and other good men of the world hath done, and doth dayly, and ſo to continewe my lyfe with myne other neighbours, after this mãner of good neighbourhod? Let men beare without malyce iudge indifferẽtly. Bleſſed Saint Paule procédeth farther with this matter, and proueth clearely, that no man ought, or can bée bound to berginitie, farther then ẏ gift of God doth ſtrengthẽ hym. Thus hée ſayth, as cõcerning virgins, I haue no precept of the Lord, but all onely I geue you my councell, for I thinke it good by ẏ reaſon of this preſent neceſſitie, that a man ſhould lyue ſo. As hée would ſay Unto berginitie I can not binde you,

No man doubteth, but a greate many doth thus lyue, the whiche bee greate perſecutors of maryed Prieſtes, I would deſire them not to proue my patience to ſore. For I know theyr names, and ſome of theyr children. 1. Theſſ 4.

farther

farther then your gift is, nor I doe not recken it a thing necessary to wyn heauen by. For heauen is neyther the price of virginity, nor yet of mariage. But all onely I reken verginitie, a good, and an expedient thing to liue quietly by in this world. For in mariage is many thinges ỳ doth distracte, and disturbeth a mans mynde. That this is S. Paules meanyng, it is wel proued by ỳ texte that followeth. If a virgin doth marry, she doth not sinne but shee shall haue much tẽptation in the flesh. That is to say, many occasions of disquietnes. But I (sayth S. Paule) would gladly spare you from such occasions, for I would haue you without sorowe. And shee that is vnmaried, hath no care, but how to serue God. But shee that is maryed, hath much care, and sorowe, how shee shall dispatch all worldly busines.

Maryed men shall testifie that Virginitie is a quyet lyfe.

Mariage hath a greater crosse, then virginitie.

So that S. Paule doth clearely declare his meaning, how that virginity is no nearer way to heauen, then mariage is: sauyng that all onely an vnmaried person hath not so many occasyons to bee disquieted, as a maryed hath. Wherefore you shall marke of this text, Fyrst that S. Paule hath no commaundement to binde men to chastitie.

How commeth it now therefore, ỳ the Pope compelleth all those men ỳ will bee Priestes, fyrst to forsweare mariage, and to vow chastitie? There is no learning, that is able to proue, how that the pope cã make more preceptes of God, then blessed S. Paule could doe. Furthermore, what auctoritie hath the Pope to bynde vs to any thyng, that God, and his holy Apostles hath left free? All learned men that euer wrote, doth graunt, ỳ there bee two manner of thinges in this world. Some bee called, Res necessaria Thinges that bee necessary, and must bee done, because that God hath commaunded them. And these things no man is able to make indifferent, but they must nedes bee necessarily done. Other thinges there bee, which lerned mẽ cauleth, Res media. thinges that bee indifferent: and these may bee done, and may bee left, without sinne.

Dist. xxxi. ca. ante triennium.

Res necess.

Et res media.

Now is the nature of these, contrary to the other, for they can not, nor may not bee chaũged into thinges necessary. For that is agaynst their nature, as S. Paule declareth to the Romans and in other diuers places.

Roma. 14.

Now is this of trueth, that virginitie is a thyng of him selfe by Gods ordinaunce indifferẽt, and may bee vsed and left without sinne. Wherefore it standeth with no learnyng, that mãs law should chaũge the nature of this thyng, and make it vnto any man a thyng necessarie, whereas after gods commaundement, it is a thyng but indifferent. For that were as much, as both to chaunge Gods ordinaunce, & also ỳ nature of the thing. The which stãdeth with no learnyng. For as the Pope, and all the world can not make of Gods commaundement a coũsell: no more can they of Gods counsell make a precept. Wherefore I cõclude out of blessed S. Paule, that no man ought to vow chastitie, farther then God hath geuen hym the gift. For if chastitie were a thyng that could bee obtayned, and kept through vowyng, then were it not the gift of God, but the gift of vowyng, the whiche is agaynst our maister Christ, and also agaynst blessed S. Paule.

Virginitie is a state indifferent.

Chastitie is Gods gift.

Math. 19. 1. Cor. 7.

Farthermore, let euery man now thinke in him selfe, seeyng that blessed S. Paule had no commaundement ouer chastitie, nor yet would geue any commaundement, whether that it bee the surest way, and the lawfullest to folow the Popes commaundement, or els to folow blessed S. Paules doctrine? the which knew the perfection of virginitie, and also what dyd become Priestes for to doe, as well as the Pope doth.

whether it bee better to folow S. Paule, or the Pope.

Moreouer, if men will iudge those Priestes, that will marry, whiche followeth S. Paules counsell, & doctrine greuously for to sinne, and for to bee heretickes: Why should they not rather iudge those men more greuously for to sinne, & to bee ten tymes worse then heretickes, that foloweth the popes commaundement in not maryng? Is not S. Paules doctrine as lawful to bee kept, and as farre from ſinne, as the Popes cõmaundements bée? Or is not S. Paule of as great auctoritie in the Churche of God as 1.Cor.7. the Pope is? I thinke yes. Note alſo, that S. Paule would not bynde the Corinthians to virginity, bycauſe hée would not tangle them in a ſnare, but alonely hée exhorteth them to virgini-tie, as vnto an honeſt & comely thyng, that they might ẏ more quietly ſerue Athana- God. Upõ this ſame text, ſayth Athaſius. naſius, that the Apoſtle would com-1.Cor.7. pell no mã to kéepe virginitie agaynſt his will, nor hée would not make virginitie a thyng of neceſſitie.

Wherefore it muſt nædes folow.
Firſt, that the Pope byndyng men to virginitie, doth lay a ſnare for them, & doth nothyng els (except they haue the gift of chaſtitie) but bryng men in daunger of damnation.

Secõdarily, hée maketh a thyng of neceſſitie, that ẏ holy ghoſt in bleſſed
S. Paul durſt not, nor would not doe.

Thyrdly, that thyng that S. Paule reckened onely to conduce, and helpe to quietnes in this preſent lyfe, that ſame thyng maketh the Pope a Saui-our, and a helper to beaue, the which is a great blaſphemy to Chriſtes holy bloud, and alſo a peruerſe vſing of Gods bleſſed creatures.

Now let euery Chriſten mã iudge, if this bée charitably done of the pope, yea, whether hée hath authoritie this to doe or not? Let no man, I beſeche hym iudge in this matter after parcialitie, but euen as hée will aunſwere béefore God.

After this bleſſed S. Paule goeth farther, as cõcernyng them that haue a purpoſe, & a promiſe betweẽ, God and them, to kéepe their charitie: hys wordes bée theſe: Hée that purpo-ſeth ſurely in hys hart, hauyng no néede, but hath power ouer his owne Athan. le- wil, & hath ſo decréed in his hart, ẏ hée git. Et iudi- will kéepe hys virginitie doth well.
cauit in cor- Here note firſt, that S. Paule compel-de ſuo ſer- leth no man to bow, but hée letteth euare virgi- uery man ſtand to his owne will.
nitatem ſuam.

Farthermore, bleſſed S. Paul willeth what ſoeuer hée bée, that decréeth in his hart to kéepe virginity, that hée muſt firſt conſider, whether it lyeth in his power to kéepe his decrée or not.
If it bée in his power, then ſayth S. Bleſſed S.
Paule doth hée better to kéepe his vir- Paule diſginitie, thẽ to marry. But if it lye not penſeth in his power to bée chaſt both body with vn-& ſoule, then willeth S. Paule that hée lawfull marry. Note here, that S. Paul, not- vowes.
withſtandyng mans decrée, and purpoſe which hée made to kéepe virginity, willeth that hée doe marry, if hée cã not kéepe his decrée & purpoſe. How cõtrary is this to the popes doctrine, whiche rather ſuffereth his Prieſtes to liue in all vnclennes, by ẏ reaſon of their fooliſh promiſe made vnto hym, then hée would ſuffer them to marry wyues after S. Paules holy doctrine.
Yea the Pope is not aſhamed, more cruelly to puniſhe a poore woman for marying, then hée doth, if ſhée were a whore. For a Nunne if ſhée marry xxbij. q. c.
(ſayth hée) ſhall neuer bée admitted to de filia, in receyue the bleſſed Sacrament of verbo de fi-Chriſt. But if ſhée bée an whore, then lia.
(ſayth hée) may ſhée after penaunce, bée admitted to the Sacrament. What is abhorryng of Mariage, if this bée none? For to compare it, yea and to make it worſe thẽ whoredome: what if ſhée haue bowed chaſtitie & hath ſhée not alſo bowed to flye fornication?
Now is ſhée bounde vnto virginitie, but by mans law. But for to auoyde fornicatiõ, and whoredome, is Gods commaundement. Wherefore ſée how bygd that the Pope will ſet hym ſelfe aboue God and his holy ordinaunce. Theſſ.4.

Furthermore S. Paule ſayth, that the will of God is, that we ſhould ab-ſtayne from fornicatiõ, and that eue-ry one of vs ſhould knowe to kéepe his veſſell in ſanctifiing, and honour.
Marke S. Paules ſaying: Firſt, that it is the will of God, that we ſhould abhorre fornication. Who will now reſiſte the will of God? & not regarde the thyng that God will haue done? I truſt no Chriſten man. Furthermore the will of God is, ẏ euery man ſhould kéepe his veſſell in honour. Now if Prieſtes bée men, and haue not the gift of chaſtetie, then are they bounde to regard this commaundement. For hée ſayth, euery man.

Marke alſo, that bleſſed S. Paule calleth

calleth the vessell of maryed men honorable and sanctified. Wherfore thē should it bē vnlawful for a prieſt to vſe a ſanctified, & an holy veſſell? To poſſeſſe other mens veſſels in vnclennes is agaynſt God, and man. But it is lawfull for any man here by this text, to poſſeſſe a veſſell of hys owne, the which God hath ſanctified and honored. How can man now for any occaſion curſe that thyng, that God hath ſanctified, or make it vncleane, that God hath purified.

1.Tim.4. S.Paule hauing ỳ ſpirite of God did prophecie, that there ſhould come men in the latter dayes, which ſhould forbid men to marry, and theſe men ſhould ſpeake lyes in holy hipocriſie. Nowe marke the texte. Men ſhall forbyd marryage, and that in the latter dayes. The trueth is, that no mā hath forbidden any certayne ſtate of men to marry, but the Pope onely. Wherefore this texte muſt nēdes touch his kingdome, ſēing that hē is alſo in the latter dayes. There were certayne heretickes called Taciani, Taciani. which did condemne fully and wholy all maner of marryage. And though Saynt Paule ſpeaketh againſt them, yet in very dēde the Popes doctrine is not excepted, ſēing it is contayned in theſe latter dayes. For though there were twenty hereſies more thē Taciani, yet muſt the texte bē applied agaynſt them all, that doth cōdēne or els deſpiſe mariage, in the whole or in the parte. For the text is againſt them all that doth forbid maryage, and ſpecially in the latter dayes.

The Pope forbyddeth mariage. But hē that doth forbid his prieſts to marry, doth forbid for ſo much mariage: therefore the texte maketh agaynſt the Pope. Note alſo, that theſe men that ſhall forbid mariage, ſhall haue an holy colour of hypocriſie. Now hath the Pope forbidden hys Prieſtes to marry, vnder the colour of holynes, bēcauſe (as hē ſayth) that his Prieſtes muſt bē pure, and cleane: As who ſhoulde ſay, that maryage were vncleane and vnpure for prieſtes to vſe. What can bē holy hypocriſie, if this bē not hypocriſie? Here is the holy and pure inſtitution of God condemned, as a thyng vncleane for his holy Prieſtes to vſe. Moreouer, the Taciani did not forbid mariage vnder the colour of holynes: but they ſaid it was fully, & wholy an vnlawfull thynge. The which doctrine had no maner of colour. But the Pope ſayth, that mariage is good and laudable in it ſelfe, but his prieſts bē to pure, and to holy for to vſe that ſimple thyng. For it is not a thynge (ſayth hē) that doth become ỳ ſtate of perfecte mē, but it belōgeth to weake & vnperfect men. Now iudge good reader, which of theſe hereſies, eyther Taciani, or Papacy doth pretende ỳ greateſt colour of holynes? And yet I am ſure ỳ the holy Ghoſt in S.Paul, did ſpeake both againſt the greateſt, & alſo ſmalleſt hypocriſie. For hē alloweth no maner of fayned holynes.

There were other certayne heretikes called Marciani. Theſe did receiue no man to bē a Chriſten man, excepte hē woulde refuſe mariage. Marke what diuerſitie is betwēne theſe heretickes and the Popes learning. The Pope receiueth no prieſts except they forſweare maryage. The Marcianites, they receiue no man to bē a Chriſten man, excepte hē forſweare maryage. So that there is no diuerſitie betweēte the heretikes and the Pope, but that theſe heretikes doth excepte a greater number then ỳ Pope doth, and ſpeaketh more generally: but the thynge is all one. For the Marcianites iudgeth mariage vncleane for their ſorte, and ſo doth the Pope for his ſorte. Farthermore, Marcian ſayth, that among Chriſten men may bē no temporal maryages, but all coniunctions muſt bē turned vnto a ſpirituall mariage. And the ſelfe ſame thing ſaith the Pope of his Prieſtes. Wherefore ſēing that they doe graunt how that bleſſed S.Paul, and alſo holy fathers hath condemned this hereſie of Marcian, it muſt nēdes alſo folow, that the opinion of the Pope is lykewyſe condemned. But yet paraduenture here will bē ſayde, as Doctour Eckius, and other mē writing of this matter ſayth, how that the Pope doth not condemne maryage, but hē cauſeth men alone.

The Marcianites & the Pope, all one.

Diſt.xxxi. ca.lex.

1.Tim.4.

Obiectio.

The Pope compelleth mẽ to vow, and for ſo much hee forbiddeth maryage.

ly to kéepe their vowe. I aunſwere, that thys is but a ſmall euaſion. For firſt the Pope cõpelleth them, if they wyll bée prieſtes, to vowe, and to forſweare maryage. For if there were no ſtatute made béefore of the Pope, that all prieſtes ſhould forſweare maryage, then ſhoulde there no vowes bée made of prieſtes againſt mariage, but the thing ſhoulde bée frée. So that the vowe commeth out of the Popes decrée & prohibition, and not the decrée out of the vowe. Therfore ý probation goeth béefore the vowe. Wherfore this euaſion can haue no place.

A good example agaynſt the Popes practiſes.

Take an exãple. The Emperour maketh a ſtatute, that no man ſhalbée admitted into his ſeruice excepte that hée firſt ſweare to bée an enemy vnto the kyngs grace of England. Is not now the Emperour firſt an enemye vnto the kynges perſon, and then alſo a forbydder of loue and fauour, towardes the kinges grace of Englãd? I thynke hys grace wyll take this acte none otherwiſe. For though hée doth not, nor can not make all men the kynges enemies, yet hée maketh all that appertayne to hym, to bée the kinges enemies. So lykewiſe the Pope, though hée doe not forbid all men maryage, yet hée forbyddeth as many as will bée Prieſtes. Yea, and hée will admitte no man to bée prieſt, excepte hée firſt forſweare maryage. So that ý vow is firſt made, ere that that prieſthode is géeuen.

Now if hée were not an enemy in very déede vnto maryage, what ſhoulde moue hym to compell hys prieſtes to forſweare maryage? why doth hée not as well bynde all hys Prieſtes to maryage, as hée doth to chaſtitie? Yea, why doth hée not at ý leaſt kéepe hymſelfe indifferent, and neither make decrée againſt mariage, nor agaynſt chaſtitie? But the very trueth is, that all the protectours of vncleannes & filthy liuing, doth know very well, that this ſolution is of no ſtrength or valure. For in very déede their hartes doth recken matrimony vncleane and vnpure: and though they woulde now make a gloſe, yet their owne lawes, ý which hée ſprong out of their hartes, doth ſhewe how much they holde of holy & vnpolluted matrimony. The pope doth cal clarks ý bée maried, impios, ý is, wicked, curſed, vncleane, filthy, and all ý nought is. Also in an other place, hée cauleth the matrimony of lay men, a fleſhly, and carnall thyng, and the chaſtitie of his ſpiritualtie, hée cauleth ſpirituall maryage. What ſaith Martian more then this is? Is not this abhominable doctrine? thus ſhameles to ſpeake of holy and ſanctified matrimony? and to call it fleſhly and carnall? And yet hée is not thus content, but hée cauleth ý maryage of prieſtes ſinne, and defenders of the ſame, ſectatores libidinum, the folowers of filthy luſtes, preceptores viciorum, the teachers of vice, laxantes frena luxurie, géeuing libertie to lecherye. Tell mée, if any man woulde ſpeake and reprowue ý whores of the ſtewes, what other wordes could hée vſe agaynſt them more ſhameful then theſe? And yet they wil not bée noted to condemne matrimony. What miſchiefe can not the deuill cloke, if men woulde beléeue hym.

Diſt. 32. c. Erubeſcant.

D. 31. c. lex.

Diſt. 82. c. Plurimos.

But farthermore, let vs ſée, how holy, and bleſſed that hée reckeneth matrimony for to bée, by the reaſon of honours, and rewardes, that hée geueth vnto prieſts that marry. Firſt ſaith hée, if a Prieſt doth marry of ignorãce, by the reaſon that hée knew not the ſtatute of the pope, forbidding prieſtes to marry, that then this prieſt ſyrſte ſhall forſake his wife, and then ſhall ſo continue without any farther promotion, as long as hée lyueth. And if there bée any Prieſt, that will defẽd his mariage, by the exãple of the Prieſtes in the ould lawe, hym doth the Pope priuate of all maner of Eccleſiaſticall honour for euer. Moreouer hée ſayth, that if any ſpirituall mã doth after this decrée marry, then his ſinne ſhall neuer bée forgeuen hym, nor they may neuer afterward handle the bleſſed ſacramẽt, becauſe that mariage is a fylthy, and a foule concupiſcence ſayth hée.

Diſt. 82. c. quia aliquanti.

The popes lawes agaynſt maryage of Prieſtes.

New deuiſed ſinne agaynſt the holy ghoſt, helpe God.

Now iudge indifferently Chriſtẽ reader, if this bée not diſpiſing of holy matrimony, thus ſhamefully to ſpeake of it, and ſo cruelly to handle them, that holyholyly doth liue in it, hauing nothing for hym, but a lousy decree of Pope Siricius. So that men may perceaue clearely, how that hee byndeth not his prieſtes, by the reaſon of their bowe, as his protectours doth ſay, but by ẏ reaſon of the ſtatute, that Siricius had made afore the prieſtes had bowed any chaſtetie.

1. Tim. 3. S. Paule, when hee ſhould order ſuch byſhoppes, as ſhould bee in the Church of God irreprehenſible, among all other thinges hee would that hee

Tit. 1. ſhould bee a man of one wife, hauing children well brought vp. Here Saint Paule alloweth hym one wife.

How commeth it then, that men ſay, that a Prieſt ſhall haue no wyfe? How agreeth this one, with none? Men muſt at the leaſt wayes graunt, that S. Paule dyd not recken mariage vnpure, & vncleane for a byſhop, for if hee had, hee would not haue graunted hym one wife. Yea moreouer hee ſpeaketh of his children well brought vp, in the which hee admitteth, and alloweth, the coniunction, and copulation betweene them two, for to bee godly, and vertuous. Hee hath other eyes to loke on the bleſſed, and holy coniunction, which is betweene man, and wyfe, then the Pope hath. For the Pope reketh it filthy, and not ſeemely, that a Prieſt ſhould with his holy handes touch a womans body, & with the ſame handes to conſecrate ẏ holy ſacrament. Oh Lord God, what cã not the deuill bring to paſſe? what abhominable holynes of hypocriſye is this? to recken a Prieſt vnpure, and vncleane, becauſe hee hath vſed hym ſelfe in Gods holy ordinaunce? Is not this as much to ſay? God thou art an inuenter, and ordayner of that thing that maketh men vnpure, & vncleane? thou art the auctour of this vncleanes? For haddeſt thou not inſtituted it, ſo had men not vſed it?

Childeren bee not gotten with lookyng on women onely.

The Pope alloweth his prieſtes to keepe whores, but cannot abyde that they ſhould haue an honeſt wife.

Alas how fayne would I chide. I could here ſay ſome thing, If I would but I may not. Neuertheles it greeueth mee, for I can not tell where to vſe euell wordes, if I ſhall not vſe thẽ againſt ſuch abhominable, and execrable hereſye as this is. But yet I pray you one worde. Why bee not your hãds defiled for handeling of whores fleſhe? Is whores fleſh ſo cleane? that Prieſtes may handle it? and the fleſhe of an honeſt, and a good woman ſo vncleane, that Prieſt muſt bee burned for handeling of it? Fye on the, deuill. Thinkeſt thou that men hath neyther reuerẽce in their hartes toward God, nor yet reaſõ to iudge of theſe things? What can bee shameles, if this thing ſhall bee thus alowed amongeſt Chriſten men? Here bee all honeſt women and that in honeſtie, abhorred & deſpiſed, and whores in compariſon of them, bee ſanctified, and bleſſed. But oh thou Lord God, I doe yet beleeue that thou wilt once bee reuenged of this diſhonour, & ſhameſulnes. Moreouer, why doth not oppreſſion, and violence, and theeſte, defyle Prieſtes handes, as well as mariage? What hath pure matrymonye offended, that it alonely ſhould defyle prieſts hands, and all other maner of vices, and vncleanenes, doth nothing contaminate them. But alas for pitye, how blindly doe we iudge of this holy ordinãce, and inſtitution of God, that thus doe blaſpheme it?

Burne all Prieſtes that bee knowen for open whore maſters, & beneficed will bee thẽ better chepe And I will recken you then earneſtly to defend chaſtitie.

What will men ſay to bleſſed S. Paule, where hee ſayth, Haue we not power to lead about a ſyſter to wife, as well as the bretheren of the Lord, and as Cephas? I will not diſpute, whether that Paule had a wife or not But this I am ſure, that this text doth clearely proue, and that after ẏ mind of great doctours how that Peter, & other Apoſtles had wiues. Wherefore then ſhould it bee vnlawfull for our prieſtes to marry? Bee our prieſts holier thẽ S. Peter & other Apoſtles? Or is mariage now more vnlawfull, then it was then? But peraduenture here will bee ſayd, that the Apoſtles had wiues beefore ẏ Chriſt dyd chuſe thẽ, but afterward they forſoke their wyues, and folowed Chriſt.

1. Cor. 9.

A great blaſphemy agaynſte Chriſt and his holy Apoſtles.

To this I aunſwere, that it is not inough ſo to ſay. For ſeing that they haue graunted, how the apoſtles had wiues, whẽ they were cauled, it ſtandeth with reaſõ, that theſe men ſhould proue by an open ſcripture, that the Apoſtles after theyr caulyng, dyd forſake theyr wyues. Yea, I wyll goe farther wyth them, and ſay playnely, that is an abhominable lye, & a great blaſphemy agaynſt God, and his holy Apoſtles, to ſay that they had forſaken theyr wyues. For our .Y. Chriſt taught them not to forſake their wyues, but in any wyſe to kæpe thē, ſauing alonely for fornication. Now is the election vnto Apoſtleſhip, neyther fornication, nor yet like vnto fornication. Wherefore I ſay boldely, that it is a falſe lye agaynſt the holy Apoſtles, to ſay that they forſwoke their wyues. Alſo this ſame place of S. Paule doth prowe it a falſe lye. For S. Paule ſpeaketh, how S. Peter after hys Apoſtleſhyp, and alſo other diſciples of Chriſt, caryed theyr wyues about wyth them, when they went a preaching. Wherefore it is but a lye, to ſay, that they had forſaken them.

Math. 19.

The Apoſtles forſooke not their wiues as men dreame.

Now Chriſten reader, here haue I perfourmed I truſt, one part of my promiſe, that is to ſay, I haue proued this article of myne by Gods holy worde ſo playnely, that no man (I truſt) can or will deny, but that theſe Scriptures bæ ſufficient to moue me and al other mē to bæ of this doctrine that I am of. The ſecond part of my promiſe was to proue this alſo by holy doctours. Unto the which, I will now prepare my ſelfe.

But afore all thinges, I louingly, and charitably, deſyre the reader to ſet apart all parcialitie and malice, and to iudge indifferently of my doctrine, as hæ will aunſwere at ỹ dread full day of dome, and not to refuſe that thyng that is truth, for hatred, or diſpleaſure of my perſon. For ſurely myne intent is neyther to hurte, or harme, nor yet diſpleaſe (as much as lyeth in mæ) any perſon. And though I haue in tymes paſt, somwhat vehemently written agaynſt thoſe thinges that I thought errours: yet would I require hartely euery man to weye euery thyng indifferently by hymſelf, and conſider how I haue taken vpon mæ, not to enuey agaynſt any perſō, but alonely to fight agaynſt that deuilliſhe doctrine, which is diſhonour to Chriſt and hys bleſſed bloude, and perillous and dampnable vnto all Chriſten mens ſoules.

Secondarily, I haue bæne wrongfully, and vncharitably handeled, as God and all good men doth knowe, the which I will bæ bounde to prowe whenſoeuer it ſhall pleaſe God and the kyng to aſſigne indifferent iudges to heare mæ, and myne aduerſaries. Now, let no mā require in mæ, that hæ can not finde in hymſelfe, that is to ſay, that I can ſo patiently, and ſo eaſely beare and ſuffer theſe intollerable wronges, as I ought for to doe, yea and paraduenture as I gladly would doe. Wherefore I confeſſe, that many wordes hath bæne ſharpely written by mæ, the which I would gladly had bæne more charitablyer written, but then God had not gæuē mæ ſo great patience. Wherefore I truſt now by Gods grace, ſomethyng more temperately to ſpeake, deſiring euery good man of hys charitie, to helpe mæ wyth his deuoute prayer. Amen.

To our purpoſe. Fyrſt commeth bleſſed S. Cipryan, of whom was aſked a queſtion, what ſhould bæ done wyth thoſe religious perſonnes, that could not kæpe theyr chaſtitie as they had vowed. Theſe bæ hys wordes. Thou doeſt aſke what wæ doe iudge of vyrgins, the which after they haue decreed to lyue chaſtly, are afterward founde in one bedde wyth a man. Of the which thou ſayſt that one of them was a Deacon. Wæ doe wyth great ſorow ſæ ỹ great ruine of many perſons, which cōmeth by ỹ reaſō of ſuch vnlawfull and perillous companying togither. Wherefore if they haue dedicate them ſelues vnto Chriſt, out of fayth to lyue purely, and chaſtly, then let them ſo remayne wythout any fable, and ſtrongly, and ſtedfaſtly to abyde the reward of virginitie. But and if they wyll not abyde, or els can not abyde, then is it better to marry, then for to fall into the fier of concupiſcence, and let them gæue vnto the brethren and ſiſterne none occaſion of ſclaunder. &c. I doe for my parte re-require no more then blessed Cypri-an doth here teach, that is to say, if Priestes can lyue sole, I beseeche our Lord to reward them for it, & geue them grace to continue. But if they can not, I woulde haue no snare layd for theyr soules, nor yet haue them compelled to a thyng that they can not keepe. But I woulde the thyng shoulde bee indifferent for them that can lyue chaste, so to remayne. And they that haue not the gifte, nor can not so lyue, for to vse that lawfull remedy that God hath ordained. What hath men to doe, or what moueth thē to compell Priestes not to marry, as long as God is contēted with priests wedlocke? Let no man thynke that such a compulsion is acceptable to God. And if men wyll not bee contēted with this doctrine, that is so good, so reasonable, and so honest, what cā I say to it? I must bee content, I can doe no more, but say my learnyng, and let God alone wyth hys punishment.

The marryage of Priestes is allowed of God, and therefore not to bee condemned of men.

Aug. de bono coniugali ad Iulianum.

Also blessed S. Augustine writing of thys same matter, sayth these wordes: Certayne men doe affirme those men to bee aduoulterers, that doth marry after they haue vowed chastitie: but I doe affirme, that those men doe grieuously sinne, the which doth separate them. &c.

Note first that S. Augustine wryteth of them that had vowed chastitie. And yet notwithstanding hee woulde that those men shoulde continue in their maryage togither. The which thyng hee would neuer haue suffered if it had beene vnlawfull and heresie, as men woulde make it now a dayes.

S. Aug. dispenseth wyth vowes where daūger is of fornication.

Secondarily obserue that there were in his dayes (as bee now many in ours) that thought it a greuous sinne, for a man to marry after hys vowe. And yet this opinion S. Augustine doth condemne.

Now let men admit this doctrine of S. Augustine, and I wil require no more. And if they will condemne me, then let them also condemne S. Augustine, for I haue learned it of hym. Also blessed S. Ambrose, writeth of virginitie in this maner: Chastitie of body ought to bee desired of vs. The which thyng I doe geue for a coūsell, and doe not commaūde it imperiously. For virginitie is a thyng alonely, that ought to bee counsayled, but not to bee commaunded, it is rather a thyng of voluntary will, then of a precept. &c. Note how S. Ambrose teacheth, how that virginitie ought not to bee required, as vnder a precept. Wherfore it must nedes folow, that the Popes doctrine is vnlawfull, whē hee commaundeth, that no man shall bee a Priest, except hee vow chastitie. For here the Pope compelleth men vnder a colour, for to vow chastitie. As for an example.

Ambro. 32. quest. cap. 1. Integritas.

It chaunceth me to mete by the way a theef, the which sayth vnto me. Thou shalt not goe ouer ẏ bridge, except thou wilt deliuer me thy purse. Now is it of trueth, that I may chose whether I will goe ouer the bridge or not, but yet this man doth violence, for cōpellyng mee either to goe backe agayne, or els to lose my purse, if that I will goe ouer. And I doubt not, but the kynges lawe will both condemne hym for doyng violence, and also take him for a theefe. So likewise the pope doth wrong, when hee sayth, I shall not bee a priest, except that I first vow chastitie. I say, that this condition is vnlawfull, and it is wrongfully done, to bynde me to any thyng vnder any condition, that God hath left free to me. Moreouer, our M. Christ did not require that condition of hys priests. Wherfore it must nedes folow, that it is not a thyng, that of necessitie belongeth to Priesthode.

Vowes that haue vnlawfull conditions are not to bee obserued.

Also S. Hierome approueth this doctrine of mine, saying: Let bishops, and priestes read this thyng (hee speaketh against mispendyng of goodes, that is offered to helpe poore men with) the which doth teach their children prophane letters, and maketh them to read commedies, and to sing bandy songes of iesters, and these children they finde of the charges of the church. &c. Obserue this ẏ S. Hierom speaketh here of Bysbops, and priests children, the whiche they could not haue, if they were vnmaryed. For it is not to bée ſuppoſed, that S. Hierome ſpeaketh of baſtardes, or of whores children, for then hée would haue vſed other wordes. So that good reader, it is cleare, after the doctrine of holy Doctours, that it is lawful for Prieſtes to haue wiues, and ſpecially if they can not lyue ſole.

Hie. d. 37. cap. Legant.

But now will we goe farther, and ſée what holy councels hath ordeined in this cauſe. The trueth is that ỹ deuill hath of long tyme harped on this ſtryng, to forbyd Prieſtes Matrimony. Not for any deuotion, that hée had to virginitie, for hée knew well men could not kéepe it, farther then their gifts were: but alonely that hée might lay a ſnare for mens ſoules, and alſo bryng the holy inſtitution, and ordinaunce of God into a contempt, and a deſpiſing. But God hath alwayes of hys infinite mercy, ſtyrred vp ſome good man to reſiſte hym. We doe read in authenticall ſtoryes, that in the coũcell of Nicene, certeine men went about to haue priuated Prieſtes from their wyues. But almighty God dyd let them. The wordes of the ſtorye hée theſe. The Councell of Nicene, willyng to reforme the lyfe of men, dyd ſet certayne lawes, the which we call Canones: among the whiche, certayne men would haue had a lawe to bée brought in, that Byſhops, prieſts, Deacons, and Subdeacons, ſhould not lye with their wyues, which they had maryed, before they conſecratiõ. But Paphnutius a confeſſour, dyd withſtand them and ſayd, that their mariage was honorable, and it was pure chaſtitie for thẽ to lye with their wyues. So that the Coũcell was perſuaded, not to make any ſuch law, affirmyng it for to bée a greuous occaſion both vnto them, & alſo vnto their wyues of fornication. And this thyng dyd Paphnutius, though that hée hym ſelfe was vnmaryed. The Councell dyd alowe this ſentence. So that nothyng was decréed, as cõcernyng this thyng: but euery man was left vnto hys frée will, and not bounde of any neceſſitie. &c.

The holy Councell.

Ex tripertita hiſtoria, Diſt. xxxi. ca. Nicena.

Here is to bée noted, that this holy Coũcell dyd not recken it an vnpure, or a filthye thyng, for a Byſhop, or a Prieſt, to cõpany with his wyfe. But they doe graũt, that it is a pure, and a cleane chaſtitie for a Prieſt to company with his wife. The which is cleare ly agaynſt ỹ Pope. For hée ſayth, that it is fleſhly, and carnall, and that their handes bée defiled, and they made vnworthy thereby, to handle the bleſſed Sacramentes. But here will bée ſayd that theſe mẽ had wyues before their conſecration, the whiche thyng they will alſo graunt, that a maryed man may bée choſen a Byſhop, & alſo kéepe his wife afterward. But hée may not marry after hys cõſecration, that had no wyfe before.

The Councell of Nicene dyd not thinke it an vnmeete thing for a Byſhop to haue a wife.

To this I aunſwere, that it is no lawfull ſolution, thus to ſay. For if it bée lawfull for a mã to kéepe his wyfe after his Prieſthode: why ſhall it not bée as lawfull for hym to take a wyfe after hys cõſecration? What thyng is there in hys matrimony, that is made after hys conſecration, that was not in his matrimony before hys conſecration? Or for what cauſe dyd hée take a wyfe before hys conſecration? If hée dyd it to auoyde fornication, then is hée now much more bound to take a wyfe then before: for it becommeth hym a great deale worſe to lyue in fornication, after hys conſecratiõ, then hée dyd before. But theſe mẽ that maketh this lighte ſolution, doe not hãdle this matter truely before God. For it is not their meanyng, that maryed men ſhould either bée Byſhops, or Prieſtes. For let them ſhew me in all their chronicles, that euer any maryed man was choſen to bée a byſhop, ſince they had made lawes, that Prieſtes ſhould haue no wyues, and then I wil beléeue them: But alonely they ſéeke an euaſion, how to defende the matter by. For I dare ſay, if any man ſhould goe aboute to chuſe a maried man to bée a byſhop, or els a perſon, they would thinke hée were mad. In ſo much that ſome of them hath ſayd, that mariage was ſo vnlawfull for Prieſtes, that they haue fayned, ỹ holye Apoſtles for to forſake their wiues, after their election. How ſtãdeth theſe two togeathers? that maryed

The Pope will not ſuffer that maryed mẽ ſhalbe choſen Byſhops.

Diſt. xxxi. ca. Omnino.

If maryed men may be Byshops, then second brethren shall no longer bee beggers.

ryed men may bée bishops, I feare me the byshoprickes will sone bée gotten out of their handes, and most parte also of all benefices. Wherefore I woulde counsell them rather to graunt that Priestes myght haue wiues, then for maried men to bée made byshops.

Furthermore marke, that the holy counsell made no lawe, whether ỹ Priest should marry after their consecration or not. Wherefore it must nédes bée taken away of them as frée and an indifferẽt thing, for a priest to marry after his cõsecratiõ or not. For if they had reckened it vnlawfull for hym to marry, then would they haue forbidden it. For the counsell was gathered for to reforme those thinges ỹ were amisse, as the text saith clearely. Moreouer, if it had chaunced then a priest to haue maried after his consecration, hée had not offended, for there was no lawe at that day, that did forbyd hym. Therefore, it is now no necessary artycle.

If men will not bée content with these auctorities: yet somewhat to satisfye them, I will bringe them an other lawe, which the Papistes calleth Canon Apostolorum, the wordes bée these. If any man doth teach, that a Priest by ỹ reason of his order ought to forsake his wyfe, cursed bée hée. &c. Marke of this lawe, that for colour of holines, no mã ought to forsake their wyues. Wherefore it must nédes folowe, that for priests to marry wiues after their consecration is not against their holynes. Note also, that the text sayth: how Priests had wiues of their owne, and went not a borowing, as they doe now. We reade in the counsell of Gangrens, how they made this decrée. If any man doth iudge or condemne a Priest that is maried, that hée may not, by the reason of his mariage doe sacrifyce, but will abstayne from his masse by the reason thereof, cursed bée hée. &c. Fyrst you shall know the occasion wherfore this counsell was gathered.

Canon Apost.

Consilium Gangrens. Canon. 4.

There was a certayne heretyke called Eustachius, the which dyd among all other heresyes teach, that no maried man could be saued. Also he taught that Priests, which dyd marry, ought for to bée despised, and in no wise for to handle the blessed sacramentes.

Eustachius, Hereticus.

Against this heretick, is this decrée made. Now let euery mã iudge what diuersitie is betwéene this heretyke, and the Popes doctrine. This heretyke sayth, that mariage is vnpure, & vncleane, and that a maryed Priest may not touch the sacramentes. The selfe and the same doctrine sayth the Pope in diuers places: and especially in a chapter, ỹ beginneth wt Nullum. Where hée sayth, that no byshop shall presume to consecrate any Deacon, except hée will fyrst bow chastitie. For no man ought to bée admitted (sayth hée) to serue at the aulter, except his chastitie bée fyrst knowen.

Dist. 28.

Also in an other chapter hée sayth, They that eyther kéepe whores, or els marry wiues, shalbe privated of their benefices. For they are vnworthy for to bée in the temple of God, & to touch the holy vessels of the Church, that doth vse them selues in such vncleanenes, sayth hée. What is condemning of matrymony, if this bée not? Hée compareth whordome, and matrymony to bée like cleane, the which did neuer none heretyke. The Pope goeth further, and sayth: No man may bée eyther Priest, or Deacon, that is maryed, except they will promise to forsake their wiues. &c. These lawes make against them that say, how that maryed men may bée Priestes. The same thyng doth the Pope also confyrme in dyuers other places of his lawe, hauing none other cause why, but only because (as hée sayth) Priestes must bée pure, and cleane. This same cause had also Eustachius. For he reckened as the Pope doth, how maryage, was vnpure, and vncleane, and dyd therefore forbyd Priests to marry. Yea in our dayes, I dare say, that no man forbiddeth Priests to marry, but only they that reckẽ mariage vncleane. But let vs goe farther, and sée what holy counsels haue decréed, as conserning Priestes matrimony.

Dist. 28. c. Decernimus.

Sauyng the Pope, & Eustachius.

Dist. 28. Dist 28. c. Assumi, & preterea.

Dist. 31. ca. sacerdotibus Episcopi. Tenere cõi. Si laicus.

We doe reade in a counsell, that is called the fyrst Sinod, these wordes:

6. Sinodus.

Conſidering ý it is decrēd amongeſt the lawes made by thē of Rome, that no deacon, nor Prieſt, ſhall company with their wiues. Therefore we not withſtanding that decrē, following ý rules of the Apoſtles, and the conſtitutions of holy men, wyll. that from thys day forth, maryage ſhal bē lawfull, in no wyſe diſſoluyng the matrimony betwēne them & their wiues, nor depriuing thē of their familiarity in time conuenient. Whoſoeuer therfore ſhall bee founde able of the order of Deacon, Subdeacon, or of Prieſthode, wē wyll that no ſuch men bē prohibited to aſcende the dignities afore ſayd, for the cohabitation of their wyues: Nor that they bē conſtrained at the requeſte of their orders, to profeſſe chaſtitie, or to abſtayne from the company of their lawfull wyues.

This Coſi cell doth fully eſtabliſh and cōfirme the mariage of Prieſts.

It followeth, if any man preſume therfore agaynſt the Canons of the Apoſtles to depriue Prieſtes, or Deacons from the copulation and felowſhip of their lawfull wyues, let ſuch a man bē depoſed. Semblably, both prieſts and Deacons, which putteth away their wyues vnder the colour of holynes, let them bē excommunicated. But if they continue in the ſame, let them bē depoſed.

Note how thys counſell doth condemne by name the Popes decrē, which hath commaunded ſpirituall men to forſake their wyues. And in thys is alſo to bē obſerued, that the euaſion of the Papiſtes, when they ſay, that marryed mē may be prieſts, is a falſe lye. For the Pope and they dyd neuer admit that, as this counſell witneſſeth, but alonely that they are driuen to a narrow exigent, by ý violence of our argumentes, & they haue none other euaſion to delude the people by. Wherefore they bē compelled to helpe themſelues with ſuch a lye. For here is it playnely in thys Counſell declared, how the Pope, & they haue prohibited thoſe Prieſtes ý were marryed, to cōpany with their wyues, and would not admit them to mynyſter, bēfore they had forſaken their wiues.

Furthermore, note how that thys counſell doth alleadge for them, the rules of the holy Apoſtles, and the cōſtitutions of bleſſed men. What Chriſten man wyll nowe ſet hym ſelfe agaynſt thys holy counſell, the which hath ſo good auctoritie for it? Afterwarde it is to bē marked, how that this counſell doth commaunde, that no man ſhall bowe chaſtitie, whē hē ſhall bē conſecrated, the which thing is clearely agaynſt the Pope, that cōpelleth all hys prieſtes to bowe chaſtitie, bēfore they bē ſacred.

The popes doctrine is condemned by a Counſell.

Now let euery Chriſten mā iudge whether it bē better, or ſurer to follow the Pope hauing none auctoritie for hym, and bēyng alſo but one mā: then to follow thys holy Counſel, hauyng for it the auctoritie of the holy Apoſtles, and of other bleſſed men.

Finally, marke how that this bleſſed counſell doth depoſe all thoſe that doth priuate Prieſtes from the companye of a lawfull wyfe. Out of the which doth follow, that the Pope, & all hys adherentes bē ipſo iure depoſed. And if they remayne in their errour, they bē excōmunicated. Wherfore I conclude out of this counſell, that Prieſtes may lawfully haue wiues. Wē haue alſo euen there theſe wordes. It is open that neither Deacons, nor ſubdeacons, ought to bē forbidden from maryage. &c. If thys bē not playne? I can not tell what is playne. Wherfore Gratianus concludeth, that whether hē bē Prieſt, Deacon, ſubdeacon, hē may lawfully vſe matrimony. If men will not bē content wyth theſe ſayinges, I can not tell what will ſatiſfie them. Reaſonable men ought not to fight both agaynſt God and man. But yet let vs goe farther, and ſē what the Popes lawe ſayth more.

Diſt. xxviij. ca. de Stranguſ.

Innocent the thirde writeth in his decretalles, on thys maner: Thoſe Prieſtes, that after the maner of the countrey, hath not forſaken the coniunctiō of maryage, if they doe breake their wedlocke, ought greuouſly to bē puniſhed, ſēyng that they may vſe lawfully matrimony. ry. Therefore it muſt nedes follow, that Prieſtes matrimony is not forbidden by Gods lawe. And if it bee not forbidden by Gods lawe: what charitie is in the Pope to compell mẽ ſo violently vnto the thyng, ỹ which God hath not bounde thẽ to. Is it not a cruell thyng for the Pope to burne a man as an hereticke, becauſe that hee kæpeth not his commaundement and lyueth not in open whoredome? Why doth hee not commaunde hym as well neyther to hunger, nor yet to thyrſt? And if hee eyther hunger, or thyrſt, why doth hee not forbid hym to eate and to drinke? It is as much in our power to bowe chaſtitie, and to kæpe it, if wee haue not the gift of God, as it is to bowe that wee wyll neyther hunger nor thyrſt: for they are both inclinations of nature, implanted of God. For as Cicero ſayth, and alſo the Emperour in hys lawe: wee are naturally inclined vnto the coniunction that is in matrimony, for cauſe of propagation. And it is as much in our handes, neyther to hunger nor to thyrſt, as it is to chaunge this naturall inclination. And as wee when wee are hungry and thirſty, cã not abſtayne from eatyng and drinking: no more can wee kæpe our chaſtitie (notwythſtanding our bowe) if God haue not geuen vs the gyft. Wẽ may here pleaſe ſomthyng thẽſelues, and ſtand in theyr owne conſeyte, & ſay how they can inuent many remedies to kæpe their chaſtitie by.

Cicero. lib. i. officiorũ. Iuſtinianus lib. i. cap. Ius naturale.

It is implanted in nature to marry, if Gods gift doe not chaſige our nature.

But I dare ſay, they would not for all the clothes that belongeth to their backes, that the purenes, and cleannes of their hartes were writtẽ in great letters, & ſet vp on ỹ church doore. Wherfore I would deſire mẽ to bee contented, and to ſet aſide all hipocriſie, and ſpeake the trueth, as it is written in theyr hartes: for God wyll not bee deceaued, nor yet mocked. And doubtles, if I coulde not ſhewe infinite examples, how that Prieſtes neyther doe, nor yet cã kæpe theyr chaſtitie, mẽ myght well blame mee for mouyng thys article. But now ſeeyng that theyr lyuyng doth teſtifie my doctrine, and that to ỹ great offence and ſclaunder of Chriſtes holy Church, and alſo to the great rebuke and ſhame of many a good mans childe: yea finally to the dampnation of many a deare ſoule: Wee thynke men ought to bee contẽt and to thãke mee for takyng of ſo great labours, for deliueraunce of theyr ſoules, and alſo for mayntenaũce of honeſty, and and good morall vertue, according to Gods lawe, and mans lawe.

But let vs proceede farther to proue thys matter. The maiſter of the ſentẽces, wryteth on thys maner: Our weakenes is prone to fall into filthynes, but it is helped wyth honeſt maryage. And the thyng that is vnto whole men an office, is vnto ſicke mẽ a remedy. Marke how the M. of the Sentences ſayth, that wee are ready to fall into filthynes? And how that maryage is an honeſt remedy? How can men then after theyr owne learning condemne mariage, as no honeſt thyng? ſeeyng that theyr owne Clarkes cauleth it honeſt? Moreouer the maiſter of the Sentẽces will, that both perfect and vnperfect may vſe this honeſt thyng: for to the firſt it is an office, & to the other it is a neceſſary remedy. Ieſus how woulde men cry agaynſt vs poore men, if they had halfe ſo much againſt vs, as wee haue agaynſt them. But our Lorde ſende them hys grace, and mollifie theyr hartes. Amen.

Magiſter Sẽtentiarum. lib. ij. Diſt. xx.

We haue alſo in the Popes lawe a title, De filijs Presbyterorum, in the which there bee many chapters written to the Biſhops of Englande, as concernyng Prieſtes children. Wherfore it is to bee ſuppoſed, that Prieſts had then wyues. And if they had thẽ, why may they not now? By what authoritie are our Prieſts now more compelled then they were? Haue our Prieſtes nowe more articles of theyr fayth then they had? But yet here wil bee ſayd, that the Popes lawe ſpeaketh of baſtardes, and not of lawfull children. Wee thynketh that this ſame is not charitably anſwered, for here they doe accuſe of fornication many an honeſt Prieſt, agaynſt whom they haue alonely but a light ſuppoſition.

Ext. de filijs Preſ. cap. ad preſentiam. Venies. Propoſuit. Ex tranſmiſſa.

For

For they that made this aunſwere, knew not thoſe men, nor yet their lyuyng. And the text ſpeaketh but of Prieſtes children, & not of baſtardes.

I doe not ſo much defame holy Prieſthode as they doe that graunt thē to haue baſtardes.

Farthermore by this ſolution is many an honeſt man defamed, for to bee a baſtard, the whiche is an euill name, and me thinke vncharitably layd by theſe men vnto their charges. Wherefore note, that theſe men doth ſore defame prieſthode, & that agaynſt the order of charitie, that had rather graunt all theſe Prieſtes, that the law ſpeaketh of (which is no ſmall nōber) for to bee breakers of their vow, and to bee open whoremaiſters, yea, and alſo their children to bee baſtardes, rather then they would graūt that thoſe Prieſtes had lawfull wyues. The which were neither agaynſt honeſty, nor yet the order of prieſthode. Wherfore if I ſhoulde thus haue defamed Prieſtes, & their children, men would ſore haue beene greued with me: yea I am afrayde, that ſome men will bee diſpleaſed with me, alonely bycauſe I doe write agaynſt thoſe prieſtes, whō I know of ſurety to bee naught, if hauyng of children can teſtifie it.

But what will they ſay to ỹ popes law in the ſame place, whoſe wordes bee theſe. Thou doeſt aſke of vs (ſaith the Pope, to the Byſhop of Caſſell) whether that theſe men, that hath Prieſtes to their fathers, may bee promoted to holy orders or not, if they bee of good, and honeſt demeanour, & well learned. To this we aunſwere (ſayth the Pope) that if they bee gottē of lawfull marriage, & there bee none other Canonicall impediment, then may they lawfully bee promoted vnto holy orders, and may enioy that ſame benefice, which their fathers had before. &c.

Extra. lib. 3 de filijs preſbyterum. c. Ad hec.

This no mā cā not deny, but ỹ law ſpeaketh of Prieſtes children, ỹ were gotten in lawfull matrimony. Wherfore it muſt nēdes follow, ỹ Prieſtes were then maryed: yea, and the lawe calleth their marriage lawfull, which muſt alſo bee noted: ſo ỹ men may ſee that this doctrine of myne is no new thyng, but it is elder then their law.

Alſo in that ſame title, the Pope ſayth, we haue vnderſtanded, that N. borne, and gotten in Prieſthode of a lawfull wife, hath allwayes had an affection to ſerue God in the office of a ſpirituall man. &c. Here note, that the Pope ſpeaketh of Prieſtes children: yea, and of them that were gotten in lawfull marriage, and not in fornication. Wherfore the Pope ſuppoſeth, that Prieſtes may haue a lawfull matrimony. And therfore mee thinketh, that when men finde in the law, mention made of Prieſtes children, they ſhould rather ſuppoſe them to bee gotten in matrimony, then in fornicatiō, both for the honeſty of the father, mother, and alſo of the childe: ſpecially ſeeyng ỹ Prieſtes had wyues in thoſe dayes. And it ſtādeth alſo more with honeſty of Prieſthode, to graunt that they had wyues, rather then whores.

Ibidem. cap. Litteras.

Now let vs ſee what the Emperours lawe ſayth to Prieſtes wyues. We will (ſayth hee) that all maner of ſpirituall men ſhal haue this preroga-tiue, that their wyues, and their children, and their ſeruauntes, that is for to ſay, both male, and female, ſhall bee free from an homage, whiche is called Perāgariam. Here is to bee noted, that the Emperour doth not alonely admit Prieſtes matrimony, but alſo hee honoreth it with a priuilege, & a prerogatiue, the whiche hee would not haue done, if hee had iudged their matrimony vnlawfull. Wherefore men may ſee, if they will, how indifferent our forefathers hath beene vnto this holy ſtate of matrimony. And it wold not become vs euill, if we learned of them better to iudge of theſe thyngs, that God our maker hath both inſtituted and ſanctified.

Imperator Conſt. n. le. ge. Omnis Pa. Ad perangariam. Codice de Epiſ. & cle.

Now good reader haue I proued this article by Gods holy word, by the ſayinges of Doctours, by the authoritie of Councels, & by ſome certaine laives, both Emperiall, and Popiſh. Wherfore now wil I goe farther vnto the hyſtories, and proue this thing by examples, and practiſe of holy mē.

First, we haue the example of bleſſed S. Peter, the which had doubtles a wyfe, as it may bee proued by Mathew, which ſayth: Quod ſocrus Petri tene- Math. 8.

tenebatur magnis febribus. Peters wyues mother had a gret agew. Now, if Peter had a wife, as this text is clere, what thyng should forbyd our prieſts mariage? I thinke they are not boũde to more chaſtitie, then Peter was? Nor it will not helpe to ſay, that hée forſoke his wife after his calling. For the Scripture here ſpeaketh of Peters wyues mother. Why doe they not as well take hys wyues mothers name awaye, as they take away hys wife? But I haue aunſwered to this reaſon largely inough before.

S. Peter had a wife.

Actes. 11. Philip the Euangeliſt was maryed.

Alſo Philippe the Euangeliſt, had thrée daughters, the whiche hée could not haue had, if that hée had had no wyfe: for I thinke there is no good mã that will reckẽ them to bée baſtardes, and whoſes children. Neither it can helpe, to ſaye, that theſe children were borne before hys electiõ, for this is but a ſimple ſaying, and no probatiõ. And it is not inough to ſay, ſéeyng that men will haue it for ſo neceſſary an article: but men muſt alſo prowe it by open Scriptures. For els I may ſaye by as good authoritie, that theſe daughters were borne after hys election, as other mẽ ſay, how they were borne before hys election. And I haue better ſuppoſition for me out of the terte, then they haue: for they are not called Philips daughters alonely, but Philippe the Euangeliſt daughters. Wherfore they may by a good reaſon ſay, they were not Philippes daughters, as they may ſay, that their father was none Euangeliſt.

Extripertita hiſtoria. lib. 9. cap. xxxviij.

We doe read in Tripertita Hiſtoria theſe wordes: All Prieſtes in the orientall Church doth abſtayne with a frée will, & of no neceſſitie frõ wyues. For many of them, in tyme whẽ they bée byſhops, haue had of their lawful wiues children. Note how this hiſtory declareth clearely, that prieſtes in the orientall Church were not compelled to bowe chaſtitie. Secondarily ỳ hiſtory cauleth prieſtes wiues lawfull wiues. And alſo how the byſhops had children, after their conſecration. Now doth all learned men know, that the orientall Church receiueth their maners nerer of the Apoſtles then we.

Wherefore it is to bée preſuppoſed that theſe men toke their cuſtome of marryage, of the holy Apoſtels. And at the leaſt wiſe, it muſt followe, that if their prieſtes may haue wiues lawfully, that then our prieſtes may haue alſo. For God hath layde none other burthen on our Prieſtes neckes, thẽ hée had on theirs.

Moreouer we doe reade in Eccleſiaſtica Hiſtoria, that Penitus byſhop of a citie called Gnoſeos, would haue made a decrée, ỳ prieſtes ſhould haue bowed chaſtitie. But Dioniſius Byſhop of Chorinth, wrote agaynſt hym and required hym, that hée would not lay no neceſſitie of compulſed chaſtity in other mens neckes. Penitus followed his counſell. Here you may ſée, ỳ the deuell hath bëne of long tyme aboute to bring in this ſnare for prieſts but God hath reſiſted hym.

We haue alſo in the ſame hiſtorye, agaynſt thoſe men, that did deſpiſe mariage, a godly saying which is this what will they reproue the Apoſtles? Peter, and Philip had wiues, and did alſo geue their daughters to mariage. In ſo much as S. Peter did crye vnto his wyfe, when ſhée ſhould bée led vnto her paſſion, and called her by her name, and ſayde vnto her: Oh deare wyfe, remember our Lord. Heare is it cleare, that Péter had a wife. And heare is alſo againſt them that ſayth, how ỳ Peter forſoke his wife, which is here prowed a falſe lye.

Li. iij. ca. xxx.

A playne place to prowe that Peter had a wife.

Moreouer, Spiridon the byſhop of Cipres, hauing the gift of prophecye, had alſo a daughter, whoſe name was called Irenem, which after her faithfull ſeruice dyed a bergin. Heare is it cleare, ỳ this holy man had a daughter, which hée could not haue, if hée had had no wife. Farthermore we do reade, that Policrates, byſhop of Epheſum, doth ſhew, that ſeuen of his parentes lynially were biſhops in order before hym, and hée hym ſelfe was the eyght. Now coulde not this bée, that his fathers from the ſeuenth degrée could haue bëene byſhops, if biſhops had had no wiues, for the text is cleare of his fathers, and not of his kynſmen. We thinke this is a cleare example, & ſufficient to proue as great a matter as this is if men would bée content, and ſatiſfied with reaſon.

¶ Ex damaſo Papa, ad Hieronimum, ex Platina, & Nauclero.

BVt let vs goe farther, and ſée, how many Popes haue béene prieſtes children, that this matter may bée opened by them, and that Popes them ſelues may be witnes of this doctrine

Siluerius Papa. Fyrſt is there Siluerius, pope, the which had a byſhop to his father called Ormiſda. This Siluerius lyued about the yeare of our Lord. 524.

Felix.iij. Pope Felix, the third of that name was ỳ ſonne of Felix, prieſt of Rome. This man lyued about the yeare of our Lord. 474.

Deus dedit. Pope Deus dedit, was the ſonne of Stephane the ſubdeacon, which lyued about the yeare of our Lord. 623.

Theodorus.i Pope Theodorus, was the ſonne of Theodore byſhop of Hieruſalem. This man lyued about the yeare of our Lord. 634.

Hadrianus. ij. Hadrian, ỳ ſecõd was the ſonne of Thalare, the byſhop. This man lyued about the yeare of our Lord. 873.

Iohãnes.x. Pope Iohn, the x. of that name, was ỳ ſonne of prieſt Leo, This man lyued aboute the yeare of our Lorde. 984.

Agapitus. i. Pope Agapitus, the fyrſt of that name, had a prieſt to his father called Gordianus, hé lyued about the year of our Lord. 534.

Siluerius. Pope Siluerius, had a father called Siluerius. a byſhop of Rome, This man liued about the yeare of our lord 544.

Bonifacius. i. Pope Boniface, the fyrſt of ỳ name was ſonne to Iucundus prieſt.

Oſius. Pope Oſius, was ỳ ſonne of Stephan the ſubdeacon.

Gelaſius.i. Pope Gelaſius, the fyrſt, had a byſhop to his father called Valenus anno Domini. 484.

Iohannes.x. Iohn the .x. pope of ỳ name, was ſonne to pope Surgius, about the yere of our Lord. 924.

Diſt. Ni. ca. Oſius. All theſe, & a great many more (as the Popes lawe teſtifieth) were the children of ſubdeacons, deacons, and Prieſtes, and haue borne rule in the Church of Rome. Wherefore I merualye very ſore, that men doe recken it ſo new learning, that prieſts ſhould haue wiues, ſéeing, that it ſtandeth with Gods holy word, with the saying of the olde doctours, with the determination of counſels, with ỳ Emperours lawe, and alſo with ỳ Popes olde decrées.

Moreouer, Chriſtes holy Apoſtels, and many other holy men, ſince their dayes, haue liued in the holy eſtate of matrymony. Finally, there hath been many holy men, and alſo holy women borne in the wedlocke of Prieſtes.

By what reaſõ now can, or will mẽ damne all theſe thynges, that bée of ſo great auctoritie? If men wyll heare neyther God nor mã, nor yet no good reaſon, what néede men then ſo much to ſpeake of learning? ſéeing that they wyll heare nothyng, but that they alonely iudge good? Truely this is a great high minde of mẽ, thus wrongfully to condemne other men for heretikes, hauyng ſo good learnyng for them: and yet they themſelues are grounded onely of their owne ſenſuall mynde, hauyng no learnyng, nor reaſon for them. But I wyll put this matter to Gods iudgement. And let not men doubt (if they bélæue there is a God) but that God wyll bée a reuenger of ſuch wrongfull violence, as men doe vſe in thys caſe, both agaynſt hym and agaynſt all his bleſſed company of Saintes. But yet for to doe men pleaſure, and that they myght bée perſwaded if it were poſſible, I will declare vnto them, how ỳ wée doe finde old monuments, teſtifyng clearely, that prieſts were in peaceable poſſeſſiõ of matrimony, & their childrẽ gottẽ in that ſame matrimony were admitted to ſpiritual benefices.

In the tyme of Pope Alexander ỳ thirde, there was a controuerſie for the patronage of a benefice betwéene the prior of Plimptõ in Deuenſhyre, and one Iohn de Valletorda. Now were there deputed iudges, Rychard Archbyſhop of Caunterbury, & Roger Byſhop of Wyncheſter, béefore whome the prior of Plympton prouued his patronage, by the reaſon that bée

hée was in possession, and had géuen it vnto diuers persons. Fyrst (hée sayth) there was a Priest of Plympto̅ called Alpheghe, which had by ỳ gyft of the Prior of Plympton, the benefice of Sutton, which is now called Plymmouth. This Alpheghe had a sonne cauled Sadda, which had also the benefice after hys father. And after Sadda, was there an other priest cauled Alnodus, which had the benefice likewyse. This Alnodus had a sonne called Robert Dunpriest, which after the disease of his father Alnode had also the same benefice. And after thys Robert Dunpriest, William Bacon hys sonne, enioyed the benefice lykewyse. Here men may sée, that it is neyther so new learnyng, nor yet so long agoe since priestes had lawful wyues.

Croni. Fabi.

Moreouer, I reade in our owne Chronicles, that in the tyme of kyng Henry the iij. which raygned ỳ yeare of our Lord 1101. priestes myght lawfully marry wiues, in so much ỳ Anselme than Archbyshop of Caunterbury in a Seane that hée helde at London, did make a decrée, ỳ priestes should forsake their wiues, the which was both agaynst Gods lawe, and mans. For the texte of our Mayster Christ is cleare. Quos deus coniunxit, Homo non seperet. Marke these two wordes, Deus, and Homo. And howe much the one passeth the other.

Farthermore, the Pope hymselfe hath not greatly regarded Priestes chastitie, if hée myght get any money for dispensations, in the which thyng hée coulde not haue dispēsed, if it had béene of Gods lawe. And if it bée but but mans lawe, what charitie is in the Pope to compell men so sore to kéepe it, séeyng that it is so great daũger vnto priestes, and that so many soules béene lost thorough it? Yea, what tyranny is in hym, thus cruelly to kill men for breakyng alonely of hys commaundement, the which is not in their power to kéepe? To our purpose, the Pope hath often tymes dispensed both wyth Priestes, and religious men for their vowe, & hath géeuen them licence to marry.

It is not vnknowen to many men that there was an Abbot of Reading, whom men for his perfecte lyuinge, called Abbot Sancte. This man héeyng in daunger of a certayne disease, by the reason hée had no wyfe, sente vnto the pope, desiring hym to dispense wyth hym for hys vowe. and ỳ pope dispensed wyth hym, and gaue hym licence to marry a wyfe, but vnder a condition that it shoulde bée secretly done, and not In facie ecclesie. By this men may sée, that the Pope himself holdeth not so much of priests chastitie: for then hée woulde not regarde more money, then it. And if the pope may dispence wyth thys Abbot for auoyding of a disease corporall: how much more ought hée now to dispense with priestes: séeing there bée so many soules in daunger? Yea, and also the order of priesthode is sore defamed and sclaundered, by the reasō that priestes hath no wyues.

Abbot Sancte of Reading.

Priestes hath maryed after their priesthode.

Moreouer, wée dot reade, that pope Celestine the third, did dispense with a Nunne, whose name was cauled Constatia, kyng Rogers daughter of Cecyll, and gaue her licence to marry with Henry ỳ Emperour, the firt of that name. This was about ỳ yeare of our Lorde. 1186. So that mē may perceaue how the pope doth not greatly regarde the bowe of hys spiritualtie, if any thing may bée gotten, to pay for a dispensation. And it wil not helpe to say, that the pope did dispense with this woman for a common wealth. For the storie maketh mention that the pope dispēsed with him vnder a cōdition, that hée should paye hym a yearely pencion for the kyngdome of Cecyll, and should recouer it of his owne charges, out of the handes of Tancredus, which was then in possession of it. And bécause that hée myght haue the better title to the kyngdome, hée gaue hym the onely daughter of Cecill. So that ỳ pope did it not for a common wealth, but for his owne lucre. But now graunt that it were for a common wealth, therefore, first it was not Gods commaundemēt, that priestes should liue sole. For gods word géeueth no place

Nauclerus generatione. xl.

Cranfius, Canutus was seuen yeares a Monke Cluniacensis, and yet the Pope dispenseth with hym to marry a wife.

to no common wealth. And if ỹ pope did then diſpence for a cõmõ wealth: why doth hée not now diſpence for auoyding of fornication, in ſo many innumerable prieſtes? Doth not mẽ recken it for a common wealth to expell fornication, & all occaſions thereunto? But now there is no commõ wealth to bée regarded, bécauſe there is no ſhyning golde offered. But at ỹ leaſt wayes mée thinketh that prieſtes which marry, bée very farre from hereſie: for it is neyther agaynſt Gods lawe, nor yet agaynſt the common wealth.

Mariage of Prieſtes is neither agaynſt Gods lawe nor mans lawe.

Here were many examples to bée brought in, how the pope hath diſpenſed both with Monkes, Friers, and Nunnes, the which I will paſſe ouer, and will ſhewe as neare as I can out out of Chronicles, how lõg it is, that the pope hath gone about to bryng in the vow of chaſtitie. Doctour Eckius doth ſay, that Calixtus primus dyd firſte make the ſtatute, that prieſtes ſhould vow chaſtitie, but that is falſe. For all Chronicles beareth witneſſe, that prieſtes had wyues in the Counſell, of Nicene, the which was almoſt an hundreth yeares after Calixtus dayes. Wherfore it can not bée ſuppoſed, that ỹ ſtatute was made béfore the Counſell of Nicene. But authentically hyſtories doth make mention, that Nicholas the firſt, whiche was Byſhop of Rome, the yeare of our Lord 860. did goe about this thyng: but hée could not bryng it to paſſe by the reaſon of an holy man S. Huldericke, Epiſcopus Auguſtenſis, the which wrote a very ſharpe Epiſtle agaynſt hym, reprouyng hym ſore, bycauſe hée would compell prieſtes to vow chaſtitie. Hys wordes bée theſe. Thou haſt not ſwarued a litle from diſcretion, ỹ where as thou oughteſt to haue counſayled prieſtes to chaſtitie, thou haſt with a Lordly violence compelled them to it. Is not this after the iudgement of all wiſe men, a great violence, whẽ that thou agaynſt the inſtitution of the Goſpell, and agaynſt ỹ decrée of the holy ghoſt, wilt compell men to obſerue thy priuate decrée? &c. Hée reciteth alſo agaynſt ỹ Byſhop of Rome all thoſe ſame ſcriptures, that I haue brought herein my booke of this matter, and alſo certain of the counſels, to that purpoſe, that I haue brought them. So that men ought not to thinke, that I am the firſt, that thus hath vnderſtande the Scriptures, nor yet the firſt, that hath ſpoken agaynſt prieſtes vowes.

Nicholaus.1

Compelled chaſtitie is againſt the inſtitution of the Goſpell.

Note alſo how this holy mã ſayth, that prieſts ought to bée admonyſhed, & counſelled to chaſtitie, but not compelled. For that (ſayth hée) is a great violence, and agaynſt Chriſtes holy Goſpell, and ỹ bleſſed ſpirite of God. These bée as vehement wordes as I haue ſpoké. For out of theſe wordes men may gather, that it is not farre from hereſie to compell prieſtes to vow chaſtitie. This holy man proceédeth farther with ỹ Biſhop of Rome, and telleth a fact of S. Gregory, the which went about to compell prieſtes to vow chaſtitie.

To compel Prieſtes to vowe chaſtitie that hath not ỹ gifte, is halfe brother vnto hereſie.

Vpon a day S. Gregory ſent vnto hys ponds for fiſh, and in the nettes that they fiſhed withall, were brought vp aboue fiue thouſand young childrens heades, the which thyng, when S. Gregory ſaw, ſtroke hym ſore to the hart, & hée was very heauy of that ſight, and perceyued anone, that hys decrée, that hée made for prieſtes chaſtitie, was the occaſion of this great murther: In that that prieſtes could not lyue ſole, nor yet they durſt not auow theyr children, for feare of the decrée. And ſo for ſauegarde of theyr honeſty, they fell into a fearefull, and abhominable ſinne, to kyll theyr own children. And for this cauſe S. Gregory (ſayth this holy Byſhop) dyd reuoke hys decrée agayn, and did greatly alow the ſaying of the Apoſtle: It is better to marry then to burne. Adding vnto it of hys owne: It is better to marry then to geue occaſion to murther.

A lamentable and horrible ſight.

O Lord God that our Byſhoppes woulde nowe bee ſo charitable.

Here note good reader, what a terrible, and a fearefully example this is? Is not this a piteous caſe, that ſo many thouſandes innocẽtes bée thus ſlayne? When ſhall the chaſtitie keépyng of all the prieſtes in the worlde bée an occaſion of ſo great goodnes, as the law of chastitie hath bene hereof mischiefe? Alas is there no pyty in mẽs hartes? that are nothyng moued, whẽ they read such horrible factes in holy mens writyngs? Or doe men thinke, that there is no mischief now in our dayes done, by the reason that priests are compelled to chastitie? If men thinke that there come any mischiefe by the reason of it, how can men reckon to auoyde Gods vengeaũce, that will so stifly and strongly mayntayne the same?

I haue bene informed of credible persons, the whiche if nede were, I could yet bryng forth, that in a place of Religion within this fewe yeares, there was a religious man, that dyd get a woman with child, the whiche woman was brought a bed in the brothers chamber of a fayre sonne. This child was Christened in the same chãber, and as sone as it was christened, he brake the necke of it, and buryed it in the night, in the Churcheyarde. This is the trueth, I cã prowue it. Is not this a terrible thyng? doth not nature abhorre this? And yet men had rather here this abhominablenes, thẽ for to release a litle of theyr own will. But oh Lorde God, howe streightly shalt thou punish this?

A brute of chastitie.

A horrible tale.

It is not yet out of ỹ minde of mã, sinnes ỹ an honest man lost his daughter, by the reason that a priest defiled her, the which (because he would not be dishonested) kylled the mayde priuely, and afterwarde cast her into a well. If men will not be moued at this? and such lyke other factes? I can not tell what will moue them?

An other crabbe of ỹ same tree.

I could recite a great many of abhominable, and detestable factes, if I were not more ashamed to tell them, then priestes hath bene to doe them. Neither will I recite how shamefully that mens daughters, mens wyues, mens seruauntes hath bene, and are dayly cast awaye, by the reason that priestes are so hoate of courage, and can not kepe theyr chastitie. Would it not abhorre a Christen mã, to heare tell of the innumerable baudes, that are made by ỹ reason ỹ priests cã not lyue chaste? What a petious case is it to se so many young men cast away? the whiche doth se dayly their maisters vncleane liuyng? Here were many thynges to be recited, but honestly compelleth me to passe thẽ ouer. But I thinke there is no good man, but he will thinke as much in hym selfe, as I either would say, or can say.

I will not speake of the litle petty boyes that folow Priestes in long doublets, and short hosen.

I could tell, if I would, the occasion why ỹ those Cardinals of Rome, which kepeth whores, be noted of the common people to be of the best sort of Cardinals? But I will passe it ouer. Neuertheles it greueth me a lyttell, that I may not somewhat opẽ my hart. But this I promyse them, if any of these protectours of this filthy chastitie doth take in hand to defende it agaynst me, I will not be ashamed to write, that they haue not bene ashamed to doe. For I will not kepe secrete how certayne bysshops of England, and also of other countries doth let whores to ferme vnto priests. And all because they will not suffer them to marry. Yet heare will I tell you one prety tale.

The chastitie of the court of Rome, frõ the whiche God defend vs all.

There is a bysshop lyuyng at this same day in Germanye, which had nede of a great some of money (I could tell his name if I would) this bysshop called vnto hym a gentilman, a great frend of his, which smelled a littell of the new learning, so called. Vnto this mã he made his complaint how that he must nedes make shifte shortly for a great somme of money, desyring hym both to helpe hym, and also of his counsell. This man sayde vnto hym, if he would folow his coũsell, he would shortly helpe him. The bysshop was very glad, and graũted to folowe his counsell. Then sayde the gentylman.

M. spare me a little, to speake but one word more.

My Lord, your Lordship shall geue a strayte commaundement, that all your Priestes within your diocese, shall put away their whores within this two monethes, vnder the payne of heresye at the least. After this, your Lordship shall send .y. of your coũsellers, that be knowen to be greately in your fauour, to handle with the priestes, in their owne names, for to take vp thys matter, betwéne your Lordeſhip and them. But vnder this condition, that the prieſts ſhall graũt vnto them a certayne ſome of money and they ſhall promiſe the prieſtes, ỹ they will bring it to paſſe, that your Lordſhip (notwithſtãding your ſtrait commaundement) ſhall bée contented to ſuffer them to liue, as they haue done in tymes paſt, and after the olde cuſtome of the Church. The byſhop was contented with this counſell, & incontinent gaue out ỹ commaundement, and afterward ſent out two of his beſt frendes, priuelye to treate with the Prieſtes in their names, but not in his. For hée woulde not bée knowen of it, becauſe hée had vowed chaſtitie.

A pretty practiſe to finde out a naughty couetous Byſhop.

But what thinke you, that theſe two mẽ did gather in this one byſhoprricke, within ỹ ſpace of ỹ. moneths? Verely .rr. M. guyldens, the which money the byſhop receiued very deuoutly, and thought it not againſt the vowe of chaſtitie. What ſhall men ſay to theſe mens conſcience? that will not ſticke to burne a poore prieſt, that maryeth a wife? but yet, they will receyue .rr. M. guyldens to maynteyne open whoredome. O lord God thou knoweſt this, & yet doubtles thou ſuffereſt it. And all bécauſe they ſhould haue ſpace, and reſpite to amende, vnto which, God geue them grace. Amen.

But agayne to our purpoſe: men may perceaue that this holy byſhop Hulderyke was agaynſt the pope, & dyd alſo alowe my doctrine, and declare that S. Gregorie did repẽt him of ỹ ſtatute ỹ hé had made for prieſts chaſtitie. Wherefore I conclude here yet agayne, that Gods holy worde, olde doctours, holy counſelles, the Emperours lawe, olde decrées of the Church, the practice of the holy Apoſtels, the lyuing of holy men, Gods lawe, and mans lawe, nature & reaſon, doth alowe this article of myne. Wherefore I truſt no good nor reaſonable man, will withſtand mé, in this caſe.

Diſt. 31. ca. Ante trie. nium.

The worlde will lye.

There runneth a greate voyce of mée, that I haue maried a wife, and for that cauſe men doth recken that I will ſomething proue my witte, and alſo ſtretch my learning, to maynteyn that prieſtes myght haue wyues. But the very trueth is bẽfore God, & mã that I haue no wife, nor neuer went about to marry: I thanke God of his grace. And of this I haue as noble princes as bé in Germany, to beare mée witneſſe, and alſo many other worſhipfull, and honeſt men, ỹ doth knowe mée, and my conuerſation. I haue alſo the ryght worſhipfull man Doctour Lée, which was the kinges Embaſſadour with vs, and all his ſeruauntes to teſtifye for mée, which bé honeſt men, and ſufficient in a greater cauſe then this is.

I haue merueyle why men are aſhamed to come & lay this thing to my charge, now that I am here?

Finally, here is alſo the byſhop of our citie, with whom I doe dwell, & am moſt conuerſant with. Yeare is alſo the Embaſſadours of Lubycke, which doth alſo know mée, and my conuerſation. And I doubt not, but all they will teſtifye for mée, as farre as any lawe ſhall require. Yea I dare boldly ſay, ỹ myne aduerſaries haue not ſo good teſtemony, that they kéepe theyr vowe of chaſtitie, as I haue, that I am not maryed. But all is done to bringe mée in defamation. Let God prouide. Neuertheles, what if I had a wyfe? is ỹ ſo great a crime? What can men make of it? Hath not many noble Princes, and good men wyues? Will mẽ make more articles of ſaluation for mée, then for princes or for other Chriſten men? what haue I deſerued thus to bé taken? Men will haue to doe with mée, but I promiſe them, they ſhall get no good by it, if I may come to my aunſwere, I wil bé able alwayes to defend a wyfe (if I weare diſpoſed to marry) agaynſt all thoſe that kéepe whores. Let them begin when they will. Notwithſtandyng, I doe not abſtayne from a wife bécauſe that is euell, and vncleane to marry: but I haue other lawfull conſiderations. Let no man doubt, but this is of trueth, if I had a wyfe, I would not haue medled with this article, becauſe that men myght haue ſuſpected mée, that then I would haue defended this article, for the maintenaunce naunce of my facte. But now on the other syde, that men should not think how I despised mariage, or thought it vnlawfull for a Priest to marry, in as much as I my selfe doe not marry. Therfore haue I take this labour on mée, to wryte my meaning, & so much the more boldely, bécause that men haue no cause to suspect mée, that I speake to defende myne owne cause, but all onely to set out the veretye, so God helpe mée. Amen.

But now will I goe to the Popes lawe, and sée what tyme that thys thyng begunne to take strength. It had béene often times attempted, but it was alwayes repelled by one good man or other, tyll after the dayes of Saint Gregory.

Pope Siricius made a statute, that priestes should haue no wyues, but it toke none effect. Dist. 82. ca. Plurimos.

After hym came Pelagius the seconde, and hée commaunded, that those priestes that had maryed wiues should abstayne from their wyues.

Next after hym came S. Gregory, and hée thought that statute of Pelagius to sore, that men should abstaine from their wyues, which had neither vowed chastitie, nor yet had vsed thé selues to continencie. And therefore hée decréed, that the Byshops should consecrate no Subdeacon, except hée woulde first vowe chastitie. Thys is openly in the popes lawe. Here bégan the thyng somthyng to springe, and to take effecte, but yet it was not fully establyshed. For afterwarde S. Gregory hymselfe repented hym, as S. Hulderike beareth witnesse, by ỳ reason of the great murther thath hée sawe come thereof. Wherefore it remayned so styll a great whyle, vnto the commyng of Leo the iv: and hée sayth, that priestes may kéepe theyr wyues, but they may not company wyth them, for the Apostles (sayth hée) dyd forsake the company of their wyues: alonely they prouided them meate and clothe. Dist. 31. ca. Ante trienium. Dist. 31. ca. Omnino.

After hym commeth Innocentius the second, the which (not regarding Gods ordinaunce) ioyneth priestes that maryeth, and priestes that kéepeth whores, all vnder one damnation. Dist. 28. ca. Determinamus.

But all these yet coulde not bryng thys matter to passe as they woulde. For in many places (for all this) all priestes had wyues: tyll the tyme of Gregory the seuéth, which was cauled Hildebrande, a man of euill lyuyng, as the chronicles testifieth, and also a great nygromancer, and very familyar with the deuill. And as chronicles sayth, a man that had poysoned 4. or 5. popes before, that hée myght come the sooner to it. Thys man (I say) in the yeare of our Lord. 1074. began to attempte thys matter very sharpely in Germany, where priests were then quietly suffered to haue wyues. Thys man sent his commaundement vnto Otto byshop of Constantinople, commaundyng to forbydde priestes that had not yet maryed, for to marry. And those ỳ had maried, to bée separated from their wyues. But byshop Otto perceiuyng thys thyng for to bée deuillishe, woulde not exercise hys commaundement. Wherefore Pope Gregory cursed him, and assoiled all men from his obedience, and cited hym vnto Rome, where hée had gathered a counsell, in the which hée had made a decrée, that no Priest shoulde afterwarde marry. And they that had maryed béefore, shoulde forsake their wyues. Moreouer, it was there decréed, that no man should receaue holy orders afterwarde, except hée first sweare to lyue sole.

Here beginneth priests chastitie to get the ouer hand. For this was a captaine for the nonce.

Per illam legem. Quos deus cõiunxit homo nõ seperet. Et nemo dimittat vxorẽ, excepta fornicationis causa.

These decrées were prouulgated ouer all Italy. But the priestes, and Byshops of Fraunce resisted this decrée, and sayde, that this counsel was contrary to Gods worde, and toke from Priestes, that God and nature had graunted them. And therefore ỳ Pope (sayde they) was an hereticke, and an auctour of damnable doctrine, and that this decrée came not of God, but of the deuil, and alleaged for them the saying of our mayster Christ Non omnes capiunt verbum hoc. And also S. Paule, De virginitate preceptum non habeo. They saide also, that the pope woulde compell them to lyue lyke Angels, and how hée dyd opẽ a wyndow vnto fornicatiō & vncleannes. Wherfore they made hym aunſwere, that they had rather to forſake their benefices, then their wyues. And if hē woulde deſpiſe maryed prieſtes, then ſhoulde hē goe & prouide him Angels to ſerue his cures. But the pope was nothing moued at all with their ſcriptures or reaſons: but ſtill wrote to ỳ byſhops ſtraite letters, cōmaundyng them, and threatning them vnder the payne of curſing, and priuating them of their byſhopprickes, ỳ they ſhould bring this thing to paſſe. So that at ỳ laſt, the moſt parte of the Byſhoppes conſented to him for feare, and laboured all ỳ they coulde to perſwade the prieſtes to forſake their wiues, and to bowe chaſtitie. But it was long ere the prieſts were perſwaded: yea ſome of them woulde neuer agrē thereunto as long as they liued.

This mater hath alwayes beene the Popes maner of teachyng, other doctrine had hee neuer.

This Pope wrote alſo to the Archbyſhop of Mentz, cōmaunding him as primate of all Germany, to compell maried prieſts to forſake their wiues, and to cauſe all other to bowe chaſtitie. This byſhop called a conuocatiō, in the which hē declared the Popes pleaſure. But ỳ prieſtes reſiſted meruaylous earneſtly, alleaging for them Scriptures, reaſons, and counſels. So farre they proceēded togither, that there had lyke to haue bēne a greate tumulte. Then the byſhop beynge a wyſe man, conſideryng how ſtiffe, & earneſt the prieſtes were, deſired thē to take halfe a yeares deliberation, exhorting them to agrē vnto that thing wyth a good will, vnto the which, hē muſt els compell them, by the Popes auctoritie. After the halfe yeare was come out, the byſhops called a conuocation at the Uniuerſitie of Erfoorde, and there required an aunſwere of the prieſtes, but they were ſtiffer thē before, and ſayde, how they had rather dye then forſake their wyues cōtrary to Gods law. On the other ſide the archbiſhop was earneſt in ſetting forth the popes commaundement.

A tumulte for prieſtes wyues.

The deuill ſleepeth not nor geueth not gladly place to Chriſt.

Then the prieſtes required to take their counſel, and ſo when they were departed out of the conuocation they agreed (ſeeyng that neither ſcriptures, reaſons, counſels, nor yet interceſſiō could helpe as they ſayd) that they would go in agayne, and kyll the Byſhop, that all other Byſhops after hym ſhould bee well aduiſed, ere they ſet forth that thyng any more. But the Byſhop had ſome frendes amōgſt them, the which reuelated this thyng vnto hym, and bee ſtreight wayes ſent certaine of his frendes vnto ỳ prieſts, requiryng them to come in agayne peaceably, and hee would promiſe thē ſo to entreate the pope, that hee ſhould bee contēt to let it paſſe, and that they ſhould keepe their cures ſtill as they had done before. Notwithſtandyng the Archbyſhop could not chaūge the popes mynde in any wiſe. For the yeare after the pope ſent downe hys Legate Curienſen Epiſcopum, and ioyned the Byſhop of Mentz with hym, commaundyng them to gather a conuocation in Mentz, and there to propounde his decree agayne. But yet ỳ prieſtes would in no wiſe agree vnto them, but layde all Scriptures, and reaſōs for them, that they could. And when all theſe thynges would not helpe, then they fell to entreatie, and interceſſion. But the popes Legates were ſo ſtiffe, that there was no remedy, but tyranny, and violence to bee vſed.

What ſhall men doe agaynſt violence, and tyranny.

But as ſoone as the prieſtes ſawe that, they gathered them togither, & made a tumulte, that the popes Legates ſcaped very hardely with their lyues out of the conuocation houſe, & ſo was the conuocation broken. And the Archbyſhop of Mentz would neuer medle more in it, but committed the matter to the popes diſcretion. So that the pope was fayne to tary a conuenient tyme, till hee had gotten certaine Byſhops, and certaine prieſtes of his partie. The determinate tyme doth not ỳ ſtories declare, but alonely we ſee that nowe hee is preuayled in miſchief.

Wherfore I will now procēde after my promiſe, and recite their Scriptures and reaſōs, wherby they proue Celibatum Sacerdotū. Their firſt ſcripture is. Bee ye holy, for I am holy, ſayth the Lord. Upon this Scripture disputeth ỳ pope on this maner. The prieſtes of the old law did not company with their wyues, in the tyme of their miniſtration. Wherefore the prieſtes of the new law, whiche doth alwayes miniſter, muſt much more alwayes kepe their chaſtitie. Firſt, the pope doth alleage this Scripture wrong. For it is not Moyſes mynde, where this text is ſpoken, to compell men from their wiues, or not to marry (the which thyng the pope hath taken vpõ hym to prowe.) For Moyſes ſpeaketh there to the whole houſhold of Iſraell.

Solutions to their reaſons.

The popes arguments for ỳ maintenaunce of their conſtrained chaſtitie.

Now was not the houſe of Iſraell cõpelled by the text, either to forſake their wyues, or els to vowe chaſtitie. Wherfore this text can not make for the popes purpoſe. Farthermore, the text ſayth no more, but that we ſhould bee cleane, and holy. Now is not matrimony, either vncleane, or vnholy: for it is a thyng inſtituted, and ſanctified of God. And the pureſt creatures that euer God made dyd vſe it, & was not therby defiled. Ergo, this text maketh not for the popes purpoſe. And where as the pope ſaith, that ỳ prieſts of the newe law ſhall bee cleane, we graũt the ſame, and deſire God with all our hartes, that they may bee ſo. And becauſe that we would, that it ſhould bee ſo: therfore doe we exhorte them to vſe Gods holy ordinaunce, that they may bee holy. For all creatures of God bee good. And vnto them that bee cleane, nothyng is vncleane. Now is matrimony gods ordinaũce. Wherefore it muſt nedes bee cleane of it ſelfe, and may bee lawfully vſed with thankes.

Adam. Eua.

The Leuiticall cleannes lyeth to much in the Popes head.

1. Tim. 4.

Farthermore, what argument is this of the popes? The prieſtes of the old law, did abſtayne frõ their wiues, the tyme of their miniſtration, Ergo, our prieſtes muſt alwayes abſtayne? Now foloweth this, alwayes, out of the old prieſtes, ſometyme? But me thinketh the pope ſhould rather take an occaſiõ of this place, to bynde hys prieſtes to mariage, if they can not lyue ſole. For the prieſtes of the law, by Gods cõmaundement had wiues: Ergo, God would not recken mariage vncleane, and vnpure. And if it were cleane for them, it muſt much more bee cleaner vnto our prieſtes. For all thynges bee cleaner vnto vs, then to them. Wherfore me thinketh ỳ pope ſhould rather diſpute on this maner. The prieſtes of ỳ old law had wyues, and were not therby defiled, Ergo, my prieſtes muſt much rather haue wyues, for they ſhall bee leſſe defiled.

Alwayes. Somtime.

Why hath not our Prieſtes ſometyme wyues, as the olde Prieſtes had.

Moreouer, it foloweth not. The prieſtes of the old law abſtained from their wyues, in the tyme of their miniſtration, Ergo, our prieſtes muſt abſtayne alwayes, becauſe they bee alwayes in miniſtration. For many thinges were vncleane to the prieſtes of the old law, that bee not vncleane vnto our prieſtes. Alſo vnto them it was a commaundement ſo to doe, or els it had beene lawfull for them to tary by their wyues. But our prieſtes hath no commaundement. Ergo, they are not bounde to abſtayne. Finally, this text of Scripture dyd not bynde the Apoſtles, nor all the holy fathers after the Apoſtles till Innocentes tyme to abſtayne from theyr wyues. Ergo, it byndeth not our prieſtes now. For gods word was in as full ſtrẽgth before Innocentes dayes, as after.

The ſecond Scripture is this. Abſtayne for a tyme that ye may the better geue attendaunce to prayer. On this terte diſputeth the pope on this maner. Paule commaundeth (ſayth hee) laye men to abſtayne for a tyme. Ergo, much more are prieſtes bounde to abſtayne alwayes. The whiche muſt alwayes pray, and bee in a continuall ſacrifyng. This argument is alſo falſe, and not concluded after Saint Paules mynde. For S. Paule woulde not by this text forbydde mariage, by the reaſon of prayer. For howe could hee ſaye then, Abſtayne for a tyme? Unmaryed men muſt abſtayne alwayes, and not for a tyme onely. Nor it is no commaundement vnto lay men (as the pope ſayth) to abſtayne. For S. Paule will, ỳ they ſhall not abſtayne, except that they be both agreed. Yea and alſo in a caſe, ỳ is, where their abſtaynyng ſhould bee an occaſyon of more prayer. But if their abſtayning may bée the occaſion of vncleanenes: Or els, if the one party will abſtayne, and the other can not: Then will bleſſed S. Paule that neyther of them ſhall defraude the other. For they are more bounde in thys caſe to vſe them ſelues in the office of matrimonye, then pro illo loco, & tempore to pray. For ý text is clere Vxori vir debitum reddat. Let men marke my saying well. For though we bée bound to pray by the Goſpell, yet I thynke that the cercumſtance of tyme, and place, is of mans lawe, & reddere debitum, is in this caſe of the Goſpell Wherefore the other muſt geue place. Take my wordes charitably, and after learning But yet graũt it a commaundement. How can it followe there out, that prieſtes ſhall neuer marry? becauſe that lay men are bound (as the pope ſayth) to abſtaine for a tyme? Why doth not the pope rather bynde his prieſtes in tyme, and place requiſite to matrimony, for auoyding of fornication, as S. Paule doth? All the world knoweth, ý prieſts doth not alwayes pray. Wherefore then doth not the pope graunt them that ſame lybertie, ý S. Paule doth. For he will (leſt ý deuyll ſhould tẽpt them by incontenency) ý they ſhould returne againe after their prayer to ý office of matrimony.

The popes doctine is repugnaunt to the doctrine of S. Paule.

O Lorde God, how would men crye out agaynſt mée, if I ſhould thus teare, and wringe ſcriptures? But this popet may doe what hée lyſta: no all that hée doth, men doe recken to bée articles of our fayth There is not a ſtronger place in all ſcripture for matrimony, then this is. In ſo much that all learned men, that euer ſpake of this matter, hath brought this ſame chapter of S. Paule for them, & yet ý deuill in the Pope can turne this topſe turuy. And that ý maketh agaynſt him, muſt nédes make for hym, or els hée will wring him tyll hée breake his necke. What learning can proue this, that prieſts may not marry? bécauſe they are boũde to pray? & to doe ſacrifyce? Doth mariage defyle their prayers, or can it cõtaminate their ſacrifyces? then the holy patriarches, & Prophetes, haue no cleane ſacrifyces. Yea Chriſtes Apoſtles had vncleane ſacrifices. But here is a wonderfull inuyenge of the deuyll. For ſometime matrymony ſhall bée an holy, and a bleſſed ſacramẽt, and ſhal gœue grace: and an other while it ſhall bée againſt God, and all his ſacrifices, and a defyler of Gods mynyſters, & of all their prayers.

The Pope is a tearer and wreſter of Scriptures.

The Pope maketh a hotchpot of mariage.

Wherefore I conclude, that this texte of S. Paule, Abſtaine for a tyme that you may the more diligẽtly pray, maketh nothing for the Pope. For if wée ſhould bée boũde (as ý pope ſaith) not to marry, by the reaſon that we ought to pray, then might no lay man marry a wife. For laye men are as much bounde by the Goſpell to prayer, as prieſtes bée. There is no tyme, that the Goſpell cõmaundeth a prieſt to pray in, nor yet no prayer, that is commaunded to prieſtes by ý goſpell, but lay men are bonnd to the ſame. Wherefore if the pope will conclude that prieſtes ſhall haue no wiues, becauſe they are bound to pray. By the ſame reaſon will I proue, ý no chriſtẽ man may haue a wife. For it will not help to ſay, that prieſtes are more bound to pray, then lay men, & therefore they haue no wyues. For whether that they be bounde leſſe or more that maketh no matter to ý argumẽt. For both the parties are bounde to prayer. Therefore, after the popes doctrine, neyther of them both may marry. But whether the one be more bounde then the other, it maketh no matter to mœ, for they are both bounde: therfore they muſt both abſtayne. I wouide deſyre all Papiſtes, to let this reaſon of myne ſtande ſtill vnaſkoyled.

Lay men are bounde to prayer, as well as Prieſtes.

An other reaſon their is of Pope Leo the. ix. that bringeth this text of S. Paule: Haue not we power to leade aboute with vs a wyfe, as the brother of our Lord, and Cephas? Out of this texte diſputeth the pope thus. S. Paule ſayth not, we haue power amplectendi mulierẽ, to embrace a woman. But circunducendi, that is to leade her with vs, that ſhée may bée ſuſtayned (as the Pope ſayth) of her husband husband? But there may bée no company of maryage betwéne them. Euery Chriſtē man may ſée what a ſklēder argument this is of the pope. S. Paule ſayth not, amplectēdi ſed cercūducendi. Ergo, non licet ſacerdotibus habere vxores? This can no man denye, but S. Paules mening is there, how that prieſts may lawfully haue wiues as the crample of Peter doth there prowe. Wherefore I thinke no man ſo madde to iudge, that the Apoſtels dyd myrry wyues, alonely to lead thē about with them (as the Pope ſayth) and to put other men to coſtes and & charges? For this office they might haue had of all other women, and needed not to marry, for leading about of women with them. Wherefore it muſt nédes follow, ſéeing S. Paules meaning is, that prieſtes may lawfully haue wiues that they may alſo lawfully vſe the office of matrimony. For his owne doctrine is, that the man hath no power ouer his owne body, but his wife. Wherefore it muſt followe, that the pope maketh an euell ſuppoſition, when hée ſuppoſeth, that the Apoſtles hadde wiues, and did onely but cary th[illegible]bout, to geue them meate, and [illegible]ge, and not to company with them.

Diſt. xxxi. ca. Omnino. 1. Cor. 9. Nunquid nõ habemus poteſtatẽ mulierem ſororem circunducẽdi. &c. 1 Cor, 9.

1.Cor.7.

Alſo marke of this argument, how the pope graunteth, that the apoſtles had wyues? Wherefore he muſt now prowe, that the Apoſtles, forſoke the company of their wiues, as hée ſayth. But I am content to take this argument at the popes hand.

This the pope graunteth, that the Apoſtles ledde their wyues aboute wyth them. Wherfore it muſt néedes follow (euē after the Pope) that our prieſtes may alſo leade wiues aboute with them. If ye graunt me this, I am content, I will not binde prieſtes amplectendi vxores, I will put it to his wiues diſcretion, and his, as they two cā agrée: ſo am I cōtent, alonely to let them haue the libertie that the Pope graunteth the holy Apoſtles to haue had. And I doubt not but there wyll folow tokens, not onely of circumducendi but of amplectendi.

How many factes could I recite here, of amplectēdi?

Truely I haue great maruayle, ỹ men bée not aſhamed, thus to trifle with holy Scripture, yea, and that in matters that bée ſo waighty, & wher. by they ſée dayly ſo great offence and ſclaunder to ſpring in the holy church of God.

if children that bee gotten might beare witnes.

An other Scripture the pope hath which is this: They that are in the fleſhe can not pleaſe God. On thys tert diſputeth the Pope thus: They that are defiled, are in the fleſhe: But prieſtes that marry wyues, are defiled: therefore, they bée in ỹ fleſhe, and can not pleaſe God.

Diſt. lxxxiij c. Propoſuiſti. Qui in carne ſunt Deo placere non poſſunt.

If men had eyther feare of God in thier hartes, or els reuerēce to Gods holy inſtitutions, and ordinaunces, they would not thus ſpeake nor iudge of pure & cleane matrimony. I truſt there is no Chriſtē man, but bée will graūt mée that matrimony is of gods ordayning and ſettinge? Wherefore it muſt nédes bée pure aud cleane. For our God is no God of vncleanes, or of filthines, let the pope iudge hym as hée wyll. Nowe to the Popes argument. The Pope ſayth in hys minor, how Prieſtes that marry, bée vncleane. I denye that, and ſay ſtedfaſtly, that the pope blaſphemeth both God and his holy giftes. And whē hée can prowe his minor true, then will I graunt it vnlawfull for Prieſtes to marry.

The Pope accompteth whordom to bee more cleane then holy matrimony.

The Pope blaſphemeth God.

But I wyll take the Popes argument, and prowe that no man ſhall haue wiues, and ſo ſhall the worlde ſone bée at an ende. The popes maior is this: They that bée in the fleſh can not pleaſe God. But maryed mē (as the Pope thinketh) lyue after ỹ fleſh, therefore no maryed man can bée ſaued. Let the pope of Rome, and all hys adherentes aunſwere to my argument, and I will ſone aunſwere to theirs. For this I am ſure of, that ỹ ſcriptures which he bringeth, maketh not agaynſt matrimony, nor yet more againſt prieſts then agaynſt lay men. Wherfore let hym conclude what hée can out of them againſt prieſtes, and I will conclude the ſame agaynſt laye men. These bée all the Scriptures that I can finde in the Popes law againſt this matter. Wherefore, now will

Wil I goe to their reaſons.

When that haue wiues may bee Prieſtes, but after their prieſthode they may not marry.

Their principall reaſon is this. Maryed men may bée choſē to bée prieſts, but after their prieſthode (ſay they) may they not marry.

These mē muſt firſt conſider what doctrine they defend, ý is to ſay, how they intēde to defēd ý popes doctrine, and ý doctrine, which they call the doctrine of the church: for there is none other doctrine agaynſt vs but that.

Diſt. xxviij. c. Nullum. &c. Aſſumi &. ca. Preterea. &. c. Prinſquam.

Nowe doth this doctrine clearely deterne agaynſt them, and ſay how no mā that hath a wife, may bée choſē to bée Prieſt or a Deacō, neither they cā bring mé one exāple, that euer the Pope did graunt, that a maryed man myght bée a prieſt excepte hée got money for diſpenſing. So that the Pope by his diſpenſation hath alwayes teſtified that it was againſt his law for a maryed man to bée a Prieſt. Wherfore theſe mē (if they will defende the lawes of the Church) muſt bée bounde to prowe that maryed men may after the lawes of the Church (as they call them) bée choſen, or elles their aunſwere is naught. For it is no reaſon that they ſhould faine this ſolution of their owne braynes, and ſay, that it may bée ſo. But they muſt prowe me, that their church doth graūt it lawful ſo to bée. Moreouer, where hée nowe all their Scriptures, whereby they prowe that Prieſtes may not marry for defilyng of them: Is not the company that a Prieſt kéepeth with hys wife after his conſecration (which they graunt) as pure, and as cleane, as it was béefore his conſecration? Hath his conſecration made ý thyng vncleane, ý was before pure? Wherfore if hée may kéepe his wyfe (after theſe men) which hée maryed before his conſecration, why may not an other Prieſt lykewiſe marry a wife after his Prieſthode. What doth thys man, as concerning the office of matrimony, that the other mā doth not?

Remember the tyranny of Gregory the vij. which compelled prieſtes to forſake their wiues

Marriage is all one, before prieſthode, and after.

Farthermore, they were wont to ſay, that Prieſtes might not kéepe their wiues, in ſo much that they fained how ý Apoſtles did forſake their wiues. How ſtādeth thys wyth their ſolution, that maryed men myght bée biſhops? But mée thinke they doe but trifle with this matter, and ſéeke no more but a light euaſion, to helpe them for a tyme.

Moreouer, both the practiſe and the lawes of their church declareth clearly, that their meaning is not to chuſe a maried man to bée a byſhop. For their cuſtome is that a man may bée a Subdeacon at 16. yeares olde. Now is there no man cuſtomably maryed ſo younge. And when hée ſhall be ſubdeacon, hée muſt forſweare mariage, as the Popes lawe commaundeth. Therefore, it muſt néedes folow, that no maryed man can bée a Prieſt. For hée hath forſworne marryage many yeares before. Moreouer, all Doctours doe graunt, that after the fall of Adam, matrimony was a remedye againſt fornication, and S. Paule approweth the ſame. Vnuſquiſq; ſuam habeat vxorē propter fornicationē. What if this man, after his conſecration is in more ieoperdie of fornication then hée was béefore? What remedy will men finde nowe for this infirmitie? His conſecration taketh not away his naturall appetite, nor it maketh Gods remedy vnlawfull. And eyther hée muſt lyue in fornication, or elles marry a wife. Let men iudge, which of them becommeth a prieſt beſt after his conſecration.

Diſt. xxviij cap. Nullū.

Farthermore no man can denye, but the hyſtories make mention, how diuerſe prieſts haue bēne maryed after their conſecration, at the diſpenſation of the pope. Wherfore it muſt follow, that it is not agaynſt Gods law, for a Prieſt to marry after his conſecration. For then the pope might not diſpenſe with him. Yen muſt graunt, that many Prieſtes haue had wyues. Now ſtādeth it with good reaſon, and learnyng, that they prowe, ý all theſe men dyd marry before their prieſthode onely, and not after, ſéeyng they wil haue it ſo neceſſary, and ſo perfect a ſolutiō. And if they cā not prowe it, why doe they affirme it ſo ſtyfly? what moueth thē ſo to ſay? yea, and ſo boldly? But yet I will bée content, let the matter bée indifferently handled, and let as many maryed men bée choſen to bée Byſhops, as bée vnmaryed, ſée-yng they graunt it lawfull: And then am I sure, ẏ we shall auoyde a great heape of fornications, that bēn now vsed. Yea I feare me, that our chaste men shall sone bée quyt of all, and the maryed men shall haue all.

Priestes may get chastitie, by praying, & fastyng.

An other reason they haue, & that is this. Priestes may extinct the brennyng heate that is in thē, by fastyng, labouryng, watchyng, praying, & by other good workes doyng. And if they doe thus, no doubt, but God wil geue them the gift of chastitie, for hée is liberall in geuing, and mercyful in hearing of their prayers, Ergo, they nède not to marry.

A Notary of London sayd to me openly, that hee had written a thousand dispensations for Priestes children in his dayes. How many then haue all Notaries written.

First I desire to know of those mē, if they will say of their cōscience, that the third part of Priestes in Englād doe kéepe their chastitie? I thinke they will rather sweare nay, thē yea. Now come to their argument, and sée how shamefully they doe reproue priests. I durst not speake so much agaynste them, as these men doe. For first they say, that if priestes did pray, or fast, or did like good workes, thē God would, yea hée must of his liberalitie, & mercy geue them the gift of chastitie. Secondly, they graunt that ẏ third deale of priestes kéepe not their vow. Now is this as much to say, thinketh me. Firste, that Priestes bée naught in déede. Secondarely, that they neither will, not yet desire to bée better. For if they did desire it of God, hée would geue it them, saye they. In hym is no fault, Ergo, the fault is in the priestes, that neither bée good in déede, nor yet will praye, or desire to bée good. I would not gladly haue such patrons in my cause.

Priestes shall fast, and pray. But what if all that will not helpe.

Moreouer I graunt that Priestes shall fast, and pray to kéepe their bodyes lowe. But now to them. Why shal not priests also marry to auoyde fornication, as well as fast, and pray? séyng that God hath ordeined matrimony, for a peculiar, and singular, remedy agaynst fornication? I doe not condemne true fastyng, and praying. Why doe they then condemne maryingeséyng that God which ordeyned fastyng, and praying, hath also ordeyned marying? Yea, and me thinke, if any one thing should bée first proued, then should mariage bée first proued, séyng that it is deputed of God, for a proper, and spedy remedy agaynst fornication? Notwithstanding I will bée content, first to exhorte all Priestes, both to praying, and fastyng, & if they can so kéepe their chastitie, I will thanke God with them. But if they can not, then will I in no wise, that they shall bée cōpelled either by law, or by vow to chastitie. For that is agaynst Gods word, and the doctrine of his holy Apostles.

But yet let me touch their grounde nearer. I would desire thē to tell me, and to proue vnto me by learnyng, that God is bounde, in as much as hée is liberall, and mercyful to graunt vnto them ẏ gift of chastitie, for they praying, and fasting. It is not inough for them thus to saye, séyng that many good men hath both prayed, and fasted, and yet had not the gift of chastitie: But they must bryng me an open Scripture, wherin that this promise is made vnto their fastyng, and watchyng, or elles they must graunt that they bée bounde to vse Gods remedies, which hée hath ordeined, and instituted, to the helpyng of our infirmitie. If I were hungry, and thursty, and would goe, and praye to God to slake my hunger, and thurst, & would not vse those meanes, and remedies, that God hath ordeined, thinke you that God were bound of his liberalitie to graunt me my request? Nay for soth. But it were rather to bée iudged, that I were a tempter of God, & a despiser of his holy ordinaunce, and would not bée content with those remedies, that God hath appointed.

God is bound to as much as he hath promised.

The deuill commeth with like tēptatiō to our Ꝑ. Christ, and requireth him to the honour of God to doe a miracle, to leape down from the highest of the temple, if hée would bée taken for the sonne of God, & as for harme hée could haue none. For the Scripture testifieth (saith hée) that God had commaunded his aūgels to beare thée vp in their armes. Wherefore (sayth the deuill) it shall bée a great honour to God, and also a great declaration to thy power, if thou deſcende frō the height of the temple, otherwiſe then any other man can doe. And if thou goeſt downe by the ſteyers, God ſhal no more bée glorified in thy fact, then in other mens, nor thou ſhalt not bée taken for the man, that thou art, and wouldeſt bée.

The deuill tempteth God.

Moreouer, thou nédeſt not doubt, but God will helpe thée. For the ſcripture ſpeaketh of thée, whiche can not bée falſe. Notwithſtandyng all this, our ℣. Chriſt calleth it temptyng of God, when men will ſéeke vnto hym for other remedyes, then hée hath appoynted. And therfore our ℣. Chriſt doth clearely declare, that the ſame Scriptures, which the deuill bryngeth for him, maketh not for his purpoſe. For though that God doth promiſe to helpe Chriſt, & all his, yet will hée bée glorified in his creatures, & will that we ſhal vſe them with thankes, to the entent, & purpoſe, ỳ hée hath ordeined them for: And then, if there bée any thing lacking vnto our health, & ſalua tion, hée will, that we ſhal both pray, & truſt in hym. With what boldenes cā I deſyre of God to helpe mée? and am not concent to receiue his creatures, that hée hath inſtituted to helpe mée? Whereby ſhall God helpe mée, If I diſpiſe his ordinaūces, and creatures that hée hath alreadye ordeyned to my helping? Is it reaſon, that God at my inſtaunce, ſhal make a new ordinaūce and new remedies for my diſeaſes? Why am I not content (if I will bée helped at Gods hand) with thoſe remedyes, that bée all ready inſtituted? It was but a ſmall thynge, and a vyle thyng in a maner, for Chriſt to deſcēd by the ſteyers from the heyghte of the temple, ſéeyng that the deuill required hym, by Gods honour, & alſo by his owne, to ſhew ſome ſpeciall power.

God charmgeth not his order for our pleaſure.

If I weare diſeaſed, and ſycke, and would not vſe the counſell of Phiſicions, nor of other medecines, ỳ God hath inſtituted, but wil faſt, and pray, and watch, and doe almes déedes, thynke you that men would recken mée wiſe? And if I did thus dye, were not I a deſpiſer of God, and of his good ordinaunces? God hath apoynted Phiſicions, and geuen vertue to hearbes, and other creatures, to help my diſeaſe. Wherefore I am bounde with mékenes, and with thankes to receyue them, and to pray to God, ỳ hée will forgiue, and ſtrengthē the natures of theſe creatures, and that they may haue vertue, and effecacy in me. This is a Chriſten man bound to do: For if this reaſon of theſe men ſhall haue ſtrength, thē will we vſe no mā ner of creatures, or remedies ỳ God hath ordeined, but agaynſt hunger, and thirſt, heate, and could, agues, and peſtilences, pouertie, and neceſ ſitie, ſwordes and gonnes, agaynſt all maner of diſeaſes, againſt all manner of miſfortunes, will we vſe nothing, but all onely pray, or faſt, or els geue almes, as we ſhall thinke beſt. So that we will teach God what thing is beſt to the helpyng of all imperfecti ons. I thanke you good Paylers for your good doctrine, I praye God re warde you.

God hath ordeined e uery thyng to a pur poſe, and thereunto muſt they bee vſed.

Fynally I haue great meruayle, why that prayer, and faſtynge ſhall all onely get Prieſtes to the gift of chaſtitie? and not all other men? And if other mē may haue the gift of chaſ titie through their prayer? why bée not all men moued to lyue chaſte? ſée ing ỳ chaſtitie in very déede is a high er ſtate then matrimony is. Why bée prieſtes more bounde to pray for the gift of chaſtetie, then other Chriſten men bée?

Prieſtes haue a priui lege beefore other men.

Nowe marke this doctrine. If a lymme of the deuyl would come now and preach vniuerſally to all men the excellencye of chaſtitie, and to ſhew what a greate quiet lyuing it is, and what a pleſaūt ſtate it is before God, And contrarywiſe, of mariage would ſay, that it weare a ſorowfull ſtate, full of troubles, full of cares, full of heanines, and (as the Pope ſayth) a fleſhely, and a carnall ſtate, and that ſéemeth to haue in it ſelf any vnclene nes: and by theſe reaſōs, and perſwa ſyons, with many moe that hée might bring, would exhort all manner of mē in England to lyue ſole, and vnma ried, And would alſo teach them to pray, and to faſt for the gift of chaſtity and not to doute, but that God of his liberalitie would gēue it thē. I would fayne know of learned men, if this man were gods frend and the kings: How much hē is gods, I will not dispute. But I am sure there could not bē a greater traytour to the kinges grace thē hē is. For if hē might bring to passe that hē intendeth by his doctrine. Fyrst he should destroy ẏ kyngs succession. Secondarily, hē should within this seuen yeres, make ẏ king a Lorde of a fewe subiectes, or none, and fynally of none indēde. And all this would they doe by fasting, and prayying.

Had the world continued, they would haue made vs poore men beleeue, that they had gotten children ẏ fastyng, & prayying.

But what thing so euer they tell vs of their fasting, and prayying, I am sure that they fall to getting of childrē as sone as other men doe, and all is with fasting and prayying. Alas what thing can not the deuill misuse.

But let no mā take mē, as though I condemned fasting, and prayying. For surely I would that they should bē vsed, and that diligently. But I would, haue them vsed in tyme, and place conuenient, and for the intent, and purpose, that God hath ordayned them. But yet I would not, that other remedies, and gyftes of God should bē thought vnlawfull, & also bē despised for them.

Now most gracious Prince, here haue I shewed vnto your grace, fyrst myne obedience, willyng that euery man should both so learne, and so doe. Secōdarylye, I haue shewed my learning in certaine articles, for ẏ which there is a variēce in the world at this day, protesting vnto your grace, that I haue sayde nothing, but I trust bē true, and agrēable with Gods holy worde, and with the learning of the Doctours. Notwithstanding, if there bē any man within your realme, that can prowe by good learning the cōtrary (so that your grace shall alowe it to agrē with Gods word, and to bē sufficient bēfore Gods dreadfull iudgment) I shall bē content to submyt my selfe to your graces determination, and to doe that thing that bēcōmeth a Christen man, & a true subiecte to doe. Thus our Lord Jesu Christ, ẏ purchasour of all grace and goodnes, euer preserue your grace in al vertue and honour,

Amen.

That it is against the holy Scripture to honour Images, and to pray to Saintes.

IF men had the verye true faith in Christe Jesus, that belongeth to Christē mē to haue, this article were open of it selfe without any farther probation: for if men did bēleeue first that Christ were God and omnipotent, and mighty, to gēue all thinges: Secondarily, that hē were mercifull, gracious, & louing towarde vs, and so louing, that wē coulde desire nothing of hym, but ẏ he woulde gēue it vs: if men (I say) had thys fayth, and this loue towarde Christ, they would goe no farther but to him onely, they woulde make, inuente, & deuise no mediatours, but faithfully receaue hym (according to ẏ Scriptures) for their onely mediatour, Sauiour, and redēmer: and beleeue and knowe surely, that they coulde aske nothyng so great in his name, but that they shoulde receaue it, to that hē woulde hym selfe gēue it, and thereunto is able. Also by this fayth, they should perfectly know, that they coulde not bē so vnworthy, but hē of his onely and mēre mercy, is able, & also woulde make them worthy to receaue their peticions, so that if men had faith, they should perfectly know that they had nēde of no more then this one Christ, that they should nor ought not sēke to any other mediatour, eyther to obtayne any thing, or els to make them worthy: but should know and confesse both in worde and dæde, that Christ alonely is able inough, yea & so mighty and so mercifull, that all other fayned and inuented mediatours of men bee vile, filthy and abhominable of themselues, to bee compared to him. If this fayth (I say) were printed in the hartes of mẽ, then what shoulde they or could they, desire more then this one mediatour Jesus Christ? What could they haue, that of him and by him they could not obtaine? Truely nothinge that they coulde righteously aske, as all Scriptures beare witnes.

But nowe, let all these makers of new Gods cumilate themselues togither on a heape, and shewe mée but one place, yea but one iot, or one example in holy Scripture, that euer men did pray to Saintes? or one that entered into heauen by Saints prayers? Christ ascended (as the Scriptures bee plaine) into heauen by hys owne power: now woulde I knowe of these new Godmakers, by whose power and helpe that the first Sainte came into heauen: say not by the intercession of Saintes, for I will say then there were none in heauen: nor by his owne holynes, for then dyed Christ in vayne: and if hée came by Christ onely, why may hée not alone helpe vs thither? His power is not weakened: his mercy is no lesse towarde vs then it was towarde him. Now here you sée all the causes that brought the first Sainte to heauen, & these causes bée sufficient, yea & alonely allowed of the Scriptures of God: therfore they bée also sufficient for vs, if wée will bélæue the scriptures of God.

Christ ascended into heauen by his owne power.

But now to declare and make this matter open, I will recite the wordes of the Scriptures: first I will speake of Images, of whom speaketh Moyses these wordes. Thou shalt make thee no grauen Images, nor similitude of any thing that is in heauen aboue, or in earth beneath, or in waters vnder the earth: thou shalt neither honour nor worship them. Bée not these wordes plaine against all maner of Images or similitudes? For if saints bée in heauẽ or in earth, or vnder the earth, here bée their figures excepted, either to bée honoured, or worshipped: and marke that hée excepteth both honouring and also worshipping. Now what can you géeue to Images that is neither to honour nor worship? It maketh no matter to mée, whether you call it latria or dulia, if it bée eyther honour or worship, then is it against Scripture: and if it bée neither, then is it nothyng but a voyde name inuented of your insaciable couetousnes, to deceaue simple men with, and to heape innumerable good to your selues. For if you had no more profite by Images then you haue deuotion to them, then shoulde they bée sone lefte downe. Who hath séene a precious offeryng of a Priest géeuen to any Image? but wée sée dayly how yée robbe Images of other mens oblations.

Exod. 20. Deut. 5.

Wee are forbidden of God to make Images.

Wee must neither honour Images nor worshippe them.

But let vs returne to our purpose, Duns on this text saith, that by it was it forbydden to make images bëfore the incarnation of Christ. &c. Now must you prowe where they bée allowed since the incarnation and shew with manifest scriptures where this text is condemned in the new Testament or els it stãdeth fast agaynst you after your own. M. Duns, whom you dare not deny. Also ỳ Prophet saith, a mã dyd plante a pinaple tree, and the raine did nurrish it, and therof was made a fire vnto men, hee toke of it and warmed hym, and burnt it and baked bread therewith, and of the other parte hee Made hym a God, and dyd honour it, and prayd vnto it saying, deliuer me for thou art my God. Marke the processe of ỳ Prophet, first the man planted this trée, thẽ hée burnt part of it and baked bread with it, and of the other part he made hym a God whom hée honoured and worshypped, marke also if all these bée not true, and fulfilled of your images, of the one is made your God which you doe honour, and of whom you desire to bée deliuered, some frõ death, some from sickenes, some frõ pestilence, some from pouertie, some from thëues, some frõ euill fortune, some frõ hãging, some frõ drowning, and and some to saue you from the toth ake, some to saue your horse, some your pyges. and some to helpe your wemen with child, with many other thynges more, so that for euery thyng that you will desire, you haue a God to aske it of. Now of the other part is made a payre of gallowes: is not this true? is not this playne? of what other thyng in earth can the saying of ỹ prophet bee verified, but of your images? And if it may be verified of an hũdred other things, yet is it also true of your images: and vnto them agreeth most peculiarly. The prophet speaketh not of one onely, but of all thinges that bee lyke. Now deliuer your Gods if you cã. They wil not bee delivered wt the aunswere that Doctour Rydley did once make vnto mee, that there was no man so blynde, nor so mad, or folishe, for to honour the stocke and the stone that standeth beefore them, but they referre the honour to that thyng that the Image doth represent. I aunswere: good Maister Doctour, I pray you tell mee one thyng, what did Cicero with all the whole Senatours of Rome? did they not honour that same thing that stode beefore thẽ (and yet as you say) they did referre it vnto the thing that was thereby represented. These men were wise mẽ and as well learned in their tyme as you, & yet you see (for lacke of knowledge of the trueth) they honoured stockes and stones. I am sure you will not excuse them from Idolatry, yea and that beecause they did honour the stockes and stones, and not alone ly for honouring of the the thing that was represented.

Wayne Imaginatiõs of men.

3. Kyng. 12. Also what dyd Roboam when hee dyd set vp two golden calues in Bethell and sayd to the people, Goe no more to Hierusalẽ behold thy Godes Israell. Was not this done to the honour of God? for they were not so mad (as ye say) to thinke that those calues were Goddes, but they did honour them in the honour of God, and that was well declared in their sacrifice whiche was none other, but such as God had commaunded in the law, Ergo, after your rule they might lawfully honour these calues referryng it to God. They had also a great collour for them, for all the old fathers did alwayes offer to god calues, as Abrahã wt many other which, oblatiõ was accepted of God. Wherfore they might well thinke that God would bee honoured in the images of Calues.

Now what thing can you lay to them whereby you will prooue that they honoured their stocks and their stones, and their Calues, but those same thinges shall also bee layde vnto you, and vnto yours, to prooue that you doe likewise honour your stocks and your stones. First you runne frõ place to place, to seeke them, which is a tokẽ that you doe honour the stocke or stone, for there haue you nothynge of the Sainte more then in an other place, sauing onely the stocke & stone.

Howe wee haue beene by ignorance led to worship stockes and stones.

Now, when you haue founde thẽ, then pray you beefore them, and that with knéelinges, and knockings, and shaking of your heades, and lokyng deuoutly and pitiously, then kisse you their feete or their showes (for they bee seldome barefooted least they should haue the murre or the coaffe, by the reason they bee not vsed to coulde, as you may see by their smoked scolions faces, handes, and feete, with all the place where they stande) and wipe your napkyns, and rubbe your beads on them, and licke them with your tounges, and lay your eyes on them. Then set you lightes beefore them, & then offer you to them (though in ỹ M. Doctour your person is nothyng giltie) great oblations, so that they shine in golde and siluer and precious stones: yea and not thus content, but also promise to visite that stocke once a yeare, if God and that good Sainte sende you life and health. &c.

I pray you is not this honourynge of the stocke and stone? what did Cicero with all the Romaines to their stockes and stones? what did Roboam to his Calues, if this bee not honouring, define mee what honouring is: what more exteriour honour can you deuise then this is? and yet you doe say ỹ you honour no stockes nor stones. But worldly shame, and inuincible Scriptures, haue brought you to make this damnable euasion, bæcause you sée men now ware wyse in the Lorde, by the which they sée clearely your false dissimulation and hypocrisie. But if you were the true honourers of God, as you bée secret hypocrites, you would not make this damnable euasion to stablish, vphold and maintaine your Idolatry, nor yet suffer (so much as laye in you) any thynge to bée done that hath any colour or shadow of holynes that might bée an occasion of Idolatry. But bécause you bée hypocrites and vnsaciable belly Gods, you care not (so you may deceaue the simple people & lead them with blynd shadowes, therby to fill your offeryng bores and chéstes to maintaine your vnsaciable carnall appetites) how the honour of God bée saued, or how your powre brethrēs conscience bée deceaued. Thinke you that this is inough to say that no mā is so mad nor so folishe as to honour the stockes and stones. And yet to suffer and dayly béfore your eyes to sée, so great exteriour honour geuen vnto them. That no toung can expresse nor hart can deuise more: yea if you will béleue your subtile Duns, they geue vnto them (as I shall well prowe by his diffinition) honour whiche is called Latria: the which Latria after your owne learnyng ought to bée geuen to God onely. This sayth Duns, Latria is called an exteriour honouryng or a bodely seruice. &c.

Stockes & stones the Papistes honour as Gods.

Now if that bée trewe, it followeth that they geue that honour to stockes and stones that onely pertayneth to God, which doe any exterior honour (whether it bée offering of candels, or killyng of their sholwes, or any other thing) to them: Make you the conclusion, for I néede not to say that they doe Idolatrye. Farthermore, this word Latria, (wher with you deceaue the symple people) is a Gréeke word and after. S. Augustine it signifyeth no more but seruice, the which you cā not denye but that you geue to your stockes and stones. Cōclude now this proposytyon after .M. subtill doctour Dunces diffinition I pray you, for I haue no leasure. Thinketh your doctourhed that the children of Israell wt their hie Priest Aaron could not haue made this Pope holy excuse, that they were not so mad nor so folyshe as to honour the golden Calfe, but rather to refer that honour to ỹ lyuing God? They had a good colour for them. For they knewe none other God nor saint but hym: and yet this excuse was not lawful, nor could not bée alowed whē Moses came with the word of God. Marke also what bée was that made this Calfe, not a fole nor ignorāt person among the people, or one of none auctoritie: But the most wisest eloquent and chiefe amonge them: yea bée was that tyme the very hed of the Church or congregation. Also note ỹ intent which was to kéepe the people togither in good order. Bée also made a Calfe with the which thing all their fathers had pleased God in doing sacrifyce with them: so that they might well thinke ỹ it might bée acceptable to God to bée honoured in the image of a Calfe before any other Image. But all these colours bée naked béfore the worde of God.

Briefye would you alowe that the people should geue that same honour to mée ỹ they doe géeue to your stokes and stones? And vnder ỹ same colour that it should bée in ỹ name & honour of God (you can not say but I am as good as your best stocks & stones: and if they bée the Images of sayntes and representent sayntes after your fayning, I am the Image of God and represent hym so long as I beléeue in hym according to the holy scriptures. And if a conning and an artificyall grauer made them, God made mée. And I haue .ỹ. thinges aboue them, which all your caruers, and you with all your distinctions can not géeue to your stockes nor stones: That is, I am a liuinge creature, and your stockes bée deade: I am created to lyue with the euerlasting God, and your stockes bée made to the fyer) I am sure you nor no man wil alowe it. But there is one merueilous wōder, That if the best and most holy of all your new gods, yea one that doth myracles racles euery day, were taken out of your hands, & set againe in ỹ Caruers & his makers house, hée should hée no better thẽ a stock or a stone, nor could doe no myracles: yea if hée were prayed neuer so much: no not so much as if ỹ house were a fyer, to saue either ỹ house or hym selfe.

Practise of Papistes to cause Images to worke myracles.

Also it is not lawful so longe as hée there stãdeth neyther to pray to him, nor yet to offer to him, which offering would both helpe the powre man, hys wyfe, childrẽ, and seruaunts. But let them suffer you to take this worme God into your handes agayne, and then is hée Lord ouer all the world, then maketh hée rych men and powre men, then maketh hée men blynde, & blynde to sée agayne, then maketh hée lame men whole, then maketh hée we men with childe, yea and also bringeth them well to bed. Then expelleth hée deuils, then telleth hée thinges to come, then ruleth hée in heauen and earth and in water, briefly hée defendeth both king and kingdome. Is not here a sudden mutation? and all is bécause hée hath got hym a new M. and a new place. O you hypocrites thynke you that men bée so blynde ỹ they cã not sée this falsed? You would make them blynde in déede the which would make them to honour stockes and stones: yea and that in the name of an other thing, the which also they know not. Which of you all hath sẽn our Lady or any other saint where by you may lerne to make her similitude? and if you haue nothing to lay for you but because shée was a woman, then is your Image as much ỹ similitude of an harlot of the stues the which bereth all the shape ỹ belongeth to a naturall woman as wel as of our Lady. Notwithstanding that our blessed lady is a vergin and the other a strumpet, yet in exterior formes and shapes that may bée sẽne and indged by senses, bée they all one, yea and your Image in all exterior signes is a great deale more lyker vnto an harlot, then to a pure and a blessed méeke virgin. And yet are you not ashamed wỏ these damnable shadowes, both to priuate God of his honour and also compell your simple brethren to this shamefull idolatry. If you will loke your selfe and sée clearely your idole in a pure mirour, reade the .bj. chapter of Baruch, wherin you shall fynde these wordes, Their stockes be polished of the carpenter, and they bee gilded & siluered, but they be false & cã not speake. How thinke you, haue not your Images these properties? Their Gods haue golden crownes on their heades from whom the Priests doth take away golde & siluer & spend it on themselues: They geeue also of it vnto their strũpets, and decke their harlotes: And whẽ they haue takẽ it away frõ their harlots, thẽ deck they there with their Gods againe. Wherfore know that they bee no Gods. Bée not all these thinges fulfilled on you? doe not you take away their oblations & therwith maintayne your pompe and pride, & decke also your harlotes, say not nay, for all the world will condemne you, for opẽ lyers, the matter is so plaine. Their Gods haue a septer like a mã, and like a Iudge of a land, but they cã not sley hym that offendeth thẽ, wherefore feare them not. Doth not this agre with your Gods? Note how bolde the prophet is which dare crake with your God, & sayth how ỹ they cã not hurte their enemies: wherefore hée biddeth vs that we shall not feare them.

The hipocrisie of the Papistes hath greatly preuailed in the practysyng and aduauncing of Idolatry.

Baruch.6.

A notable declaration of Baruch the Prophet against Idols and Idolatry.

Now if you think that this bée not spoken of your Gods (not with standing that none of these thinges they bée boyde of) goe to them and crye: but remember that you crye aloude, for they bée very thicke of hearing or peraduenture they be gone forth a toune and occupied. Therefore I say crye & whope aloud, and byd them if they be Gods or will haue any honour ỹ they will now auẽge themselues of their enemyes. If they can doe nothing, thẽ will we lay vnto them this mocke of the prophyt and will not feare them. They haue a sworde in their hande, and an axe, but they can not delyuer them selues from battel, nor frõ theeues: therfore feare them not. A righteous mã is better that hath none Images for he shall be free frō obprobriousnes. How thinke you haue not your Gods all these tokens? how many thæues haue you hanged for robbyng of your goods? but your gods neuer saued thē self frō thæues. Moreouer, why make you so suer lockes, & so sure doores, if your Gods bee able to kæpe your goods? I thinke you feare not their runnyng away.

Farthermore, why kæpe you so great bandogs, if your Gods bee able to saue their Gods frō thæues? But mée thinketh the bandogs bee mightier then your Goddes, and also you trust more to them: for they defende both you and your Goddes. You dumme stockes, where is all your reason? where is all your wit? where is all your wisdome? where is all your policy? where is all your godly faith that you ought to haue in the God of heauen? Are you not ashamed thus grossye to deceaue men? yea & wyth those thynges which you can neither defende with scripture, nor yet wyth any reason. But paraduenture you will say that the Prophet speaketh here of Idols and not of Images.

There is no differēce betweene an Idoll & an Image.

I aunswere: I pray you what call you Idolum? is it not as much as Imago in Latin? which wée call in inglishe an Image, but wée will not barry for the name: let vs goe to ỹ properties. Haue not your Images all these properties that ỹ Prophet layeth to these thinges which you call Idols? cā you say nay? can you proue the contrary? Doth not experience learne vs that they bée all one? Now what matter is it what name you gæue them, when the properties and the very thyng is all one. Moreouer the Prophet Dauid doth define an Idole wyth these properties: First it hath eyes & can not see: it hath a nose and can not smell: it hath a mouth and can not speake: it hath eares aud can not heare: it hath handes and can not feele: it hath feete and can not goe. &c.

The description of an Idoll or Image.

Now which of all these properties hath not your Idolles? what will you make now of them? The Prophet Dauid maketh an Idolle of ỹ thynge that hath these properties: and wyll you make a God and a helper of thē? will you pray to them? will you offer to them? will you runne from place to place to sæke them? There is no distinction, there is no subtiltie that can helpe you. For more reuerence, more seruice, more honour, more cultus dulie may you not doe to your Images then the Prophet woulde that wé should not doe to Idols: for they bée one in all properties and conditions. And as for your myracles that you defende them by, they bée but illusions of the deuill, inuēted of your owne imaginations, and cōtrary to the worde of God, vnto the greate blaspheming of the omnipotent God of heauen. For myracles bée neuer done of God that any man can proue of surety, but all onely to the magnifying & declaratiō of his blessed worde. As for all other myracles may bée suspected to bée done of the deuill, by the sufferaunce of God, to the probation of our fayth, and specially when they bée against the open worde of God. This may bée proued by the wordes of Moyses: If there arise in the midst of thee a Prophet, or a man that saith I haue seene a vision, and tell thee afore a signe and a wōder, and that thing that hee tolde thee doe also come to passe: Now if this man say vnto thee, let vs goe and follow strainge Gods which thou knowest not, and let vs serue them, thou shalt not heare the Prophet, nor the dreamers wordes, for God doth prooue you, that it may bee open whether you loue hym in all your harte, and in all your soule or not. Deut. 13.

Wée not these words open against all manner of myracles? yea & against Prophetes whose prophecie is true: and yet bécause hée will drawe the hartes of ỹ people vnto other things béside God, therefore shall hée not bée heard: your Images bée not here excepted. Farthermore, what signifieth this, that God will haue all our hartes and all our soules. If God haue all, then can your Images haue no part. But marke how God doth

Idolles or Images worke no myracles. Hipocrites fayne them to bee the workers of myracles.

proue our faith with such myracles, so that hée woulde that neyther heauē nor hell, Sainte, nor myracles, Prophet true, nor false, shoulde draw our harts frō him, or frō his word: but alonely to sticke fast to him. Wherfore lay for your Idols what you cā: first they bée no Gods: secōdarily they can no more doe (if they doe so much) but doe miracles, & tel you before of those thynges that bée to come. And yet all this can not helpe, for it is openly agaynst the word of God and we may not heare them.

Farthermore agaynst your Idols will I set the brasen Serpent, of whō it is written that it did miracles so openly that no man cā deny it, yea and that by the worde of God: which did also stand many hundred yeares, till the people did to it so much as they now doe to your Gods: that is, they did offer insēce & other oblations therto, and therfore was it destroyed. Notwithstāding it was instituted of God, and so bée none of your idolles, wherfore miracles can not helpe. And among the Turkes bée miracles done as they thinke, and yet that proueth not their sect to bée lawfull. I will tell you of a miracle that is writtē in their law. On a certeine tyme there was a controuersie betwéene the Priestes and the religious men which of them should haue, the oblations of the people. The Priests layd that they were best worthy bécause they were ministers in the temple and seruauntes to the Gods, and night and day toke payne for the people. The Friers laid for them that they were the successiō of all their holy fathers and by their prayers and merites, was the kyng & all the people kept, and the land defēded from all euill with many other thinges more.

A notable myracle done by false gods in Turkie.

Briefly this matter was deferred of both partes to the sentence of the kyng, the whiche had thought to haue geuen sentēce with the Priestes. But when the Friers knew it, they came to the kyng and desired him that hée would deferre the sentēce vij. dayes, and sée what the Gods would shewe for them. The night béfore that the kyng should geue sentence, was hée compelled by nature to goe to the preuy, which whē hée came there, ỹ preuy brake, and hée fel in, & there was hée crying by the space of an houre, til hée was so wery that hée coulde cry no more, & no man could come to him for the pallace was locked. Thē sodēly appeared vnto hym a religious mā wt a glorious light, saying vnto hym. Now where bée they ỹ thou woldest haue geuen sentence with all? are not they wel worthy of the oblations that can not helpe thée out of daūger? but now mayst thou sée what we may doe with the Gods for thée and all thy land: and with this the kyng without paine or hurt was taken out of ỹ préuy and layd agayne in his bed or hée wist it: and the day folowyng gaue hée sentence that the religious men should haue the oblations.

A stinking myracle.

Now thinke you was not here an open miracle? and was it not done on the kyng the which had vnderstādyng and reason. It was an open matter when hée was in the préuy and the préuy broken, and hée layd agayne in his bed without any hurt, this passed mās power. But what wil you proue of this miracle? all your Gods together can not doe a more open miracle then this is.

But let vs sée what the Doctours say agaynst your Gods, Clemēs writeth these wordes, We doe honour visible Images to the honour of the inuisible God, the whiche is a false thyng: but if you will honour the image of God in doing well to man, in hym shall you honour the true image of God. Wherfore if you will truely honour the image of God, we will open that thynge vnto you that is of trueth, so that you muste doe well vnto man the whiche is made vnto the Image of God: geue hym honour and reuerence: geeue hym meate when hee is hungrye: geeue him drinke when hee is thyrsty: Clothe him when hee is naked: serue hym when hee is sicke: geeue hym lodgyng when hee is a straunger: and when hee is in prison minister to hym necessaries. This is the Libro 5. ad Iacob.

To relieue thy poore neighbour that is Gods Image, is to honour God.

thing that shall bee counted to bee geeuē God truely. What honour is this of god to rūne about fooliſhly to ſtony & wooddy Images, and to honour as Godes idle and dead figures, and to deſpiſe man in whō is the very true Image of God. Wherfore vnderſtāde you that this is the ſuggeſtion of the Serpent that lurketh within, the whiche doth make you beleeue that you bee deuoute when you doe honour in ſenſible thyngs. And maketh you to beleue that you bee not wicked when you hurt ſenſible and reaſonable men. &c.

There is no true Image, but onely the Image of man which few doe honour.

How thinke you? doth not this damme the worſhyppyng of Images, yea though it bee in ẏ honour of God. Hee ſheweth you alſo that there is no other true Image but mā. Which of you all goe a pilgrimage to ẏ Image? whiche of you all doe offer to that Image? which of you all doe honour that Image? You land lepers, you inuenters of new gods, you Idolaters, what ſay you to this? how can you auoyde this? is not this agreable with Scriptures? And yet this Image doe you deſpiſe: This image caſt you in priſon: this Image doe you ſtocke & chayne, and whippe from towne to towne, wout any cauſe. This image dyeth in the ſtreates bēfore your dowres for hunger and colde, and you runne to Walſingam & to Ipſewiche with great pompe & pride to honour your dead ſhadowes. It were better for you to burne thoſe Idolles and to warme this true image of God there by: for this Image was made vnto God onely, and all your dumme gods were made for this Images ſake. Wherfore it commeth of the deuill, that you forſake this very true image & leape to your worme eaten Gods: yea you haue burnt many a pore mā for ſpeakyng againſt theſe dumme Idolles. But tell me when all the Byſhops in England did bere or trouble any man for ſpeakyng or for doyng, yea or for deſtroying this very true Image of GOD: they had rather deſtroy it them ſelues, then it ſhould bee vndeſtroyed. Let the kynges bookes bee ſearched throughout the Realme and there ſhall bee no ſmall number founde of theſe Images that bee troubled and vexed and caſt in priſon for trifles, yea and vtterly vndone by the Byſhops and by their Prieſtes: & yet wil they bee ẏ honourers of Images, yea and that to the honour of God, and of all holy Saintes. Is not this againſt all wiſedome? yea is it not agaynſt nature? and yet no man may tell it.

Of the liuely Images of man, many haue the Byſhops burned: But of theyr worme eaten images not one.

Alſo the ſame doctour in an other place, What thing is there ſo wicked & ſo vnthākfull, as to receaue a benefyte of God and to geue thankes vnto ſtockes and ſtones? wherfore wake and vnderſtād your health. &c.

How thinke you, are you not vnthankfull vnto God of whō you haue receiued all thing, and for them you thanke your worme eaten Gods? farthermore S. ardes ardes oppnion De media villa, there can not a thing bee inuented by ỹ craft of the deuyll that may bee a greater blasphemye or more derogation to Christ and his blessed bloud then this is. For if Saintes bee necessary to bee mediatours for vs, then is Christ vnsufficient: for phylosophers did neuer put ỹ. causes where as one was sufficient: and if any thing bee geuen vs of God for sayntes sakes then bee not all thinges geuẽ for Christes sake, ỹ which is plainely against S. Paules saying, God for vs all hath geuen his sonne, and shall he not geue vs all things with him? Let euery christen man iudge what a blasphemy that is. But let vs proue that Christe is all onely our mediator. S. Paule sayth. There is one mediatour between God and man, the mã Christ Iesus, the which hath geuen him selfe for the redemption of all men. Marke that hee sayth, one mediatour betweẽ God and man. Where there is but one, there can no sayntes come in. Moreouer sayntes bee men, therefore they must haue a mediatour for them selues, and then they can not be mediatours for other men. Farthermore the mediator betweẽ God and man, is cauled Christ Iesus. Now is there any saynt that hath this name? if there bee none that hath the name, then is there none that can vsurpe this office, without blaspheming of Christ.

Roma. 8.

God hath geuen vs one mediatour which is Iesus Christ and not appoynted any Saint to bee our mediatour.

The mediatour betweene God & man is named Iesus, but there is no Saint so named.

Farthermore hee hath redeemed vs onely without the helpe of saints, and why shal hee not bee onely mediatour without saintes? is not redemptiõ the chiefe acte of a mediatour? Also the holy ghost sayth, He shall bee called Emanuell the which is as much to say as God with vs, what is this God with vs, is hee with vs but as one man is with an other? And as my cote is with my backe? Nay, hee is an other wayes with vs, That is to redeeme vs, to saue vs, to keepe vs, to defend vs from all euell: yea and is with vs, that is, hee is on our syde, he holdeth with vs, hee speaketh for vs, hee excuseth vs, hee maketh our cause good: briefly hee obtayneth all thinges for vs. Of what sayntes can this be spoken? What doe sayntes now for vs? Also S. John sayth. If a mã doe sinne we haue an aduocate by the father Christ Iesus, what is this? hee is our aduocate to the father? and here bee none assigned but Christ Iesus, and by hym haue we onely remission of our synnes.

Esay. 7.

How God by Christ is euer with vs.

1. Iohn 2.

Now what shall the Saintes obtaine for vs? what shall they desire for vs? if our sinnes bee remitted, then hath the father of heauen no displeasure agaynst vs, what shall they then pray for vs? Also S. Paule sayth. The spirite of God maketh intercession mightyly for vs with mighty desires, that cã not bee expressed with toung. Marke how the spirite of God desireth and prayeth for vs, and that no man should recken that we had nede of other mediatours, hee sayth that hee prayeth mightyly for vs, and with great feruẽcie that it can not bee expressed.

Saintes cã obteine nothyng for vs.

Now is not hee able to obtaine all things for vs, and hath taken this office on him for vs? it were doubtles a great rebuke to him, that Saintes should bee set in his steade, & ioined wt him in his office as though hee were vnsufficient. You thinke to doe saints a great honour when you make them Godes, and set thẽ in Christs steade: but you can not doe them a great dishonour nor displeasure, for they will bee but Saintes, and no Gods, yea & that by Christes helpe & not by their owne. Also S. Paule saith, Christ sitteth on the right hãd of the father the whiche doth also praye for vs, marke that hee prayeth for vs, can the father of heauẽ deny any thyng of his prayer? Doth not hee aske all thinges necessarie for vs? And as Scripture sayth: He is our wisedome, he is our iustice, he is our satisfactiõ, and our redemption made of God.

Roma 8.

1. Cor. 1.

Now what resteth for Saintes to aske? what will you desire more then wisedome, iustice, sanctificatiõ and redemption? all these hath Christ obteined for vs, yea and hee alonely thereunto was ordeined of God: which of all the Saintes can say that, but hee?

Christ is all in all for vs, and therefore wee nede not ỹ helpe of Saints.

if

if all saintes & all the world would say the contrary, yet hée him selfe stãdeth fast against them all, & cõdẽneth them for lyars & blasphemers, saying, No man commeth to the father but by me, note these wordes. First he saith, no man. &c. Ergo, as many as euer shall come to the father of heauen hée here cõteined: then addeth hée, but by me, hée not all saintes, all your fayned mediatours with merites & all other thinges cleane excluded in this word, but: wherfore it is plaine that what so euer hée bée ỳ maketh any other mediatour or goeth about by any meanes (séeme it neuer so holy) but by Christ onely to come to the father of heauẽ, first he despiseth Christ, & if he despise Christe, hée despiseth also hys father whiche hath alowed him onely to bée our mediatour & way to him, as it is writtẽ. I am the way onely in the father, therefore let thẽ bée sure ỳ séeke any other waye or any other mediatour, but Christ alonely to heauẽ, that they (according to the word of ỳ veritie which cã not lye) shall neuer come there, but as many as trust in him onely, let thẽ not doubt but they shall not onely obteyne to come to heauen, but also what soeuer they desire bée side in his name according to his own promise & word, which cã not deceiue vs, What soeuer (saith hée) you aske in my name the father shall geue it you. Marke these wordes, what soeuer, & that we should runne to no other hée addeth also, in my name.

Iohn. 14. Saintes can not bring vs to the father of heauen, but it must bee Christ onely.

Iohn. 14.

Iohn. 16.

Here is nothing excluded, but all thinges freely bée geuen vs, and that for his names sake: not for no saintes name, not for none of our holynes or merites, but for Christes name. Now what is it to runne from thys swéete promise of our most loning Sauiour, redemer, and onely mediatour Iesus Christ, to saintes, & to other workes, but a playne and an euident token of our infidelity, of our vnthankefulnes, yée that we thinke hym vntrue, and will not fulfill hys promise, yée that he is not able to do it, and to make hym a lyar, & vntrue in his worde. Also S. Paul sayth. He hath geuen his onely sonne for vs, how can it bee ỳ hée shall not geue all things with him: Marke he sayth with hym, & not with saints, he sayth all thinges, and not certaine things, hée that saith all, excludeth not the toth ake, & leaueth it to S. Appolyne. &c. but hée excludeth nothing.

Now you Infidelles and mistrusters of Christ, what will you haue of the father of heauen: or what cã your hartes desire, that Christ is not able to obtaine for you: if you beléeue him able. It is his office, and thereunto onely appointed of ỳ father, & none other, yea all other hée excluded wt manifest scriptures. Moreouer, will you or hée you so folish to aske a thing of one ỳ hath it not to géue, nor cã not geue it, yea hath néede of it hymselfe, & leaue hym that hath aboundaunce, yea and that hath made an open proclamation, that freely without goulde or siluer, or any marchandise, hée will géue the selfe same thing to as many as come and aske of him, whatsoeuer they bée. Now the Lord hath not alonely godnes, but hée is all godnesse himselfe: and all Saintes haue sinned and néede of his godnes: and he hath made this proclamation by his blessed and euerlasting worde, that whosoeuer commeth vnto hym, shall haue of his godnes aboundauntly: now will you leaue him and goe to the saintes: the which if they euer had any godnes, they receaued it of the father, as S. James sayth: All good giftes cõmeth from the father of lyght. Marke how hée sayth all good giftes.

If wee aske in Christes name wee shal obteine but so shall wee not in any other name.

Luke. 18.

Iaco. 1.

But here haue you a distinction, ỳ onely God is good of his own nature, and Saintes are good by receauinge godnesse of him. Well to doe you a pleasure, I will allow your distinctiõ to bée good, for of it can you make no more with all your subtiltie, but that Saintes haue no more godnes then they haue receaued. Now the godnes that they haue receaued, was for thẽselues onely, yea and they can géue none of it to you: for they receaued it not for you, but for themselues, yea and no more then was necessary for them, and that but alonely of mercy, as it is open in Mathewe in the parable of the fiue wise virgines, and the fiue folishe: where as the wyse vyr-

Saintes receaued Gods goodnes for thẽselues and not for vs.

gins

gins had not so much oyle to lend the foolishe virgins as would kindle their lampes: finally, they had nothing at all that they coulde spare them, and yet were they wise virgins, and yet were they Saints, and yet were they admitted to enter into heauen.

Farthermore, doe you not openly against God when you desire any thing of saintes, whether it bee prosperitie, wealth, health, remission of sinnes, or in aduersities consolatiõs, or comfortes, or any other thyng: seeing that Scripture onely knowledgeth all these thynges to bee receaued of him, and that hee is the onely geuer of them, yea and that all the prophets and fathers in all their tribulation cryed alonely to hym, as Dauid Psal. 119. testifieth of him selfe in these wordes, When I am troubled, I will cry vnto the Lord and hee will helpe me. Hee cryed not to any Saint to speake to God for him, but sayth: I will cry vnto the Lord, yea and hee doubted not that hee woulde not heare hym because hee was a man and a sinner, but faithfully said, hee will helpe mee, as hee testifieth in an other place, saying: my helpe is of God that hath Psal. 120. made heauen and earth.

Now will you runne from God, and aske of Saints, comforte, prosperitie, health, or wealth, or any other thyng: seeing it belongeth alonely to God to geue: seing hee alonely is the fountayne and auctor of all goodnes: and not Saintes which haue no more but their parte, and that, that is geuen vnto them. Also our Y. Christ teaching al creatures to pray, biddeth them not to goe to any other thynge, but alonely to the father of heauen, hee maketh no mention of Saintes, no not so much as to bee a meane betweene them and the father, but commaundeth them that pray, to pray thẽ selues to the father. The which thing I doubt not but hee would haue done if hee would that there shoulde haue beene other mediatour, or geuers of any goodnes. Moreouer is not this a madde manner of prayer that men vse to our Lady: O our father which art in heauẽ halowed be thy name. &c

Thus doe you learne men to mocke our Lady when you learne them to say our Ladyes Psalter. You infidels and mockers both of God & man, are you not ashamed of these open blasphemies? Doubt you not (if you call not for grace to ỹ Lord that you may amẽde yea and that shortly) but God shall straitly auẽge this blasphemy on you, hee hath suffered long & no doubt but of his infinite mercy. Notwithstãdyng I wil neuer beleue that hee wil much lẽger suffer, seeyng that hee hath brought so graciously his glorious beritie into the world and that so openly, and so clearely that you can not deny it nor withstand it, neither by reason, nor by learnyng: but your owne consciences bee confounded and marked with hote yrons, notwithstãdyng you persecute it by tyrannye to the increase of your damnation. Our Lord bee mercyful vnto you. But now that you may bee knowen what you bee, when you deceiue the people with these wordes fathers fathers, holy Doctours holy doctours: I shall recite certeine of your fathers and doctours sayinges, that you may be knowẽ not alonely open lyers and blasphemers of God and his blessed eternal word, but also of his holy saintes & fathers, vnto whom hee hath reuelated by the Scriptures his veritie.

A fond prayer made to our Lady.

First S. Augustine sayth these wordes. Let vs haue no deuotion in honoring of dead men, for if they lyued well, they may not be coũted for such men, as to desire such honours, but they will that God shall be honored of vs, by whose lightening they reioice, that we are made cõpaniõs of their glory. Wherefore Saintes must be honored by folowing them, but not by honoring thẽ of deuotyon &c. Bee not these plain wordes? S. Augustine was a father and a doctour, And hee sayth, ỹ saints will not bee honoured of vs, but that God shall bee onely honoured. Secondarily, we may folowe their godlyuing, and so honour them, but in no wise to pray to them, or honour them of deuotion. It foloweth in S. Augustine, wherfore we doe honour them, August. de vera relig. cap. 55.

The right honoring of Saintes.

by loue, or charitie, but not by seruice, nor we build no temples vnto them. For they wil not so be honored of vs, for they know well that we (if we bee good) bee the temples of God. Wherfore it is well written. That man was forbidden of the angell to worship hym, but all onely to worship one God, vnder whom the angell was also a seruanut &c. Can you desire any playner wordes then these? we cā no more doe but loue sayntes of charitie, but in no wise to serue them: we may also build no temples to the honour of them. Marke also how hee bringeth scripture for hym, how the Angell of God would not bee honored of man. How cā you auoyde this saying of S Augustine, & his example of scripture? Also Chrisostomes saying on this text, woman thy fayth is great. Doost thou see this woman which was vnworthy, but by her perseueraunce was made worthy? wilt thou learne also, that we praying vnto God in our owne persons, doe more profyt, then when other men doe praye for vs. This woman did crie, and the disciples came and praied him that he would speed her for shee cryeth on vs. But to them he aunswered, I am not sēt but vnto the sheepe whiche are perished of the house of Israell. But when shee came her self and did perseuer crying and saying, Yes lord, for the whelpes doe eate the crūmes that fall from their masters tables: then did he geue her the benefyt & said, bee it vnto the as thou wilt. Doost thou not se how he did repelle her, whē other men prayed for her? but when shee came her selfe and cried, hee did graunt her. Vnto them hee said. I am not sent but vnto the lost sheepe. But vnto the womā he sayth bee, it vnto thee as thou wilt. &c.

Apoc. 19. and. 22.

Mat. 15. tom 6. ho. de profect. Euange.

An authoritie declaration that Christ heareth vs for our selues and not the Apostles for vs.

Heare you not playnly how we do sooner obtayne our petityon of God our owne selfe, thē by any other mīdlers? Marke also how ỳ Apostles did pray for this woman, and they repelled: and shee was heard. Also the same Doctour wrighteth these wordes. We haue no need of Patrōs afore God, nor nede of much processe to speak fayre vnto other men, but though they be alone and wanteſt a patrō, but prayest God by thy selfe, yet for all that shalt thou haue thy desire. God doth not so lightly graūt, when other men pray for vs, as whē we pray our selfe, yea though we bee full of sinnes &c. Bee not these wordes playne, that we haue no neede of patrons? but God heareth vs soner, when we pray in our owne persons, then when other mē pray for vs. Wherefore they that make other mediators then onely Christ, doth mistrust Christ, and beleueth that he is not omnipotēt God, nor mercifull Lord, and therefore flye they vnto this Saint, and vnto that Saint, trusting to fynde more mercy at their handes, then they could fynde at Christes. But a trew Christen man leaueth his fantesye, and remembreth these wordes of holy scripture. Heare thou mā, I am thy God, and therfore he setteth all his trust, and his confidence, all his belief, all his hope, all his harton him onely. And if he wil haue any thing necessary to body, or soule of him, hee asketh it all onely, as the prophet Dauid learneth vs saying, I will pray vnto the Lord, and in the morning thou shalt here my voyce, what is this in the morning but shortly, quickly. Thou art so mercyfull, that thou wilt not prolong the tyme, but shortly here me. And therefore when I am in any distres of body, or soule, to thee I call for deliuerāce, and trust to obtayne it of thee onelye. For thou Lord, thou hast set me, in thy hope onely.

We neede no patrons for God heareth.

Psal. 5.

Psal. 4.

Thus doth euery good man pray & trust in God, for hee taketh him not alonely for his God but also for his merciful God, yea and for his father, which will deny him nothing. But cō trarywise doe the infidels and the fained Christen men, for they mistruste hym and recken him to bee a tyraunt and a terrible and a fearefull Judge, which loketh for much intercession, and that regardeth persons, and therfore runne they hither and thither, to seeke an other mediatour, to seeke an other helper, to seke an other deliuerer then Christ: for with him be they not satisfied, yea they recke him to be so proude and so stately, and so cruell and so hygh, that they dare not speake first to him, nor desire him, for they clearely mistrust him, that is the lume therof. And for that cause seeke they to this Saint, and to that Saint, and desire of one riches, of an other health: of one they will holpen to heauen, & of an other they will be deliuered frō hel. Of one they wil haue frēdshyp of this worlde, of an other long lyfe, of one they will be saued from sicknes, of an other they wil be made whole, & all this is bycause they mistrust Christ, & recke ỳ he is either not able, or that he wil not obtaine these thinges for them. This is the very grounde of their hartes, let them lye with their mouthes what they will, & of this are they compelled to flye frō Christ. Is not this making of many Godes? S. Paule saith that in couetousnes is Idolatrie, bycause that mās hart is of his goodes, how much more is here Idolatrie whereas mās faith, hope, and trust is set so much on creatures. Trueth it is that Saintes be holy, and worthy to be beloued in in Christ, and for Christ, but yet be they but creatures, and no Godes. I loue them as wel as you doe & praise and magnifie them, but wherfore? by cause they haue Christ in them which is the author of all goodnes whiche if he were away, I would spit at them and despise thē. But I doe not make them Christ (that is my Sauiour, my redeemer, my cōforter my trust & my hope) bycause ỳ Christ of his mercy & of his grace dwelleth in them, but I seke alonely to him ỳ hath made thē holy, & hath also alonely power both me and all men likewise to make.

If we mistrust not Christe, there is no cause why we should runne a gadding to this Saint for any thyng that is necessary for vs.

Saints are holy, but yet are they no Godes.

Wherfore deare brethren, if you wyll be Christes, make hym alonely your mediatour and your intercessour to the father of heauen, and all thynges that you desire, desire them in hys name onely. Make hym first your frende, and then haue you all Saintes on your side. For they can not chuse but be your frends. Wher fore, set all your trust, hope and confidence in Christ onely, and directe all your desires, all your petitions, all your prayers vnto hym onely. And as for Saintes, you shall loue them, fauour them, and magnifie them, & praise them for Gods sake, and to Gods honour: and where they lined well after Christes worde, therein shall you folow them, but in no wyse shall you beleeue, hope, or trust in them, or make any prayers vnto thē, or desire any petition of them: nor their lyuing shall be any rule to lyue by farther then they folowed ỳ word of Christ, for you be cauled Christen men of Christ, and not of Saintes.

Christ is our onely intercessor.

But now will I answere to their carnall reasons. First they haue a lawe whose wordes be these: Christen men doe not call worshipfull Images Gods, nor they doe not serue them as Gods, nor they set no hope of their saluation in them, nor they doe not loke for of them the indgement that is to come: but they doe worshipe them, and effectually pray vnto them in remembraunce and recordation of the first fruits, but they doe not serue them, nor yet any other creature with godly honour. &c.

The Papistes carnall reasōs.

Let euery Christen man consider well in his conscience the wordes of this lawe, and call also to remembraunce what God is hymselfe? that is to say, how omnipotent he is, how liberall he is, how mercifull he is, how gracious he is vnto vs: and thē I thinke he shall well perceaue, that this decree is neyther made wyth faith, with learning, nor yet with reason, but an open blasphemy agaynst God, and a great mistrusting of our mercifull maister Christ Iesus. Briefly there is nothing, but an heape of blinde and vnfaithfull wordes, inuēted to beguile simple men thereby.

God onely is omnipotent and almighty.

To the first worde venerabiles, what faith, what learning, what reason will that Images shoulde be iudged worthy veneration (this doth ỳ latin worde venerabiles signifie) seing they be but deafe, dumme and dead, what reason is it then to call them venerabiles? Maister Doctour Rydley will say that no mā is so mad to worship and to honour the stocke and the stone, and yet his owne law calleth them venerabiles, that is as much to say as worthy to bee worshipped & honoured. Call you them one thing by name, and recken them unworthy in deede? It followeth, Christen men call them no Gods, what nede these wordes? All the worlde knoweth that they bee no Goddes in deede: But then why call you them venerabiles?

Farthermore, I would knowe of all my maisters ỳ lawyers, why they bee such blasphemers of God, such infidelles, and such mortall enemyes unto God, as to suffer, yea and to compell simple men, to geeue to those stockes and stones such exteriour honour, as belongeth onely to God, seeing you call them no Goddes? What maketh it matter for ỳ name, so long as you geeue them the very thynge? Assigne you what exteriour worshipping and honouring belongeth to God, or that wee may doe or can doe to God, and I will prowe that yee compell men to geeue that same to stocks and stones, and yet you thinke your selues sufficiently discharged, because that men call them no gods. It followeth: they set no hope in thē. Then what neede men to pray unto them? what neede men to aske petitions of them? what neede men to offer unto them? what neede men to bowe to them? what neede men to runne to them barefooted and barelegged, and to kisse them and licke them? doe they aske that thyng of them which they haue no hope to receauee by them? then doe they mocke them.

The Papistes geeue the saints ỳ worshyp to stockes and stones that we should geue to God.

It followeth, but they pray unto thē and worship them, how thinke you by this? You say they be no Godes & yet men pray unto them & worship them, adde to this that the Latine word signifieth as much as to aske forgeuenes of them, and fully and effectually to pray to them. If this stād with sayth, and with the honour of God, let euery Christen mā iudge. But how standeth it with your decree, where in you call them no Godes? this is as much to say as you bee very hypocrites and dissemblers with God and man, for you say one thing in wordes and compell the people to doe the contrary in deedes, that is to honour them as Godes. Is not this contrary to these wordes of Scripture, thou shalt honour thy Lorde God and serue hym onely?

Marke the holy ghost sayth, Thou shalt serue God onely. Here is the selfe Latin word, adorare, that your decree hath, Scripture will it shall all onely bee geuen to God, and you will geue it to your worshypfull Images. Marke also the occasion that our Ꝑ. Christ spake these wordes. The deuil required that hee should fall downe and honour him, hee required no faith nor no hope on him, nor yet that hee should make any prayers, or desire any petition of him, or licke or kisse his foote, or make any oblation to him, but alonely to fall downe, and so with exteriour seruice to honor him. but our maister sayd that ỳ belongeth alonely to God, & neither to the deuill nor yet to your worshipful images. Now say of your conscience doe not you that same thing to your stockes & stones, that the deuil required of our maister Christ? how can you auoyde thys? but now commeth your glose with a distinction and will learne our maister Christ how that hee shall honour the deuill, and excuse hym with an idle and a damnable distinction, whose woordes bee these: there is cultus latriæ, which includeth three things in him, loue, multitude of sacrifice, and veneration: this belongeth onely to God saith hee. There is an other worshipping which is cauled dulia, & thys hath but one thing in him, that is veneration, and it hath neither loue nor multitude of sacrifice in it, and thys belongeth to all creatures. &c. What bee these but an heape of idle wordes without any sentence inuented of the deuill to deceaue simple men.

Math. 4.

Glosa de cō. sec. Dist. 3. c Venerabiles.

Here saye you that Cultus Latriæ which includeth loue, multitude of sacrifyce, and veneration, belongeth to God onely. Tell mee of your cōscience, are you not ashamed of these wordes?

Feare

Fere you not the vengeance of God? that thus mocke and trifle both with God and man? There can be nothing more agaynst you then these wordes bée. For fyrst do you not loue your Images, and your sayntes? Secondarilye doe you not offer vnto them? cal you that no sacrifice? yea it is so much that you can hange no more on them. Thyrdly, doe not you geue veneratiõ vnto them, yea, and that with al your hartes? or els bée you hipocrites and dissẽblers. So that you geue to your stockes and stones, Cultum Latrie, which by your owne distinction belongeth to God onely. How can you now auoyde Idolatrie? Now to the seconde parte of your distinction, you say that you do to saintes, & to all creatures ẏ worshippyng of Dulya, which is without loue, and without the multitude of sacrifice. What cal you this? what meane you by this? what worshipping is this that is without loue, and without sacrifice? Is not this opẽ hipocrisye to honor a thing outwardlye, and neather to loue it, nor to fauor it inwardly? nor yet to offer any sacrifice vnto it? this is nothing els but open mocking, and I may well compare you vnto the wicked Iewes that crouched, & knéeled vnto Christ, but they did it neyther of loue, nor fauour, but of mockage, as you doe honour your sayntes, and Images. This commeth all wayes to thẽ that will mocke, and trifle with gods holy word, that whẽ they thinke to auoyde it with a damnable distinction, then is it most agaynst them, so that all christẽ men may sée, that the hand of God is heare. Also an other baulde reasõ you haue, which is of M. Rychard. If saintes when they were here, and not confirmed in grace, did of their charitie pray for vs. Therefore now must they pray much more, seing they are now confyrmed in charitie &c.

The blindnes & ignoraunce of the malicious Papistes.

Math. 27.

De media Gilla. 4. sent

Is not this a godly bauld reason to cast at a byshops eare? How can hée proue this? what scripture hath hée for hym? I heare well his carnall reason, but I heare no probation, I will make him a lyke reason. The sayntes when they weare heare, did of their charitie cloth naked men, and fede the hungrey, and gaue drinke to ẏ thirsty, and visited them that were in prison: therefore much more now, for they be confyrmed in charitie, and these bée dédes of charitie.

A papistical reason, well aunswered & confuted.

Lykewise. S. Paule when he was heare, dyd of hys charitie, wryte epistelles to declare the beretie, therefore now must hée much more wryte: so ẏ, where afore hée wrot but one epistell, now must hée at ẏ least write three, or els hée is not confyrmed in charitie. & I thinke hée dyd neuer a greater dede of charitie, then now to wright an epistell, and to declare his owne pistels, for all the world is at variaunce, for vnderstãding of them. You blynd gydes, who hath learned you to declare, wherein the charitie of sayntes doth stande? who hath geuẽ you auctoritie, to geue a dédde of charitie vnto sayntes, that scripture doth not geue. Wherfore is it a dédde of charitie for one to pray for an other? is there any other cause then that the holy Ghost so declared it in his word? Wherfore that is charitie in this lyke, that the worde of God byddeth you doe, and as for the workes that charitie shall haue in an other lyke, it belongeth not to you to iudge farther then the word of God.

Also you haue an other reasõ, God sheweth myracles in this place, and in that place, to the honouring of this sayne, and that sayne, therefore we must lykewise honour them. I aunswere as to your myracles, though I haue aunswered to them béfore, yet will I adde this vnto it, that God is no God of superstition, nor that fauoreth one place more then an other, or that hath any affectiõ to this place, more then to that, wherefore this is your superstition inuented of the deuill, for God will neyther bé honored in the mountayne, nor yet in Ierusalem, but in mens hartes. And as to your myracles the great Godes Diana did also myrackles, as you may reade in scripture, consyder her honour, that scripture speketh of, and compare it to the honour of your Images, & you may sée they doe agrée. Farthermore Apollo, Castor, Aescu lapius and such other did also greate myracles, as stories doe make mention, and also many men which were both wyse, well learned, and also ma ny men of a great reputation and honour as you bée, yea and mẽ of great holynes doe beare witnesse of ẏ same. Therfore by this reason we must also honour them. Also an other reason you haue out of Job. Conuert thy selfe vnto some of the sayntes. Of this you conclude that we must pray vnto sayntes. I aunswere of this you may conclude that you bee blinde, and dull Asses, and vnlearned stockes, peruerters, tearers, renters, of holy scripture. I pray you what sayntes dyd ẏ old fathers know before Christes comming? whom did they recken to be in heauen before Christes assention? why did they desyer so sore his cumming if they beléeued that they should haue ascended vp to heauen? But this is the sentence of that place, Elephas reproued Job, and sayth ẏ hée is not Gods seruaunt, and therefore God punished him sayth hée, and to prowe this hée biddeth Job call to memory all holy men, and seruaunts of God, and recken one if hée can among them all, whom God did so punish: wherefore hée concludeth that Job is not the seruaunt of God, but a folyshe man (which in Scripture is the enemye of God) whom God shall slaye in his wrath. This is the sentence of that place.

Job. 5.

Papistes are wrestars of the scriptures of God.

Fynallye you haue an other reson, you shall praise God in his sayntes, therefore sayntes must bée honoured. I aunswere is not this a good consequent? I must praise God in Beares and Apes, therefore Beares, & Apes, must bée worshipped. Adde that ẏ followeth in ẏ tert, you must praise God in timbrels, in organs and in ppes, therefore after your consequent timbrels, organs, and ppes, must bée worshipped, but if you weare learned in scriptures, you should fynde an other sentence in the holy Psalme then this is for the very trewe tert is Laudate dominum in sanctitate sua. Praise God in his his holynes, but let vs graunt that hée sayth, praise God in his sayntes, doe not you knowe that scriptures say, blessed is God in all his giftes? out of this can not follow that we shall worship, and pray to Gods giftes, but God shall bée prayed, and honoured in all his giftes, as in saint, man, and Angell.

Psal. 150.

A foolishe & papisticall argument well aunswered.

An other reason you haue of a similitude: Like as a mã can not come to the speach of a kyng, but that hée must haue certayne mediatoures, (as Dukes, Erles, and such men as hée in fauour betwéen him and the king) that may entreate his matter: So likewise béefore God. I aunswere: you Infidelles and mistruster of God, what will you make of God? will you make him a fleshely and a carnall stocke, full of passions and of affections? Unto a mortall Prince you make mediatours bécause hee knew not your hart, and bécause hée is more affectionat to one man thẽ to an other, and beecause hee iudgeth after the sight of hys eye, and after ẏ percialnes and affection of his hart. But so doth not God, but alonely of mere mercy and grace. But to your similitude: you can not haue no Dukes to speake for you, excepte you géue them rewardes, excepte they haue carnall affection to you: therfore by your similitude you must likewyse doe to Saintes.

A foolishe reason of ẏ papistes.

But S. Ambrose answereth clearly to this damnable reason of yours, saying: Men are wonte to vse thys miserable excusation, that by these thinges may wee come to God, as we may come to the kyng by Erles. I aunswere, wee doe come vnto the kyng, by the meanes of Dukes and Erles, beecause that the kyng is a man, and knoweth not to whom hee may committe the common wealth, but vnto God (from whom nothing can bee hidde) hee knoweth all mens merites, wee neede no spokesman nor no mediatour but alonely a deuoute mynde. &c.

your lawe, that Images bee vnto vnlearned men, that same thyng that letters and writinges bée vnto them that bee learned, that they may thereby learne what they ought to folow.

Images are no more to bee worshipped thē the bookes that learned men reade.

If your Images bee no more to vnlearned men then writinges be to learned men, therefore they may no more doe to them then learned men doe to their letters: woulde you suffer learned men to come and kneele, and offer to my booke, and sette vp candels before it, and to make vowes to come yearely thereunto: and to desire petitiōs before my booke of those Saintes ẏ bée written therein & bée how your owne example maketh agaynst you, and all thing that I can bringe. Wherefore, if there bée any grace in you, or if there bée any shame in you of the worlde, for Christes sake leaue of this false learnyng and colouring of Idolatrie. For you doe not onely deceaue your simple brethren, but you doe also blaspheme the immortall God of heauen, which doubtles will auenge shortly this rebuke on you, if you doe not amende: whose violēce and might you are not able to withstand. Wherefore I exhorte you in ẏ blessed name of Christ Iesus, that you repent in tyme, and take vpon you to learne the veritie: which is, how God is onely to bée honoured, and onely to bée sacrificed vnto, bée is onely to bée prayed vnto, of hym onely must our petitions bee asked, it is bée onely ẏ gœueth wealth & prosperitie, & bée only must deliuer and comforte vs in all aduersities, & bée onely must helpe vs out of all distresse: vnto whom as Saint Paule sayth, be alonely glory and honour for euer. Amen.

1. Tim. 1.

Now most excellent and noble Prince, I haue here after the power gifte that God hath gœuen mée set out vnto your grace certain articles, which though they séeme at the firste sight to bee newe, yet haue I prowed them openly with the euerlastynge worde of God, and that not wronge, nor wrested after my lyghte brayne, but after the exposition of clarkely doctours, yea and that of the oldest & of the best. Wherfore most excellent Prince, most humbly, & most mékely I beséeche your grace, that I may finde so great indifferencie at your graces hand, as that the Byshoppes shall not condemne this booke, after the maner of their olde tyranny: excepts they can with open Scriptures and with holy Doctours, refell it as I haue prowed it.

Doctour Barnes conclusion.

But I would it should please your grace to call them bœfore you, and to commaunde as many as will condemne this booke, euery one of them seuerally without others counsell, to write their cause, why they will condemne it, and the scriptures whereby they will condemne it, and to bryng them all to your grace, and your grace may iudge betwéene both parties.

I doe not doute but they wil bring your grace marualous probations, and such as were neuer bearde. And if thrée of them agrée in one tale (if they bée deuided) let mée dye for it, and that your grace shall well sée.

The father of heauen and hys most mercifull sonne Iesus Christ, kéepe your grace in honour, to his pleasure and glory. Amen.

IAmes the brother of the Lorde, as cconernyng the flesshe, vnto whom was firste cõmitted the Church of Ieruſalem, & Baſilius the Byſhop of Cæſaria gaue vnto vs the celebration of the Maſſe. Sayth the gloſe, that is to ſay the manner how to celebrate ỳ Maſſe. For the wordes by the which the body is made, were deliuered frõ the Lord him ſelfe. But afterward. others alſo added ſome one peece, ſome an other, for comlynes, and ſolemnitie. And thus much ſayth hée.

Good Chriſtian reader what can theſe men, wholy addicted to lyes, otherwiſe doe, but beguile & deceaue. For this is their onely endeuour, whiche although it may bée manifeſt vnto thée by many of their déedes, not withſtanding by this one (of ỳ which they ſo greatly boaſt) it is ſo manifeſt that none cã deny it. To attribute the originall of the Maſſe vnto Iames the Apoſtle and to Baſilius ỳ biſhop, is an errour not to bée ſuffered, for aſmuch as it is moſt falſe, as by that which foloweth ſhall appeare.

Let them declare (if they can) what Iames made thereof, and what Baſill added thereto: Let them bring forth one of the Apoſtles that euer ſayd Maſſe, & they ſhal haue ỳ victory. Ieames died about the yeare of our Lord 62. And of Maſſe (as they vnderſtand it) there was no mention made in the Churche by the ſpace of 200. yeares. Moreouer then this, Baſill dyed about the yeare after Chriſt 380. How then could hée agrée with Iames aboute the Maſſe? But what Maſſe had the Church from after the death of Iames vnto Baſiles tyme? & by what authoritie did Baſill deliuer to vs ỳ maſſe? Moreouer theſe mẽ doe adde their auctoritie out of the vj. Synode, that their lye might bée the more notorious. Bring forth the vj. Synode in the whiche theſe thinges bée written. I pray you what was handled in the vj. Synode, The maner of celebrating Maſſe? Or agaynſt whom was ỳ vj. Synode gathered togither? agaynſt thoſe ỳ would not ſay Maſſe? Nothyng leſſe: but agaynſt ſuch as wickedly taught that there was one operation in Chriſt: Read the actes of the Synode and you ſhall finde it to bée ſo. But let vs graũt in the meane ſeaſon that this was handled in ỳ Synode, what doth it proue. We do not contende what matters were intreated of in the Synode: but whether Ieames and Baſill deliuered vnto vs the maner of celebrating the Maſſe. How doth the vj. Sinode proue this: Of this is our contention. Where hence was the vj. Synode certified that Iames and Baſill deliuered the Maſſe? Their writinges and workes remaine amongeſt vs, in the whiche there is not founde one ſillable to bée read as concerning the Maſſe. Moreouer the vj. Synode was in Greece, who vnto this day doe varye frõ our manner of celebrating. Wherefore it muſte néedes bée that either wée or they doe erre from the ordinaunce of S. Iames. But what ſaye you to this? The vj. Sinode was celebrated after the yeare of Chriſt. 674. Before this tyme, of whom toke you the manner of celebratyng? not of the tradition of Ieames, for ỳ was as yet vnknowen to the world, & now firſt of all was it by ỳ Synode opened to ỳ world. But that this matter may bée the better knowen vnto all the world, I will ſet agaynſt you the auctoritie of S. Gregory who ſayth that the Apoſtles had no peculiar maner in celebratyng the Maſſe, but that they onely ſayd the Lordes prayer. Whoſe wordes bée theſe. The maner of ỳ Apoſtles was, that onely at the ſaying of the Lordes prayer they conſecrated the Sacrament. Thus ſayth Gregory, where is now the tradition of Ieames? S. Gregory knew it not. For I speake of your Masse as it is pacted and not of thee wordes of Christ.

Gayne and aduauntage maketh the Masse to bee the better loued of Papistes.

But that I may briefly finishe this matter. Because the masse is so deare vnto you (and that for good cause, sithens by it you fill your bellyes, you keepe horses and dogges, you consecrate harlots to Venus, and many other such kynde of good workes,) and yet bee vncertaine of the auctor, I wil describe vnto you the authors of your patched Masse and that out of your owne writers, lest that you should obiect vnto mee that I am a Lutheran.

Cronic. cro. Fasci. temp. First of all Pope Gregory, surnamed the Great, held a generall Councell at Rome about ỹ yeare of Christ. 594. in the whiche hee ordeined the Entrance or Introite of the Masse, to bee begon with some Psalme.

Introitus.

Kirieleyson Hee added moreouer that Kyrieleison should bee song ir. tymes.

Hee also added in the Cannon of the Masse, Diesq; nostros in tua pace disponas, vnto these wordes, Per Christum Dominum nostrum.

Diesq; nostros.

Pater noster. Hee likewise added Pater noster.

Fasc. temp. Orationes. Tractus. Pope Gelasius adioyned the Prayers, Hymnes, and Tractes about the yeare of Christ. 482.

Cronic. cro. Gloria in excelsis. Pope Thelesphorus appointed that the Gospell and Gloria in excelsis, should bee songe, about the yeare of Christ. 134.

Cronic. cro. Pope Symmacus enlarged Gloria in excelsis, for first they had nothyng more then that was in the Euangelist. Hee liued about the yeare. 494.

Cronic. cro. Fasci. temp. Pope Marcus appointed that vpō Festiuall dayes immediatly after the Gospell, ỹ Nicene Crede should bee song with a loude voice by the Quier and the people, about the yeare. 334.

Nicene Creede.

Bern. Abbas de officio Missæ. This prayer, Veni sanctificator omnipotens eterne Deus, whiche is sayd ouer the host, was taken frō the Frēch order. Moreouer these wordes, Suscipe sancta Trinitas, was onely taken by custome, and not by the ordinaunce of any Pope.

Cronic cro. Fasci. temp. Sanctus. Pope Sixtus ỹ first ordeined that, Sanctus, should bee song iy. tymes in the Masse, about the yeare. 124.

Ratio. di. Cronic. cro. Fasci. temp. Pope Gelasius ordeined, Te igitur clemētissime pater, and appointed that the Priestes should say the Secretes, the Cannon, and the Prefaces with their armes stretched abroad, bee lyued about the yeare. 482.

Doct. Crātz.

Fasci. temp. Sanctum sacrificium. Pope Leo the great, added vnto ỹ Canon, Hanc igitur oblationem, & sanctum sacrificium, immaculatam hostiam, about the yeare. 444.

Croni. cro. Fasci temp. Quorum solemnitas. Pope Gregory the thyrd adioyned, Quorum solemnitas hodie in conspectu diuinæ maiestatis tuæ celebratur, Domine, Deus noster, about the yeare. 754

Cronic. cro. Pope Celestine the first appoynted that the Psalmes of Dauid should bee song in maner of an Antheme of all ỹ people before the sacrifice which was not wont to bee done. For after the Epistle and Gospel were read the sacrifice was ended. Hee liued about the yeare of Christ. 424.

Cronic. cro. Ratio. diui. Qui pridie quam pateretur. Fasci. temp. Agnus Dei. Pope Alexander the first added, Qui pridie quam pateretur. Hee lyued about the yeare. 114.

Pope Sergius the first ordeyned that, Agnus Dei, shoulde bee song three tymes whilest the Sacrament of Christes body was in breakyng, about the yeare of Christ. 694.

Cronic. cro. The first Latin Masses were song by Iohn Bysshop of Portuence in the vj. generall Councell of Constantinople, about the yeare. 674.

Behold Christen Reader, here nowe hast thou their Masse as it is patched togither and the authours of euery part thereof, whiche our Papistes so wickedly defende to bee a sacrifice. Neither is it any meruaile, if they doe with teth and nayle defende a thyng so deare, so laborious and that hath beene so longe tyme a makyng. This I dare boldly affirme that that magnificent Temple of Salomon was in a greate deale lesser tyme builded, then this Isopes crow was decked with hys borowed feathers. Neither yet would I haue thee to forgette the Decrée of the Pope which prouyeth that Masse was ordained by James and Basill. I praye thée, take away all that whiche was added by these fathers and what then is remaynyng to the Masse? What is lefte that James deliuered, or that Basill commended vnto them? Nothyng at all but the very wordes of Christe. Thus doe these good fathers set them selues agaynst the manifest trueth of God. But what shall bée their glory and reward thou shalt sée, if thou wilt leasurably lysten and beholde to the ende of the tragedye. The Lord shall speake with them in his anger and in his heate shall feare them. When hée shall ware hoate in hys sodayne displeasure, then euill shall it bée with these gyauntes, and well shall befall to all that trust in the Lord who may illuminat the hart of the faythfull. Amen.

A generall collection out of Doctour Barnes Woorkes of all the testimonyes, auncient fathers, Councels, and of the Popes owne lawes, alleaged by hym to prooue these articles folowyng, in the maner of a Table or rather an Epitome of all his woorkes that hee hath made.

A Preface of T. G. to the Reader.

FOrasmuch as Maister Doctor Barnes in the first Edition of his Englishe workes, whiche were first corruptlye Printed beyonde the Seas, had collected at the ende thereof all the testimonyes of the Doctours, Councelles, and of the Popes lawes, which he had beefore alleaged, and were confusely myngled with the Table by the order of the Alphabete: and whereas it was thought more expedient by the aduise of the learned, and for the better edifying of the Reader, to haue those testimonyes for euery article collected seuerally by thē selues: I haue therefore accordyng to my simple skill, gathered this Epitome, and haue added also thereunto foure other articles translated into Englishe out of hys Booke De Doctorum Sententijs, whiche bee confirmed in the lyke sorte onely by bare testimonyes of scriptures, fathers, coūcels, & lawes. Which foure articles, and the treatise beefore of the originall of the Masse, were omitted in hys Englisli workes. But as for all the other testimonies in his booke De Doctorū Sententijs, hee hath in this volume of his workes dispersedly alleaged most of them to his purpose, as hee had occasion, which by this Epitome folowing thou mayest perceaue. Now hast thou gentle reader to consider of these auncient testimonyes: desiring thee for the cōfirming and establishyng of thy doubtfull conscience, to compare these sayinges of Doctors, holy fathers, and of the Popes own law, vnto the saying of the Pope and his Papisticall byshops, that bee in these latter dayes, and to their late practises, where their power is, or hath beene receaued: and then geeue sentence howe they doe agree. If they doe accorde, then is it lyke they bee of the true Church, whereof these holy fathers were. But if they agree not, then mayest thou suspect, that they haue gone astray, and that the deuill hath transfigured hym selfe into an Aungell of light, and that they are his ministers. Who notwithstandyng haue fashioned them selues as though they were the ministers of righteousnes, whose end shall bee accordyng to their deedes.

¶ That

¶ That faith onely iustifieth.

Ambr. ad Rom. 3. AMbrose sayth, they are iustefyed freely, for they doeing nothing, nor nothing deserning, all onely by fayth are iustefied, by the gyft of God.

Fol. 230. col. 1.

Ambr. super Rom. 4. Ambrose sayth, It was so decreed of God, that after the lawe, hee should require vnto saluation all onely the fayth of grace, hee sayth, that they bee blessed, of whom God hath determined wout labour, without all manner of obseruation, all onely by fayth that they shall bee iustefyed before God. Blessed are they whose sinnes are forgeuen Cleare ly: they are blessed, vnto whō without labour, or without any worke their iniquities bee remitted, and their synnes couered, and no manner of workes required of them, but all onely that they should beleeue. 231. col. 1

Super Rom. 2. Athanasyus sayth, there are two maner of faythes, one is iustefying, as ỹ of the which it is spoken, thy fayth hath saued thee: An other is cauled the gift of God, whereby myracles bee done, of the which it is written, if you haue fayth as a graine of mustard seede.

241. col. 1.

Atha. super Galat. 3. Athanasyus sayth, Nowe doth the Apostle playnely showe, that fayth all onely hath vertue in hym to iustifie: and bryngeth Abacuke saying of fayth (and not of the law) shall a righteous man lyue. Hee addeth well beefore God, for beefore man peraduenture they shall bee reckened righteous that sticke to the law, but not beefore God. &c. 233. col. 1

Aug. in proh. psal. 31. Augustine saith, those same workes ỹ bee done beefore fayth, thoughe they seeme vnto men laudable, are yet but vayne, and I doe iudge them as great strength and swift running out of the way. wherefore let no man count his good workes before fayth. where as fayth is not, there is no good worke, the ententiō maketh a good worke, but fayth doth guide the entention. &c.

233. col. 2

De spiri. & lit. cap. 12. Augustine sayth, we doe gather that a man can not bee iustefyed by the preceptes of good lyuing, that is, not by ỹ lawe of workes, but by that lawe of faith: not by the letter but by the spyte, not by the merites of workes, but by free grace. 234. col. 1

83. quest. c. 76. Augustine sayth, S. Paule affirmeth that a man may bee iustifyed by fayth, without any workes goyng before iustifycation, but when a man is iustifyed by fayth, how can hee but worke well, though ỹ he before working nothinge righteously, is now come to the iustifycation of fayth, not by merytes of good workes, but by the grace of God, the which grace in hym now can not bee Idle, seeing that now thorow loue hee worketh well. And if hee depart out of this worlde after that hee beleeueth, the iustifycation of fayth abydeth by hym, not by his workes going before iustifycation (for by his merites came hee not vnto that iustificatiō, but by grace) nor by his workes that followe iustefycation, for hee is not suffered to lyue in this lyfe. wherefore Paule and Iames are not contrary, for Paule speaketh of the workes that goe beefore fayth and Iames speaketh of the woorkes that followe the iustefycation of fayth.

238. col. 1

Augustine expoundinge the texte of ỹ Apostle Roma. 2. The doers of the law must bee iustifyed, sayth, so must it bee vnderstoode, that we may know, that they can no otherwise bee the doers of of the law, except they bee fyrst iustifyed: not that iustifycation belongeth to the doers, but that iustifycation doth proceede of all manner of doeing. De spiri. & lit.

240. col. 1

Barnarde sayth, I doe abhorre what so euer thinge is of mee, except peraduenture, that, that bee myne, that God hath made mee his. By grace hath hee iustifyed mee freely, and by that hath hee delinered mee, from the bondage of synne. Thou hast not chosen me saith Christ) but I haue chosen thee: not I found any merites in thee, that might moue mee to chuse thee, but I preuented all thy merytes. wherefore thus by fayth I haue maried thee vnto me, and not by the workes of the lawe. I haue maried thee also in iustice, but not in the iustice of the lawe, but in that iustice which is of fayth. 233. col. 2 Super can. ser. 67.

Popes law sayth, Cornelius centurio being a heathen man was iustifyed by the gift of the holy Ghost. 240. col. 2 2. quest. 7. non omnes Episcopi.

¶ What the Church is: and who bee thereof, and whereby men may know her.

AVgustine saith, of Christ is ỹ church made fayre, fyrst was shee fylthy in synnes, afterward by pardon, and by grace De verb. Domi. ser. 50.

grace was thee made sayre. 244. col. 1

Auguſt. ſer. 99 de tempore. Auguſtine sayth, The holy church are we, but I doe not say we as one should say we that bee here alonely, that heare me now, but as many as bee here faith full Chriſten men in this Church, that is to say in this Citie: as many as bee in this region: as many as bee beyond the Sea. &c. 245. col. 1

Lyranus in Mat. cap. 19. Lyranus sayth, The Churche doth nodstand in men, by reason of spiritu-all power, or secular dignities: For ma ny Princes and many Popes, & other inferiour persons haue swarued from the sayth. wherefore that Church doth stand in those persons in whom is the true knowledge and cõfeſſion of faith, and of veritie. &c. 245. col. 1

Auguſt. de verbis Apoſtoli. ſer. 19. Auguſtine sayth, The whole Church sayth, forgeue vs our sinnes, wherfore shee hath spottes and wrinckles, but by knowledgyng of them, her wrinck-les bee extended and stretched out, by knowledgyng, her spottes are washed away. 246. col. 1

Auguſtinus Auguſtine sayth, Our holy mother the Churche throughout all the world scattered far and long, in her trew head Chriſt Jeſus taught, hath learned not to feare the contumelyes of the Croſſe nor yet of death: but more and more is shee strengthned not in reſiſtyng but in sufferyng. &c. 250. col. 2

De con. D. D. 4. c. prima igitur. The Popes law sayth, Therfore is the Church holy, because shee beleueth righteouſly in God. &c. 246. col. 2

De pene. Diſ. 2. Si in gloſa. 23. q. 1. A recta & in gloſa. The Popes law sayth, The whole Church can not erre. Also in an other place of the congregation of faythfull men muſt needes bee, which also cã not erre. &c. 247. col. 2

¶ That the keyes of the Churche bee the woorde of God and not mans power.

Hiero. in M. c. 16. Hierome sayth vppon these wordes, I shall geue thee the keyes of heauẽ. This place, the Byſhops & the Prieſts not vnderſtanding haue vſurped vnto them somewhat of the Phariſeis pride, so that they thinke that they may con-demne innocentes, and looſe them that bee guiltie: whẽ beefore God, not the sen tence of the Prieſt, but the lyfe of the gil tie is regarded. &c. 257. col. 2

Auguſt. ſer. 2. de ſanc. Auguſtine sayth, That muſt bee cal-led a key where by the hardnes of our hartes are opened vnto sayth, & where by ỹ secretnes of myndes are made ma niſeſt. A key it is (sayth hee) the whiche doth both open the conſcience to the knowledge of sinne, and also includeth grace, vnto the wholsomnes of euer-lasting miſtery. &c. 258. col. 1

Chriſo. in M. c. 15. De doctr. chriſtia. li. 1. c. 15. & 18. This doth Chriſoſtome well proue in these wordes. The key is the word & the knowledge of Scriptures, wher by the gate of veritie is opened vnto men. &c. 261. col. 1

Super Io. Auguſtine doth also witnes the same saying. These keyes hath hee geuen to the Church, that what shee byndeth in in earth shall bee bounde in heauẽ, and what shee looſeth in earth shal bee loo-sed in heauen: that is say, who soeuer doth not beleeue that his sinnes bee for geuen hym in the Church, they bee not forgeuen hym: But hee that doth be-leeue, and auerte hym selfe from hys sinnes, beyng within the Churche by that same sayth and amendement is he made whole. &c. 261. col. 1

Origenes Super. M. Ho. 1. Origene vpon these wordes Tu es Pe-trus. &c. The wordes were spoken vn-to Peter, vnto all Apoſtles, vnto all maner of perfect saythfull men (for all they are Petrus) and in all them is buil-ded the Church of Chriſt, and agaynſt none of them can the gates of hell pre-uayle. Dooſt thou reckẽ that the keyes of heauen were alonely geuen to Pe-ter, and that no other Chriſten mã dyd receaue them. &c. 261. col. 2

Super Ioan. Trac. 124. c. 21. Auguſtine doth also teſtifie the same in these wordes. wherfore the Church whiche is founded and grounded in Chriſt, of hym hath receiued in Peter the keyes of heauẽ, that is, to say pow-er to bynde and looſe. &c. 261. col. 2

In M. c. 23. Chriſoſtome sayth, The key bearers are Prieſtes, vnto whom is commit-ted the word to teach, and to interprete Scripture. &c. 262. col. 2

Li. de Cain & Abell. Ambroſe sayth, Sinnes bee forgeuẽ by the word of God, whoſe interpre-ter is the Deacon. &c. 262. col. 2

Chriſo. ſ. 6. de anathe-mate. Chriſoſtome sayth, Behold I see mẽ that haue no trew sence of holy Scrip-ture: yea they vnderſtand nothyng at all therof: & to paſſe ouer many things, for I am aſhamed to call them madde men, triflers and wranglers, they bee such as know not what they say, nor of what thyng they speake, but alonely bee they mightye and bolde to make lawes, and to curse and cõdemne thoſe thynges, of the whiche they know no-thyng at all. &c. 265. col. 2

24. q. 1. Quodcũq; The Popes law sayth, If Peter haue power alonely to bynde and to looſe, then doth it not the Church: But if this bee done in the Church, then did Peter whẽ hee receaued the keyes, sig-nifie holy Church. &c. 261. col. 2

¶ That

¶That free will of man, after the fall of Adam of his naturall strēgth, can doe nothyng but sinne beefore God.

Super Ioannem tract. lxxi.

AVgustine sayth, Lest any mā should suppose, that the braunche of hym selfe could bryng forth, at ỹ lest wayes, a litle frute, therfore saith hee, nor with out me, can you doe a litle, but without we cā you doe nothyng. Therefore whether it bee litle, or much, without him, can it not bee done, without whō is nothyng done. One of two thinges, must the braunche needes doe, either abyde in the vyne, or els burne in the fire, if it bee not in the vyne, then is it in the fire. &c. 267. col. 1

Barnarde lib. arbit.

Barnarde sayth, what shall we say? is this alonely all the merite of freewill, that hee doth alonely cōsent? yea doubt les. Not that, the same consent, in the which is all his merite, is not of God, when that we can neither thinke (the which is lesse, then to cōsent) any thing of our selues, as though we were sufficient of our selues. These wordes bee not myne, but the Apostles, the whiche geueth vnto God, and not to his free-will, all maner of thinges, that can bee good, that is to say, to thinke, to will, or to perfourme. &c. 267. col. 1

In Enchir. ca. 29.

Augustine sayth, what goodnes can hee doe, that is lost, except that hee bee deliuered from his miserie? Can hee doe good by his freewill? God forbyd, for man euill vsyng hys freewill, dyd both loose him selfe, and also his free-will, and as man beeyng alyue, doth kil him selfe, and when he hath killed him selfe, hee can not make hym selfe alyue agayne. So likewise, when we doe sinne by freewil, and sinne hath the victory, then is freewill cleane lost, for of whom a man is ouercome, vnto hym must hee bee seruaunt. Doubtles, this sentence is of Peter the Apostle, the which seeing that it is true, I pray you what maner of freedome cā a bonde seruaunt haue? except it bee, when it pleaseth him to sinne. &c. 268. col. 1

De Verbis Apost. ser. 11.

Augustine sayth, O cursed freewill, without God, we haue experiēce, what freewil can doe without God, therfore are we miserable, because we haue experience, what freewill is able to doe, without God. Behold, mā was made good, & by his freewill, was hee made an euill man. When shall an euill man by his freewill, forsaking God, make a man good, hee beeyng good, could not keepe him selfe good: and now, that he is euill, shall hee make him selfe good? when that hee was good, hee kept not hym selfe good, and now, that hee is euill, shall hee say, I make my selfe good? &c. 268. col. 2

Augustine sayth: Hee that feedeth without mee, feedeth agaynst mee. &c. 269. col. 2

De Verbis Domi ser. xv.

Augustine sayth, Thou wilt say, that can my will doe, that can my freewill doe. what will? what manner of free-will? except that hee guide thee, thou fallest, except hee lift thee vp, thou lyest stil. How canst thou then doe it by thy spirite, seeing that the Apostle saith: As many as bee led by the spirite of God, bee the children of God. Wilt thou doe of thy selfe? Wilt thou bee led of thyne owne selfe to mortifie the deedes of the flesh: what will it profite thee? For if thou bee not an Epicure, thou shalt be a Stoicke? whether thou bee an Epicure, or a Stoicke, thou shalt not be among the children of God. For they that bee guided of the spirite of God, bee the children of God: not they that lyue after their own flesh: not they that lyue after their owne spirite: not they that bee ledde of their owne spirite: but as many as bee ledde of the spirite of God, they bee the children of God. &c. 270. col. 1

De Verbis Apost. ser. xiij.

Augustine sayth: If mā doe perceiue, that in the commaundementes, is any thyng impossible, or els to hard, let him not remaine in him selfe, but let hym runne vnto God, his helper, the which hath geuen his commaundementes for that intent, that our desire might bee styred vp, and that hee might geue helpe. &c. 271. col. 2

De temp. ser. lxiij.

Augustine saith, The Pelagiās thinke, that they know a wonderous thyng, when they say, God will not cōmaund that thyng, the which hee knoweth is impossible for man to doe. Euery man knoweth this, but therfore doth he cōmaunde certeine thynges, that we can not do, because we might know, what thyng we ought to aske of him. Faith is shee, whiche by prayer, obtaineth that thing, that the law commaundeth.

De lib. arb. cap. xvi.

Briefly, hee that sayth, If thou wilt, thou mayest keepe my commaundementes. In the same booke, a litle after sayth. Hee shall geue me keeppng in my mouth. &c. 272. col. 1

Augustine sayth, The Pelagians say, that they graunt how that grace doth helpe euery mans good purpose, but not that hee geueth the loue of vertue to him, that striueth agaynst it. This thyng doe they say, as though man of hym selfe, without the helpe of God, hath a good purpose, & a good mynde vnto vertue, by the which merite proceedyng beefore, hee is worthy to bee holpē of the grace of God, that folowēth after. Doubtles, that grace that followeth, doth helpe the good purpose of man, but the good purpose should neuer haue beene, if grace had not preceded. And though that the good study of man, when it begynneth, is holpen of grace, yet did it neuer begyn without grace. &c. 272. col. 2

De lib. arb. cap. xvi.

De predest. Cap. 8. Augustine sayth, The grace, which is geuen of the largenes of God, priuely into mens hartes, can not bee despised of no maner of hard hart. For therfore it is geuē, that the hardnes of the hart should bee taken away. wherfore whē the father is hard within, and doth learne, ỳ we must come to his sonne, then taketh hee awaye our stony hart, and geueth vs a fleshly hart. And by this meanes, hee maketh vs the childrē of promise, and the vessels of mercy, which hee hath prepared to glory. But wherfore doth hee not learne all mē to come to Christ: Bicause that those, that hee learneth, hee learneth of mercy, and those, that he learneth not, of his iudgement doth hee not learne them. &c. 273. col. 1

Auguſt. de verb. Apoſt. ſent. xiij. Augustine sayth, The law was geuē that mā might finde hym selfe, and not to make his sickenes whole, but by his preachyng, the sicknes increased that the Philitian might bee sought. wherfore the law threatnyng, and not fulfilyng that thing, that hee commaūdeth, maketh a man to bee vnderneath him, but the law is good, if a man doe vse it well. what is that, vse the law well? By the law, to know our sinnes and to seeke Gods helpe, to helpe our health. &c. 275. col. 2

Auguſt. Super Ioannem tract. lxxxviij. Augustine sayth: The disputation of them is vayne the whiche doe defend the prescięce of God, agaynst the grace of God, and therfore say, that we were chosē beefore the making of the world, because that God knew before that we should bee good, not because he should make vs good. But hee that sayth, you haue not chosen me, sayth not that. For if hee did therfore chose vs, because that hee knew before, that we should bee good, then must hee also know before, that we should first haue chosē him? &c. 279. col. 1

¶ That it is lawfull for all maner of men to reade the holy Scripture.

Auguſt. ad fratres ſ. 38. AVgustine sayth, My brethren, reade holy Scripture in ỳ which you shal finde what you ought to holde, and what you ought to flye. what is a man reputed without learning? what is hee? he is not a sheepe, or a goate? Is he not Ore, or an Asse? Is hee any better then an Horse, or a Mule, the which hath no vnderstanding. &c. 288. col. 1

In Epiſ. ad Epheſ. c. 6. Athanasyus sayth, If thou wilt that thy children shall be obedient vnto the, vse them vnto the wordes of God, But thou shalt not say that it belongeth all onely to religious men to study scriptures: but rather it belongeth to euery Christen man, and specially vnto hym that is wraped in the businesses of this worlde: and so much the more, because hee hath more neede of helpe, for hee is wrapped in the troubles of this worlde therefore it is greatly to thy profit that thy children should both heare and also reade holy Scriptures, for of thē shall they learne this commaundement: Honour thy father, and thy mother. &c. 288. col. 2

In Gen. c. 9 hom. 28. Chrisostome sayth, I beseech you ỳ you will oftentimes come hither, and that you will diligently heare the lesso of holy Scripture, and not all onely whē you bee here, but also take in your handes whē you are at home the godly Bibles, and receaue the thing therein with great studye, for thereby shall you haue great aduantage. &c. 288. col. 2

In Mat. c. 1. hom. 2. Chrisostome sayth, which of you all that be here, (if it were required) could say one psalme without the booke, or any other part of holy scripture, not one doubtles But this is not alonely ỳ worste, but that you bee so slow and so remisse vnto spirituall thinges, and vn to deuillishnesse you are hotter thē any fier, but men will defend this mischief with this excuse, I am no religious man, I haue a wife and children, and a house to care for. This is the excuse wherewith you doe (as it weare with a pestilence) corrupt all thinges: for you doe recken that the studye of holy Scripture belongeth all onely vnto religious men, when they bee much more necessary vnto you then vnto them. &c. 289. col. 1

In prohe. In Epiſt. ad Epheſ. Li. 1. Hierome sayth, O Paula and Eustochium, if there bee any thing in this life ỳ doth preserue a wise man, and doth perswade him to abide with a good will in the oppressions and the thraldomes of the world, I doe recken that specially it is the meditations and the study of holy Scripture. &c. 289. col. 2

The

7.Sinod. c. Omnes et. di.38. The Popes law sayth, in an other place. I will set my meditation in thy iustifications, and I will not forget thy wordes, the which thing is exceeding good for all Christen men to obserue & keepe. &c. 289. col.1

Roma.15. S. Paule sayth, we ought not to be led with the traditions of men, that say touch not, tast not. &c. 299. col.1

Super Ioan. Tract.46. Augustine sayth by sitting in ỹ chayre is to vnderstand the learning of ỹ lawe of God, and therefore God doth teach by thẽ, but if they will teach their owne doctrine heare it not, doe it not, for such mẽ seeke that is theirs, and not Christes. &c. 297.col.2

Hilarius in Mat. Cano. 14. Hilarius sayth, All maner of plantes that bee not planted of the father of heauen, must bee plucked vp by the rootes that is to say, the traditions of men, by whose meanes, the commaundementes of the lawe be broken, must be destroyed, and therefore cauleth hee thẽ blinde guides of the way to euerlasting life, because they see not that thing they promise: and for that cause hee sayth, that both the blinde guidds, and they that bee led, shall fall into the dyke. &c. 297. col.2

Ad Paul. Epist.59. Augustine sayth, Because that those men by such obseruations were led frõ the veritie, by ỹ which they were made free, whereof it is spoken, the veritie shall deliuer you. It is a shame (sayth hee) and vnconuenient and farre from the noblenes of your libertie (seeing you bee the body of Christ) to bee discaued with shadowes and to bee iudged as sinners if you dispise to obserue these thinges. wherefore let no man ouercome you (seeing you are the body of Christ) that will seeme to bee meeke in hart in the holynes of Aungels and bringing in thinges which he hath not seene. &c. 299. col.2

Epi. ad ro. prop.72. Augustine sayth, Seing that we bee made of soule, and of body, as long as we doe liue in this temporall lyfe we must vse to the norysshing of this lyfe, these temporall goodes. Therfore must we of that part that belongeth to this lyfe bee subiect vnto powers, that is vnto mẽ that doe minister worldly things with some honour, but as concerning that part, whereby we beleeue in God and bee called vnto his kingdome, we ought not to bee subiect vnto any man that will peruert that same thing in vs that hath pleased God to geue vs to eternall lyfe. &c. 300. col.1

¶ That all men are bounde to receiue the holy Cõmunion in both kindes vnder the payne of deadly sinne.

Ad Cornelium Papã. CYprian sayth, How doe we teach, or how can we prouoke men to shed their bloud for the confessiõ of Christes name, if we doe denye them the bloud of Christ whẽ they shal goe to battaile? Or how dare wee able them vnto the victory of martyrdome, if wee doe not firste by right admitte them to drinke the cuppe of our Lord in the congregation. &c. 306. col.2

Ecclesiastica hist. Ambrose sayth, to ỹ Emperour Theodosius, how shalt ỹ lift vp thy hands out of the which doth yet droppe vnrighteous bloud? how shalt thou with those handes receaue the body of God? with what boldnes will thou receaue into thy mouth the Cuppe of the precious bloud, seeing that through ỹ woodnes of thy wordes, so great bloud is shed wrongfully, &c. 306. col.2

This doth S. Ciprian learne vs saying, what thing so euer it bee that is ordeyned by mans maddenes, where by the ordinaunce of God is violated, it is whoredome, it is of the deuill and it is sacrilege. wherfore flye from such contagiousnesse of men and auoid their wordes as a cancar, and as pestilence. &c. 308. col.1

De consecr. di.2.c.comonely perimus. The Popes law sayth, we vnderstand that certayne men receauing allonely the portion of the blessed body, doe abstaine from the chalice of the holy bloud, the which doubtles (seeing I can not tell by what superstition they are learned to abstaine) let them eyther receaue the whole Sacrament, or els let them bee forbidden from the whole Sacrament, for the deuision of one and of the same misterie can not bee done without great sacrilege. &c. 305. col. 1

De consecr. ds. 2. c. cum frangimus. The Popes law sayth, when the host is broken, and the bloud shed out of ỹ chalyce into ỹ mouthes of faithfull men, what other thing is there signified, but the immolation of our Lordes body on the crosse, and the shedding of his blond out of his side. &c. 306. col. 1

De consecr. de. 2. c. Si quocies eucharistiam. The Popes lawe sayth, If that the blond of Christ be shed for remission of sinnes (as often as it is shedde) then ought I lawfully for to receaue it. I which doe alwaies sinne, must alwaies receaue a medecyne. &c. 306. col. 1

¶ That by Gods word it is lawfull for Priestes that hath not the gift of chastitie to marry wiues.

Athanasius super. 1. Cor. 7. Athanasius vpon the first Epistle of S. Paule to the Corinthians in the 7. chapter sayth, that the Apostle would compell no man to keepe virginitie against his will, nor he would not make virginitie a thing of necessitie. 314. col. 1

Ciprian Epist. 11. Ciprian sayth, Thou doest aske what we doe iudge of virgines, the which after they haue decreed to liue chastly, are afterward founde in one bedde with a man. Of the which thou sayst that one of them was a Deacon. We doe with great sorow see that great ruine of many persons, which commeth by the reason of such vnlawfull and perilous cõpaning togither. Wherfore if they haue dedicated them selues vnto Christ, out of fayth to lyue purely, and chastly, thẽ let them so remayne without any fable, and strongly, & stedfastly, to abyde the reward of virginitye: But if they will not abyde, or els cã not abide, then is it better to marry, thẽ for to fall into the fier of concupiscence, and let them geue vnto the brethren and sisterne none occasion of sclaunder. &c. 318. col. 2

Aug. de bono coniugali ad Iulianum. Augustine sayth, Certaine men doe affirme those men to bee aduoulterers, that doth marry after they haue vowed chastitie: but I doe affirme, that those men doe greuously sinne, ỹ which doth seperate them. &c. 319. col. 1

Ambro. 32. quest. cap. 1 integritas. Also blessed S. Ambrose, writeth of virginitie in this maner: Chastitie of body ought to bee desired of vs. The which thing I doe geue for a counsell, and doe not commaund it imperiously. For virginitie is a thing all onely, that ought to bee counsayled, but not to be commaunded, it is rather a thing of voluntary will then of precept. &c. 319. col. 2

Hie. d. 37. cap. Legant S. Hierome also sayth, Let Bishops and priestes reade this thing (hee speaketh agaynst mispending of goodes, ỹ is offered to helpe poore men with) the whiche doth teache their children prophane letters, and maketh thẽ to read commedies, and to sing bandy songes of iesters, and these children they finde of the charges of the church. &c. 319. col. 2

Ex tripertita historia. Dist. xxxi. ca. Nicena. The Councell of Nicene, willing to reforme the lyfe of men, dyd set certaine lawes, the which we call Canones: among the which certaine men would haue had a lawe to bee brought in, that Byshops, priestes, Deacons, and subdeacons, should not lye wt their wiues, which they had maryed, before their cõsecration. But Paphnutius a confessour, did withstand them and sayd, that their mariage was honorable, and it was pure chastitie for them to lye with their wyues. So that the counsell was perswaded, not to make any such law, affirmyng it for to bee a greuous occasiõ both vnto them, and also vnto their wyues of fornication. And this thing dyd Paphnutius, though that hee hym selfe was vnmaryed. The Councell did alowe this sentence. So that nothing was decreed, as concerning this thing, but euery man was left vnto his free will, and not bounde of any necessitie. &c. 320. col. 1

Canon Apost. The Popes lawe sayth, If any man doth teach, that a Priest by the reason of his order ought to forsake his wyfe, cursed bee hee. &c. 321. col. 1

Consilium Gangrens. Canon. 4. We reade in the counsell of Gangrens, how they made this decree. If any mã doth iudge or condemne a Priest that is maried, that hee may not, by the reason of his mariage do sacrifice, but will abstayne from his masse by the reason therof, cursed bee hee. &c. 321. col. 1

6. Sinodus. We doe reade in a counsell, that is called the sixt Synod, these wordes: Considering that it is decreed amongest the lawes made by them of Rome, that no Deacon, nor Priest, shall company with their wiues. Therfore we notwithstanding that decree, folowing the rules of the Apostles, and the constitutions of holy men, will that from this day forth, maryage shall bee lawfull, in no wise dissoluing the matrimonye betweene them, and their wiues, noꝛ depꝛiuyng them of their familiaryte in time cõuenient. Whosoeuer therfoꝛe shall bee founde able of the oꝛder of Deacon, Subdeacon, oꝛ of ꝓiesthode, we will that no such men be ꝓohibited to ascend the dignities afoꝛesaid foꝛ the cohabitatiõ of their wiues: Noꝛ that they bee constrayned at the receite of their oꝛders, to ꝓofesse chastitie, oꝛ to abstayne from the company of their lawfull wiues. &c. 322. col. 1

Dist. xxxiij c. Diaconi. The ꝓopes law sayth, It is open ꝙ neither Deacons, noꝛ subdeacõs, ought to bee foꝛbidden from maryage. &c. 321. col. 2

De vita & honest. clericorum. ꝓope Innocent the thirde, wꝛiteth in his decretalles, on this maner: Those ꝓiestes that after the maner of the cõtrey, hath not foꝛsaken the coniunction of maryage, if they doe bꝛeake their wedlocke, ought gꝛeuously to bee punished, seeing that they may vse lawefully matrimony. &c. 322. col. 2

Magister Sẽtentiarum. lib. ij. Dist. xx. The master of sentences, wꝛyteth on this maner: Our weaknes is ꝓone to fall into filthynes, but it is helped wt honest maryage. And the thyng that is vnto whole men an offence, is vnto sicke men a remedye. &c. 323. col. 2

Extra. lib. i de filijs presbyterum. c. Ad hæc. Ex lege Papæ. Thou doest alike of vs (sayth the ꝓope, to the Byshoppe of Lassell) whether that these men that hath ꝓiestes to their fathers, may bee ꝓomoted to holy oꝛders oꝛ not, if they bee of good, and honest demeanour, and well learned. To this we aunswere (sayth the ꝓope) that if they bee gotten of lawfull mariage, & there be none other Canonical impediment, then may they lawfully bee ꝓomoted vnto holy oꝛders, and may enioy that same benefice, which their fathers had befoꝛe. &c. 324. col. 1

Ibidem. cap. Litteras. Also in that same title, the ꝓope sayth we haue vnderstanded, that N. Bozne and gotten in ꝓiesthod of a lawfull wife, hath alwayes had an affection to serue God in the office of a spirituall man. &c. 324. col. 1

Imperator Constan. lege. Omnis Pa. Ad perangariam. Codice de Epis. & cle. The Emperours law saith of ꝓiests wyues. We will (sayth hee) that all maner of spirituall men shall haue this ꝓerogatiue, that their wyues, & their childꝛen, and their seruauntes, that is foꝛ to say, both male, and female, shall bee free from an homage, which is called Peraungariam. 324. col. 2

Ex tripertita historia. lib. 9. cap. xxxviij. We doe teade in Tripertita Historia, these wozdes: All ꝓiests in ꝙ oꝛientall Church doth abstayne with a free will, and of no necessitie from wiues. Foꝛ many of them, in tyme when they bee Byshoppes, haue had of their lawfull wiues childꝛen. 325. col. 2

Li iiij. ca. xxij. We doe teade in Ecclesiastica Historia, that Penitus, Byshop of a cytye called Gnoseos, would haue made a decree, that ꝓiests should haue vowed chastitie, But Dionisius Byshop of Cozinth, wꝛote agynst hym, and required hym, that hee would not lay no necessitie of cõpulsed chastity on other mẽs neckes, Penitus, folowed his counsell. 325. col. 2

Libro 5. ad Iacob. Clement sayth, we doe honour vysible Images to the honour of the invisible God, the which is a false thing: but if you will honour the Image of God in doing well to man, in him shal you honour the true Image of God, wheꝛefoꝛe if you will truely honour ꝙ Image of God, we will opẽ that thing vnto you that is of trueth, so that you must doe well vnto man the which is made vnto the Image of God: geeue hym honour, and reuerence: geue hym meate when hee is hungrye: geeue him dꝛinke when hee is thyrsty: Cloth hym when he is naked: serue hym whẽ hee is sicke: geeue hym lodgyng when hee is a straunger: and when hee is in pꝛisõ minister to hym necessaries. This is the thing that shall bee counted to be geuen God truely. What honoꝛ is this of God to runne about foolishly to stonye and wooddy Images, and to honour as Gods Idle and dead figures, and to despise man in whom is ꝙ very true Image of God. wherefore vnderstand you that this is this the suggestion of the Serpent that lurketh within the which doth make you beleeue that you bee deuoute when you doe honour in sensible thinges. And maketh you to beleeue that you bee not wicked when you hurt sensible and reasonable men. &c. 346. col. 1

Clement in eodem libro Clement sayth also in an other place, what thing is there so wicked and vnthankfull, as to receaue a benefyte of God, and to geue thankes vnto stocks and stones? wherfore wake and vnderstand your health. &c. 346. col. 2

De Vera relig. ca. Glti. Chrisostome sayth, Doost thou see this womā which was vnworthy, but by her perseueraunce was made worthy? wilt thou learne also, that we praying vnto God in our owne persons, doe more profite, thē when other men doe pray for vs. This woman did cry, and the disciples came and prayed him that hee would speed her, for she cryeth on vs. But to them hee aunswered, I am not sent but vnto the sheepe which are perished of ý house of Israell. But when shee came her selfe and dyd persener crying and saying, Yes Lord, for the whelpes doe eate the crūmes that fall from their maisters tables: thē dyd hee geue her the benefite and sayd, bee it vnto thee as thou wilt. Doost thou not see how hee dyd repell her, when other men prayed for her? but whē shee came her selfe and cryed, hee did graūt her. Vnto them hee sayd. I am not sent but vnto the lost sheepe. ¶That Councels may erre.

De electio. c. significa. PAnormitanus sayth, That Councels may erre as they haue erred, as concernyng that contract of Matrimony, Inter raptorem & raptã, & the saying of S. Hierome was afterward preferred aboue the statute of the Councell as it is proued. 36. q. 2. Tria, for in things cõcernyng the faith is the saying of a priuat persõ to bee preferred before the saying of the pope, if hee haue better reasõs & scriptures of the new, & of the old Testamẽt for him then ẏ Pope. Nor it can not helpe, to say that the Councell can not erre, because that Christ dyd pray for his Church that her fayth should not fayle. For I aunswere to this, that though the generall Councell doe represent the whole vniuersall Church: neuertheles in very deede there is not the very vniuersall Church, but representatiue. For the vniuersall Church standeth in the election of all faythfull men: and all faythfull men of the world make that vniuersall Churche, whose head and spouse is Christ Jesus, and the Pope is but the Vicare of Christ and not the very head of the Churche, this is the Church that cã not erre. &c.
248. col. 1

Augustinus de bap. li. 2. c. 3. contra Donatistas. Augustine sayth, Those Councels that bee gathered in euery Prouince must without doubt geue place to the authoritie of the full Councels whiche bee gathered of all Christendome: and also those full counsels oft tymes must bee amended by the full counsels that come after: if any thing bee opened by any experience that was afore shut, and if any thing bee knowen that was hidden. ¶That the true obseruation of the sabaoth, consisteth not onely in abstaining from bodely labours: and that to a Christen mã, euery day is the Sabaoth, and not onely the seuenth day.

HIerome sayth, Therefore be certaine dayes assigned, ẏ we should come together, not that, that day, in the which we come together is holier thẽ an other but all dayes be lyke, and equall. Aduersus Iudeos. Also Tertullian sayth, The carnall Circumcision is put away, and extincted at his tyme. So likewise the obseruation of the Sabboth day is declared to bee for a tyme, for we must keepe the Sabboth day, not alonely the seuenth day, but at all times, as Esay sayth. &c. 206. col. 2

De consec. dist. 3. cap peruenit. ¶ S. Ambrose ad Irenæ. Epist. 72.

The Jewes were commaunded to celebrate the holy sabboth, one day in the weeke, that they should bee subiect to no burthen: because they being losed from worldly business, I would they had so passed, that they might not cary with thē no burthen of greuous sinnes vnto the euerlasting sabboth of ẏ world to come. Let the synagoge of ẏ Jewes obserue the day, Let the church obserue it to immortalytie. In the lawe therefore was a portion, in the Gospell is the perfection. &c.

For if Christe hath taken from vs that greuous yoke of many obseruances, that we should not be carnally circumcised, that wee should not offer sacrifice for our sinnes, that on the sabboth of the seuenth day, wee shoulde not abstayne from necessary busines, & other such lyke, if we obserue them being spiritually vnderstand, and setting a syde all shadowes, signifying the true lyght of those things: Let vs take heed whether we shall therefore say that it pertayneth not vnto vs which is writen: that, whatsoeuer one findeth of an other mans, hee restore it agayne to hym that lost it: and many other such like preceptes, where by we learne to liue well and godly, and especially, that Decaloge, which is contayned in the .ij. tables of stone, the carnall obseruation of the sabboth onely excepted, which signifieth a spirituall sanctification and rest. &c.

¶ S. Augustine vpon S. Paules epistle to the Galath.

First must a man know ẏ the workes of the law bee of too sortes. For they partly consist in sacramentes, & partly in morrall preceptes. Unto morall preceptes are referred these. Thou shalt not slaye, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not beare false witnesse, and such other lyke.

S. Hiere. ad Cor. 6. Also S. Hierome sayth, It is sinne vnto you that you doe agaynst the commaundement of Christ, that you haue iudgementes among you, the which ought alwayes to keepe peace, yea, though it were with the losse of your temporall goods. wherefore doe you not rather suffer wrong: where as yee ought by the commaundement of the Gospell, and by the example of ỹ Lorde patiently to suffer, there doe you the cõtrary, not all onely not suffer, but you doe wrong vnto them, ỹ doe no wrong &c. 209. col. 1

¶ De Pœnitentia Dist. 1. Cap. Conuertimini.

TUrne vnto me with all your hart and I will turne vnto you. By turnyng is ment the turnyng vpsidedowne of the hart. For if our hart bee turned thoroughly from euill vnto God, it forthwith deserueth the frute of conuersion, that God beyng turned from wrath to mercy, may pardõ our offences, which beefore hee intended to reuẽge. wherby it is geuen vs to vnderstand that without any confession of mouth we may bee forgeuen. By this meanes also these leppers whom the Lord wylled to shew them selues to the priestes, were made whole and sound in the way before they came to the priestes. By which fact it is geuen vs to vnderstãd, that before we shewe our faces to the priest, that is before we confesse our sinnes, we are cleansed from the lepry of sinne, It followeth: by this also that the Lord would declare, that not by ỹ sentence of the priest, but by the gift of diuine grace, the sinner is made cleane. He cleased the leprous by touching, & afterward according to the law cõmaunded him to offer sacrifice. It followeth, but before hee came to the priest hee is cleansed, whilest that by the contrition of his hart, before the confession of the mouth, remission of sinne is graunted. Therfore onely cõtrition in the which is made a reuiuing, taketh away sinne. Hee hath therfore his reuiuour present with him, and dwellyng within hym.

THerfore to thee Lord am I manifestly knowen what soeuer I am, & what profiteth me then to confesse my selfe vnto thee. Neither doe I it with wordes of the flesh or with voyce, but with the wordes of my soule and with clamour of my thought which thy eare vnderstandeth. For whereas I am euill, to confesse my selfe vnto thee, is nothyng els but to mislike of my selfe. And when I am godly, to confesse me vnto thee, is nothyng els, then not to attribute the same to my selfe. Because thou Lord doest blesse the iust, but first thou doest iustifie hym beeyng wicked. My confession therfore my God, in thy sight, is made vnto thee both secretely and not secretly. For it is secret in speach, but crieth out in hart. Neither doe I say any good thyng vnto men which thou hast not first heard of me, neither thou also shalt heare any such thyng of me, which thou hast not first shewed vnto me. what therfore haue I to doe with men that they should heare my confession, as though they should heale all my sorowes & griefes, who commonly are wont to bee curious to know an other mans lyfe, and slow to amende their owne. why demaũd they of me to heare what I am, which will not heare of thee who they them selues are? And how know they that they heare of me to bee true? Forasmuch as no man knoweth what is done in man, but the spirite of mã that is in man.

TO thee I will geue the keys &c. This place the Byshops & Priestes not vnderstandyng, doe arrogate vnto thẽ selues some thyng of the Pharisees pride: forasmuch as they thinke they may condemne innocentes, or release sinners: where as before God the sẽtẽce of the priestes is not regarded, but the lyke of the offenders is considered. We read in Leuiticus of the lepers, where as they are willed to shew them selues to the Priestes. And if they had the leprye then by ỹ priest were they made vncleane: not that the Priestes did make men lepers & vncleane, but because they had the knowledge who were lepours, & who were not, and could discerne who were cleane, and who were vncleane. Lyke as therfore the Priests dyd there make the lepour cleane, or vncleane: so doth our Byshop or Priest loose, or bynd, not those which bee sinnefull or innocent, but accordyng to his office, when hee hath heard the varieties of the sinnes, hee knoweth who is to bee bound, and who is to bee loosed.

Notwithstandyng by that which foloweth let vs see farther. Doest thou thinke that to Peter onely were geuen the keyes of the kingdome of heauẽ? and shall no other of the blessed Saintes receaue them? If it be cõmon to all, that was sayd, I will geeue thee the keyes, why should not all that was referred to Peter before, seeme to bee common to all the Apostles. For in the Gospell of S. John, Iesus geuyng the holy Ghost to his Disciples by breathyng, sayd these wordes, Receaue the holy ghost. &c. as though hee said it to all such so affectionated as Peter was. For all which bee folowers of Christ in like maner are named rockes Thou art Peter &c. But because they which do chalẽge the place of a byshop doe vse this text as Peter dyd, & teach vs that they haue receaued the keyes of the kyngdome of heauẽ from Christ, because that who soeuer bee bound by them, they bee bound in heauen also, & they which bee loosed by thẽ, ỹ is, haue receaued remission of their sinnes, bee looseed in heauen also: we must say that they say well, if they haue those good workes for the which it was sayd vnto Peter, Thou art Peter: and if they bee such as Peter was, that on them may bee builded the Church of Christ, if the gates of hell shal not preuayle agaynst thẽ. Otherwise it is a vayne iest to say, that he which is tyed with the bondes of sinnes, and draweth his sinnes after hym as a long rope, and his iniquities be as the hooles of a calfe, for that onely, that hee is a called Byshop should haue such power, that they which bee looseed of hym, bee also looseed in heauen, or who so bee bounde in earth by hym, bee bounde also in heauen. Let the Byshoppe therefore whiche doth bind, or loose an other man, bee irreprehensible him selfe. Hee that is worthy to bynd or lose in heauen, must bee the husband of one wife, sober, chast, comely apparelled, a louer of hospitalitie, apt to teach, not geuẽ to ouer much wyne, no striker, nor greedy of filthy lukre, but gentle, no quareller, abhorryng couetousnes, one that ruleth well his owne house, hauyng childrẽ in subiection, in all chastitie. ¶ Tripartita historia lib. 9. cap. 35. Verba Sozemeni.

BEcause it is knowen to bee a diuine thyng and aboue mās nature neuer to sinne, God commaunded remission to bee geuen to sinners that doe repēt. But they which refuse to acknowlege their sinnes, they heape vnto thē selues a greater burthen of sinnes. Wherfore it seemed good to the auciēt Byshops, that as it were vpon a stage vnder the testimony of the Ecclesiasticall people their sinnes should be opened. And for this purpose they appoynted a Priest of good conuersation, a wise man, and a keeper of secretes, vnto whom they commyng that had offended confessed their owne sinnes. But hee accordyng to euery mās offence alligned a penaltie. which custome also hitherunto is obserued in the Weasterne Churches & especially at Rome, where there is also a certaine place appointed for repentaunt sinners. For the offenders stand amongest the penitētes and mourners. For when as the holy celebration is a doyng, they not participating the communion, prostrate them selues vppon the earth with mournyng and lamentation, vnto whō the Byshop repayring, hee also prostrateth him selfe with spirituall teares and gronyng, and all the common multitude in the Church fall on weeping. After this, first ariseth the Byshop and taketh vp those which lay on the ground. Thē when hee hath competently prayed for them whiche haue repented, hee demitteth them all. But they of there owne accorde afflictyng them selues, either with fastyng, or abstinence from washyng, or forbearyng of meates, or by other like things which they bee commaūded, doe looke for the generall day which the Byshop assigneth. The tyme beyng appoynted and they hauyng as it were fulfilled certaine duryes and rendred the penaltie for their sinne, then are they admitted to communicate with the people. And this custome, the auciēt byshops of Rome haue obserued euen vntil our dayes. Moreouer at Constantinople there was a minister appoynted to attend vpon the penitēt vntill that time, that a certaine noble woman, when she had confessed her sinnes, and the minister had cōmaūded her that she should fast and praye vnto God with good workes, when she had this obserued, she confessed that she had often tymes leyen with the Deacon. when the people vnderstoode this they raged at the Priestes as though they had beene iniurious to the Church. Then Nectarius the Bishop remoued the wicked Deacon, and certaine persuadyng him, that hee would leaue free for euery mans conscience to communicate when they thought good, appoynted no more any Deacon to attend on the penitēts. And from that tyme, that auncient custome was taken away. when as I thinke lesse offences were committed for the shame of confession and the subtill examination.

Where you haue the originall of your secret confession whiche the Church of God knew not by the space of 300. yeares I say not this as vtterly condemning it: yea rather as approuyng it: but I doe teach it not to bee necessary to our saluation.

And you onely cast out ỹ faithfull, and beleeuyng: but whoremõgers, and adulterers you bleesse. For if you should cast out all thẽ, your church would bee but small.

WHen as any man doth goe out from the trueth, from the feare of God, from fayth, and from charity, hee goeth out of the tentes of ỹ Church, although by the sentence of the Bysshop, hee bee not cast out. So contrary wise one is with vniust iudgment cast forth, if before hee hath not gone out of him selfe, that is if hee haue not by hys doeing deserued to goe forth, hee is no thing at all harmed. For sometime hee that is cast forth is within, and hee that is without, it semeth that he is within.

The councell of Meldens 11. Questi. Cap. Nemo Episcoporum.

LEt no Bysshop (without certaine, and manifest cause first knowen) forbid any man the ecclesiasticall communion. And let no man accurse anye one, without the knowledge of ỹ Archbysshop, or Bysshops, but so farre as the Canon auctoritye doth teache, because a curse is eternall damnation of death, and it ought bee enioyned, but onely for a deadly sinne, and vpon those which could not otherwise bee amended.

¶ Cum gratia & Priuilegio Regiæ Maiestatis.

A liuely picture deſcribyng the authoritie and ſubſtaunce of Gods moſt bleſſed word, weyghing agaynſt Popiſh traditions.

How light is chaffe of Popiſh toyes, if thou deſire to trye, Loe Iuſtice holdes true beame without reſpect of partiall eye:
One ballance holdes Gods holy word, and on the other parte,
Is layde the dregs of Antichriſt, deuiſde by Popiſh arte:
Let Friers and Nunnes and baldpate Prieſtes, with triple crowne of Pope,
The Cardinals hatt, and deuill him ſelfe, by force plucke downe the rope:
Bryng bell, booke, candle, croſſe, & beades, and mitred Baſan bull, Bryng buls of leade and Popes Decrees, the ballance downe tō pull:
Yet ſhall theſe tares and filthy dregs, inuented by mans brayne,
Through force of Gods moſt mighty word, be foūd both light and vayne.

Magna eſt Veritas & prꝛualet, Great is the trueth and preuayleth. 3. Eſdra. 4.
